

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

3 2044 053 224 150

HD

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Received 1907

30

c

A

DIGEST

OF ALL THE REPORTED DECISIONS OF

THE SUPREME COURT

OF THE

STATE OF VERMONT,

CONTAINED IN THE REPORTS OF N. CHIPMAN, TYLER, BRAYTON,

D. CHIPMAN, AIKENS, AND IN FORTY EIGHT VOLUMES

OF VERMONT REPORTS; ALSO, OF ALL

THE DECISIONS OF THE COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT

OF VERMONT

WHICH ARE FOUND IN THE VERMONT REPORTS.

0

BY

DANIEL ROBERTS.

BURLINGTON, VT.

1878.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1878, by
DANIEL ROBERTS,
In the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

SEP 17 1907

Free Press and Times Book Print, Burlington, Vt.

P R E F A C E.

This Digest has been prepared in compliance with a contract made with the Judges of the Supreme Court and the State Librarian, some years ago, under a joint resolution of the Legislature. I regret that I have been obliged to keep my professional brethren so long waiting its appearance;—a delay more annoying to myself, I may say, than harmful to them, since each year's delay has added to the work the substance of a new volume of Reports. It has cost me much labor, and, whether it be the better or the worse on this account, it is my own without assistance, except in the making up of the Table of Cases and in the proof-readings. The work has involved the careful reading of every case reported in fifty-six volumes of Reports, and the attempt to extract from each case what is in it, omitting nothing important to the decision, and to arrange in orderly form the principles of the decisions, with such illustrations as the facts of each particular case afford. It would have been much easier, by use of scissors and paste-brush, to make up this Digest of clippings of the head notes of the cases, as reported, but this would have made the work too voluminous, and, besides, these head notes are not in all cases trustworthy. I have sought to bring together, or in connection, the cases which confirm, qualify, distinguish, or in some way illustrate each other, and, by reference to future citations of the same case, have sought to give its judicial history and show its worth as an authority, and in this way to exhibit the present "form and pressure" of Vermont decisions. Still, this is meant to be a digest, not a treatise, which last it could not be to much extent of completeness, though aimed in that direction. Another advantage of this reference to later citations of a case will be appreciated by the student of his cases, since, he will be apt to find associated with the case, as later cited, other authorities bearing upon the question of his study. A reference to the following cases, as cited in the Digest, among many others, may be taken as illustrations: Arlington v. Hinds, p. 106; Olcott v. Duncklee, p. 144; Kettle v. Harvey, p. 162; Tyson v. Doe, p. 167; Barnard v. Flanders, p. 296; Adams v. Adams, p. 323; Buck v. Pickwell, p. 338; Wheeler v. Lewis, p. 354; Slocum v. Catlin, p. 459; Allen v. Ogden, p. 527; Hunt v. Fay, p. 569; Yale v. Seely, p. 612.

Great pains have been taken to secure accuracy in citation and in the Table of Cases. The discovered errors of the print are so few and unimportant, being, for the most part, such as suggest their own correction, that I have not deemed author or printer deserving the discredit of a table of errata.

To save space, I have cited the cases by single names of the parties. I have omitted to digest or cite a very few decisions, principally in the earlier reports, being such as by change of statutes, or otherwise, have become obsolete, or seemed wholly unimportant; but the names of these may be found in the Table of Cases, for the benefit of the antiquary, or the curious.

I could wish this were a better book, but, as it is, I commend it to the favorable consideration of my professional brethren, to whom I am sure it will prove, if not an authority, a convenience and a help, pointing them to the authoritative oracles of Vermont law, and serving as a concordance of its scriptures.

DANIEL ROBERTS.

Burlington, Vt., April, 1878.

LIST OF JUDGES

OF THE

SUPREME COURT OF VERMONT

FROM THE YEAR 1778 TO THE YEAR 1878.

The names of those who have been CHIEF JUSTICES are indicated by the use of small capitals.

FROM		TO	DIED.
1778,) 1785,)	MOSES ROBINSON, - - - - -	(1784, (1789,	May 26, 1813.
1778,	John Shepardson, - - - - -	1780,	1798.
1778,	John Fassett, - - - - -	1786,	Not ascertained.
1778,	Thomas Chandler, - - - - -	1779,	"
1778,	John Throop, - - - - -	1782,	"
1779,	PAUL SPOONER, - - - - -	1789,	"
1780,	Increase Mosceley, - - - - -	1781,	May 2, 1785.
1781,	ELISHA PAYNE, - - - - -	1782,	Not ascertained.
1781,	Simcon Olcott, - - - - -	1782,	March, 1815.
1781,	Jonas Fay, - - - - -	1783,	March 6, 1818.
1782,	Peter Olcott, - - - - -	1785,	Sept., 1808.
1783,	Thomas Porter, - - - - -	1786,	Aug., 1833.
1784,	Nathaniel Niles, - - - - -	1788,	Oct. 31, 1828.
1786,) 1789,) 1796,) 1813,)	NATHANIEL CHIPMAN, - - - - -	(1787, (1791, (1797, (1815,	Feb. 15, 1843.
1786,	Luke Knoulton, - - - - -	1787,	Dec. 12, 1810.
1788,	Stephen R. Bradley, - - - - -	1789,	Dec. 16, 1830.
1789,) 1796,)	Noah Smith, - - - - -	(1791, (1801,	Dec. 25, 1812.
1789,	SAMUEL KNIGHT, - - - - -	1794,	Not ascertained.
1791,	Elijah Paine, - - - - -	1794,	April 28, 1842.
1791,	ISAAC TICHENOR, - - - - -	1796,	Dec. 11, 1838.
1794,	Lott Hall, - - - - -	1801,	May 17, 1809.
1794,	ENOCH WOODBRIDGE, - - - - -	1801,	July 14, 1803.
1797,	ISRAEL SMITH, - - - - -	1798,	Dec. 2, 1810.
1801,	JONATHAN ROBINSON, - - - - -	1807,	Nov. 3, 1819.
1801,	ROYAL TYLER, - - - - -	1813,	Aug. 16, 1826.
1801,	Stephen Jacob, - - - - -	1803,	Jan. 27, 1817.
1803,	Theophilus Harrington, - - - - -	1813,	Nov. 17, 1813.
1807,	Jonas Galusha, - - - - -	1809,	Sept. 24, 1834.
1809,	David Fay, - - - - -	1813,	June 5, 1827.

LIST OF JUDGES.

FROM		TO	DIED.
1813,	Daniel Farrand, - - - - -	1815,	Not ascertained.
1813,	Jonathan H. Hubbard, - - - - -	1815,	Sept. 20, 1849.
1815,	ASA ALDIS, - - - - -	1816,	Oct. 16, 1847.
1815,) 1823,)	RICHARD SKINNER, - - - - -	(1817, (1829,	May 23, 1833.
1815,	James Fisk, - - - - -	1817,	Dec. 1, 1844.
1816,	William A. Palmer, - - - - -	1817,	Dec. 3, 1860.
1817,	DUDLEY CHASE, - - - - -	1821,	Feb. 23, 1846.
1817,	Joel Doolittle, - - - - -	1823,	March 9, 1841.
1817,	William Brayton, - - - - -	1822,	Not ascertained.
1821,	CORNELIUS P. VAN NESS, - - - - -	1823,	Dec. 15, 1852.
1822,) 1829,)	CHARLES K. WILLIAMS, - - - - -	(1824, (1846,	March 9, 1853.
1823,	Asa Aikens, - - - - -	1825,	July 12, 1863.
1825,	SAMUEL PRENTISS, - - - - -	1830,	Jan. 15, 1857.
1825,	TITUS HUTCHINSON, - - - - -	1834,	Aug. 24, 1857.
1825,) 1829,)	STEPHEN ROYCE, - - - - -	(1827, (1852,	Nov. 11, 1868.
1827,	Bates Turner, - - - - -	1829,	April 30, 1847.
1828,	Ephraim Paddock, - - - - -	1831,	July 27, 1859.
1830,	John C. Thompson, - - - - -	1831,	June 27, 1831.
1831,	Nicholas Baylies, - - - - -	1834,	Aug. 17, 1847.
1831,	Samuel S. Phelps, - - - - -	1838,	March 25, 1855.
1834,	Jacob Collamer, - - - - -	1842,	Nov. 9, 1865.
1834,	John Mattocks, - - - - -	1835,	Aug. 14, 1847.
1835,	ISAAC F. REDFIELD, - - - - -	1860,	March 23, 1876.
1838,) 1852,)	Milo L. Bennett, - - - - -	(1850, (1859,	July 7, 1868.
1842,) 1844,)	William Hebard, - - - - -	(1843, (1845,	Oct. 22, 1875.
1843,) 1845,)	Daniel Kellogg, - - - - -	(1844, (1851,	May 10, 1875.
1846,	Hiland Hall, - - - - -	1850,
1846,	Charles Davis, - - - - -	1848,	Nov. 21, 1863.
1848,) 1857,)	LUKE P. POLAND, - - - - -	(1850, (1865,
1851,	Pierpoint Isham, - - - - -	1857,	May 8, 1872.
1857,	Asa O. Aldis, - - - - -	1865,
1857,	JOHN PIERPOINT, - - - - -
1857,	James Barrett, - - - - -
1859,	Loyal C. Kellogg, - - - - -	1867,	Nov. 26, 1872.
1860,	Asahel Peck, - - - - -	1874,
1865,	William C. Wilson, - - - - -	1870,
1865,	Benjamin H. Steele, - - - - -	1870,	July 13, 1873.
1867,	John Prout, - - - - -	1869,
1869,	Hoyt H. Wheeler, - - - - -	Resigned March 31, 1877,
1870,	Homer E. Royce, - - - - -
1870,	Timothy P. Redfield, - - - - -
1870,	Jonathan Ross, - - - - -
1874,	H. Henry Powers, - - - - -
1877,	Walter C. Dunton, appointed in place of Hoyt H. Wheeler, resigned.

REPORTS COMPRISED IN THIS DIGEST.

Nathaniel Chipman's Reports,	1 Vol., cited N. Chip.
Tyler's Reports,	2 Vols., " 1-2 Tyl.
Brayton's Reports,	1 Vol., " Brayt.
Daniel Chipman's Reports,	2 Vols., " 1-2 D. Chip.
Aikens' Reports,	2 Vols., " 1-2 Aik.
Vermont Reports,	48 Vols., " 1-48 Vt.

The citation Slade's Stat. denotes a reference to the compilation of the Statutes of 1824; R. S. to the "Revised Statutes" of 1839; C. S. to the "Compiled Statutes" of 1850; and G. S. to the "General Statutes" of 1862.

Decisions of the Circuit and District Courts of the United States for the District of Vermont, as reported by HON. SAMUEL PRENTISS, District Judge, contained in Vols. 20 to 25, inclusive, of Vermont Reports :—

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT.

Bank of United States v. Lyman et al., 20 Vt. 666.
 Boody et al. v. Rutland & Burlington R. Co., 24 Vt. 660.
 Bradley et al. v. Richardson et al., 23 Vt. 720.
 Byam et al. v. Eddy, 24 Vt. 666.
 Hatfield v. Bushnell, 22 Vt. 659.
 Hubbard et al. v. Northern Railroad Co., 25 Vt. 715.
 Marvin v. Dennison et al., 20 Vt. 662.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT.

Chase, in re, 22 Vt. 649.
 Comstock, in re, 22 Vt. 642.
 Downer et al. v. Brackett et al., 21 Vt. 599.
 Gassett et al. v. Morse et al., 21 Vt. 627.
 Moore v. Jones et al., 23 Vt. 739.
 Pearce, in re, 21 Vt. 611.
 Reed, in re, 21 Vt. 635.
 Rowell, in re, 21 Vt. 620.
 United States v. One Sorrel Horse, 22 Vt. 655.
 United States v. The Margaret Yates, 22 Vt. 668.
 Welman, in re, 20 Vt. 658.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

A.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Abandonment.		book account, 110: covenant, 197;
Of charter of association, 51; of survey		divorce, 249; ejectment, 253, 456, 472;
of highway as affecting right to land		freehold action, 255; forcible entry, damages, 361; the same as to railroad,		328; partition, 495; replevin, 603, 407;
584; of possession, 542; of wife by		trespass, 686, 456; trover, 707; scire husband, 510.		facias, 635. Action for injuries by
Abatement of suit.		animals, 30; for harboring apprentice,
By pendency of former suit, 5. No such		39; on arbitration agreements and person as the plaintiff, 6. Non-joinder of		awards, 43; for wrongful arrest, 45; for defendants, 8, 58, 255; of plaintiffs, 7.		money received, &c., 54, 556; use and
675. Plaintiff under guardianship, 396.		occupation, 56; excessive attachment,
Pleading in abatement, 532.		64; not keeping property attached, 66;
Absence from State.		on receipt for property attached, 69;
As affecting judgment, 76; jurisdiction,		for taking no, or insufficient, bail, 81;
423; the statute of limitations, 444.		on bills and notes, 104; on bond,
Acceptance.		109; for commissions, 142, 326; con-
Of bills, 96; of deed, 229; of guaranty,		spiracy, 146, 175; on simple contracts,
359; of goods by purchaser, 340, 612.		174; for contribution, 177, 562; assess-
Accident unavoidable.		ments on stock subscriptions, 183, 580;
No action lies for, 9.		betterments, 258; defective fences, 327;
ACCORD AND SATISFACTION 1		fraud, 334; fraudulent conveyance,
Account stated.		346; money lost at gaming, 347; on
No bar to action on original account, 2.		guaranty, 354; for insufficiency of
ACCRETION 142		highway, 367; disturbance of easement,
By change of stream, 742.		376, 456, 563; loss of goods at inn, 394;
Acquiescence.		on insurance policy, 398; for intoxicat-
In performance of contract, 180. As to		ing liquors, 409; on jail-bond, 415; boundary, 548; laying tax, 631.		judgment, 422; for rent, 436; injury
ACTION 3		to reversion, 439, 692, 708; malicious
I. WHEN MAINTAINABLE 3		prosecution, 450; breach of marriage
II. COMMENCEMENT 4		promise, 454; for negligence generally,
III. VENUE 4		479; nuisance, 487; on probate bonds,
IV. DISCONTINUANCE 4		572; warranty in sale, 615; for seduc-
V. ABATEMENT BY PENDENCY OF		tion, 636; slander, 642; libel, 646;
FORMER SUIT 5		soldier's bounty, 647; on subscription,
VI. SURVIVAL 5		658; for wrongful taxation, 666;
VII. PARTIES 6		threats, 679. By assignee, 48; mem-
1. Plaintiffs 6		ber of association, 52; carrier, 123;
2. Defendants 7		consignor, 123; As respects husband
VIII. WHEN NOT MAINTAINABLE 9		and wife, 386; infant, 391; guardian,
Action of account, 10; on the case, 13;		10, 356, 391; insane person, 395; mason statute, 15; of assumpsit, 52;		ter and servant, 454; partners, 11, 508;
audita querela, 75; bastardy, 89;		corporation, 189; principal and surety,

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
560; railroad, 589; school district, 632; tenants in common, 11, 672; executors, 11, 323; turnpike company, 728; postmaster, 545; pound-keeper, 546; officers of town, 683; Against officer serving process, 491; against sheriff, generally, 689; for an escape, 415; against justice peace, 433; against town for support of pauper, 519; for default of its officers, 684.		APPEAL— Continued.
ACTION OF ACCOUNT.	10	1. Taking an appeal	32
I. IN WHAT CASES THE ACTION LIES.	10	2. From what judgment	33
II. PROCEDURE.	11	3. In what cases	33
ACTION ON THE CASE	18	4. Proceedings after appeal	34
ACTION ON STATUTE	15	IV. APPEAL FROM PROBATE COURT	35
Administrator. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.		1. What order or decree may be appealed from	35
Admission.		2. Who may appeal	35
As evidence, 277; of agent, 23, 278; wife, 382; partner, 502; conspirator, 146, 282.		3. Mode of appeal, and procedure thereafter	36
Advancement.		4. Appellate court as a court of probate	38
To child, 570; evidence of, 278.		Appeal in criminal prosecution, 216; from order of removal of pauper, 516; from appraisal of damages for land taken by railroad company, 585.
AGENT	16	Appearance.
I. PROOF OF AGENCY	16	Generally, 547; by attorney, 72, 78; in criminal prosecution, 218, 296.
II. AUTHORITY OF AGENT; RATIFICATION AND REVOCATION; PARTICULAR AGENTS; NOTICE OF TERMINATION OF AGENCY; MODE OF CONTRACTING	17	APPRENTICE	38
III. DUTIES, LIABILITIES AND RIGHTS OF AGENT	22	Appurtenance.
1. As to his principal	22	What is, 238, 746. See PRIVATE WAY, 563; GRANTS, § 23.
2. As to third persons	22	ARBITRATION	39
IV. ACTS AND DECLARATIONS OF AGENT	23	I. GENERAL POWERS OF ARBITRATORS, AND THEIR PROCEEDINGS	39
1. As binding his principal	23	II. REVOCATION	39
2. As insuring to the benefit of his principal	24	III. AWARD,— Publication; Validity; Construction; Effect; Setting Aside, &c.	40
Wife's agency for husband, 381.		IV. ACTION ON THE AWARD	43
Aggravation.		ARREST	44
Matter of, in pleading, 694; as affecting damages, 223.		Assault.
Agistment.		What is, 689; murderous assault, 205; to commit rape, 206.
Contract for, 171; lien for, 441; action for, 56.		Assent.
ALIEN	25	Effect as to contract, 149.
ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENT	25	Assessment.
Ambiguity of writing.		By municipal corporation for sewers, &c., 141; Assessment of damages, generally, 225, 707; on recognizance, 598; on laying out highway, 363; railroad, 584.
How far explainable by parol, 300, 304.		ASSIGNMENT	46
AMENDMENT	26	I. ORDINARY ASSIGNMENTS	46
Of bill in chancery, 133; of trustee process, 720.		II. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS	48
Amicus Curiae.		1. At common law	48
Suggestion by, 251.		2. Under statutes	49
ANCIENT LIGHTS	30	How affected by bankruptcy, 87; by trustee process, 716. Assignment of bill of lading, 91; of bills and notes, 99; of lease, 203; of mortgage, 467.
ANIMALS	30	ASSOCIATIONS.	50
APPEAL	32	ASSUMPSIT	52
I. EFFECT IN GENERAL	32	ATTACHMENT	58
II. APPEAL FROM COUNTY COURT	32	I. OF PERSONAL PROPERTY	58
III. APPEAL FROM JUSTICE OF THE PEACE	32	1. What is attachable	58
		2. What is not attachable	58

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xi

	PAGE.		PAGE.
ATTACHMENT— Continued.		ATTORNEY (AT LAW)	71
3. Requisites and validity of attachment	61	I. HIS AUTHORITY	72
4. Rights and liabilities of attaching officer	63	II. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES	72
5. Rights and liabilities of creditor as to debtor	66	III. RIGHTS	73
6. Requisites for preserving lien	66	IV. PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS	74
7. Discharge of attachment lien	67	Denial of authority on audita querela, 78.
8. Bailment to receptor	68	Auctioneer.
9. Sale on attachment	70	Agent of both parties under statute of frauds, 342.
II. OF REAL ESTATE	70	AUDITA QUERELA	75
III. DEFENSE BY SUBSEQUENT ATTACHING CREDITOR	71	I. WHEN MAINTAINABLE	75
IV. ATTACHMENT AIDED IN CHANCERY,	71	II. WHEN NOT MAINTAINABLE	76
		III. NATURE OF WRIT; PARTIES, &c	78
		AUTHORITY	79
		Of one defendant to act for another, 8.
		Award.
		Of arbitrators, 40.

B.

BAIL ON MESNE PROCESS	80	BILLS AND NOTES— Continued.
Bailiff.		3. Parties	105
To account, 10.		4. Pleadings	106
BAILMENT	82	5. Defenses	107
I. IN GENERAL	82	BONDS	108
II. PARTICULAR BAILMENTS, AND NEGLIGENCE THEREIN	83	Railroad bonds and coupons negotiable, 594.
To receptor, 68. Article lent, 113, 115.		BOOK ACCOUNT	110
BANK	84	I. CHARGES;—FORM OF CHARGE AND RIGHT TO CHARGE	110
As affected by trustee process, 718.		II. FOR WHAT THE ACTION LIES	111
Bank bills attachable, 58.		1. In General	111
BANKRUPTCY	86	2. As affected by agreement and course of dealing	113
I. U. S. BANKRUPT ACT OF 1841	86	III. WHEN THE ACTION DOES NOT LIE	114
II. U. S. BANKRUPT ACT OF 1867	89	IV. JURISDICTION	115
BASTARDY	89	V. JUDGMENT TO ACCOUNT	117
Betterments		VI. AUDITOR AND AUDIT	117
Declaration for, 258.		VII. EFFECT OF JUDGMENT AS A BAR	121
BILL OF LADING	91	VIII. TENDER	121
Bill of sale.		IX. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS	122
How far conclusive, 301, 303.		See LIMITATION OF ACTION, 449.
BILLS AND NOTES	91	Boundaries.
I. FORM, OPERATION AND VALIDITY	92	Description in deeds, 235; in levy of execution, 316. Stream as a boundary, 239; corner in a stream, 742; Lake Champlain, 434; highway, 239; railroad, 240; fence, 328. Boundary of highway, 361; of school district, 626; of village, 739.
II. PRESENTMENT AND ACCEPTANCE OF BILLS	96	Burden of proof.
III. EFFECT WHERE NOTE IS GIVEN FOR SUBSISTING CLAIM	97	See EVIDENCE, III. As to time of indorsement of note, 99, and consideration thereof, 102; questions of negligence, 374, 590; establishing will, 750.
IV. TRANSFER	99	BURIAL GROUNDS	122
1. Mode	99	Disturbing remains of the dead, 214.
2. Time of transfer; holder bona fide—for value	99
3. Effect as to cutting off defenses and equities	101
4. Demand and notice to charge indorser	102
V. ACTION	104
1. Note payable in specific chattels	104
2. Lost note	104

C.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
CARRIERS	122	Between client and attorney, 74 ; husband and wife, 117.
CASES CRITICISED	123	Consideration.
Causa mortis.		Of note, 90, 94, 98 ; of indorsement, 101 ; of guaranty, 355 : of contracts generally, 150 ; of deed, 227, 344, 346. Illegality of, 152, 409, 520 ; failure of, 108 ; inadequacy of, 128, 344. Proof of, by parol, 303, 342. FRAUDS, STATUTE of, §§. 16, 18. Averment of, in pleading, 57, 585.
Gift, 348.		CONSPIRACY	146
Cattle		Indictment for, 208, 212.
See ANIMALS: POUNDS. Wounding of, 208 ; on railroad track, 592.		CONSTITUTIONAL LAW	146
CERTIORARI	127	I. POWERS OF LEGISLATURE	146
CHANCERY	127	II. CONSTRUCTION	147
I. JURISDICTION	127	Setting over old road, 363. Changing railroad trustees, 583. Taking recognizance of sheriff, 639. Legalizing grand list, 663. Laying turnpike on highway, 728. Soldier's bounty, 647: voting, 655.
1. Ordinary jurisdiction	127	CONTEMPT	148
2. Limitation by legal remedy	130	CONTRACTS. (Simple).	148
3. Auxiliary jurisdiction	131	I. NATURE, REQUISITES AND VALIDITY	148
4. Retaining jurisdiction once attached	131	1. Capacity of party ; Contract implied by law ; Delivery ; Assent.	148
II. SUIT, WHERE TO BE BROUGHT:—SERVICE, &c	132	2. Consideration	150
III. PLEADINGS	132	3. Illegality ; Against public policy ; Restraint of trade ; Duress	152
1. The bill	132	II. INTERPRETATION. Rules ; Instances ; Particular terms ; Usage ; Law of place ; Condition precedent ; Dependent and independent stipulations ; Penalty, or liquidated damages ; Whether joint, or several	155
2. Demurrer	133	III. MODIFICATION ; RESCISSION ; POWER TO STOP PERFORMANCE	164
3. Plea ; answer ; cross-bill	134	IV. CERTAIN PARTICULAR CONTRACTS	168
IV. PROCEEDINGS AFTER ISSUE	135	1. For service	168
1. The testimony	135	2. Of indemnity	170
2. Report of master	136	3. Agistment	171
V. PROCEEDINGS AFTER DECREE	137	4. Contracts in the alternative	171
1. Appeal	137	V. ACTIONS ON SIMPLE CONTRACTS	172
2. Hearing on appeal	138	1. Parties	172
3. Mandate	139	2. Action and defense as dependent on demand ; expiration of credit ; performance	174
VI. REVISORY PROCEEDINGS	139	3. Action, general or special	176
Checks.		VI. DAMAGES,—RECOUPMENT	176
Certifying 85.		See WAGER. Contract to manufacture, 340, 614.
CHIPMAN, (NATHANIEL)	140
Church law.
Force of, 51.
CITY OF BURLINGTON	140
CLOUD ON TITLE	141
Commencement of suit.
At law, 4 ; in chancery, 132.
COMMISSIONS	142
Action for, 175.
COMMIXTURE,—ACCRETION	142
Alluvion, 742.
COMMON LAW	142
Complaint.
For criminal offense, before justice, 214, 405.
COMPOSITION	142
CONDITION	143
In conveyance, 144 ; in simple contract, 2, 161 ; to note, 94 ; to tender, 2, 676.
Conditional sale, 623.
Confession.
Of prisoner 219.
Confidential communications.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xiii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Contribution		Credit.
Between sureties, 177, 562; incumbrances, 471; by dowress towards incumbrance, 252.		Fraudulent recommendation for, 382.
Conversion.		CRIMES	204
Generally, 708; by bailee, 82; tenant in common, 675. Damages for, 223, 225.		I. IN GENERAL	204
CORPORATION	181	II. OFFENSES AGAINST LIFE AND PERSON, (G. S. CH. 112)	205
I. CORPORATE EXISTENCE, AND PROOF THEREOF	181	1. Homicide and murderous assaults	205
II. STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS	182	2. Rape and assault with intent	206
III. MEETINGS AND RECORDS	185	III. OFFENSES AGAINST PROPERTY, (G. S. CH. 113)	206
IV. OFFICERS AND AGENTS	185	1. Arson	206
V. CORPORATE POWERS	186	2. Burglary	206
VI. CORPORATE LIABILITIES	188	3. Larceny	207
VII. REMEDIES FOR AND AGAINST	189	4. False pretences	208
VIII. FORFEITURE AND DISSOLUTION	190	5. Wounding, &c., of cattle	208
Corpus delicti.		6. Wilful mischief	208
Proof of, 219.		IV. FORGERY AND COUNTERFEITING, (G. S. CH. 114)	208
COSTS		V. OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC JUSTICE, (G. S. CH. 115)	210
I. AT LAW	190	1. Perjury	210
1. In the county court, and inferior tribunals	190	2. Suppressing evidence	211
2. In the supreme court	193	3. Impeding an officer	212
II. IN CHANCERY	194	VI. OFFENSES AGAINST THE PUBLIC PEACE. (G. S. CH. 116)	212
Counterfeiting.		VII. OFFENSES AGAINST CHASTITY, MORALITY AND DECENCY, (G. S. CH. 117.) Adultery; Bigamy; Incest; Keeping house of ill fame, &c.	218
Prosecution for, 208; instruments for, 210; materials, 10; base coin, &c., 521.		VIII. OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY (G. S. CH. 119)	214
Counts.		IX. CRIMINAL PROCEDURE	214
Common money counts, 54, 106; special counts, 56.		1. Proceedings before justice	214
COUNTY COURT	195	2. Indictments and informations	216
I. ORIGINAL JURISDICTION	195	3. Proceedings after indictment	218
II. APPELLATE JURISDICTION	197	Crim. con.
County order, 95.		Proof of marriage, 213; mitigation of damages, 225.
Coupons.		CUSTOM	221
Of railroad bonds, 588, 594.		Usage of business, 160.
COVENANTS	197	Customs.
I. ACTION IN GENERAL	197	Revenue laws, 730.
II. COVENANTS FOR TITLE	198
1. Of seisin	198
2. For quiet enjoyment	199
3. Against incumbrances	199
4. To warrant and defend	200
III. COVENANTS IN LEASES	208

D.

DAMAGES	221
Action on award, 44; indebitatus assumpsit, 58; officer's receipt, 69; bond, 110; contracts, 176; for railroad construction, 588; covenant of seisin, 198; against incumbrances, 200; of warranty, 202; in ejectment, 257; for contribution, 177, 562; deceit in sale, 335; warranty, 618; injuries on highway, 378; taking land for highway, 363; for railroad, 584; on injunction, 393; jail-bond, 415; for escape, 415, 640; fault in execution of process, 491; malicious prosecution, 452; support of pau-

	PAGE.		PAGE.
per, 618; seduction, 636; slander, 644; trespass, 688; tenants in common, 675; assessment of, 707.		Deed of corporation, 187.
Damnum absque injuria.		DEFINITIONS. (Words—Phrases) . . .	240
No action therefor, 9.		Delivery.
Date of writing.		Of note, 92; bond, 109; deed, 228; other written contract, 148; of goods on pur- chase, 841, 610; of gift, 374.
Force and effect of, 148, 229, 736.		Demand.
Death.		Before suit, 11, 68, 104, 174; by agent, 24; to charge indorser, 102; on execu- tion, 313.
As revoking authority, 20, 80; apprentice- ship, 38; as affecting suit, 4, 5, 79, 547, 550, 721; statute of limitations, 444.		Deposit.
Declarations.		As a bailment, 83; special in National Bank, 86; certificate of, 95.
Of party, 277; agent, 23, 278; former owner, 281; particeps , 146, 282; de- ceased persons, 283; wife, 382; part- ner, 502. Dying declarations, 285. Res gestæ , 285.		DEPOSITIONS	248
Decree. See CHANCERY, IV. 3. JUDGMENT V.		Desertion.
DEDICATION	226	Of Soldier, 650.
DEED OF LANDS	227	Discontinuance.
I. THE INSTRUMENT AND ITS REQUI- SITES	227	Of suit, 4, 431; costs on, 190; after ex- ceptions, 307. Agreement to discon- tinue, 76. Discontinuance of highway, 365.
1. Consideration	227	DIVORCE	249
2. Statute system	228	I. CERTAIN CAUSES	249
3. Signing	228	II. POWERS OF COURT	250
4. Sealing	228	III. PROCESS, PROCEEDINGS AND EVI- DENCE	250
5. Witnessing	228	IV. DECREE AND ITS EFFECT	251
6. Delivery and acceptance	228	Insanity a full defence, 395.
7. Acknowledgment and proof	229	Dog. See ANIMALS.
8. Recording and notice.	230	Domicile.
II. WHAT PASSES. Quit claim deed ; warranty ; freehold in futuro ; appurtenances	232	As affecting legal settlement, 506; tax- ation, 661; trustee process, 710; of in- sane person, 396.
III. CONSTRUCTION	233	DOWER	252
1. Office of habendum	233	Duress.
2. Rules of interpretation	234	As affecting contracts, 155, 614.
3. Instances,—as to description. boundaries, &c	235

E.

Easements.

As acquired and defined by possession, 30, 543, 563; in lands taken for high- way, 376; for railroad, 585.
EJECTMENT	253
I. EJECTMENT	253
1. For what the action lies.	253
2. The plaintiff and his title	253
3. The defendant—his posses- sion—ouster	255
4. Joinder of defendants	255
5. Declaration	256
6. Defence.	256
7. Extent of recovery	256
8. Effect of judgment	257
II. DECLARATION FOR BETTERMENTS .	258

Election.

Voting at, 10, 655, 789. Election in con- tracts of sale, 618; under will, 755; as to jurisdiction, 424.
Emancipation.
Of infant, 389, 510, 651.
ERROR	259
I. WRIT OF ERROR	259
II. WHAT IS REVISABLE ON WRIT OF ERROR OR EXCEPTIONS	260
Escape.
What is, and liability for, 413, 640.
ESTATES	263
Conveyance to husband and wife, 386; land adjoining, or covered by, highway,

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

XV

	PAGE.		PAGE.
376; created by will, 753; merger of estates, 458; injury to reversion, 439.		EVIDENCE— Continued.
ESTOPPEL	264	1. In general	299
I. IN GENERAL	264	2. To vary a writing; to give it application	299
II. BY DEED	265	Suppressing evidence, 211, 279.
III. BY RECORD	266	EXCEPTIONS	305
IV. EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL	267	I. TAKING, SIGNING, AND FILING	305
V. PLEADING AND GIVING IN EVIDENCE	270	II. REQUISITES OF BILL AS TO REFERENCE AND STATEMENT	306
Conclusiveness of judgment, 417. Principal bound by act of agent, 23. Tenant cannot deny landlord's title, 434.		III. ENTRY IN SUPREME COURT; EFFECT; DISCONTINUANCE	307
Eviction.		IV. CONSTRUCTION OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS	308
As a breach of covenant, 201, 203; in ejectment, 255.		V. CASE STANDS AS UPON WRIT OF ERROR	309
EVIDENCE	271	Negating exception , in pleading, 217.
I. NATURE, KINDS AND EFFECT, IN GENERAL	271	Exchange.
II. CIRCUMSTANTIAL AND CORROBORATIVE	272	Differs from sale, 610; Of lands under statute of frauds, 338. Rate of exchange, 161.
III. PRESUMPTION—BURDEN OF PROOF	275	EXECUTION	309
IV. ADMISSIONS AND DECLARATIONS	277	I. ISSUING OF EXECUTION	309
V. HEARSAY	283	II. FORM AND REQUISITES	310
1. In general	283	III. EFFECT	312
2. Declarations of deceased persons	283	IV. RELIEF AGAINST ERRONEOUS EXECUTION	313
3. Recital in deed.	284	V. PROCEEDINGS UNDER EXECUTION	313
4. Reputation	284	1. In general	313
VI. DYING DECLARATIONS	284	2. Livy upon personal property	313
VII. TESTIMONY OF FORMER WITNESS	285	3. Livy on real estate	314
VIII. RES GESTÆ	285	VI. VACATING INFORMAL LEVIES	318
IX. OPINION—PURPOSE, INTENT, &C.	287	See SALES, V.
X. HANDWRITING—ATTESTING WITNESS	289	EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS	319
XI. ORDINANCES; PRIVATE STATUTES; FOREIGN LAWS; JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS	291	I. APPOINTMENT AND REVOCATION	319
XII. BEST AND SECONDARY	292	II. RIGHTS, AUTHORITY AND DUTY	319
XIII. DOCUMENTARY	293	III. LIABILITY	322
1. Town Clerk's records and certificates	293	IV. ACCOUNTING	323
2. Court records and files	294	V. ACTIONS BY	325
3. Officer's returns	296	Account between executors, 11.
4. Other official entries	297	Expenses of suit.
5. Private documents	297	Whether recoverable as damages, 222.
XIV. PAROL EVIDENCE	299	Experts.
		As witnesses, 288, 290.

F.

FACTOR—COMMISSION MERCHANT 326		Fence viewers.
Family.		Cannot settle disputed title, or bound- aries, 328.
Who are of, 514. Services and support in, 494.		Fixtures.
Fellow servant.		What are, 595. Tenant's right, 437.
Negligence of, 591.		FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER 328
Felony.		FOREIGN LAW 329
What is, 204. Adultery is not, 213.		Proof of, 291. Pleading, 528.
FENCES 327		Forfeiture.
Along railroads, 587.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
FORFEITURE— Continued.		FRAUDS, STATUTE OF,— Continued.
Of charter, or grant, 580, 729. Relief		V. CONTRACT FOR THE SALE OF GOODS	340
from, 128, 145.		VI. THE MEMORANDUM	342
FORMS	330	VII. FORCE OF CONTRACT WITHOUT
Prescribed by statute, effect of, 657.		MEMORANDUM	343
FRAUD	330	VIII. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE	343
I. WHAT CONSTITUTES FRAUD OR		FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE	343
DECEIT	330	I. WHAT IS, AND WHAT IS NOT;
II. EFFECT OF FRAUD	333	EFFECT; EVIDENCE	343
III. RIGHT OF ACTION THEREFOR; PLEAD-		II. AVOIDANCE BY ADMINISTRATOR	345
INGS; EVIDENCE	334	III. THE PENALTY	345
FRAUDS, STATUTE OF	335	1. When it is incurred, and
I. PROMISE OF ADMINISTRATOR	335	when not	345
II. PROMISE TO ANSWER FOR THE		2. Action to recover penalty	346
DEBT, &C., OF ANOTHER	335	Freight.
III. CONTRACT FOR THE SALE OF LANDS	338	How interpreted, 27 Vt. 77. Carrier's
IV. AGREEMENT NOT TO BE PERFORMED		right to, 123.
WITHIN ONE YEAR	340	FUGITIVE	347

G.

GAMING	347	GUARANTY— Continued.
GIFT	347	II. CONDITIONS OF GUARANTOR'S
GOVERNOR'S RIGHT	348	LIABILITY	353
Grand list.		III. SATISFACTION AND RELEASE	354
Requisites of, 662.		IV. ACTION	354
GRANTS	348	Implied guaranty of genuineness, 94.
Gratuitous undertaking.		GUARDIAN	355
Liability for neglect in performance of, 4.		Guest.
GUARANTY	350	At an inn, 394.
I. CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT.	350

H.

HABEAS CORPUS	357	HOMESTEAD	377
Handwriting.		Setting out by probate court, 35.
Proof of, 259.		HOUSE (CASTLE)	378
Harboring.		Hunting, fowling and fishing.
Apprentice, 39.		Constitutionality of laws regulating, 147.
HARRIS' GORE	357	HUSBAND AND WIFE	379
HIGHWAYS AND BRIDGES	358	I. RIGHTS AND POWERS OF HUSBAND	379
I. ESTABLISHMENT	358	1. As to wife's property	379
1. By dedication and adoption		2. To act for her.	380
and by adverse use	358	II. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF HUSBAND
2. By statutory proceedings	359	BAND	380
II. PENT ROADS	364	III. RIGHTS AND POWERS OF WIFE	381
III. DISCONTINUANCE	365	1. As agent of her husband	381
IV. REPAIRS; HIGHWAY SURVEYOR	365	2. As to her own property	382
V. INDICTMENT FOR NOT BUILDING, OR		3. Disabilities	384
REPAIRING, OR FOR OBSTRUCTING	366	IV. DEALINGS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND
VI. CIVIL LIABILITY OF TOWN FOR		WIFE	384
INSUFFICIENCY	367	V. CONVEYANCE BY OR TO THEM	385
VII. RIGHTS OF LAND OWNER, AND OF		VI. SUITS BY, AGAINST, OR BETWEEN
THE PUBLIC	376	THEM	386
Highway as boundary, in deed, 239; in		VII. WITNESSES AND EVIDENCE	387
levy of execution, 317.		Wife's right in homestead, 377.

I.

PAGE	PAGE
Incumbrance.	INTEREST 399
What is, 99.	Restriction of, as to banks, 85; On penalty of bond, 110; on execution against debtor, in jail, 414; on legacy, 755; against town, 681; as damages in tort, 223; as affected by law of place, 161; trustee process, 715.
Indemnity.	INTERPLEADER 401
Contract of, 170; damages for breach, 222, 420.	INTOXICATING LIQUORS 402
Indictment.	I. CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS . . . 402
CRIMES, 204, 216; NUISANCE, 487; HIGHWAYS, 366.	1. Act dependent on popular vote 402
Indorsement.	2. General powers of legislature. 402
Of bill of lading, 91; of bills and notes, 99; of payment, 302.	3. Instances 402
INFANT 389	II. DEFINITIONS 408
I. AGE; DISABILITIES IN GENERAL . 389	III. LICENSE ACTS 404
II. HIS CONTRACTS 389	IV. PROHIBITORY ACTS 404
III. HIS TORTS 391	1. Particular offenses 404
IV. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST . . . 391	2. Complaint and prosecution . . 405
See PARENT AND CHILD, 498. Relief on audita querela, 76.	3. Search and seizure 406
INJUNCTION 392	4. Replevin of liquors seized . . 407
To restrain proceedings at law, 129.	5. Trial, evidence, &c 408
INNKEEPER 394	V. EFFECT ON CONTRACTS 409
Burglary in inn, 206.	1. As to town officers 409
INSANE PERSON 395	2. As to other persons 409
Relief on audita querela, 76.	May be attached and sold on execution, 86.
INSOLVENCY 397	INTOXICATION 410
Inspection of papers.
Order for, refused, 136.
INSURANCE 397
I. FIRE INSURANCE 397
II. LIFE INSURANCE 399

J.

JAIL. (Prisoner; jail bond) 411	arrest of, 645. No action for procuring wrong judgment, 10.
I. JAIL; COMMITMENT 411	JURISDICTION 428
II. DISCHARGE OF POOR DEBTORS . . 412	As to bridges and highways, 361; as depending on form of process, 719; of foreign court, 421; of U. S. courts, 730
III. JAIL BOND 413	JURY 425
1. Validity; breach 413	I. GRAND JURY 425
2. Release 414	II. TOWN GRAND JUROR 425
3. Assignment 414	III. PETIT JURY 425
4. Action on jail bond 415	Setting aside verdict, 482. Statutes affecting right of jury trial, 147, 655. Relative functions of court and jury, 701.
5. Action against sheriff 415	JUSTICE OF THE PEACE 427
JUDGMENT 416	I. APPOINTMENT AND QUALIFICATION. 427
I. IN GENERAL; DIFFERENT KINDS . 416	II. HIS JURISDICTION AS A COURT . . 428
II. VALIDITY 416	III. PROCEDURE 430
III. CONCLUSIVENESS AND EFFECT . . 417	IV. RECORDS 433
IV. JUDGMENT OF ANOTHER STATE . 420	V. ACTION AGAINST JUSTICE 433
V. DECREES IN CHANCERY 422	Appeal from, 32.
VI. ACTION ON JUDGMENT 422
In account, 18, 117; assumpsit, 58; on bond, 110. Against absent party, 76; infant, 76; insane person, 76. Effect as a bar, 16, 121, 417. How affected by appeal, 32. Date of, 416, 432;

L.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
LAKE CHAMPLAIN	434	LEGAL TENDER ACT	439
LANDLORD AND TENANT	434	Letting land on shares , 10, 437.
I. CHARACTER OF TENANCY	434	LICENSE	440
II. DISPUTING LANDLORD'S TITLE	434	Deed construed as a license, 746.
III. TERMINATING TENANCY	435	LIEN	440
IV. RENT	436	LIMITATION OF ACTION	441
V. TENANT'S RIGHT	437	I. CASES TO WHICH THE STATUTE OF
VI. LETTING ON SHARES	437	LIMITATIONS APPLIES	441
VII. INJURY TO REVERSION	439	1. At law	441
Lapse of time.		2. In chancery	442
As affecting relief from mistake, 461;		II. WHEN THE STATUTE BEGINS TO RUN.	443
mortgagor's rights, 465; as basis of pre-		III. SUSPENSION OF THE STATUTE	444
sumption of payment, 528; of corporate		1. By supervening disability	444 existence, 182, 627; of other pre-		2. Ineffectual suit	444
sumptions, 276, 552.		3. Absence from the state	444
Law of Place.		IV. AVOIDANCE OF STATUTE	446
As to contracts generally, 160; interest,		1. By acknowledgement; new
161, 401; partnership, 161; assign-		promise; part payment	446
ments, 50; mortgage, 477; wager, .		2. Mutual accounts	449
740; bills, 95; trustee process, 716;		V. PLEADING	450 administration of estate, 568; judg-		Statute as applicable to trusts, 727; at-ments, 420. See FOREIGN LAW.		torney's bill, 73; insurance policy, 399.
Lease.		Limitation in deed, 145.
To commence in future, 338. Covenants		Liquidated damages. in lease, 203. Assignment of, 203. Rail-		What is, 164, 226.
road lease, 582. See LANDLORD AND		Livery stable keeper.
TENANT, 434.		Liability of, 84.
Legacy.		Lost Instrument.
Of equity jurisdiction, 128. Interest on,		Effect of, 104. Proof of, 292.
322. See WILLS.

M.

Mail.		128, 250. Extinguishes woman's
Remittance by, 107, 522. Presumption of		powers as guardian, 355; as adminisreceipt of letter mailed, 275.		tratrix, 453. Effect on suit, 453.
MAINTENANCE	450	Marriage of insane persons, 396.
Majority.		MARRIAGE PROMISE	454
Right of control, 51.		Damages, 181.
MALICIOUS PROSECUTION	450	MARSHALING SECURITIES	454
MANDAMUS	452	MASTER AND SERVANT	454
Manure.		See RAILROAD, III.
When real estate passing by deed, 233,		Measure of proof.
594. As between landlord and tenant,		In penal, criminal, and civil actions, dis-
437.		tinguished, 16, 271, 706.
Marginal entry.		MEETING HOUSE	456
On bill or note, 92; on contract, 149.		Memorandum.
MARRIAGE	453	As evidence, 278, 281, 298, 696; under
Proof of in criminal cases, 213, 214, 297,		the statute of frauds, 342.
453; in divorce cases, 251. Annulling,		MEMORIALS	457

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xix

	PAGE.		PAGE.
MERGER	457	MORTGAGE	461
I. AS TO CONTRACTS	457	I. WHAT IS A MORTGAGE	461
II. AS TO ESTATES	458	1. Characteristics in general	461
See PRIVATE WAY, 563. Original con-		2. Form; Future advances;
sideration not merged in lost note, 104.		Equitable mortgage	463
Judgment as a merger of the relations		II. RELATIVE RIGHTS OF MORTGAGOR of principal and surety, 558.		AND MORTGAGEE	465
MILITIA	459	III. ASSIGNMENT; SUBROGATION; CON-
Minister.		TRIBUTION	467
First settled minister's right, 349.		IV. REMEDY AT LAW	472
Minute.		V. REMEDY IN CHANCERY	473
Of time of exhibition of process, 15, 89;		1. Bill to foreclose; to redeem	473
of complaint, 215: indictment, 216.		2. Parties	474
Misjoinder.		3. The account	474
Of defendants, 9.		4. Decree	475
MISTAKE	459	VI. MORTGAGE OF CHATTELS	476
In contract of sale, 608.		Railroad mortgages, 582.
Money counts.		Motive.
Use of in assumpsit, 54.		Does not alter character of lawful act, 9, 664.

N.

NAMES	478	Nolle prosequi.
Name in bequest, 751; of lot by reputa-		When permitted, 218.
tion, 739.		Non joinder.
Necessaries.		Of parties at law, 7, 8, 58, 118, 675.
Furnished to wife, 380: to infant, 390,		Non suit.
493.		When allowed, 548.
Ne Exeat.		No such person.
Writ of, 576.		As plaintiff, 6.
Negative pregnant.		NOTICE	486
Instance, 692.		To agent, 24; bank, 84; guarantor, 358;
NEGLECT	479	partner, 501; railroad trustees, 582.
See BAILMENT, II. Mutual negligence, 593.		To charge indorser, 102; to quit, 435.
Negotiable instruments.		Of assignment, 47, 717; termination
What are, 95, 583, 594.		of agency, 21; dissolution of partner-
NEW TRIAL	481	ship, 502; sale of goods, 622; land, 292,
I. UPON WHAT GROUNDS GRANTED	481	626; of fraud, 334; impounding, 546;
1. In general	481	defect of highway, 373; injury on
2. Fault of, or in respect to, jury	482	highway, 375. By carrier, limiting
3. Error of court	483	liability, 123, 589. Possession as
4. Surprise on trial	484	notice, 542.
5. Newly discovered evidence	484	NUISANCE	487
6. Statute provisions	485
II. PROCEEDINGS AND PRACTICE	486

O.

OFFICER	487	attachments, 68. Justification by, 575;
I. APPOINTMENT; TITLE; LIABILITY	487	impeding, 212. Damages in actions
II. OFFICERS CONNECTED WITH SERVICE		against, 224. Return as evidence, 78,
OF PROCESS	489	296, 300; as an estoppel, 267. Pro-
1. Powers, duties and liabilities	489	tection to officer of court of chancery,
2. Fees	492	394. Official bond, 109.
Powers and duties as to arrests, 44;

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Opinion.		To produce books and papers, 118; to inspect papers, 136.
As evidence, 287, 374, 750. Expression of, how far a fraud, or warranty, 330, 156, 333; as affecting qualification of juror, 426; justice of the peace, 428.		Ordinances.
Orders.		Of city, 140.
		Ouster.
		What is, 255; between tenants in common, 673.
 P.
PARENT AND CHILD	493	PAUPER— Continued.
I. PARENT'S RIGHTS	493	2. By derivation	509
II. PARENT'S LIABILITIES	493	3. Act of 1801	511
III. SERVICES AND SUPPORT IN THE FAMILY	494	III. REMOVAL OF PAUPER	513
Particeps.		1. Who are subject to removal	513
As a witness, 213. His testimony, 220.		2. Order of removal	515
Parties.		3. Appeal	516
To actions at law, plaintiffs, 6; defendants, 7. In assumpsit, 58; audita querela, and all judicial writs, 78; error, 259; action on note, 105; simple contract, 172; replevin, 604; consignor or consignee, 123. To bill to foreclose or redeem, 474.		4. Pleadings	517
PARTITION	495	5. Validity and effect of order	517
I. AT LAW, ON PETITION	495	IV. EXPENSES FOR RELIEF OF PAUPER	518
II. THE PETITION AND PROCEEDINGS	496	V. PROCEEDINGS AGAINST AND BETWEEN KINDRED	520
III. PARTITION BY AGREEMENT, OR DEED In probate court, 564. Between husband and wife, 387.	496	VI. WRONGFUL TRANSPORTATION OF PAUPER	520
PARTNERSHIP	497	VII. CERTAIN CONTRACTS	520
I. WHAT CONSTITUTES A PARTNERSHIP	497	PAYMENT	521
1. As between the parties	497	I. WHAT CONSTITUTES PAYMENT	521
2. As to third persons	498	II. PART PAYMENT AS A FULL SATISFACTION	523
II. PROOF OF PARTNERSHIP	498	III. APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS	524
III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES	499	IV. PAYMENT AS AFFORDING A RIGHT OF ACTION	525
1. In general	499	V. PAYMENT AS AFFECTING THE SECURITIES	527
2. In respect to partnership property and partnership debts	499	VI. PLEADING	527
3. Act of one partner as binding the others	500	VII. EVIDENCE; PRESUMPTION	528
IV. DISSOLUTION AND CHANGE OF MEMBERSHIP	502	Note as payment, 97. Payment of note, 107. Place of payment, 93, 95, 96; payment pending suit, as affecting costs, 191. Paying into court, 549. Under protest, 155, 666.
1. Partner's authority after dissolution	502	Penalty.
2. Continuing liability	502	Of bond, 110; contract, 164.
V. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES	503	Pew.
1. Between the partners	503	Sale of, 52. Title in, 456; Stat. Frauds, 339.
2. As to third persons	505	Physicians.
Partners summoned as trustees, 711. Action of account between, 11.		As experts, 288. Negligence of, 481.
PATENT	505	PLEADING	528
PAUPER	505	I. RULES OF GENERAL APPLICATION	528
I. OVERSEERS OF THE POOR	505	II. THE DECLARATION	530
II. SETTLEMENT	506	1. In general	530
1. In one's own right	506	2. How aided by plea, or verdict	530
		III. PLEAS	532
		1. Dilatory pleas and motions to dismiss	532
		2. Special pleas in bar	534
		3. General issue with notice	535

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxi

	PAGE.
PLEADING— Continued.
IV. REPLICATION	586
V. DEMURRER	586
Pledge.
In general, and as distinguished from mortgage, 88, 476.
POSSESSION	587
Taking and retaining on process, 61. Use as evidence of right, 743.
POSTMASTER	545.
POUNDS AND IMPOUNDING	545
Powers.
Of agent, 17; clerk in store, 20; steam-boat captain, 20; officers of bank, 9, 84; corporation, 185, 186, 579; administrator, 319; guardian, 355; husband, 379; wife, 381; partner, 500; school teacher, 634; sheriff, 44, 639; collector of taxes, 664; towns, 680. Power, of attorney to convey, 231, 386.
PRACTICE (at law).	547
I. GENERALLY; AND IN COUNTY COURT	547
II. IN SUPREME COURT.	549
PREScription—PRESUMPTIVE GRANTS	552
Presumption.
Generally, and instances, 275. As to law of other state, 276; regularity and scope of judicial proceedings, 308, 417; of officer's proceedings on execution, 314. Of continuance of life, 454; of corporate existence, 182, 627, 680; of time of alteration of instrument, 26; of time of transfer of note, 99; of divorce, 251. From lapse of time, 276, 442, 552; from possession, 543.
PRINCIPAL AND SURETY	554
I. THE RELATION—HOW CONSTITUTED AND EVIDENCED	554
II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF SURETIES	555
1. As respects the creditor	555
2. As respects the principal	560
3. As between the sureties	562
PRIVATE WAY	563
Privies.
Who are, and how bound, 81, 419.
Privy of contract, 522.
Privilege.
From arrest, 44, 81. Of professional communications to attorney, 74. In judicial proceedings, 642; legislative, 646. Communications between husband and wife, 387, 761. Privilege of juror, 426; of witness, 408.

	PAGE.
PROBATE COURT	568
I. JURISDICTION AND AUTHORITY	564
1. Generally—special cases	564
2. To correct its decrees	565
3. Conclusiveness of decrees	565
II. SETTLEMENT OF ESTATES	566
1. By the heirs	566
2. By regular administration 567
(a.) Commissioners of claims—Proceedings and effect	567
(b.) Ancillary administration 568
(c.) Sale of real estate	569
(d.) Assignment to widow	569
(e.) Division and distribution 570
III. PROBATE BONDS; EMBEZZLEMENT	572
PROCESS	572
I. FORM	572
1. Signing of writ	572
2. Minute of recognizance	572
3. Direction	573
4. Authorization	573
II. SERVICE	574
1. Extent and limitations of authority to make service 574
2. Mode of service	574
3. Return	575
III. JUSTIFICATION UNDER PROCESS	575
IV. PROCESS AGAINST THE BODY, UPON AFFIDAVIT	576
Propagation society.
Grant to, 349. Statute of limitations against, 443.
PROPRIETARY DIVISION	577
PROPRIETORS	578
Protection.
Writ of, 44.
Public policy.
As affecting contracts, 153, 409, 412, 519, 520, 658. WAGER.
Public square, or common.
Distinguished from highway, 227.
Public use.
Taking for, 147, 188, 579, 583, 626. Sequestered to, 350, 441. Compensation, 122, 363, 584.
Puffing.
On sales, 332.

Q.

Questions of law and fact.

As between court and jury, generally, 701, 284; in criminal prosecutions, 427. As to directness of damage, 223; sufficiency of highway, 371; negligence, 479, 594, 668; probable cause, 451; nuisance, 487; possession, 545; abandonment of possession, 542; use of rawhide by schoolmaster, 634.

QUO WARRANTO	578
------------------------	-----

R.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
RAILROAD COMPANY	579	REFERENCE	600
I. GENERAL POWERS UNDER CHARTER	579	I. UNDER RULE FROM THE COUNTY COURT	600
II. STOCK AND SUBSCRIPTIONS	580	II. UNDER RULE FROM A JUSTICE	602
III. OFFICERS, AGENTS AND SERVANTS	581	III. UNDER RULE FROM PROBATE COURT	602
IV. MORTGAGES AND LEASES	582	RELATION	603
V. TAKING LANDS AND MATERIALS, AND RIGHT IN LANDS TAKEN	583	RELATIONSHIP	603
VI. CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD	586	RELEASE	603
VII. RIGHTS, DUTIES AND LIABILITIES IN MANAGEMENT OF ROAD	589	REPLEVIN	603
1. As carriers	589	I. TO TRY THE RIGHT OF PROPERTY	603
2. For negligence	591	II. OF GOODS ATTACHED	604
VIII. SUITS BY AND AGAINST	594	III. OF BEASTS IMPOUNDED	605
Ram. See ANIMALS.		IV. PROCEDURE	605
Ratification.		Of intoxicating liquors, 407.
Of act of agent, 19; insurance agent, 398.		Rescission.
Of an appeal, 36; of an assignment, 50; note, 95; payment, 523; mortgage, 582; Sunday contract, 659. By corporation, 188; town, 682.		Of contract, 165; of sale, 334, 613, 677; of vote by town, 648.
REAL PROPERTY	594	Reservation.
Sale of real estate, 625.		In deed, or grant, 145, 350, 743.
Receipts.		Retrahit.
Effect of, 301; for property attached, 68.		Effect as a judgment, 416.
RECOGNIZANCE	596	REVIEW	606
I. IN GENERAL	596	Of judgments, &c., on appeal, 32; of awards, 43; findings of fact, 120, 261; matters of discretion, 28, 38, 77, 127, 139, 262, 263, 548, 602. Ont writ of error and exceptions, 260, 309. By certiorari, 127; chancery, 139.
II. ON APPEAL FROM A JUSTICE	597	Revocation.
III. ON PETITION: REVIEW; ERROR	598	Of authority, 20, 80; submission, 39; indenture of apprenticeship, 88; license, 440.
Recognizance in audita querela, 79; tardy prosecution, 91. Of sheriff, 639.		Reward offered.
Recommendation.		Action, for, 175; by sheriff, 640.
For credit, 332.		RULES OF COURT	607
RECORD	599	Delivery of specific things under rule, 678.
Of deed as notice, 230; of levy of execution, 317.
Recoupment.
Of damages, 179, 618.

S.

SALES	608	SALES—Continued.
A. SALE OF PERSONAL CHATTELS	608	2. Effect of breach, and remedy	617
I. THE CONTRACT	608	III. VALIDITY OF SALE AS AGAINST CREDITORS	618
1. Generally	608	IV. CONDITIONAL SALE	623
2. Executory; future delivery	609	V. OFFICIAL SALES	625
3. Sale executed so as to pass title; delivery; acceptance	610	B. SALE OF REAL ESTATE	625
4. Rescission; acceptance as a waiver of objections	613	SCHOOLS	626
5. Stoppage in transitu	615	I. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW	626
II. WARRANTIES	615	II. SCHOOL DISTRICTS	626
1. What constitutes a warranty—implied; express; particular warranties	615	1. Organisation	626
		2. Evidence of organisation	627
		3. Powers of district	628
		4. Officers; powers and duties	629

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxiii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
SCHOOLS— Continued.		As affecting action, 10; administration,
5. Meetings	629	321; taxation, 660.
III. TAXATION	630	SLANDER	642
IV. ACTIONS AGAINST SCHOOL DISTRICT.	632	I. ORAL	642
V. TEACHERS	632	II. WRITTEN, OR LIBEL	646
1. Certificate and school register.	632	SLAVE	647
2. Powers, duties, wages, &c	634	SMALL-POX	647
SCIRE FACIAS	635	SOLDIER'S BOUNTY	647
To vacate charter, 190, 729.		Specification.
SEAL	636	In liquor prosecutions, 405; in civil suit,
Sealing of deed, 228; by corporation,		548.
187.		SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE	653
Search warrant.		STATUTE	653
Under liquor act, 406. For stolen goods,		I. ENACTMENT	653
693, 695.		II. CONSTITUTIONALITY AND VALIDITY.	654
Services.		III. CONSTRUCTION, OPERATION AND EF-
Of laborers, 168.		FECT	655
SET-OFF	636	IV. REPEAL, AND EFFECT THEREOF	657
I. AT LAW	636	See ACTION ON STATUTE.
1. Mutuality of the respective de-		Stock in corporation.
mands	636	In general, 182, 580. Sale of, 340. Stock-
2. Nature of the demands plead-		jobbing, 740.
able	637	Stoppage in transitu.
3. Declaration on book account		When authorized, 615.
in set-off	637	Subrogation.
4. Pleadings and practice	638	As to incumbancers, 468; sureties, 562.
II. IN CHANCERY	638	officer in respect to process, 489,
Shelley's case.		640.
Rule in, 264.		SUBSCRIPTION	658
SHERIFF	639	Suicide.
I. IN GENERAL	639	As affecting life insurance, 896, 399.
II. RELATIONS OF SHERIFF AND DEPUTY		SUNDAY	659
SHERIFF	640	Notice given on, 717.
Signing.		Supersedas.
Of note, 92; by writing name on back of,		On audita querela, 79; writ of error, 260.
93; of contract, 148; of will, 748; of		Surety. memorandum under Stat. Frauds, 342;		See PRINCIPAL AND SURETY. Relief of of deed by corporation, 187. Mode of,		surety in equity, 128, 558, 561. Subroas evidence of relations of signers, 554.		gation, 562.
Averment in pleading, 736.		Survival.
Situs of property.		Of right of action, 5, 16.

T.

TAXES	660	TAXES— Continued.
I. POWER TO TAX; NATURE OF TAX	660	VI. SALE OF LANDS FOR TAXES; TAX
II. TAXABLE PERSONS AND PROPERTY.	661	TITLES	668
III. VOTING AND ASSESSING TAXES	662	1. General rules	668
IV. COLLECTING	663	2. Rate bill and warrant	668
1. The rate bill and warrant	663	3. Advertisement; publication;
2. Powers and duties of collector.	664	record; certificate	669
3. Justification by collector	665	4. Sale; return; record	670
4. Collector's liability	665	5. Other requirements;—bond,
V. REMEDIES FOR WRONGFUL TAXA-		oath, &c.	671
TION	666	7. The purchaser—right acquir-
1. Against the town	666	ed, &c.	672
2. Against selectmen, and listers.	667	See CITY OF BURLINGTON.

	PAGE		PAGE.
Telegrams.		TRESPASS— Continued.
As evidence, 292.		III. TO PERSONAL PROPERTY	691
TENANCY IN COMMON	672	1. Action and defense	691
I IN LANDS	672	2. Pleadings and evidence	692
1. Creation by deed	672	IV. TO REAL PROPERTY	692
2. Rights and remedies of tenants as to third persons	672	1. For what acts	692
3. Rights and remedies between themselves	673	2. Plaintiffs title and possession	693
II. IN CHATTELS	675	3. Pleadings and evidence	694
Jurisdiction in equity, 128.		TRIAL OF CIVIL ACTIONS	695
TENDER	676	I. GENERAL RULES	696
Of performance of condition, 110, 143;		II. THE ISSUE; EVIDENCE AS RELATED THERETO	697
of sum due on mortgage, 473.		III. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE	698
TERMS OF COURT	679	IV. WHAT QUESTIONS ARE FOR THE COURT, AND WHAT FOR THE JURY	701
THREATS	679	V. REQUESTS AND CHARGE	703
TIME	679	VI. THE VERDICT	706
Statement of, in pleading, 214, 217, 736.		VII. ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGES	707
TOWNS	680	TROVER	707
I. ORGANIZATION	680	I. FOR WHAT THE ACTION LIES	707
II. POWERS AND LIMITATIONS; LIABILITIES	680	II. THE PLAINTIFF'S TITLE	708
III. TOWN MEETINGS	682	III. WHAT IS A CONVERSION	708
IV. TOWN OFFICERS	683	IV. DEFENSE	710
V. DIVIDING AND ANNEXING TOWNS	685	TRUSTEE PROCESS	710
Town order, 95, 717.		I. IN WHAT CASES THE PROCESS LIES, AND WHAT MAY BE REACHED BY IT	710
Transit.		II. PROCEDURE	719
End of, as to carrier, 123, 590; as to stoppage in transitu, 615.		TRUSTS	723
TREES	686	I. HOW CREATED, EVIDENCED, AND LIMITED	724
Right in bee-tree, 691.		II. THE TRUSTEE	725
TRESPASS	686	1. His rights at law	725
I. IN GENERAL	686	2. Effect of his conveyance	726
1. Trespass ab initio	687	III. LIABILITY OF TRUST FUNDS TO CREDITORS	726
2. Pleadings and evidence	688	IV. ACCOUNTABILITY OF TRUSTEE	727
II. TO THE PERSON	689	TURNPIKE AND PLANK ROADS	728
1. Action and defense	689
2. Pleadings and evidence	690

U.

UNITED STATES	730	UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT	732
I. COURTS	730	Use and occupation.
II. CUSTOMS LAWS	730	Action for, 56.
III. MILITARY MATTERS	731	USURY	732
IV. INTERNAL REVENUE LAWS	731

V.

Value.		Venue.
Who is bona fide holder of note, &c., for, 100-102; purchaser, 623.		Of suit, 4; bastardy prosecution, 90; trustee process, 719. Change of, 204; waiver of, 215.
VARIANCE	736	Verdict.
I. WHAT IS, AND INSTANCES	736	In civil cases, 706; criminal, 220. Amendment of, 29.
II. HOW TAKEN ADVANTAGE OF	739	VILLAGE	739
Vendor's lien.		VOTES AND VOTING	739
For unpaid purchase money, 626. INFANT, 26.

W.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Waiver.		Warranty.
Of irregularity of process, 424; venue, 215; continuance, 4; matter in abatement, 532; erroneous amendment, 29; of rules of evidence, 301, 343, 698, 700; error in execution, 313; form of action by reference, 600; of demand in account, 12; of statute of limitations before auditor, 122; of demand and notice, 104, 107; of defect of parties, &c., in chancery, 133, 138; of tort, 89, 52, 115; of performance of condition, 143, 149, 180; of forfeiture, 169, 436; of defect of goods by acceptance, 614; of jointure, 252; of irregularity by appeal, 36.		On transfer of note, 94, 350; sale of goods, 615, 181. Covenants of, in conveyances, 198.
WAGER	740	WASTE	740
Warnings and meetings.		Waste from mills, 742.
Of city, 140; corporation, 185; school district, 627, 629, 630; of town, 632.		WATER COURSE, AND WATER RIGHTS	740
		Stream as a boundary, 239, 742. Duty of town in respect to, 366; of railroad company, 586.
		Willful and malicious.
		Certificate of, 34, 262, 311.
		WILLS	747
		I. POWER TO MAKE A WILL	747
		II. EXECUTION; REVOCATION	748
		III. PROBATE OF WILLS—PROOF; IMPEACHMENT	749
		IV. VALIDITY; CONSTRUCTION; EFFECT	751

VERMONT DIGEST.

A.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

1. Accord. After a simple contract is broken and damage thereby has accrued, it cannot be discharged by parol without satisfaction or some consideration, though it may be before. But if there be a new agreement upon good consideration, which covers all claim under the first, and such new agreement be performed, it is a satisfaction and a defense, though the first was written and the last verbal. Cutler v. Smith, 43 Vt. 577.
2. An admission, with or without writing, given voluntarily and without consideration, that the party is perfectly satisfied and shall make no claim, does not amount to an accord and satisfaction. French v. Raymond, 39 Vt. 623.
3. C purchased the defendant's goods and, in part consideration thereof, agreed to pay the defendant's debt to the plaintiff. C thereupon wrote the plaintiff that her husband proposed to give his note at six months for said debt, and the plaintiff replied, accepting the proposition. The note was never given, but C made remittances to the plaintiff from time to time to apply on the debt. Held, a mere accord, and that the defendant was not thereby discharged from the balance of the debt. Rising v. Cummings, 47 Vt. 345.
4. It is no defense to an action against a sheriff for neglect to levy and return an execution, that, after the sheriff had become liable, it was agreed between the plaintiff and the execution debtor that the balance due on the execution should be charged to the debtor on the plaintiff's books, and be adjusted with their other deal, and that this should be in discharge of all other liabilities and remedies, without proof that such balance had been actually paid or so adjusted—this being but an executory agreement, and without consideration. Nye v. Kellam, 19 Vt. 548.
5. The defendants, A and S, contracted with the plaintiff and several others jointly interested with him in building certain masonry, to quarry and furnish for them the necessary stone; and at the same time the plaintiff and B, his then partner in the selling of goods, since deceased, and an associate in the masonry job, agreed with the defendants that the account which had before accrued against A, and whatever account should thereafter accrue against A, or against both defendants, for goods from the store, should apply on the stone contract, and be paid for in stone to be furnished under it. The defendants entered upon the performance of the stone contract, but failed to complete it, without fault on their part, but in consequence of a breach of it by the other parties. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover the account for goods had by A, or by both defendants, upon the faith of said contract, after the making of it; but that he might recover for the account which had accrued before—that, as to this, the agreement was only an accord without satisfaction. Gleason v. Allen, 27 Vt. 364.
6. —and satisfaction. Where the plaintiff had a small valid claim against the defendant, but told the defendant he would "give it in," to satisfy a claim which the defendant made on him, and neither party made any charge or claim against the other for some years, nor until after a controversy had arisen between them, this was held to be an accord and satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, although he was under no legal or moral obligation in fact to pay the defendant's claim. Abbott v. Wilmot, 22 Vt. 437.
7. —by new agreement performed. Where the agreement was, that if the defendant would do a certain service and other things, the plaintiff would deliver up to the defendant, to be satisfied, a certain judgment and execution thereon which the plaintiff had against the defendant and another, and the defendant fully performed the agreement on his part,—Held, that the agreement performed became an accord executed and accepted in satisfaction of the judgment, and a bar to an action thereon. Cobb v. Cordery, 40 Vt. 25.

8. —by substituted security. An agreement upon sufficient consideration, fully executed, and understood as a full satisfaction and settlement of a pre-existing contract or account, is a good accord and satisfaction and settlement, whether the new contract be ever paid, or not. Babcock v. Hawkins, 23 Vt. 561. Flagg v. Mann, 30 Vt. 573. Cobb v. Cordery.

9. There is no want of consideration, in any such case, where one contract is substituted for another. Ib.

10. The accord is sufficiently executed, when all is done which the party agrees to accept in satisfaction, in the present tense, of the pre-existing obligation. Ib.

11. In every case of an accord and satisfaction by the substitution of one security, or contract, for another, whether of the same or a higher grade, the action, in case of failure to perform, must be upon the substituted contract. Babcock v. Hawkins. Bryant v. Gale, 5 Vt. 416.

12. Account stated. An account stated is no bar to a recovery upon the original account, whether for money, or labor, or other thing, and whether payable in specific articles, or not. Cross v. Moore, 23 Vt. 482.

13. Statute of frauds. Held, that an agreement by parol between the plaintiff, the defendant and C, that C will make and the plaintiff will receive payment of the defendant's debt to the plaintiff in certain bonds, does not, of itself, amount to a substitution of one obligation for the other, nor to an accord and satisfaction; and although C may remain willing to pay the bonds, yet, not being paid, the defendant remains liable upon his original indebtedness. Buchanan v. Paddleford, 43 Vt. 64.

14. Waiver of a mere naked promise to pay the debt of another, which promise is also within the statute of frauds, does not discharge the original debtor,—there being no executed substitution. Rising v. Cummings, 47 Vt. 345.

15. Conditional agreement. The plaintiff agreed to take a certain sum in compromise of a claim for breach of contract, if the defendant would pay it without suit or further trouble, and the defendant agreed to pay it. The defendant afterwards denied the agreement and refused to pay. Held, that here was no such settlement as prevented an action upon the original contract. Piper v. Kingsbury, 48 Vt. 480.

16. Agreement revoked. An agreement to take back in satisfaction of the trespass, property wrongfully taken, may be revoked before delivery, and in such case the delivery would only go in mitigation of damages. Smith v. McCall, 48 Vt. 422.

17. Tender with condition. To constitute an accord and satisfaction, where money is offered and received upon a claim, it is necessary that the money should be offered in satisfaction of the claim, and the offer be accompanied with such acts and declarations as amount to a condition, that if the money is accepted it is accepted in satisfaction; and such that the party to whom it is offered is bound to understand therefrom, that if he takes it, he takes it subject to that condition. Pierpoint, J., in Preston v. Grant, 34 Vt. 203; Brigham v. Dana, 29 Vt. 1.

18. If money is tendered "for all that is due," or "for what the defendant owes the plaintiff," and it is taken, it must always be a question of fact, whether it was, by way of compromise, received in full satisfaction, though the plaintiff on trial should establish his claim for a greater sum. Bennett, J., in Miller v. Holden, 18 Vt. 340.

19. The defendant offered the plaintiff money, saying he tendered it for what he owed the plaintiff. The plaintiff offered to receive it in part payment. The defendant said he would not have it so. The witness to the tender then suggested, that it would make no difference if the damages and costs on trial should prove to be more than the sum tendered, and thereupon the plaintiff received the money. The auditor reported that there was a larger sum due the plaintiff. Held, that the plaintiff could recover the sum due above the tender—that the minds of the parties did not meet in an agreement that the sum tendered should be received in full. Ib. 337.

20. After suit commenced, the defendant tendered the plaintiff a sum of money "in full of all his legal claims and for costs of suit." The plaintiff said the tender was not enough, but that he would take it and give credit for it, and did so. Nothing more was said. Held, not a bar to the plaintiff's recovery of the balance due. (Quere—Is it not to be inferred, that the defendant assented that the plaintiff might receive the money, giving credit for it. Kellogg, J.) Gassett v. Andover, 21 Vt. 342.

21. Where the defendant, upon an account presented to the plaintiff, claimed a certain sum as the balance of book accounts between them, and the plaintiff, after suit brought against him therefor, tendered to the defendant that sum "for his debt," and a certain sum for costs, which the defendant accepted;—Held, that this was conclusive upon the parties as the true balance, so that the plaintiff could not thereafter recover for an item of his account not embraced in such balance, which, before such tender was made, was understood to be and was matter of dispute between the parties, and was not reserved by the plaintiff when he made such tender. Draper v. Pierce, 29 Vt. 250.

22. Where a party makes an offer of a certain sum to settle a claim, where the sum in controversy is open and unliquidated, and attaches to his offer a condition that the same, if taken at all, must be received in full, or in satisfaction of the claim in dispute, if the other party receive the money, he takes it clogged with the condition which the party offering has attached to his offer, and is bound to its fulfillment. This will operate as a full accord and satisfaction, though the party receiving the money declares at the time, that he will not receive the money in that way, but only to account for upon the claim on which it is offered.—the party offering the money not waiving the condition. McDaniels v. Lapham, 21 Vt. 222. McGlynn v. Billings, 16 Vt. 329. Cole v. Champlain Transp. Co., 26 Vt. 87. See Foster v. Drew, 39 Vt. 51. Towsee v. Healy, Id. 522.

23. During a term of court in which this suit was then pending, the defendant tendered to the plaintiff $55, saying—"I tender fifty-five dollars in full for the debt and costs of suit," and asked the plaintiff if he would receive the money. The plaintiff replied—"Yes, and twenty dollars more." He took and used the money so tendered, claiming more to be due him. Held, that the plaintiff's claim was thereby cancelled, notwithstanding his declaration that he wanted or claimed more. Towsee v. Healy.

24. When a tender or offer is thus made, the party to whom it is made has no alternative but to refuse it, or accept it on such condition. If he takes it, his claim is cancelled, and no protest, declaration or denial of his, so long as the condition is insisted on, can vary the result. Pierpoint, J., in Preston v. Grant, 34 Vt. 203.

25. This rule is the same in equity, as at law. McDaniels v. Bank of Rutland, 29 Vt. 280.

26. The law is well settled in this State, that if there is a claim in dispute between parties, whether in suit or not, and one offers to the other a specific sum in full settlement or satisfaction of such claim, and the other receives the sum, though he protest never so stoutly that he receives it only in part satisfaction, such receipt of the money is an accord and satisfaction of the claim. Bromley v. School District, 47 Vt. 381.

ACTION.

- I. WHEN MAINTAINABLE.
- II. COMMENCEMENT.
- III. VENUE.
- IV. DISCONTINUANCE.

V. ABATEMENT BY PENDENCY OF FORMER SUIT.

VI. SURVIVAL.

VII. PARTIES.

1. Plaintiffs.

2. Defendants.

VIII. WHEN NOT MAINTAINABLE.

I. WHEN MAINTAINABLE.

1. Instances. Where the guardian of a minor paid to the purchaser of the minor's land, at a tax sale under an act of Congress, a sum of money exceeding the tax and interest for a conveyance to the minor, in consequence of the guardian's mistake or ignorance of the provision in the law which allowed the minor to redeem within two years after arriving at age;—Held, that the guardian could recover the sum so paid, as money paid by mistake, notwithstanding the maxim: Ignorantia juris non excusat. Brown v. Sawyer, 1 Aik. 130.

2. In consideration that the plaintiff, a creditor of C, would release an attachment made, the defendant, also a creditor of C, promised the plaintiff not to sue C for one year. Held, that for a breach of this agreement the plaintiff could recover such damages as he had sustained thereby. Boardman v. Wood, 3 Vt. 570.

3. The general owner of property, attached by his creditors, can maintain a suit against the attaching officer for damage done to it through his negligence, although that suit is still pending and the attachment is still in force. The rights of the officer and of the creditor can be protected by proper orders as to the execution, &c. Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57.

4. Concurrent actions. The plaintiff received of the defendant a good note against a third person, as a pledge or collateral security for a debt due the plaintiff, and of larger amount than such debt, and sued the note and attached personal property. Held, that this was no bar or suspension of the plaintiff's right of action upon the original demand, although he did not offer to return the note pledged. Chapman v. Clough, 6 Vt. 123, and see Bank of Rutland v. Woodruff, 34 Vt. 89.

5. Successive. The defendant promised the plaintiff to pay and save him harmless from three several notes of the plaintiff outstanding, and to fall due in three successive years. After all the notes had become due, the plaintiff was sued upon the first and compelled to pay it, whereupon he sued the defendant for indemnity as to that. The same thing afterwards occurred as to the second note, whereupon the plaintiff brought a second suit for indemnity as to that. Held, that successive actions lay upon the contract, and that the judgment in the first was not a bar to the second. Hosford v. Foote, 3 Vt. 891.

6. When part of the whole sum due upon a sealed agreement was made payable in cash at stated times, and the balance, a fifth part of the whole, in goods on demand:—Held, that covenant would lie for the cash instalments before demand of the goods. Stevens v. Chamberlin, 1 Vt. 25.

7. Gratuitous undertaking. A consideration is necessary in order to make a mere refusal to execute a trust a ground of action; but if one enter upon a mere gratuitous undertaking, and then neglect it, he is liable as for a fraud, or gross neglect. Hyde v. Moffat, 16 Vt. 271.

II. COMMENCEMENT.

8. It is no objection to a suit that the plaintiff's right of action was not perfected before the issuing of the writ, if it became so before service. In such case, the service is regarded as the commencement of the suit. Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474. 22 Vt. 254. McDaniels v. Reed, 17 Vt. 674. Hawley v. Soper, 18 Vt. 320.

9. To save the statute of limitations the taking out of the writ, if duly prosecuted, is regarded as the commencement of the action. Allen v. Mann, 1 D. Chip. 94. Day v. Lamb, 7 Vt. 426.

10. The presentation of a claim against a deceased person's estate to the commissioners for adjudication is the commencement of a suit, or action, and all future proceedings, on regular appeal, or on appeal allowed on petition to the supreme court, are only a continuation of the original proceeding, and it remains the same suit or action pending. Calderswood v. Calderswood, 38 Vt. 171. Kimball v. Baxter, 27 Vt. 628. Pierce v. Paine, 32 Vt. 229. Graham v. Chandler, 38 Vt. 559.

III. VENUE.

11. The common law, as to certain actions being local, has been superseded by our statute regulating the places in which actions shall be brought; and none are local unless made so by statute. University of Vt. v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52. Hunt v. Pownal, 9 Vt. 411. June v. Conant, 17 Vt. 656.

12. Under the statute requiring scire facias against sheriff's bail to be brought in the county where the default, or neglect sued for, happens;—Held, that the action was well brought in Windsor county by the State Treasurer, residing and having his office there, for the default of the sheriff of Caledonia county in not serving and returning certain extents for State taxes. State Treasurer v. Kealey, 4 Vt. 871.

13. An action of trespass on the freehold before a justice must, like other actions, be brought in the town in which one of the parties resides. June v. Conant, 17 Vt. 656.

14. The act of Oct. 29, 1811 (C. S. c. 29, s. 36; G. S. c. 31, s. 33), does not apply to a single act of selling on a particular occasion, by one who did not use or follow the trade of vending goods, &c., or, if he did, was only transiently in the town in which the sale was made, and had no established business or place of business there. Wainwright v. Berry, 3 Vt. 423. Stone v. Hazen, 25 Vt. 178.

15. But it does apply to sales made by a peddler in the usual course of his business, while peddling in a town other than his own or the purchaser's residence. Richardson v. Stevens, 41 Vt. 120.

IV. DISCONTINUANCE.

16. Causes. The non-attendance of the justice within the two hours given by statute for appearance after the hour set for trial, operates as a discontinuance. Brown v. Stacy, 9 Vt. 118. Phelps v. Birge, 11 Vt. 161. Crawford v. Cheney, 12 Vt. 567.

17. So also the absence of the parties. Pike v. Hill, 15 Vt. 183.

18. So also an unauthorized continuance with appearance of the defendant. Puddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 529. See Aldrich v. Bonett, 33 Vt. 202.

19. It is not the death of a party, but the appointment of commissioners for the adjustment of claims, which works a discontinuance of a pending suit under G. S. c. 53, s. 16. Miller v. Williams, 30 Vt. 386.

20. The non-entry of an appeal operates as a discontinuance of the action. Bates v. Kimball, 2 D. Chip. 83. Love v. Estes, 6 Vt. 286. Probate Court v. Glead, 35 Vt. 24. (Changed by statute, as to justice's judgments.)

21. After entry. After the entry of a suit upon the docket, it is under the control of the court until the actual entry of discontinuance by direction of the plaintiff. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Newell, 31 Vt. 364.

22. Waiver of irregularity. A subsequent assent to an irregular continuance of a suit is sufficient to prevent a discontinuance. Collins v. Merriam, 31 Vt. 622.

23. In a suit returnable before a justice, the plaintiff died before the return day. The case was twice continued because of the inability of the justice to attend, and three times on the request of the defendant, when the administrator entered to prosecute—it not appearing but that this was on the next court day after his appointment. Up to this time the plaintiff's death had not been suggested upon the record. Held, that the action was not discontinued. Babcock v. Culver, 46 Vt. 715.

24. Where a justice suit is discontinued by the non-attendance of the justice with the writ at the time set for trial, the lost jurisdiction can be regained only by some voluntary, positive, affirmative act of the defendant, evincing a willingness or consent that the court proceed to hear and determine the case notwithstanding the irregularity. Where such objection was duly raised and insisted upon, but overruled by the justice, and terms were imposed upon the plaintiff, which the defendant took, and two trials were had:—Held, nevertheless, that the objection was not waived. Pinney v. Petty, 47 Vt. 616.

25. Notice of discontinuance. After an action has been entered in court, and costs have been incurred by the defendant, a notice of discontinuance given out of court cannot have the effect, without the consent of the other party, of at once discontinuing the suit;—not even where, also, a tender of the defendant's costs has been made, but not accepted. Jenney v. Glynn, 12 Vt. 480. 31 Vt. 370.

26. A suit commenced by defective process may be discontinued by a verbal notice, so as to allow the bringing of a new suit immediately for the same cause of action, without abatement; and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the discontinuance will be presumed to have been made on account of such defect. Hill v. Dunlap, 15 Vt. 645.

27. Notice of discontinuance need not be in writing to avoid the effect of a plea in abatement; but must be in writing to deprive the defendant of his claim for costs. Id. Ballou v. Ballou, 26 Vt. 673. But see Fullam v. Ives, 37 Vt. 659, as to last point.

V. ABATEMENT BY PENDENCY OF FORMER SUIT.

28. Both pending at the same time. The plaintiff had caused his writ to be served upon the defendant, but before the return day sued out another writ for the same cause of action, and gave it to an officer for service, who lodged a copy of it with a return of the attachment of property thereon in the town clerk's office. The officer then delivered to the defendant a written notice from the plaintiff of the discontinuance of the first suit, and afterwards delivered him a copy of the second writ and attachment.—Held, that the second suit was not abated by the first, for that both were not pending at the same time—the first having been discontinued before any such service of the second writ as called upon the defendant to answer thereto. Whether the plaintiff had good cause, or any cause, for discontinuing the first suit is not a material inquiry. Kirby v. Jackson, 42 Vt. 552.

29. A defective suit had been entered in court and the defect pleaded in abatement. The plaintiff thereupon gave the defendant a written notice of discontinuance, and immediately brought a second suit for the same cause of action and had his writ served, and afterwards, at the same term, had an entry of discontinuance of the first suit made upon the docket.—Held, that the second suit was not vexatious, and was not abated by the pendency of the first. Downer v. Garland, 21 Vt. 362.

30. If two writs be sued out at the same time, the one first served abates the other; but not e converso. Morton v. Webb, 7 Vt. 123.

31. Identity of parties and cause of action. In order that the pendency of a former suit should abate a later one, it is essential, not only that the cause of action be the same in both suits, but that they be in favor of the same plaintiff. Held, that a pending suit in favor of the payee of a promissory note, brought before indorsement, did not abate a suit afterwards brought in favor of an indorsee of the same note. Thomas v. Freelove, 17 Vt. 138.

32. The pendency of a former suit, for part only of the matters embraced in a second suit, will not abate the second suit, either in whole or in part. Ballou v. Ballou, 26 Vt. 673.

33. Suit in another State. A suit will not abate by reason of the pendency of a previous suit, between the same parties for the same cause of action, in another State of the United States. McGillivray v. Avery, 30 Vt. 538. See Stoughton v. Mott, 13 Vt. 175.

34. —in equity. The pendency of a prior suit in equity for the same matter cannot be pleaded in abatement of a suit at law; the remedy is by injunction in chancery. Blanchard v. Stone, 16 Vt. 234.

VI. SURVIVAL.

35. Action for penalty. A prosecution qui tam for usury abates by the death of the defendant; and if he dies after verdict and during the pendency of a motion in arrest, the court will not thereafter render judgment nunc pro tunc. Benson v. Edgerton, Brat. 21.

36. Two joint creditors commence an action qui tam to recover the penalty against fraudulent conveyances, and one dies. Held, that the action survives to the other. Wright v. Eldred, 2 D. Chip. 37.

37. Statute provision. Under G. S., c. 52, ss. 10–12, providing for the survival of actions "for damages done to real or personal estate," the action does not survive when the tortious act affects the estate only indirectly,—as in Barrett v. Copeland, 20 Vt. 244. Winhall v. Sawyer, 45 Vt. 466; but when it affects the estate directly, though it be not done to any specific property, the action survives;—as in Dana v. Lull, 21 Vt. 383. Bellows v. Allen, 22 Vt. 106.

38. An action in favor of a town to recover damages under G. S., c. 20, s. 31, for bringing a pauper into such town, does not survive against the defendant's estate. Winhall v. Sawyer.

39. At common law, an action in the name of husband and wife, for injuries to the wife, does not survive to the husband, nor to her administrator; but by our statute such action survives to her administrator. Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275.

40. An action to recover damages for an unlawful arrest and imprisonment survives to the administrator of the party injured, as for a "bodily hurt or injury," under G. S. c. 52, s. 11. Whitcomb v. Cook, 38 Vt. 477.

41. This statute makes all actions survive, when the cause of action was for a physical injury to the person caused in any unlawful manner. Poland, C. J., Ib. 482.

42. Under G. S. c. 52, a wrongful act, neglect or default, causing death to another, affords two distinct causes of action; one, by survivorship, in favor of the estate of the decedent to recover such damages as he sustained in his lifetime, which recovery becomes general assets (Secs. 10, 11, 12 and 13); the other for the pecuniary injury resulting from such death to the widow and next of kin, to be prosecuted in form by the administrator, but only as trustee for their use. Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 38 Vt. 294.

VII. PARTIES.

1. Plaintiffs.

43. No such person. That there is no such person in existence as the plaintiff, may be pleaded in abatement, or in bar, whether the action be professedly in the name of a corporation, or of a natural person. Boston Type Foundry v. Spooner, 5 Vt. 93.

44. A suit was brought in the name of "Gray, Drew & Co." The defendant pleaded in abatement that there was no such person in existence. Replication, that Gray, Drew & Co. were the plaintiffs, Dan Gray, John Drew and John Boardman.—Held, on demurrer, that Dan Gray, &c., were not and could not become parties to the record, and the plea was held sufficient;—but held, also, that the defendant could take no judgment for costs against Dan Gray, &c. Gray v. Parker, 16 Vt. 652.

45. Proprietors. The statute authorizing suits in the name of the "Proprietors" of towns, does not authorize a suit in the name of "Proprietors of the undivided land" of a certain tract in a particular town. Proprietors, &c., v. Bishop, 3 Vt. 92.

46. The State. In the absence of legal regulations to the contrary, a suit may, upon common principles, be brought in the name of the State, when the legal interest is in the State,—as trespass qua. clau. for entry upon the State-house grounds and taking away the State's chattels. State v. Bradish, 34 Vt. 419.

47. State treasurer. In an action of debt commenced before the passage of G. S. c. 85, s. 16, upon the official bond of the State treasurer executed to "Benjamin W. Dean, Secretary of the State of Vermont, and to his successors in office in behalf of the State of Vermont;"—Held, that such action could not be brought in the name of the State.—Held, also, that such action must be brought in the name of the obligee named, or, if he was out of office, then in the name of his successor in that office, the power to sue being treated as incident to the office, on the principle that, pro tanto, the Secretary of State is indueed with a corporate capacity. State v. Bates, 36 Vt. 387.

48. Same person both plaintiff and defendant. An action at law cannot be sustained, either upon common law principles, or under any statute of this State, when the same person is one of the plaintiffs and also one of the defendants. Green v. Chapman, 27 Vt. 236. Estes v. Whipple, 12 Vt. 373.

49. Legal interest. The right of action to recover for property sold is in him who has the legal interest in the property, not in him who has the equitable interest only. Heald v. Warren, 22 Vt. 409.

50. Instances. A purchased goods professedly for B, and took a bill of sale in the name of B, but in reality for himself, and paid for them himself. A afterwards sold the goods conditionally to C and procured C to give a receipt acknowledging that he had received the goods of B, and to remain B's until paid for. This receipt A afterwards assigned to D. C sold the goods to F and F to the defendant. The goods not having been paid for—Held, that after demand and refusal to deliver them, trover lay in the name of B therefor. Lord v. Bishop, 18 Vt. 141.

51. In a suit of A against B, the court imposed terms upon A as a condition for a continuance. A's solicitor thereupon promised B's solicitor to pay the amercement, if he would inform the court that the terms were complied with. He did so inform the court, and the entry was made on the docket, "terms complied with," and the cause was continued. In an action by B against the solicitor of A on such promise,—Held, (1), that the promise was on good consideration; (2), that it was not within the statute of frauds, for that the amercement created no debt against A; (3), that the suit was well brought in the name of B, the party for whose benefit the promise was made. Lampson v. Swift, 11 Vt. 315.

52. The plaintiff's partner, H, purchased a horse of one K, with an agreement to let the plaintiff have the horse at the same price, if the plaintiff wished. The horse was put, kept and fed with other horses of the firm and used in the partnership business for eight or ten days, when the plaintiff, without ever having expressed his intent to take the horse, exchanged him with the defendant for another horse and $50, boot money, to be paid. By a subsequent arrangement between the plaintiff and H, the second horse was sent to market and sold on joint account. Held, that the property in the first horse became vested in the plaintiff, individually, and that he could recover the boot money in his own name, in an action on book. Hatch v. Foster, 27 Vt. 515.

53. The plaintiff made a parol contract with the defendant, by which she agreed to give the defendant all her property, real and personal, and he agreed to support her through life and pay all her debts. At the time the contract was made, she stated that she had some money and notes which she wished to keep, so as not to be obliged to call upon him every time she needed small necessities, but that she considered the money and notes to be his just the same. To this he assented, and immediately took possession of all the property, except said money and notes which were retained by her, and fulfilled his part of the contract by paying her debts and supporting her for nearly three years, when she left his house, refusing to live with him longer, leaving the money and notes in question locked up in her trunk in the room she had occupied in his house. The defendant shortly after broke open the room and trunk and took possession of the money and notes. In an action of trover therefor—Held, that even if the defendant should be regarded as the general owner of such money and notes, and not merely as having inchoate rights under a contract executory, the plaintiff had, under the contract, such powers, coupled with an interest, viz., a right of possession and to expend the property for her necessities, as that she could maintain the action. Lamb v. Clark, 30 Vt. 347.

54. Joint interests. By contract between the plaintiffs, one furnished a boat and the other ran it for transportation of merchandise, they sharing equally the profit and loss of the business. Held, that for a loss of the boat by the negligence of the defendant in towing it, a joint action lay for the value of the boat, it being in the joint use of the plaintiffs. White v. Bascom, 28 Vt. 268.

55. Held, that where two have a joint interest in the damages caused by the destruction of buildings by fire, they may maintain a joint action to recover therefor against the person by whose fault such destruction was caused, although the legal title to the buildings was in but one of the plaintiffs. Cleveland v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 42 Vt. 449.

56. Non-joinder. The non-joinder of one who ought to have been made a plaintiff may be pleaded in abatement, or may be taken advantage of on trial. Hilliker v. Loop, 5 Vt. 116.

2. Defendants.

57. Not participating. B hired a sloop on his own account and took on board others, some as working hands and others as passengers. Held, that none except B were answerable for the act or neglect of B whereby the vessel was damaged. King v. Bevins, 1 D. Chip. 178.

58. The defendant purchased land, then in the possession of a third person, who retained the exclusive possession, no rent being claimed or paid, and built a dam on the land which set back the water upon the plaintiff's land. This was done without the knowledge or consent of the defendant. Held, that the defendant was not liable therefor, not being a privy to the wrong either in fact or in law. Pettibone v. Burton, 20 Vt. 302.

59. The defendant and one W jointly purchased a lot of land, with an arrangement between them that the defendant should have the land and W the cedar timber upon it. There was a dispute as to the true division line between this lot and the plaintiff's lot adjoining, and the defendant, having knowledge of it, supposed and claimed that a former lawsuit had settled the line against the plaintiff's claim, and so told W, who went on and cut the timber on the land between the two lines, which turned out to belong to the plaintiff. The defendant took no part, nor advised, aided or assisted W in cutting the timber, except that he let his hired man assist W and charged W therefor. Held, that the defendant was not liable as a participator in the trespass of W. Langdon v. Bruce, 27 Vt. 657.

60. The defendant, by invitation of A, rode with him from Barton to Newport with the plaintiff's team, which A had hired to go only to Barton, and this was known to the defendant, but he exercised no control over the team. In an action of trespass,—Held, that the defendant was not liable. Hubbard v. Hunt, 41 Vt. 376.

61. The assignor of a note not negotiable is not liable for the misuse of process in a suit on such note in his name, where he has no interest or participation in the suit, or the wrong complained of. Ross v. Fuller 12 Vt. 265. 17 Vt. 165.

62. Otherwise where he does so participate. Tichout v. Cilley, 3 Vt. 415.

63. For the irregularity of an officer in executing a valid process, or for any acts of his beyond the authority which the process confers, the party suing it out is not responsible, unless the officer acts under his orders or direction. Barnard v. Stevens, 2 Aik. 429.

64. As a general rule, when an officer in the performance of an official service (as serving an attachment or execution) commits a trespass through a mistake of fact, and the party for whom he acts, knowing all the facts, takes the avails of the act of the officer, or counsels the very act which creates the liability of the officer, he is implicated to the same extent as the officer. But where he does not direct nor control the course of the officer, but requires him to proceed at his peril, and the officer makes a mistake of law in judging of his official duty, whereby he becomes a trespasser, even by relation, the party is not affected by it, even when he receives the money which is the result of such irregularity, and although he was aware of the course pursued by the officer. This does not amount to a consent to nor adoption of the officer's course, and, without this, the party is not liable. Hyde v. Cooper, 26 Vt. 552. Abbott v. Kimball, 19 Vt. 551. 21 Vt. 152.

65. The mere expression of an opinion by the creditor to an officer employed by him, that the course taken by the officer was legal, does not make him liable for such act of the officer, if it turn out to be illegal, although he take the benefit of the act. Hyde v. Cooper.

66. A party who sues out a search warrant is not liable in trespass for the act of the officer who serves it, by entering the open door of the plaintiff's dwelling house and making search, doing no unnecessary damage, although the goods are not found; and whether the party would, in like case, be liable if the officer, admittance being denied, had forcibly broken open the outer door—quare. Clearly the officer would not, although the goods were not found. Chipman v. Bates, 15 Vt. 51.

67. Not contracting. Where one requests a physician to render professional services for another for whom he is not legally bound to provide,—as, for his servant, or for his insane brother,—and there is no express promise to pay, his liability to pay depends upon whether it may fairly be inferred from the evidence, that it was the intention of both parties that he would pay for the services. Clark v. Waterman, 7 Vt. 76. Smith v. Watson, 14 Vt. 332. 28 Vt. 236.

68. A engaged B to do certain freighting for him, and B engaged C to do it. A paid B therefor without knowing that it was done by C. It did not appear that C did the work on the credit of A. Held, that A was not liable to C therefor. Tobias v. Blin, 21 Vt. 544.

69. Joinder of defendants. A river was divided by an island, and different parties, having distinct interests, at different times built dams across the several channels. The plaintiff brought a joint action against the two for setting back the water upon his land by means of the two dams, and verdict passed against one and in favor of the other. Held, no cause for setting aside the verdict. Wright v. Cooper, 1 Tyl. 425.

70. To warrant a judgment against two or more defendants, the liability must be joint; and the recovery must be limited to the extent that the liability is joint as to all. Smith v. Kellogg, 46 Vt. 560.

71. In an action on the case against two, setting forth a joint contract to manufacture and adjust the machinery of a mill properly, but that they had spoiled the work in their attempt;—Held, (1), that such action would lie; but (2), that as the liability grew out of a contract it must be proved as laid, viz., as a joint contract,—and, verdict being for one defendant, that the plaintiff could not take judgment against the other. Wright v. Geer, 6 Vt. 151. (Changed by G. S. c. 30, s. 78.)

72. In an action against two or more upon a joint contract, there can be but one judgment. If one suffer default, and the other stand trial, the judgment as to the first is suspended until the result of the trial is ascertained. If an appeal be taken, the judgment as to all the defendants is vacated, and the entire case is removed into the county court, with all the parties. Fletcher v. Blair, 20 Vt. 124. (Since modified by statutes.)

73. Authority of one defendant to act for another. In actions ex contractu, one co-defendant may, in the absence of instructions to the contrary, employ counsel, enter appearance, agree to a continuance, plead and defend fully for all. Scott v. Larkin, 13 Vt. 112. 18 Vt. 218. This limited to a case where the other defendant has been duly served with process and is before the court. Whitney v. Silver, 22 Vt. 634. 44 Vt. 551.

74. Effect of non-joinder. The non-joinder of a joint promissor is only matter of abatement. Nash v. Skinner, 12 Vt. 219. Ives v. Hulet, Id. 314.

75. In an action upon any written contract, whether of record or not, the non-joinder of a joint contractor as defendant can be taken advantage of only by plea in abatement, unless such omission appears upon the record,—that is, the very record of the very suit upon trial. McGregor v. Balch, 17 Vt. 562.

76. Thus, in an action against two, declaring upon a joint recognizance of the two, an issue joined upon the plea of nul tiel record, the record produced showed that two others, the principals, were co-recognizors. Held, that the record supported the declaration; that the non-joinder could be taken advantage of only by plea in abatement, inasmuch as this did not appear in the declaration; or, the defendant might have brought it into the record by craving oyer of the recognizance and setting it out, and could then have taken advantage of the non-joinder by demurrer. Ib.

77. In actions upon joint recognizances, joint judgments and other matters of record, if it appears from the declaration, or other pleadings of the plaintiff, that there is another joint debtor who is not sued, the non-joinder may be taken advantage of by demurrer, or motion in arrest. The same is true of actions upon joint bonds, provided it appears from the declaration or other pleadings of the plaintiff that the obligor, not joined, is still living. But unless this does so appear, the non-joinder can be taken advantage of only by plea in abatement. Needham v. Heath, 17 Vt. 223. ("This, I apprehend, is to be presumed, for at least seven years, unless the contrary appear." Redfield, J., in McGregor v. Balch, 17 Vt. 567.) ●

78. Misjoinder. Seire facias against one of two joint recognizers and the administrators of the other. On demurrer,—held a misjoinder. State Treas. v. Friott, 24 Vt. 134.

VIII. WHEN NOT MAINTAINABLE.

79. Oppression. The defendant made a settlement with the plaintiff, and received in satisfaction of a judgment against him a deed of certain land, upon the plaintiff's paying in addition certain costs not taxable. Held, that the money so paid could not be recovered back as oppressively taken. Chace v. May, Brayt. 25.

80. Unavoidable accident. No action lies for an injury which is the result of unavoidable accident, where there is no want of prudence or care on the part of the defendant—(applied to a case where the defendant with his sulky ran over the plaintiff in the highway). Vincent v. Stinchour, 7 Vt. 62.

81. Motive in the exercise of a legal right. One's motive can never alter the character of his lawful act. Whatever a man has a legal right to do, he may do with impunity, regardless of his motive. Humphrey v. Douglass, 11 Vt. 22.

82. The defendant finding the plaintiff's horses wrongfully trespassing upon the defendant's land [as where they escaped through a defect of a division fence which it was equally the duty of each party to repair] turned them into the highway, without notice to the plaintiff, whereby the horses were lost:—Held, that the defendant was not liable therefor; that the act was lawful, and was not rendered unlawful because of any improper motives,—as malice. Humphrey v. Douglass, 10 Vt. 71. S. C. 11 Vt. 22, and see Woodcock v. Bolater, 35 Vt. 632.

83. An act legal in itself, violating no right, cannot be made actionable by reason of the motive which induced it. S. Royalton Bank v. Suffolk Bank, 27 Vt. 505. Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49. 41 Vt. 345.

84. The plaintiffs, a banking corporation, brought suit declaring that the defendants, maliciously, corruptly and wickedly intending to injure, break down and destroy the plaintiffs, and bring their bills into discredit and prevent their circulation, had bought up, taken and kept out of circulation a large amount of such bills and notes, and refused to exchange them for other funds, but demanded and compelled the plaintiffs to pay the specie thereon, whereby the plaintiffs were injured, and deprived of great profits, &c. Held, on demurrer, that the declaration did not disclose any legal cause of action. S. Royalton Bank v. Suffolk Bank.

85. So where the defendant, by digging down near the margin of his own land, cut off an underground water supply to the plaintiff upon his land;—Held, that this was not actionable, though done "solely with the purpose of injuring the plaintiff and not with any purpose of usefulness to himself." Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49. 41 Vt. 345.

86. A party is not precluded from standing upon and exercising a legal right, because he is prompted to do so by an improper or unworthy motive. In re Foster, 44 Vt. 570.

87. No legal duty owing to the plaintiff. The plaintiff took from the defendant's premises without his knowledge or permission a bar, or pole, belonging to the defendant, and used the same in supporting a staging set up for the purpose of shingling the plaintiff's barn. The defendant, in the plaintiff's absence and without his knowledge, retook and removed the bar, doing no more damage to the staging than was necessary to repossess himself of the bar. The plaintiff, without knowing that the bar had been removed, went upon the staging, and, by reason of its being weakened by the removal of the bar, it fell, and the plaintiff was injured thereby. In an action therefor;—Held, that the defendant was justified in retaking his property, and that no legal duty was imposed upon him to give notice of the removal, or to have used diligence to give notice, and that the plaintiff could not recover for his misfortune. White v. Twitchell, 25 Vt. 620.

88. The plaintiff owed the defendant bank, and his agent, by his direction, sent to the bank a certain sum of money to be applied on such debt. The money was received and so applied. The plaintiff afterwards inquired at the bank, and was told by the teller, but by mistake and in good faith, that the sum so received was less than the true sum, whereupon the plaintiff set about looking up and securing.

the supposed deficiency, and therein incurred expenses. In an action to recover therefor—Held, that as there was neither fraud nor an implied warranty, this was a case of damnum absque injuria, and the plaintiff could not recover. Herrin v. Franklin Co. Bank, 32 Vt. 274.

89. Procuring a wrong judgment. An action was held not to lie, charging that the defendant by false testimony as a witness had procured a wrongful judgment against the plaintiff; nor for procuring, by commissioners of an estate, the allowance of a note which the defendant had forged. Cunningham v. Brown, 18 Vt. 123.

90. Incidental damage in guarding against plaintiff's wrong. The surface water flowed naturally from the plaintiff's land upon the land of the defendant. The plaintiff was in the habit of throwing out filthy water from his kitchen, when it would run down on the defendant's land, and so injured the defendant's well. To prevent this the defendant put up an obstruction, which not only kept back the filthy water but caused the surface water to turn off into the plaintiff's well to its injury. The court charged the jury, that if such an obstruction was actually necessary in order to prevent injury to the defendant from the filthy water, he would not be liable, although it did have the effect to stop some of the surface water from running off the plaintiff's land upon the defendant's. Held correct, and that if the means employed did produce some incidental hurt or damage to the plaintiff he has no right to complain. Beard v. Murphy, 37 Vt. 99.

91. Counterfeiting materials. Where a large number of pieces of German silver, of the precise size and thickness of Mexican dollars, and made in that form for the purpose of being stamped and milled into counterfeit coin of that description, were taken by the sheriff from a person who was at the time carrying them to a place of manufacture for the purpose of having them finished, so that he could put them in circulation as genuine coin, and they were detained by the sheriff under the direction of the State's Attorney, to be used as evidence on the trial of such person who was then under indictment, and also to prevent their being put in circulation:—Held, that the owner of the pieces, in the absence of evidence that they were put in their present form without his knowledge, or against his consent, could not sustain trover against the sheriff therefor. Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 9.

92. Voluntary service and payment. W requested F to hand a certain note to H in payment of an execution which H held against W, but gave no further authority. H refused to receive the note, whereupon S at the request of F signed with him a note to H which he received in satisfaction of the execution, and S afterwards paid this note. Held, that S could not maintain an action against W for money paid, for want of privity between them arising from any request of W. Huntington v. Wilder, 6 Vt. 334.

93. Election—Refusing a vote. Whether the presiding officer at an election who, by mere error in judgment, refuses to receive a legal vote, is liable therefor in an action—quære. Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 535.

For particular actions, see the several titles, as ACCOUNT, EJECTMENT, etc.

ACTION OF ACCOUNT.

- I. IN WHAT CASES THE ACTION LIES.
- II. PROCEDURE.

I. IN WHAT CASES THE ACTION LIES.

1. Defendant bailiff—Liability. A bailiff is not liable, in the action of account, to account for the property he received, but which he has not turned into profits, unless he has so disposed of it, or appropriated it to his own use, that he has consumed or wasted it as if it were his own. That he has converted it to his own use so as to be liable for it in an action of trover, may not be a sufficient appropriation of it to make him liable in account. Gibbs v. Sleeper, 45 Vt. 409.

2. Locus of estate. An action of account was held to lie in this State, although both parties resided in New Hampshire, and the locks and canals, of the profits of which an account was claimed, were there situate. Whitmore v. Orcutt, Brayt. 22.

3. Promissory notes. An action for account was held to lie against the defendant, as bailiff, for certain promissory notes (with their proceeds), which the defendant had taken payable to himself, but for the benefit of the plaintiff, then a married woman, but discovered before demand and suit. Smith v. Woods, 3 Vt. 485. S. C. 4 Vt. 400.

4. Guardian. So in behalf of a ward against his former guardian, who continued the management of the estate after the termination of the guardianship, and he may recover not only for the time the defendant held the estate as bailiff, but also while he held it as guardian. Harris v. Harris, 44 Vt. 320. Field v. Torrey, 7 Vt. 372.

5. Letting land on shares. The action of account (not book account) is the appropriate action for the settlement of accounts growing out of the letting of a farm "upon shares, or at the halves." Albee v. Fairbanks, 10 Vt. 314. Ganaway v. Miller, 15 Vt. 152. Stedman v.

Gassett, 18 Vt. 346. Aiken v. Smith, 21 Vt. 172. Cilley v. Tenny, 31 Vt. 401.

6. Under a contract for joint occupancy of land for one year, and division of profits, an action of account will not lie before the expiration of the year. (In this case, the plaintiff quit without license, before the expiration of the term.) Ganaway v. Miller.

7. Although the action of account is the proper remedy for the adjustment of controversies growing out of the letting of land upon shares, yet breaches of contract on either part, whereby the making of profits has been prevented merely, though they may be brought in to the account, need not necessarily be, but may be sued for independently, and damages recovered. La Point v. Scott, 36 Vt. 603.

8. Equitable title. The action of account will not lie upon a merely equitable title of tenancy in common, or joint tenancy, to recover for rents and profits, or the avails of land by sale. The remedy is in equity. Cearnes v. Irving, 31 Vt. 604.

9. Tenancy in common. The plaintiff let the defendant have a quantity of cucumbers, to be pickled by the defendant at the halves. The defendant pickled them, but did not return one-half the pickles to the plaintiff. Held, that an action of account, as between tenants in common, would lie therefor, and that, under G. S., c. 41, s. 18, the claim might be adjusted with other items in the book account action. Gates v. Lockwood, 27 Vt. 286.

10. A sum found due to one tenant in common, on settlement of accounts between them, may be charged as an item in a new account, and be so adjusted in a subsequent action of account. Kidder v. Rixford, 16 Vt. 169.

11. The interest of a tenant in common of growing crops is assignable. The assignee takes the place of the assignor, and may maintain the action of account against his co-tenant, after severance, for his just share of the crops. Aiken v. Smith, 21 Vt. 172.

12. Co-partners. The action of account lies between partners to recover the balance due upon the settlement of the partnership; and not to recover a specific sum of money, received by one of the partners for the use and benefit of the concern. Wood v. Merrow, 25 Vt. 340.

13. Held, that an action of account did not lie in favor of one who was the active partner and received the whole property and avails of the co-partnership against the other, who had received nothing, to recover the balance of losses. Spear v. Newell, 13 Vt. 288.

14. The action of account between partners exists at common law, and survives to the administrator, without the aid of the statute of 1852. (G. S. c. 41, s. 13.) Our statutes on the subject of the action of account were not passed for the purpose of limiting the action to the cases enumerated, but to extend the action in certain cases where it did not lie at common law. Newell v. Humphrey, 37 Vt. 265.

15. A and D were co-partners in trade. They dissolved, and D assigned to A all the property and debts to collect, pay partnership debts and account for the surplus. D being indebted to T afterwards assigned to him his interest in the property, to pay such debt and account for the balance; and afterwards A assigned all his interest to T, to pay his and the partnership indebtedness to T, and to account for the balance. Held, that T was not the bailiff of A and D jointly, but of each severally. Allen v. Thrall, 10 Vt. 234.

16. Co-executors. The action of account between co-executors, or co-administrators, does not lie at common law. An administrator de bonis non cannot maintain such action against a former executor, to recover a balance in his hands. It is not within the statute. (G. S. c. 41, s. 1.) The remedy is by proceedings in the probate court. Curtis v. Curtis, 13 Vt. 517. 26 Vt. 568.

17. Limited to two parties. Account does not lie between more than two parties, having several rights. May v. Williams, 3 Vt. 239.

18. When there are more than three parties, an action of account at common law cannot be maintained to settle the partnership. Wood v. Merrow, 25 Vt. 340.

19. Aside from G. S. c. 41, ss. 13-14, an action of account cannot be maintained which involves an accounting between more than two parties, with each a several interest. La Point v. Scott, 36 Vt. 633. Wiswell v. Wilkins, 4 Vt. 137. 9 Vt. 36. Smith v. Woods, 3 Vt. 485.

20. Nor under that statute has a justice jurisdiction in such case. La Point v. Scott.

21. But in the case of a joint interest represented by several defendants and constituting them one party (and the same as to plaintiffs), account will lie, without the aid of that statute. Ib. Wiswell v. Wilkins, 4 Vt. 137.

22. Book account matters. Counts in account and book account cannot be joined. May v. Williams, 3 Vt. 239.

23. In an action of account, items of book account cannot be adjusted. Cilley v. Tenny, 31 Vt. 401.

24. But if such items are brought in and submitted without objection and are adjusted, the auditor will be regarded as acting by consent of the parties, as arbitrator or referee, and the court will not disturb the adjustment. Aiken v. Smith, 21 Vt. 172.

II. PROCEDURE.

25. Demand requisite. A demand to account, or something tantamount to it, is necessary to perfect the cause of action in this action. But as to a particular item of the account, where the whole action does not depend upon that, a demand after suit brought, but before the audit, is sufficient. Gates v. Lockwood, 27 Vt. 286. (Chadwick v. Divol, 12 Vt. 499.)

26. What sufficient. Where a division of crops between lessor and lessee is the mode of accounting provided for, a demand for such division after the crops are gathered and stored, although before the expiration of the lease, is a sufficient demand on which to base an action of account. The lessor, in such case, is not bound to wait until the crops are consumed or disposed of, and then renew his demand for a different accounting. Stedman v. Gassett, 18 Vt. 346.

27. In an action of account by one tenant in common against his co-tenant, as bailiff and receiver of the common property, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff did not before suit brought demand the rendering of an account. Held, that a demand by the plaintiff that the defendant return the property or pay for it, or the plaintiff would sue him, accompanied by a denial by the defendant that the plaintiff had any right in the property, was a sufficient demand. Aiken v. Smith, 21 Vt. 172.

28. Demand superseded. Where an issue is joined upon the defendant's plea that he was never bailiff, the plaintiff is not required to prove a demand, before suit, that the defendant render an account. Chadwick v. Divol, 12 Vt. 499.

29. Declaration. In an action of account to recover money received by the defendant for which he ought to account, he should be charged as receiver, not as a bailiff, simply. Wood v. Merrow, 25 Vt. 340.

30. A count against one as receiver merely, must allege what money was received and from whom;—a count nearly obsolete, since assumpsit for money had and received as well lies. May v. Williams, 3 Vt. 239.

31. In the action of account at common law, charging the defendant as receiver, where the privity between the parties is created by the receipt of the money, the declaration must state by whose hands it was received; but where the privity arises from the relation of the parties, as in case of partners, this is not necessary, but the relation must be stated. Moore v. Wilson, 2 D. Chip. 91. Robinson v. Wright, Brayt. 22. Squire v. Allen, Brayt. 190.

32. Where the privity which exists between the parties arises from their connection as partners, this connection should be stated in the declaration. Wood v. Merrow, 25 Vt. 340.

33. The declaration in this action need not specify all the items, nor the subject matter of each item, but only the transaction, the contract or relation out of which the account is claimed; and before the auditor, all items which are connected and consistent with that contract or relation, may be adjusted. Joy v. Walker, 29 Vt. 257. (Dictum contra in Ganaway v. Miller, 15 Vt. 154, denied. Ib. 262.)

34. In an action of account to compel an adjustment of the rights of the parties to the rents, use and occupation, or products of land, or the avails of a sale, as between joint owners or tenants in common, the declaration must set forth and define the interest and proportionate share of each party, and that the defendant has received more than his just share. Brinsmaid v. Mayo, 9 Vt. 31. Ganaway v. Miller, 15 Vt. 152. 19 Vt. 197. Cearnes v. Irving, 31 Vt. 604.

35. A declaration, imperfect in these respects, was held good after verdict. Strong v. Richardson, 19 Vt. 194.

36. The action of account between tenants in common, or joint tenants, under G. S. c. 41, depends upon privity of estate, and not of contract. In order to entitle the plaintiff to the benefit of the statute, he must allege specifically in his declaration the facts necessary to bring the case within it, viz: The joint tenancy, or tenancy in common, of the parties, the proportions in which they hold, and that the defendant has received more than his just share or proportion. Difference between account at common law between tenants in common, and under the statute, noted. Hayden v. Merrill, 44 Vt. 336.

37. Plea and issue. In an action of account between partners, demanding an account of money received by the defendant arising from the profits of the business more than his just share, the defendant pleaded that he had fully accounted. Held, that an agreement signed by the plaintiff, reciting that the defendant had relinquished to him all claims to the demands due the firm and to the stock of the company, and that the plaintiff promised to pay all debts due from the firm, and to indemnify the defendant against them, did not tend to support the plea. Woodward v. Francis, 19 Vt. 434.

38. Action of account, charging the defendant as bailiff and receiver. Plea that the defendant was never bailiff and receiver—and issue joined. Held, that it was not error to receive evidence which proved the averments of the declaration, and to determine the issue upon it, irrespective of the sufficiency of the declaration; and (by Williams, C. J.) the County Court would not have been justified in testing the sufficiency of the declaration, on the trial of the issue formed. Onion v. Fullerton, 17 Vt. 359; and see Wheelock v. Wheelock, 5 Vt. 433.

39. Rules of pleading. Rules of pleading in actions of account, given by Redfield, J., in Bishop v. Baldwin, 14 Vt. 145; as in Godfrey v. Saunders, 3 Wilson 94.

40. In an action of account between partners, the defendant cannot plead in bar of the judgment to account, that he has accounted as to part of the account, but must show this in evidence before the auditor; nor can he plead that he does not owe the plaintiff. Morgan v. Adams, 37 Vt. 233.

41. Effect of judgment to account. The judgment to account conclusively settles the contract or relation upon which the plaintiff, in his declaration, claims the account. Redfield, J., in Albee v. Fairbanks, 10 Vt. 317.

42. What may be pleaded in bar of the action must be so pleaded; and all defenses which might be pleaded in bar, if not so pleaded, are considered as waived. Pickett v. Pearsons, 17 Vt. 470. Baxter v. Thompson, 26 Vt. 559.

43. There can be no revision of the merits of the judgment to account on the hearing before the auditor, nor on the hearing upon his report. Porter v. Wheeler, 37 Vt. 281. Newell v. Humphrey, 37 Vt. 269. 48 Vt. 309.

44. The judgment to account conclusively fixes the relation upon which the account is claimed [as that the defendant was a partner], and determines all the facts stated in the declaration, except that the defendant is in arrear. Bishop v. Baldwin, 14 Vt. 145.

45. Proceedings before auditors—Extent of recovery. In an action of account between partners, declaring in common form, the plaintiff can recover only for the balance due him on the adjustment of all their partnership dealings. Warren v. Wheelock, 21 Vt. 323.

46. In an action of account between partners, under G. S. c. 41, s. 13, where the defendant had purchased the interest of a third partner and represented two-thirds of the concern, and the plaintiff one-third:—Held, that the plaintiff could recover of the defendant two-thirds of the sum which the plaintiff had paid upon a partnership debt. Kendrick v. Tarbell, 27 Vt. 512.

47. In an action of account between landlord and a tenant on shares, a neglect of the tenant to keep up the fences and to hoe the corn, as provided in the lease, whereby the joint profits were reduced, is proper matter for allowance and adjustment. Cilley v. Tenny, 31 Vt. 401. 36 Vt. 609.

48. So the expense of keeping a team and of providing tools and seed may be recovered. Ganaway v. Miller, 15 Vt. 152.

49. And so of all items that are connected with the carrying on of the farm for the joint benefit of the parties, and which are necessary to be taken into account in determining the profits, and whether the defendant has given an account of what he received "more than his just share." Joy v. Walker, 29 Vt. 257. 31 Vt. 406.

50. Accounts to be adjusted to time of audit. Appeal from the Probate Court on the allowance of a guardian's account.—Referred to a commissioner who adjusted the accounts to the time of the hearing, embracing charges for services, &c., of the guardian during his guardianship, but accruing after the appeal. Held correct. Harwood v. Boardman, 38 Vt. 554.

51. On an appeal from the disallowance by commissioners of a claim against an estate, where the case was referred by consent, the referee allowed against the administrator claims for money paid for the benefit of the estate, which accrued after the death of the intestate:—Held, not erroneous. [There was a stipulation to this effect entered into before the referee.] McDaniels v. McDaniels, 40 Vt. 340.

52. Amendment. The declaration in an action of account cannot be amended so as to introduce a new and distinct claim, after the coming in of the auditor's report, unless the report is first set aside. If amended, the defendant would be entitled to plead anew to the amended count. Joy v. Walker, 28 Vt. 442.

ACTION ON THE CASE.

1. When the action lies—In general.

An action of trespass on the case lies, in general, where one sustains an injury by the misconduct of another, for which the law has provided no other adequate remedy. Griffin v. Farrell, 20 Vt. 151.

2. An action on the case does not lie, charging the defendant with being a party to a fraudulent purchase or judgment for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff of his debt; nor for a fraudulent combination and conspiracy of the defendant with the plaintiff's debtor to secrete the debtor's property and prevent the plaintiff from obtaining security or payment of his debt. The law has provided other remedies. Hall v. Eaton, 25 Vt. 458.

3. The selectmen of a town executed certain promissory notes, in their official capacity, in behalf of the town, which the defendant, one of the selectmen, took to get discounted. He afterwards pretended that he had destroyed one of them, but in fact fraudulently negotiated it to a third person, and got the money on it, which he appropriated to his own use. The town paid and took up the note. Held, that the defendant was liable to the town in an action on the case, and could not urge in defense that the town was not liable upon the note and that such payment was voluntary; that the money received upon the note belonged to his principal, the town. Troy v. Aiken, 46 Vt. 55.

4. Distinction between trespass and case. In regard to injuries to the person or to personal property, where the injury is directly inflicted by a forcible act, as where a blow is given to a person, or an act of violence committed upon his beast, or other property, causing injury, the party aggrieved has generally no choice of actions and trespass is his only remedy; but the necessity of suing in trespass extends no further, though the injury may have followed the forcible act without the intervention of any voluntary and responsible agency—as where the party has sustained a forcible injury, effected by means flowing from the act of the defendant, but not operating by the very force and impulse of that act. In this latter case he may sue in trespass, constructively treating those means as attached to and forming a part of the defendant's act, and thus bringing that act into immediate connection with the injury; or, waiving all artificial views of the matter, he may adopt the other form of action, and treat the injury as consequential. Royce, J., in Waterman v. Hall, 17 Vt. 128.

5. Where the defendants "set upon the plaintiff's mare with stones and clubs, and chased and frightened said mare, and drove her upon a certain log fence, whereby she was injured"—Held, that the plaintiff might, at his election, bring case, or trespass; and an action on the case was sustained. Ib.

6. If the injury be wilful, and be committed by the defendant himself, and the injury immediate, the action must be trespass. So, too, if the injury is immediate, and the defendant positively does any act producing or increasing the injury, trespass is the appropriate remedy. But where the only fault of the defendant consists in negligence, is a mere non-feasance, although the injury is immediate, the appropriate remedy is case. Cluflin v. Wilcox, 18 Vt. 605.

7. Case was sustained for a collision with the plaintiff's team upon a highway, where the defendant's team was driven by himself; the declaration averring that "the defendant so carelessly drove, governed and directed his horse and sleigh that by and through the carelessness, negligence and improper conduct of the defendant, the defendant's sleigh struck with great force and violence against the plaintiff's horse and thereby wounded and killed him,"—the proof corresponding. Ib.

8. Where the injury to the plaintiff results from the immediate force of the defendant, and is caused by his carelessness and negligence, and is not wilful, the plaintiff can maintain either trespass or case. Trespass was sustained in such case. Howard v. Tyler, 46 Vt. 683.

9. Where the plaintiffs, by permission of a school district, occupied the school house for the purpose of a private school for the time being merely, and not inconsistent with the rights of the district, and the defendant, the prudential committee of the district, wrongfully disturbed them in the occupation of the house;—Held, that the defendant was liable therefor in an action on the case, and not in trespass.

Chaplin v. Hill, 24 Vt. 528, and see Bakersfield Society v. Barker, 15 Vt. 119. Kellogg v. Dickinson, 18 Vt. 286. Perrin v. Granger, 33 Vt. 101.

10. Abuse of process. Case, and not trespass, is the appropriate action to recover for a mere abuse of regular process. Pierson v. Gale, 8 Vt. 509. 28 Vt. 17; also for a mere non-feasance—as for the refusal of the officer to take bail. Churchill v. Churchill, 12 Vt. 661; or for neglect to take proper care of property attached. Abbott v. Kimball, 19 Vt. 551. Hale v. Huntley, 21 Vt. 147.

11. Joinder. Trespass and case for the same cause of action may be joined, by G. S. c. 33, s. 16.

12. Matter growing out of contract. Count in "case" against a carrier for neglect to deliver goods, and a loss. It was claimed that the count was in assumpsit, because, after setting up the business of the defendant, the count did not expressly aver the defendant's duty resulting therefrom to carry and deliver. Held, that this was not necessary, it being a legal inference; that, in such cases, what especially distinguishes case from assumpsit, is the omission in the former of the consideration, and the averment of negligence. Wright v. McKee, 37 Vt. 161.

13. The defendant contracted for the privilege of floating logs through the plaintiff's mill-dam and bulkhead at a stipulated price, agreeing to repair and pay all damages in consequence. Held, that an action on the case, ex delicto, lay for damages occasioned to the dam and bulkhead, by the faulty negligence of the defendant in doing what he was entitled to do under his contract. Dean v. McLean, 48 Vt. 412.

14. Declaration. In an action on the case for negligence, the most general statement of the cause of action, if sufficient to put the defendant on his defense, seems sufficient after verdict. Taylor v. Day, 16 Vt. 566, and see Cutler v. Adams, 15 Vt. 237.

15. The form of declaration for false warranty in sale of personal property (warrantizando vendidit) is adapted to case for deceit in the sale of real estate. Harlow v. Green, 34 Vt. 379.

16. Plea and evidence. In case, anything is admissible in evidence, without special plea or notice, which shows the defendant not guilty of anything actionable in respect to the matters charged in the declaration. Jerome v. Smith, 48 Vt. 230.

17. Or, which destroys the right of action,—as, a former recovery for the same cause of action. Whitney v. Clarendon, 18 Vt. 252.

18. In such action for an injury to the plaintiff's reversionary interest in land:—Held, that, under the general issue, the defendants might justify by evidence that what they did was done by them in their official capacity as selectmen in building a highway, which had been laid out by their predecessors in office. Kidder v. Jennison, 21 Vt. 108. 40 Vt. 289.

19. In actions of tort, the plaintiff is not bound to prove his whole declaration, but only enough to make a good cause of action. He must prove the very injury of which he complains, but need not to the full extent. Hutchinson v. Granger, 13 Vt. 386.

20. In an action on the case for deceit, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove all that he has alleged in his declaration as to the means and arts practised by the defendant, provided less than all is sufficient to give a cause of action, and so much is proved. Somers v. Richards, 46 Vt. 170.

For the subject matter of this action see the several titles, as NEGLIGENCE, FRAUD, etc.

ACTION ON STATUTE.

1. New right created. Where a statute creates a new liability and provides a remedy, that is the sole remedy; but where a new liability is created and no remedy provided, a resort may be had to a common law remedy. Windham Prov. Inst. v. Sprague, 43 Vt. 502; Dauchy v. Brown, 24 Vt. 197. See Newman v. Waite, 43 Vt. 587. Brattleboro v. Wait, 44 Vt. 459.

2. Where a statute creates a right and prescribes the mode of enforcing it, that mode alone can be resorted to. Thayer v. Partridge, 47 Vt. 423.

3. Declaration. In prosecutions or actions upon statutes, every circumstance in the description of the offense, contained in the body of the clause which creates it and gives the penalty or forfeiture, must be set forth, so as to bring the defendant within the statute. Ellis v. Hull, 2 Aik. 41.

4. In a penal action nothing can be taken by implication, or be aided by intendment, but the plaintiff must show clearly that the penalty has accrued, and how it accrued. Everts v. Allen, 1 D. Chip. 116.

5. A count in trespass for cutting a tree on the plaintiff's land, in common form for trespass, qua. clau. but concluding by counting upon a statute and claiming treble damages under it, was held (by a majority) to be a penal action, and not trespass at common law. Keyes v. Prescott, 32 Vt. 86. 45 Vt. 81.

6. A declaration in trespass for the worrying, &c., of the plaintiff's sheep by the defendant's dog, concluding to his damage and contrary to the form, &c., of s. 9. of c. 104 of G. S., was held to be a declaration on the statute to the extent of recovering single damages. Ronne v. Bird, 48 Vt. 578.

7. In an action of debt against a justice of the peace to recover the penalty prescribed by C. S. c. 66, s. 16, for solemnizing the marriage of the plaintiff's minor daughter without his consent, the declaration failed to charge the offense as against the form of the statute, &c. Held, sufficient on motion in arrest, following the precedent in Ellis v. Hull, 2 Aik. 41; but limiting the decision to actions on this particular statute. Burnell v. Dodge, 33 Vt. 462.

8. Remedial statute. When a statute gives the aggrieved party a right to recover cumulative damages (as double damages and costs), it is treated as a remedial and not a penal statute:—So held, in an action of trespass under G. S. c. 104, s. 9, for the worrying, &c., of the plaintiff's sheep by the defendant's dog. Burnett v. Ward, 42 Vt. 80. (See Newman v. Waite, 43 Vt. 587.)

9. In such case, the rule of evidence applicable to criminal prosecutions and strictly penal actions (as that the jury must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt) does not apply. Id.

10. In an action to recover the forfeiture given by a penal statute to the party aggrieved, or to such party and the State, no minute of the true day, &c., of the exhibition of the writ is necessary. Denton v. Crook, Brayt. 188. Hall v. Adams, 1 Aik. 68 (1826).

11. Penal—Minute. An action to recover treble damages given by sec. 1 of the statute to prevent trespass, &c. (Slade's Stat. 280), requires a minute on the process of the time of exhibiting it. Bowen v. Fuller, 2 Tyl. 85.

12. The statute which requires a true minute of the day, month and year to be entered upon a writ "when the same was signed" (G. S. c. 62, s. 9), is not satisfied by such minute of the day, &c., when the writ was exhibited. Such minute cannot be afterwards made, nor can be amended. Pollard v. Wilder, 17 Vt. 48. Montpelier v. Andrews, 16 Vt. 604. Wheelock v. Sears, 19 Vt. 559. School District v. Austin, 46 Vt. 90.

13. The statute subjecting an officer receiving illegal fees to the payment to the party aggrieved of ten dollars for each dollar of excess of fees so received (G. S. c. 125, s. 17) is a penal statute; and a true minute of the day, month and year when the writ is signed, in an action to recover such penalty, is required. Wheelock v. Sears.

14. A qui tam suit to recover of a highway surveyor the penalty provided in section 8 of the act of March 3, 1797 (C. S., p. 430), for not clearing a highway of obstructions, where one moiety goes to the town treasurer and the other to any person who shall prosecute, requires a minute of the day, month and year when the writ issues. Dassance v. Gates, 13 Vt. 255.

15. Measure of proof. In actions upon penal statutes full proof, as in criminal cases, is required to warrant a recovery. Barnet v. Ray, 33 Vt. 205. Brooks v. Clays, 10 Vt. 37.

16. In an action upon the statute authorizing the recovery of double the value of the effects of a deceased person embezzled or alienated before administration granted (G. S., c. 51, s. 10.),—Held, (1), that, in order to subject the defendant to the penalty, he must have acted from a wrong motive, and malafide; (2), that the plaintiff must make out what is called full proof, and cannot recover on merely a preponderance of testimony. Roy v. Roy, 13 Vt. 543.

17. Qui tam—Civil action. A qui tam action is a civil action. Waters v. Day, 10 Vt. 487.

18. So is an action of debt by a town to recover certain penalties under the listing act. Putney v. Bellows, 8 Vt. 272.

19. Survivorship. A prosecution qui tam for usury abates by death of the defendant. Nor if he dies after verdict and before the law term, where judgment is respited by motion in arrest, will judgment be rendered nunc pro tunc. Benson v. Egerton, Brayt. 21.

20. Two joint creditors bring their action qui tam to recover the penalty given by statute for a fraudulent conveyance, and one of them dies:—Held, that the action survives to the other. Wright v. Eldred, 2 D. Chip. 37.

21. Judgment, &c., as a bar. Where the amount of a penalty was fixed by statute, the record of a conviction before a justice on voluntary confession, and payment of the full penalty, were held a bar to a subsequent action qui tam:—decision limited to the special case. Hamilton v. Williams, 1 Tyl. 15.

22. Trespass Act. In the act to prevent certain trespasses (Slade's stat. 281, s. 5) the word "wilfully" is not synonymous with voluntarily, but implies a tort, or wrong. Savage v. Tullar, Brayt. 223.

23. Inspection Act. Under stat. 1850, No. 28, giving to "the person injured" an action to recover a penalty for the selling of flour not inspected:—Held, that the public at large, the dealers in flour, and not flour inspectors, were intended to be protected by the statute; that the injury to the inspector was but indirect and remote, and that he could not maintain an action for the penalty. Hatch v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 787.

See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

AGENT.

I. PROOF OF AGENCY.

II. AUTHORITY OF AGENT; RATIFICATION AND REVOCATION; PARTICULAR AGENTS; NOTICE OF TERMINATION OF AGENCY; MODE OF CONTRACTING.

III. DUTIES, LIABILITIES AND RIGHTS OF AGENT.

1. As to his principal.

2. As to third person.

IV. ACTS AND DECLARATIONS OF AGENT.

1. As binding his principal.

2. As enuring to the benefit of his principal.

I. PROOF OF AGENCY.

1. In a case where an agency could be created without writing, the question was whether the plaintiff's wife was his agent to settle a certain demand. Held, that the defendant could prove this by the plaintiff's admission that he had given his wife "a power of attorney" to settle the demand, without notice to produce a written power. Curtis v. Ingham, 2 Vt. 287.

2. When one has conveyed land with warranty, and afterwards puts a third person in possession which may enure to the benefit of his grantee, this affords ground for the presumption that he acted therein as agent for his grantee. Warner v. Page, 4 Vt. 291.

3. Where a writing is necessary to the creation of an agency, the writing should be produced in order to prove the agency. In other cases, the agency may be proved either by direct evidence, or by the habit and course of dealings of the parties, or by recognition. Walsh v. Pierce, 12 Vt. 130.

4. Certain facts stated as constituting an agency. Alexander v. Bank of Rutland, 24 Vt. 222.

5. In a suit against a sheriff for not collecting and returning an execution in favor of the plaintiff town, the defense was that the town, by its town agent, controlled the execution:—Held, (1), that evidence that the town agent agreed at different times to control the execution and look to the debtor for payment, had no tendency to prove the issue; (2), that evidence that the town agent had admitted, at different times and to different persons, that he had controlled the execution, was not admissible. Barnard v. Henry, 25 Vt. 289.

6. One is, at common law, competent as a witness, either for or against his principal, to prove his agency and his acts done and contracts made, as agent, whether verbal or written—as, in this case, to prove his authority to execute a note in the name of his principal. Lytle v. Bond, 40 Vt. 618.

II. AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

7. General agency. A discharge of certain parties to a subscription paper, though without payment, by an agent clothed with "full powers to close the subscription in such manner as he should deem for the best interests of the college" was held valid. Middlebury College v. Loomis, 1 Vt. 189.

8. A power of attorney under seal authorized the attorney to sell lands at the best prices, either by public auction or private contract, as he might think most advantageous, and upon sale thereof "to sign, seal and execute all or any such contracts, agreements, conveyances and assurances, and to do and perform all such acts and things for perfecting such sale or sales * * as shall be requisite and necessary in that behalf." Held, that the power authorized the attorney, on sale, to convey by deed containing the usual covenants of warranty, and that his principal was bound by such covenants. Peters v. Farnsworth, 15 Vt. 155.

9. A, the plaintiff's head millwright, on behalf of the plaintiff, made a contract with the defendant to fit up his mill upon terms differing from the plaintiff's established price lists. A had been directed by the plaintiff not to vary from these lists. Held, nevertheless, in the special circumstances of this case, that the plaintiff was bound by the contract of A. Williams v. Colby, 44 Vt. 40.

10. The defendants carried on a country store, which was managed by R as their general agent in that business. He was instructed not to pay cash for butter, but to take in so much, on debts and in exchange for goods, as might be necessary to supply customers according to such custom of country merchants. He was at the same time agent for another person for the purchase of butter for cash, and contracted with the plaintiff for all the butter he should make until June following, to be delivered at the defendants' store, and to pay the cash therefor. The plaintiff supposed that the butter was for the defendants and had no notice to the contrary, nor of any instructions to R not to pay cash. It did not appear that the defendants knew that the plaintiff supposed he was selling the butter to them. The plaintiff delivered on the contract eight tubs of butter, but the defendants derived no benefit therefrom. Held, that the defendants were not liable therefor. Cochran v. Richardson, 33 Vt. 169.

11. A general agent for the leasing of the principal's farm and managing his business, but not his universal agent, cannot lease the principal's farm jointly with his own, so as to make the principal jointly liable with himself upon the stipulations in the lease in reference to his own property, as well as the principal's. La Point v. Scott, 36 Vt. 603.

12. Limited. The defendant, by a contract with S, delivered him wool to card and cloth to dress. S was then or soon after employed by the plaintiff by the month in the plaintiff's carding and clothing works, which was generally known, and the defendant's wool was there carded and his cloth dressed. Before the services were performed, and before the defendant had paid S therefor, he knew that S was in the employ of the plaintiff and that the work was done at his shop. Held, that any payments thereafter made to S should not apply on the plaintiff's account. Tuttle v. Green, 10 Vt. 62.

13. The authority of an agent to sell goods does not ordinarily extend to the collection of the notes taken on such sales by the prosecution of suits upon them, and imposing upon his principal a liability for the costs and expenses of such suits. And this will not be implied on the ground of necessity, where no pressure of circumstances appears. Soule v. Dougherty, 24 Vt. 92.

14. A hired man upon a farm who has had authority to lend the farming tools, does not retain that authority, even so far as relates to his employer, after the attachment of the property and while it is in the custody of the officer. Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57.

15. Special. The plaintiff sent his son to the defendant to demand a specific sum as payment for the use of a horse. The defendant tendered the son a less sum, which was refused. Held, that this was not a tender to the plaintiff. Chipman v. Bates, 5 Vt. 143.

16. The defendant authorized his agent to purchase onehalf the plaintiff's hay on the defendant's account, and no more. The agent represented to the plaintiff that he was authorized to purchase the whole on the defendant's account, and the plaintiff, relying upon this representation as true, sold the whole, of which onehalf only came to the defendant's use, and the agent took to himself the other half. Held, that the defendant was liable for only onehalf. It is a case of want of authority in the agent, and not of a departure from his instructions as to a matter within the scope of his authority. Hurlburt v. Kneeland, 32 Vt. 316.

17. The defendant offered to sell the plaintiff, at a price named, certain cheese, to be taken and paid for by the plaintiff on the week following, or as soon thereafter as the plaintiff could attend to it, provided the plaintiff should notify him the next day of his acceptance of the offer. On the next day the plaintiff sent L to the defendant for the purpose, and no other, of notifying the defendant that he would take the cheese on the terms proposed and to pay the defendant $10 as part of the price. L gave the notice and offered the money, which the defendant refused to take unless it was understood that the plaintiff should take and pay for the cheese by the middle of the week following. L said the plaintiff would do so, and, if not, that the $10 paid would be forfeited and belong to the defendant, whereupon the defendant took the money. The plaintiff, as soon as he could attend to it, but later than the middle of the following week, called for and offered to take and pay for the cheese. The defendant refused to deliver the cheese because not called for by the middle of the week, and refused to pay back the $10. In an action for refusal to deliver, and on the money counts;—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover for the refusal to deliver, but could recover the $10 retained—L having no authority to make a new bargain, nor to pay the $10, except upon the terms of the plaintiff's acceptance of the defendant's original offer, which the defendant had legally repudiated. Sprague v. Train, 34 Vt. 150.

18. In a case where a special demand is necessary in order to lay the foundation for an action upon a contract, a demand different from what the contract calls for is nugatory. In such case, where a demand was made by an agent different from what the contract called for, and his authority was limited to the making of a demand in that form;—Held, that a refusal to comply with such demand, or to do anything about the matter, was not a waiver of the agent's want of authority, nor a waiver of a legal demand. Groot v. Story, 41 Vt. 533.

19. The plaintiff authorized L to sell a building for him at a price named. L sold it to the defendants at that price, with the mutual understanding that they might immediately take possession and remove it, and should pay for it at their convenience after such removal. While the defendants were removing the building, the plaintiff forbade them from meddling with it. The defendants persisted and the plaintiff brought trespass therefor. The court charged the jury, that the authority given to L to sell, authorized him to surrender the possession of the building without payment, upon the defendants' promise to pay after its removal at their convenience. Held erroneous:—that, as a special agent, L had no authority to sell on a credit; that this was a sale upon a credit; nor could he waive the plaintiff's lien for the price. Riley v. Wheeler, 44 Vt. 189.

20. A special agent to sell a horse has authority to warrant, unless directed otherwise by his principal. Deming v. Chase, 48 Vt. 382.

21. A writing directed to the plaintiff, authorizing a special agent of the defendants to sell in their store with their goods whatever goods the plaintiff might sell or consign to such agent, and that he might draw out the avails of all said goods sold, was held not to authorize such agent to purchase goods of the plaintiff in the name of the defendants; and where he did so, the fact alone that the goods so purchased were received into the defendants' store and sold with their goods, was not a ratification of the purchase in their name, and that the plaintiff could not recover of them as for goods sold, but must look to the proceeds, as provided in the writing. Town v. Hendee, 27 Vt. 258.

22. An agent was appointed at a meeting of a fire district "to purchase whatever of fire apparatus the district may vote to buy." The district then voted, (1), "that $500 be appropriated to defray the expenses and preparation of suitable fire apparatus for the use of the district;" and (2), "that the agent be instructed to expend a sum not to exceed $1,000, which shall include fire apparatus and reservoirs, and all things necessary for the protection of the district from fire." The agent purchased of the plaintiff, who had a copy of these votes, a fire engine, &c., at the price of $738. Held (Peck, J, dissenting), that the agent did not exceed his authority under these votes. Hunneiman v. Fire District, 37 Vt. 40.

23. The defendant was employed by the plaintiff to assist him in selling some horses, taken from Vermont to Baltimore, Maryland; was there directed to take them to Richmond, Va., and if not there sold to take them for sale to Petersburg, Va. The defendant did so, but not succeeding in selling the horses at either place, he, without communicating with the plaintiff, took the horses into North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, and finally succeeded, by swapping off the horses, in converting them into money. The defendant acted throughout in good faith, for what he supposed was for the best interests of the plaintiff. Held, that he had no authority to go beyond Petersburg, and that he was not entitled to be allowed, as against the proceeds of the sale, his expenses and charges after leaving Petersburg. Fuller v. Ellis, 39 Vt. 345.

24. Baldwin, the agent of an express company, employed the defendant to receive express packages in Baldwin's absence, giving the company's receipts therefor, and to deliver packages. The general agent of the company knew of this arrangement, made no objection, and permitted the business to be so done. The plaintiff delivered a package of money to the defendant to be forwarded by express, believing him to be the agent of the company. The defendant received the package, and gave a receipt therefor in the usual form of the company's receipts, signed "J. B. Baldwin, agent, by S. W. Proctor," (defendant). The package was not entered on the books of the company and never reached the consignee. The plaintiff, after demand of the money of the defendant, brought this action of assumpsit in the common counts therefor. Held, that in this transaction the defendant was the agent of the express company and that his acts bound the company; and therefore he was not liable in this action. Landon v. Proctor, 39 Vt. 78.

25. Construction of a writing creating a limited agency. Spooner v. Thompson, 48 Vt. 259.

26. Risk of dealing with agent. Whoever deals with an agent, having only a special or limited authority, is bound at his peril to know the extent of the authority. White v. Langdon, 30 Vt. 599. Sprague v. Train, 34 Vt. 150. Goodrich v. Tracy, 43 Vt. 314.

27. A contract cannot be implied against a principal which his agent had no authority to make, and when such want of authority was known to the other party. (Applied to a transaction with an overseer of the poor where the town was sought to be charged.) Aldrich v. Londonderry, 5 Vt. 441.

28. Where the plaintiff sold goods to B to be used in a business carried on by him in the name of the defendant, but where B had no authority to buy goods on the defendant's credit, and the plaintiff charged the goods to the defendant,—it was held, in an action on book for the price, that it was not enough to charge the defendant in the action that the plaintiff might be justified from the circumstances in regarding the defendant as the principal, unless he also had sufficient grounds for believing that B was authorized to make the purchase on the defendant's credit. Brown v. Billings, 22 Vt. 9. 27 Vt. 285.

29. Where a note was given by one as an agent, but without authority, and this was known to the payee;—Held, that, in an action thereon by a bona fide holder, the principal was not liable. Holden v. Durant, 29 Vt. 184.

30. Ratification of act of agent. The acceptance of a contract negotiated in one's behalf by a volunteer agent perfects it, as if made by precedent authority. Middlebury College v. Williamson, 1 Vt. 212.

31. Though where an agent exceeds his authority, his principal may repudiate the transaction entirely, yet he cannot adopt one part of it and reject another, but his adoption of it in part is an adoption of it as a whole. Newell v. Hurlburt, 2 Vt. 351.

32. That a contract made by an agent, though without authority, cannot be rescinded by the principal while he retains the consideration,—see Gray v. Otis, 11 Vt. 628.

33. If an agent exceeds his authority by borrowing money on the credit of his principal, and the money goes into the business of the principal, and to his benefit, yet all without his knowledge, he is not liable therefor to the lender, without a subsequent promise to pay. Spooner v. Thompson, 48 Vt. 259.

34. The plaintiff, at the request of T, the defendant's clerk, finished off a room which the clerk wished to occupy and afterwards did occupy in a house which the plaintiff was building for the defendant, under a contract which did not include the finishing off of that room. Held, that from the defendant's ownership of the house and the fact that T was his clerk, it could not be inferred, as matter of law, that the room was finished off by the express or implied consent of the defendant, and that he was not liable to pay therefor. Emery v. Thompson, 27 Vt. 614.

35. Where one, without any authority provided, signs his name to a promissory note as attorney for A, a letter afterwards written to the payee by A, in which he speaks of the note as my note and promises to pay it if the payee will wait a certain time for payment, is in law an adoption of the act of the attorney, and is equivalent to an antecedent authority to execute the note. So held in an action brought upon the note before the expiration of the time for payment named in the letter. Bigelow v. Denison, 23 Vt. 564.

36. The defendant in March received money from his wife, which at the time he understood was received by her in payment of a debt due him, but which in fact was the proceeds of a note taken by her for such debt, and by her, without authority, indorsed in the defendant's name to the plaintiff bank, which paid her the money thereon. The defendant, on the 22nd May following, learned the true facts in the case, and knowing that the maker of the note was in failing circumstances, withheld from the bank the fact of the unauthorized use of his name in the indorsement, until after the protest of the note, June 8, and retained the money. Held, that this was in law a ratification of the indorsement, and that it was error not so to instruct the jury. Bank of Orleans v. Fassett, 42 Vt. 482.

37. The plaintiff authorized her agent to settle a civil prosecution in her behalf for bastardy against one P, a married man, and the agent settled it by taking the note of the defendant to her therefor, and upon the additional consideration, as expressed in an agreement executed by her, that she would not institute or testify in any criminal prosecution against P. In an action upon the note,—held, that the note was illegal and void, notwithstanding the agent exceeded his authority in making such agreement not to prosecute, and although the plaintiff signed the agreement without knowing its contents, supposing it to be merely a settlement of the civil prosecution; for that, by receiving the note and putting it in suit, she in law ratified the acts of her agent. Smith v. Pinney, 32 Vt. 282.

38. The appropriation by a corporation of money obtained on a promissory note, executed as the note of the corporation by one, as agent, but without authority, is a ratification of his act and makes it the note of the corporation. Windham Prov. Inst. v. Sprague, 43 Vt. 502.

39. Where A acted for and in behalf of B, as in the sale of B's horse, though A was interested in the sale to the extent of having all he could get above a named price, and B being informed of the terms of the contract consented thereto and received the proceeds of the sale, the warranty of A binds B as his agent, whether A acted by the direction and request of B, or by his permission merely in making the sale. Held erroneous, upon these facts, to leave to the jury the question of A's agency, or whether B adopted and ratified the contract "as made on his own account." Fay v. Richmond, 43 Vt. 25.

40. Where A was agent for B in negotiating the purchase of a horse, and he negotiated the trade so far as to agree upon the price and the terms of payment, and paid part of the price, but the completion of the trade was left open until B should see the horse, and B afterwards, on seeing the horse, took it and adjusted the balance of the price upon the terms first agreed upon by A, and took a bill of sale of the horse;—Held, that A was so far agent of B that B was bound by the previous notice to A of an unsoundness of the horse, although B had no such notice or information in fact. Hill v. North, 34 Vt. 604.

41. A put upon his farm for the use of B, his tenant, a yoke of oxen at an appraised value, the profits or loss to be divided. By mutual consent B sold the oxen at a price fixed upon, which A received. In an action against both for a false representation as to soundness, made by B in the sale,—Held, that both were liable, whether the relation between them be regarded as that of partners, joint owners, or principal and agent, although A did not know of the unsoundness, or of the false representation of B. Ladd v. Lord, 36 Vt. 194.

42. The defendants' agent pledged their credit to the plaintiffs, for goods to be supplied to K, their sub-contractor. The defendants agreed to pay therefor, if they had sufficient funds in their hands belonging to K,—which they had. At the defendants' request, K examined his accounts with the plaintiffs and the defendants delivered a statement thereof to the agent who proceeded to pay part. Held, that although the agent might have exceeded his authority in the outset, the defendants by their subsequent acts had adopted and ratified his promise. Burgess v. Harris, 47 Vt. 322.

43. An expressed disapprobation of the acts or authority of one who assumed to act as agent of another, will not prevent a subsequent ratification and adoption of them. Woodward v. Harlow, 28 Vt. 338.

44. One B, without authority, signed the name of the intestate as a subscriber for ten shares of the capital stock of a corporation. In an action upon the subscription,—Held, that the subsequent declarations of the intestate to strangers that he had taken that amount of stock in the corporation, did not amount in law to a ratification of the subscription. They were only evidence. Rutland & Bur. R. Co., v. Lincoln, 29 Vt. 206.

45. It is not the duty of a principal, upon learning that his special agent, or other person, has sold his property without authority, to seek the purchaser and give notice of his claim; and his omission to do so, and his mere silence, are not ordinarily to be construed as a ratification of the sale. White v. Langdon, 30 Vt. 599, and see Strong v. Ellencorth, 26 Vt. 366.

46. Revocation by death of principal. The death of the principal instantly terminates the authority of the agent; and all dealings with the agent thereafter, although by parties ignorant of the principal's death, are void and of no effect. Davis v. Windsor Savings Bank, 46 Vt. 728; and see Mich. State Bank v. Leavenworth, 28 Vt. 209. Mich. Ins. Co., v. Leavenworth, 30 Vt. 11. Seargent v. Seward, 31 Vt. 509.

47. Particular agents—Steamboat captain. The captain of a steamer on Lake Champlain is to be regarded as the general agent of the owners; and prima facie the owners are liable for all contracts for carrying made by the captain or other general agent for that purpose, within the powers of the owners themselves. The onus of proving that such contract was personal with the captain is upon the owners; and held, that the mere fact that the owners permitted the captain to take the perquisites for carrying parcels [as bank bills], was not sufficient to exonerate the owners (a corporation) from liability as common carriers;—that this was an arrangement among themselves. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Champlain Tr. Co., 23 Vt. 186.

48. Clerk in Store. The clerk in a store was held to be the general agent of his principal for the sale of goods, and that his sale of goods upon a credit bound the principal, although he exceeded his authority in so doing, where the purchaser had no notice of the limitation of the authority. Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123.

49. Clerks in our country stores, with whom are left the goods and demands of our merchants, have charge of both, and, in the absence of their principals, have authority to receive pay on the demands, and to institute suits for their security, when an emergency arises, and to employ an attorney therein, and, as incident, to defeat a previous fraudulent attachment, and thus bind their principals. Davis v. Waterman, 10 Vt. 526. 24 Vt. 96.

50. Agent with power of sale. Where the plaintiff put into the hands of a general trader, who was also a factor employed in selling goods for others, a lot of goods for sale, and also sent him other goods of like kind by mistake, and not intended or received for sale, and the trader sold all the goods;—Held, that the plaintiff could not avoid the sale as to any of the goods. Gibbs v. Linsley, 18 Vt. 208.

51. K, the plaintiff's agent, holding the plaintiff's property with power of sale, sold it to S by sale which was fraudulent as to K's creditors, who attached it. Held, that the plaintiff's title passed to S; that the sale was good as to the plaintiff, and that he had no remedy against K's creditors. Id.

52. A power of sale conferred upon a bailee is a personal trust, which the bailee cannot delegate to another. Hunt v. Douglass, 22 Vt. 128.

53. Sub-agent. A sub-agent employed to sell stoves, &c., in a given section of country, for cash, or other pay, or on credit, in his discretion, is not, as such, authorized to give the note of his principal payable in such wares at a future day, and thereby bind his principal by the acknowledgment of "value received." Denson v. Tyson, 17 Vt. 549.

54. Agent from necessity. The defendant had contracted to float certain lumber of the plaintiff down a river and deposit it in a certain cove, but being prevented by the owner of the cove from there depositing it, he left it fastened in an eddy below, from which it was swept away by a freshet. In an action for negligence;—Held, that from a contingency not contemplated by the parties the defendant became the plaintiff's agent from necessity, and was bound to take prudent care of the lumber until he had given such notice to the plaintiff as to afford him an opportunity to take charge of it, and that until such notice it remained in the defendant's custody. Pickett v. Downer, 4 Vt. 21, and see Beckwith v. Frisbie, 32 Vt. 559.

55. Notice of termination of agency. There are cases of a long continued agency where notice of a revocation of the agency is necessary, and where, without such notice, there remains such an apparent agency after the revocation, as will bind the principal by the subsequent acts of the agent as to one who bona fide contracts with him on the faith of his agency. But this principle does not apply where the supposed agent had originally only a special authority to do a particular act, or make a particular contract. Watts v. Kavanagh, 35 Vt. 34.

56. The implied authority arising from a general employment continues even after the agency has in reality ceased, as regards parties who have before given and continue to give credit to it, and who have not actually received, and cannot be presumed to have had, notice of the change. Tier v. Lampton, 35 Vt. 179,

57. B had been the defendant's agent in the peddling of stoves, but his agency had in fact ended. He continued the same business, holding himself out to the world as such agent and dealt with the plaintiff, the plaintiff believing him to be still agent. B's general course of dealing was known to the defendant, and the defendant had given no notice of the termination of B's agency. Held, that he was bound by B's contract with the plaintiff. Bradish v. Belknap, 41 Vt. 172.

58. Mode of contracting. One having authority to sign the name of another to a paper—as, a subscription paper—may do it by the hand of a third person. Norwich University v. Denny, 47 Vt. 13.

59. If one executes a contract under seal, on the part and behalf of another, he must execute it in the name and affix the seal of the principal. Roberts v. Button, 14 Vt. 204. Wheelock v. Moulton, 15 Vt. 519. Isham v. Bennington Iron Co., 19 Vt. 259. Miller v. Rutland & Washington R. Co., 36 Vt. 452.

60. The conveyance of a patent right by the deed of A, by the written consent of B, the owner, was held to be equally effective with a conveyance directly from B. Sherman v. Champlain Transportation Co., 31 Vt. 162.

61. The agent of a corporation, for a debt of the corporation, gave a note of the character following: "I, A B, as agent of the G. M. T. corporation, promise, &c." Signed, "A B, agent of the G. M. T. corporation." Held, that this was the note of the corporation, and that no action lay against A B thereon. Proctor v. Webber, 1 D. Chip. 871. 20 Vt. 49.

62. The defendants, agents of an unincorporated company, of which the plaintiff was a member, in consideration of land conveyed to them in trust for the company, executed to him a note therefor, as follows: "For value received, we, the agents of the Wallingford Manufacturing Company, promise to pay C G R ten hundred dollars and interest till paid; and this note is to be subject to such assessments as shall be made on the capital stock of said company, subscribed for by said R, and if such assessments shall not cover the full amount of this note, the balance to be paid in two years from date, but the assessments made are to be indorsed when they become due."—Dated, and signed by the defendants, adding the words, "Agents of the Wallingford Manufacturing Company." The assessments on the plaintiff's subscription amounted to but part of the note. Held (by a majority), upon the facts appearing, (1), that the defendants did not intend to contract personally; (2), that they did not exceed their authority,—and hence that they were not personally holden upon the note. Roberts v. Button, 14 Vt. 195.

63. Joint agency. In a matter of private concern, or of private appointment, confided to more than one agent, not public officers having authority as such, all must join in the execution of the power—as, commissioners appointed by a town to subscribe for stock in a railroad. Danville v. Montpelier, &c., R. Co., 43 Vt. 144. See Hodges v. Thacher, 23 Vt. 455. Newell v. Keith, 11 Vt. 214.

III. DUTIES, LIABILITIES AND RIGHTS OF AGENT.

1. As to his principal.

64. The primary obligation of an agent, whose authority is limited by instructions, is to adhere faithfully to those instructions; for, if he unnecessarily exceed his commission, he renders himself responsible to his principal for the consequences of his act. Fuller v. Ellis, 39 Vt. 345.

65. An agent is bound by the instructions of his principal, only as he understood them, unless there was fraud, or some fault on his part in not comprehending them. Pickett v. Pearsons, 17 Vt. 470.

66. When the character and nature of the business in which an agent is employed require it, he should keep full, accurate and regular accounts of all his transactions—of his payments and disbursements—and should render, at all proper times, an account thereof to his principal, without suppression, concealment or overcharge. Ordinarily, if he omits his duty in this particular, in a court of justice a presumption arises against him. Prout, J., in Gallup v. Merrill, 40 Vt. 137.

67. But, for a fault in these respects;—Held, that he does not thereby forfeit a balance due him, or compensation for his services. Ib. 133. Walker v. Norton, 29 Vt. 226.

68. An agent, authorized to sell only for money, is liable as for money had and received upon a sale, although he sells for something else than money. Thompson v. Babcock, Brayt. 24.

69. Where the defendant received the plaintiff's money as agent, but afterwards denied the agency and claimed the money as his own;—Held, that he could not urge in defense that the suit was brought without a demand first made. One cannot claim the privileges of a relation which he has repudiated. Tillotson v. McCrillis, 11 Vt. 477.

70. In order that an agent to collect a debt should be held chargeable, in an action of account, as having made the debt or its proceeds his own by reason of his negligence, the case must be one of gross and palpable negligence. Pickett v. Pearsons, 17 Vt. 470.

71 Where an agent, on the purchase of goods for his principal, assumed a personal liability for the payment, the vendor being unwilling to trust the principal;—Held, that the principal could not claim that their relations were thereby changed, so long as the agent made no claim as purchaser, but recognized his agency. Dow v. Worthen, 37 Vt. 108.

72. An agent is not excused from accounting to his principal for money received on sales of goods for his principal, although such sales, as between the principal and the purchaser, were illegal. Baldwin v. Potter, 46 Vt. 402, and see Thayer v. Partridge, 47 Vt. 423.

73. Where one employs an agent, knowing his incompetency, if the agent does his best he is entitled to compensation. The defendants, a school district, employed the plaintiff to superintend the repairs of the school house. He did this in good faith and with as much diligence and skill as he did his own business. The defendants knew the plaintiff's habits and ability in this respect when they employed him. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover what it was worth to him to do the work, although "an ordinarily skilful and shrewd man" could have made the repairs for a less sum. Felt v. School District, 24 Vt. 297.

74. A was agent of B for selling a patent right, under a contract that he was to have half he could get, and pay his own expenses. A having sold some rights and incurred expenses, the parties agreed that A should give up his agency and B would pay such expenses. A gave up the agency and charged B such expenses. Held, that the agreement was upon sufficient consideration, although B might have had a right to terminate the agency at will, without payment of expenses; and that such expenses were recoverable in an action of book account. Perry v. Buckman, 33 Vt. 7.

2. As to third person.

75. A person assuming to act as the agent of another without authority may be made liable on the contract as principal; or, if the nature of the case do not admit of such remedy, he may be made liable for all damages by action on the case as for a deceit. Thus assuming to act is prima facie fraudulent. Clark v. Foster, 8 Vt. 98.

76. In regard to contracts under seal, this last may be the most appropriate, perhaps the only remedy. Redfield, J., in Roberts v. Butten, 14 Vt. 202.

77. In simple contracts, if an agent does not disclose his agency and name his principal, he binds himself, although he may not have intended to assume a personal liability. Royce v. Allen, 28 Vt. 234.

78. An agent who undertakes to bind a principal by simple contract, but without authority or in excess of his authority, binds himself. Ib. Roberts v. Button, 14 Vt. 195. Clark v. Foster, 8 Vt. 98.

79. An agent, whose agency is not known by or disclosed to the party with whom he contracts, becomes personally bound. Baldwin v. Leonard, 39 Vt. 260.

80. The defendant, an agent for a school district, employed the plaintiff, an attorney, upon the credit of the district, to defend a suit against the defendant, upon the mutual mistake that the district had authorized this and had assumed the defense. The defense was successful. The plaintiff had made his charges to the district, and in a suit against the district to recover therefor had failed, on the ground that the defendant had no authority in fact to bind the district. In an action of assumpsit to recover for the plaintiff's services and expenses in both suits;—Held, that the services in the first suit, having been rendered by request of the defendant and for his benefit and under such mutual mistake, stood like money paid by mistake, and could be recovered for, although rendered upon the credit of the district, and although both parties had the same means of knowledge as to the extent of the defendant's authority, as agent; but that the plaintiff could not recover for his services and expenses in his suit against the district, since both parties had the same means of knowing the extent of the defendant's authority, and these were not for the defendant's benefit. Paddock v. Kittredge, 81 Vt. 378.

81. Where a contract is made which, in some sense, ultimately concerns others than the contracting parties, whether the one contracting is personally bound by certain stipulations is mainly a question of intention. In this case, held, that the defendant was personally bound. Hinsdale v. Partridge, 14 Vt. 547.

82. Where one requests another to render services for a third person, he is not necessarily liable for the services rendered, although such third person is not thereby made liable. Stone v. Huggins, 28 Vt. 617.

83. The plaintiff had a suit pending against a town of which the defendant was the (official) town agent, and, during negotiation with the defendant, had offered to take $60 in settlement. The defendant afterwards wrote the plaintiff a letter, saying: "I have concluded I would accept your offer and pay you the $60, rather than have any more trouble in the matter; * * please withdraw the suit and let it go: * * I shall be at home Saturday and I will see that you have the money. Of course this pledge will be sufficient guarantee that I will pay it, &c." In faith of this, the plaintiff abandoned his suit. Held, that this was a personal undertaking of the defendant, and bound him as such—it being conceded that the defendant, as such town agent, had no authority to bind the town by such promise. Clay v. Wright, 44 Vt. 538.

84. Where a recovery and satisfaction had been had against a turnpike corporation for erecting a toll-house and gate on the plaintiff's land, which work had been done by the present defendants as servants and agents of the corporation;—Held, that the defendants were not liable for a continuance of the nuisance,—that being regarded as the act of the principal, and they having done no act affirming the continuance. Lyman v. Dorr, 1 Aik. 217.

85. Though there be a right of recovering back money paid to an agent, yet if paid over to his principal before notice to retain it, or suit brought, he ceases to be liable. Gray v. Otis, 11 Vt. 628.

86. An agent who makes a promise, not concealing his agency nor exceeding his authority, is not liable to an action thereon. Hall v. Huntoon, 17 Vt. 244.

IV. ACTS AND DECLARATIONS OF AGENT.

1. As binding his principal.

87. The defendants sent their servant with a message to the plaintiff, a physician, to come and see a boy who had got hurt in their employ, and they would pay him for that visit. The servant delivered the message in this form—that the defendants told him to tell the plaintiff to go and see the boy and attend upon him carefully and see him through it, and they would pay the bill. The plaintiff, upon the faith of this, and relying solely upon the credit of the defendants, attended upon the boy until his recovery, the defendants knowing that the plaintiff was so attending from time to time. Upon report of these facts by an auditor, the county court rendered judgment for the plaintiff for his entire bill; and this judgment was affirmed by the supreme court. Barber v. Britton, 26 Vt. 112. (Doubted in Pratt v. Page, 32 Vt. 19.)

88. The plaintiff, residing in Vermont, having a note against the defendant residing in California, left it with J, his brother in California, for him to receive the payment of it. The defendant afterwards forwarded to the plaintiff a draft, as payment of the note, whereupon J surrendered to him the note. The draft was protested for non-acceptance. In a subsequent action upon the note, the question was whether the sending of the draft was a payment of the note,—the plaintiff testifying that the note was agreed to be paid by sending money instead of a draft, and the defendant testifying the contrary. It appearing that J, the plaintiff's agent to receive the payment, was cognizant of the agreement and of the whole transaction;—Held, that the fact that he surrendered the note upon the forwarding of the draft was itself evidence tending to show that this was according to the agreement as to the mode of payment. Moore v. Quint, 44 Vt. 97.

89. An agent to sell goods and take notes therefor and transmit to his principal wrongfully altered such a note. In an action by the principal declaring upon such note as altered, adding the general counts,—Held, in the absence of evidence that the plaintiff knew or assented to such alteration, that the alteration should be treated as the act of a stranger, he clearly not being the plaintiff's agent to alter the note; that the note was not thereby rendered inoperative, and a recovery could be had under the common counts. Bigelow v. Stephen, 35 Vt. 521.

90. Where the defendants employed one to cut timber upon a certain lot, whom they trusted as knowing the lines, and he by mistake cut some trees beyond the line on the plaintiff's land, which went to the defendants' use;—Held, that the defendants were liable for his trespass. Small v. Ball, 47 Vt. 486, and see Hill v. Morey, 26 Vt. 178.

91. Demand by agent. Where a demand was made on the defendant by the agent in fact of the plaintiff, and the defendant, expressing no doubt as to the agent's authority, promised to pay;—Held, that he could not thereafter object to the sufficiency of the demand, upon the ground that he had no assurance of the agent's authority. Barron v. Pettes, 18 Vt. 385.

92. Notice to agent. Notice to an agent, in order to bind his principal, must be in the same transaction. Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 402.

93. Notice of a trust to an attorney, or agent, is in law notice to the client or principal, although such knowledge comes to the attorney or agent while acting in another and different transaction—Abell v. Howe, 43 Vt. 403—and although such attorney or agent acquired such knowledge, before he became attorney or agent of the party to be affected by such notice. Hart v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 33 Vt. 252.

94. Declarations. Where the acts of the agent will bind the principal, there his representations, declarations and admissions respecting the subject matter will also bind him, if made at the same time and constituting part of the res gestæ; but the admission or declaration of the agent binds the principal only when it is made during the continuance of the agency, in regard to a transaction then depending,—et dum fervet opus; and it is because it is a verbal act and part of the res gestæ, that it is admissible at all. Kellogg, J., in Mason v. Gray, 36 Vt. 313. Curtis v. Ingham, 2 Vt. 287. 23 Vt. 130. Tillotson v. McCrillis, 11 Vt. 477. Un- derwood v. Hart, 23 Vt. 120. Barnard v. Henry, 25 Vt. 289. Hayward Rubber Co. v. Dunklee, 30 Vt. 29. Austin v. Chittenden, 33 Vt. 558. Upham v. Wheelock, 36 Vt. 27. Earle v. Grout, 46 Vt. 113.

95. A declaration by an agent of what he is about to do, or has done, or a subsequent concession of what he said or did in the performance of his agency, or any account given as of a past transaction, is not evidence against his principal. Ib.

96. On the trial of an audita querela to set aside a justice judgment rendered by default, for the alleged reason that the justice was not present within the statute two hours;—Held, that the declarations of the attorney of the plaintiff in that suit made at the time, and subsequently, that the justice was not present, that he had not seen him, etc., were not admissible to prove the fact of the justice's absence. Underwood v. Hart.

97. Declarations of an agent, made after his agency has ceased, as to the terms of a contract made by him, are not evidence against other parties; and none the more so because he has since deceased. Stiles v. Danville, 42 Vt. 282.

2. As enuring to the benefit of his principal.

98. The person for whom and with whose funds property is bought becomes at once the owner of it, although the purchase is made by an agent in his own name, and without disclosing his agency. Ridout v. Burton, 27 Vt. 383. Paris v. Vail, 18 Vt. 277. Hall v. Williams, 27 Vt. 405.

99. An agent, authorized to sell lands and receive payment therefor in his discretion, upon sale of the lands took a note and mortgage therefor in his own name, and received a horse in part payment. Held, that the horse became the property of his principal, and was not subject to attachment for the agent's debts. Waldo v. Peck, 7 Vt. 434.

100. The plaintiff's agent purchased a cow for him of the defendant, avowedly as agent. The defendant declined taking the plaintiff's note therefor, but consented to the agent's taking the cow and giving his own note therefor, which was done, and the note was afterwards paid with the plaintiff's money. Held, that the contract was with the plaintiff, so as to entitle him to maintain an action upon a warranty in the sale. White v. Owen, 12 Vt. 361.

101. Principal not disclosed. A receipt was executed by a common carrier, acknowledging to have received of A and B certain goods for transportation;—Held, that there was nothing in the terms of the receipt to preclude proof that the goods were owned jointly by A, B and C; and that on such proof an action lay in the names of A, B and C against the carrier for a loss of the goods, although he had no knowledge that C had any interest in them. Day v. Ridley, 16 Vt. 48.

102. A father and son were both named D. F. The father purchased land, taking the deed to "D. F., Jr.," describing the grantee as of the town where both resided, and executed notes and a mortgage for part payment of the purchase money in the name of "D. F., Jr.," saying nothing of his acting as agent for his son, and the grantor supposed the father to be in fact the purchaser, that his name was D. F., Jr., and that he (the grantor) was deeding the land to the father. In an action of ejectment, the plaintiff claimed title to the lands by a levy and set-off on execution against the father, and the defendant by deed from the son. There being some evidence that the son had authorized the father to buy the land for him and furnished the money to pay for the place, and that the father was in fact agent for the son in the transaction;—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to decide which was the real principal; that this did not depend upon the intention of the grantor; and that the title vested in the real principal. Prentiss v. Blake, 34 Vt. 460.

103. If an agent for the sale of goods sell them in his own name, without disclosing his principal, an action for the price may be maintained in the name of the principal. Lapham v. Green, 9 Vt. 407. Squires v. Barber, 37 Vt. 558.

104. Nor is the principal estopped in such case by the fact that he made a bill of sale of the property in the name of the agent, who was to have as a commission all above a certain price. Edwards v. Golding, 20 Vt. 30.

105. An officer sold property on execution, which was bid in by A, and the officer made return that he had sold it to A. A was in fact the agent of B in making the purchase, but did not disclose this fact to the officer. Held, that the officer could recover the price in an action against B for goods sold. Carney v. Dennison, 15 Vt. 400.

106. Dictum.—In contracts made by an agent without disclosing his principal, the suit to enforce them may be in the name either of the principal or of the agent. But, in such case, if the suit be not brought in the name of the person ostensibly contracting, it is subject to every defense which would obtain if it had been so brought. Lapham v. Green, 9 Vt. 407.

107. One dealing by simple contract with an agent not disclosing his principal, may be made liable in a suit in the name of the principal, to the same extent as if the agent had been principal and the suit had been brought in his name. Culver v. Bigelow, 43 Vt. 249.

108. Where property is intrusted to an agent for sale, any person buying and paying in good faith will be protected, though the agent appropriate the avails to his own use without authority,—especially where the purchaser knows nothing of the agency. Cross v. Hanks, 18 Vt. 536.

109. One who purchases goods of an agent cannot, in an action by the principal for the price, set off a claim against the agent, though agreed to by the agent, if the purchaser had knowledge of the agency, or there were circumstances sufficient to excite suspicion, or to put him upon inquiry as to the right of the agent to deal with the goods as his own. Squires v. Barber, 37 Vt. 558.

110. And Held, in this case, that there were such circumstances of suspicion, viz., that the agent was insolvent and owed the defendant $20, and agreed to pay this debt out of the price of the goods in consideration that the defendant would assist him in compromising his other debts, and then told the defendant that he did not carry on business in his own name; the character of the goods sold, [a chest of tea and a barrel of molasses] also implying the existence of a mercantile establishment for the sale of heavy groceries carried on, not in the name of the agent. Ib.

ALIEN.

1. There is no provision in the constitution or laws of this State for declaring the forfeiture, or taking the escheat of lands in this State owned by an alien, and no such attempt has ever been made. It would seem, that the right to interfere with aliens holding real estate in this country, strictly and appropriately, belongs to the national, and not to the State sovereignty. State v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 25 Vt. 433.

2. It is not an essential qualification of a voter in a town or school district meeting, or of an office-holder of a town or school district, that he should be a freeman; a person of foreign birth not naturalized may be such voter or office-holder, if he have all other qualifications. Woodcock v. Bolster, 35 Vt. 632 (1863). Changed by Stat. 1869, No. 50.

ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENT.

1. Material Alteration. A joint and several bond of three was altered with consent of two of them in the absence of the third, and afterwards, without the consent of the two, the obligee removed the seal and erased the signature of the third. Held (by a majority) that the bond was made void as to all. Dewey v. Bradbury, 1 Tyl. 186.

2. That the bond sued upon was surreptitiously ante-dated, was allowed to be pleaded in bar. Davis v. Cole, 1 Tyl. 262.

3. If a promissory note be altered in a material point by consent of one signer, and not of another, it is the note of the first, and not of the other. Broughton v. Fuller, 9 Vt. 878. 44 Vt. 415.

4. If a lessee fraudulently alter his lease in a material part, he destroys all his future rights under that lease, by destroying his evidence of title; and the lessor may re-enter. Bliss v. McIntyre, 18 Vt. 466.

5. — by a stranger. If a written instrument be altered in a material point by the owner or holder of it, without the knowledge or consent of the signer, the instrument is avoided, and, semble, such alteration works a forfeiture of the debt represented by it. But if the alteration be made by a stranger without authority, the instrument is not thereby avoided;—and, held, that an unauthorized alteration of a note, made by the owner's agent to take the note, should be treated as the act of a stranger. Bige-low v. Stulphen, 35 Vt. 521. 41 Vt. 602.

6. Immaterial alteration. The plaintiff offered in evidence a sealed instrument in which the defendant acknowledged that he had "signed" certain promissory notes. The words "and executed," appeared interlined, following the word "signed." The paper was admitted against objection, and without explanation of the interlineation. Held correct; and that the words interlined were altogether immaterial, not altering the legal effect. Langdon v. Paul, 20 Vt. 217.

7. Wherever, by the alteration of a promissory note, neither the rights nor interests, duties nor obligations of either of the parties are in any manner changed, the alteration is immaterial, though made by the payee. Derby v. Thrall, 44 Vt. 413.

8. The defendant as surety for W signed a note to the plaintiff, erroneously naming him Franklin Derby. Upon W's delivering the note the plaintiff, by his consent, changed the name "Franklin" to the true name, Francis E. Held, that the alteration did not vitiate the note. Id.

9. Presumption—Evidence. The alteration of a written instrument, if nothing appear to the contrary, should be presumed to have been made at the time of its execution. On the usual proof of execution, the instrument should, without reference to the character of any alteration upon it, be admitted in evidence, leaving all testimony in relation to such alteration to be given to the jury; and, generally, the whole inquiry whether there has been an alteration, and, if so, whether in fraud of the defending party, or otherwise, to be determined by the appearance of the instrument itself, or from that and other evidence in the case, is for the jury. The whole is matter of fact, and they must determine it from all the testimony before them. Beaman v. Russell, 20 Vt. 205. Langdon v. Paul, 20 Vt. 217. Kimball v. Lamson, 2 Vt. 138.

AMENDMENT.

1. Power of Court to allow amendment. The county court has power to allow any amendment which does not change the parties, or the nature, or cause of action, unless it be of some statute requisite in relation to the process itself. Bowman v. Stowell, 21 Vt. 814. Stevens v. Hewitt, 30 Vt. 265.

2. — of return of process. On motion to dismiss a suit for defective service of the writ, the court decided that the suit be dismissed. After the decision, the plaintiff moved that the officer be permitted to amend his return according to the fact. The court, as matter of law and not of discretion, denied the motion. Held erroneous, and that it was within the discretion of the court to allow the amendment. Bent v. Bent, 43 Vt. 42.

3. An officer after return of process may, on application to the court, but not otherwise, be permitted to amend his return, provided the rights of third persons will not be affected by it, and there is something on the record by which the amendment or correction can be made. The court will allow the amendment, or not; and if allowed, it will be on such terms as the court think proper to impose. An amendment so made without leave of court was held of no validity. Barnard v. Stevens, 2 Aik. 429.

4. In trespass tried on appeal in the county court the defendant justified by process, but the return was imperfect. The county court refused to allow the officer to amend his return. Held correct; but, semble, such amendment might have been permitted by the justice, if it would not affect the interests of third persons and would not be false. Brainard v. Burton, 5 Vt. 97.

5. The court properly refused to permit an officer to amend his return after the return day, to affect proceedings in another suit. Fletcher v. Pratt, 4 Vt. 182. Orvis v. Isle La Mott, 12 Vt. 195.

6. — of writ and declaration. A writ and declaration wanting in nothing but an ad damnum is amendable in that particular. Lamphere v. Cowen, 42 Vt. 175.

7. In a case appealed from a justice the plaintiff, by leave of the county court, raised his ad damnum from $100 to $1,000. At a subsequent term the defendant moved to dismiss the suit for want of jurisdiction, when the plaintiff, by leave of court, and before trial, reduced the ad damnum to the original sum. Held, that the writ was not "amended out of court," but the jurisdiction remained. Whitney v. Stars, 16 Vt. 587.

8. The clerk of the county court by mistake signed a writ as "Dep. Clerk." After plea in abatement that he was not deputy clerk, the court allowed him to amend by annexing to his signature the word "Clerk." Held correct;—for that such amendment was merely a correction of the misdescription of the capacity in which he exercised the powers of clerk, without supplying any authority not already apparent upon the writ. Johnson v. Nash, 20 Vt. 40.

9. The defendant was sued by the name of "The Haverhill Bridge Company." Its true corporate name was "The Proprietors of Haverhill Bridge." The county court allowed the plaintiff to amend his writ and declaration by changing the designation to the true name. Held, that the court had power so to do. Stanton v. Proprietors of Haverhill Bridge, 47 Vt. 172.

10. A writ and declaration against the defendant corporation sued as the "New York Central Railroad Company," were allowed to be amended by changing this to the present true corporate name, viz: The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company. Held proper. Honford v. N. Y. Central, etc., R. Co., 47 Vt. 533.

11. General rule. The rule established by the court in repeated cases, as to the power of the court to allow amendments, only limits it to the same cause of action, and form of action, and the same parties to the suit; defects of any other character, to any extent, may be cured by amendment. Poland, J., in Waterman v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 30 Vt. 614.

12. An amendment to a declaration may be made which does not change the form or nature of the action, or introduce a new subject matter; and it is no objection to an amendment that it may enable the plaintiff to recover, where he otherwise could not. Every necessary amendment does this. Skinner v. Grant, 12 Vt. 456. (Boyd v. Bartlett, 36 Vt. 14. Dana v. McClure, 39 Vt. 197.)

13. Instances. In an action of slander an amendment was allowed, by adding an averment that the words were spoken of the plaintiff as a preacher and minister of the gospel. Id.

14. So, in an action brought by B on a promissory note payable to A, or bearer, an amendment was allowed averring that the plaintiff was the bearer. Bowman v. Stowell, 21 Vt. 309.

15. So, on the coming in of the report of an auditor, the name of one of the defendants was allowed, on plaintiff's motion, to be stricken out, such person not being in life when the cause of action accrued. Winn v. Averill, 24 Vt. 283.

16. So, a declaration upon a promissory note may be amended by adding a count upon a count stated. Stephens v. Thompson, 28 Vt. 77.

17. So, in an action of ejectment—by adding to the statute form an allegation of special damage done to the premises. Lippett v. Kelley, 46 Vt. 516.

18. A declaration containing only the general counts in assumpsit may be amended by adding a count upon a parol submission and award. Trencott v. Baker, 29 Vt. 459.

19. Where the declaration in an action upon a judgment misdescribed it in some particulars, but not so as to wholly destroy its identity,—Held, that the misdescription could be corrected by an amendment. Stevens v. Hewitt, 30 Vt. 262.

20. In assumpsit against husband and wife to recover for the indebtedness of the wife accrued before marriage, the declaration may be amended so as to aver that the debt accrued before coverture. Montgomery v. Maynard, 33 Vt. 450.

21. New counts may be added to a declaration by amendment, which allege an enlargement of the time of performance of a contract. Hill v. Smith, 34 Vt. 535.

22. And in trover, a new count may be added for additional property taken at the same time with the other. Haskins v. Ferris, 23 Vt. 678.

23. So, a declaration in covenant, counting for a breach of the covenant that the premises were free of incumbrance, whereas they were at the date of the deed subject to a certain mortgage, after demurrer sustained on the ground that the covenant did not pass to the plaintiff as a subsequent grantee, was allowed to be amended by a new count declaring upon a covenant in the same deed to warrant and defend the premises against all lawful claims and demands, and setting up the establishment by decree of court of the same mortgage as a paramount title; and this, although the rule of damages in the two cases was different. Boyd v. Bartlett, 36 Vt. 9.

24. It is no objection to an amendment, that it sets up the cause of action in such manner as to take the case out of a statute of limitations applicable to the original declaration. As where the declaration was the common counts in assumpsit only, and a specification of the claim described a promissory note, to which the defendant pleaded the statute of limitations of six years, the plaintiff was allowed to abandon his original declaration, and to file a new count declaring upon the note as a witnessed note. Dana v. McClure, 39 Vt. 197.

25. On the question of amendment, in determining whether the amendment introduces a new cause of action, the court is not confined to the question of legal identity upon the pleadings, but may go into extraneous evidence to show that it is the same cause of action in fact. Hill v. Smith, 34 Vt. 535. It is to a great extent a question of fact, depending on the purpose and intent of the plaintiff in bringing the suit and framing his original declaration. Boyd v. Bartlett, 36 Vt. 12. The party may always amend by more correctly describing the cause of action "intended to be declared on." Haskins v. Ferris, 23 Vt. 673. Trescott v. Baker, 29 Vt. 463.

26. Where the plaintiffs are named only by their firm name, as "Marshall A. Lewis & Co.," or "Homer, Bishop & Co.," the individual and full names of the partners may be supplied by amendment. Lewis v. Locke, 41 Vt. 11.

27. Amendment allowed in a declaration counting upon a several promise, by adding a count upon a joint promise, and therein suggesting that the other joint promisor resides out of the State. (G. S. c. 30, s. 74.) Carter v. Hosford, 48 Vt. 433.

28. After the filing of a referee's report, but before judgment, the plaintiff was allowed to raise the ad damnum of his writ. Held, within the power of the county court. Harris v. Belden, 48 Vt. 478.

29. Discretion limited. Where a proceeding depends on the discretion of the court below, guided by the particular circumstances of the case, and not on any certain and known rule of law, it is not subject to revision in the supreme court on exceptions. But if the power be exercised (as in granting a new trial or an amendment), in a case where the court by law has no power to grant it, it is error. Carpenter v. Gookin, 2 Vt. 495. (Bourman v. Stowell, 21 Vt. 313.)

30. Instances. Thus, to allow the amendment of a declaration which changes the form of action, or introduces a new count for a new cause of action not contained in the original declaration, is error. Ib.

31. So, to permit an amendment which changes the parties, and, at the same time, the cause of action. Emerson v. Wilson, 11 Vt. 357.

32. In a case appealed from a justice, where, upon the papers, the justice has no jurisdiction, no amendment can be made in the county court so as to give a jurisdiction. Thompson v. Colony, 6 Vt. 91.

33. Where either the name of the surety, or the sum in which he is bound, is omitted in the minute of the recognizance upon the writ, the court, by force of the statute, has no power to amend the defect. Peck v. Smith, 3 Vt. 265.

34. A certificate, defective in stating the day, month and year when a qui tam writ was signed by the magistrate [stated as exhibited] cannot be amended so as to comply with the statute. Pollard v. Wilder, 17 Vt. 48.

35. The direction in a writ cannot be amended, after the entry of a suit in court, by inserting the statute reasons for authorizing a person to serve it. Dolbear v. Hancock, 19 Vt. 383.

36. The county court has no power, on a trial, to permit a sheriff to amend his return upon an execution which has been returned by him to the clerk's office, so as to render such execution, as amended, evidence in the case. Paul v. Slason, 22 Vt. 231.

37. Cases appealed. The whole power of the county court to allow new declarations to be filed in appealed cases rests upon its general power and authority to allow amendments of the process and proceedings pending in court. Stevens v. Hewitt, 30 Vt. 262.

38. The court on appeal may allow new counts to be added for the same cause of action, but not for what is, in fact, a new or distinct cause. Keyes v. Throop, 2 Aik. 276.

39. A declaration before a justice described a note as payable to A B, or bearer. On appeal, the plaintiff was properly allowed to file a new declaration omitting the words "or bearer," to make it correspond to the truth and prevent a variance. Bucklin v. Ward, 7 Vt. 195.

40. The form of action is not changed merely by changing its name;—as from "trespass" before the justice to "trespass on the case" in the county court. The cause of action stated at length is deemed the true one, and not the name by which it is called. Coggswell v. Bakkein, 15 Vt. 404.

41. The filing of a new declaration on appeal is mere matter in amendment. If variant from the former and containing new matter, the defendant should object to its being received: it is not matter for abatement. Way v. Wakefield, 7 Vt. 223.

42. The objection that a new declaration filed in the county court, on an appeal, sets up a new or other cause of action, or varies the cause or form of action from that before the justice, must be taken advantage of by a motion to dismiss the new declaration, or by an objection to receiving it,—otherwise the objection is waived. Held, that the objection was not reached by a special demurrer for that cause. Blodget v. Skinner, 15 Vt. 716.

43. In a suit before a justice, the declaration was only for goods sold and delivered. Held, that on appeal the plaintiff could not recover for work and labor, under a new declaration containing the common counts in assumpsit, although the account for work and labor was mixed in with the account for goods sold, and the plaintiff intended that his writ should be for the whole account. Deuey v. Nicholas, 44 Vt. 24.

44. Acquiescence in an amendment. An amendment which the court has no power to make may be acquiesced in;—as, by afterwards pleading to the merits without reserving exceptions to the amendment. Peck v. Smith, 8 Vt. 265. 32 Vt. 639.

45. Effect of amendment. The necessary effect of overruling an amendment to a declaration, once allowed, is to restore the proceeding to its original state. Barber v. Ripley, 1 Aik. 80. 7 Vt. 227. 11 Vt. 358.

46. —by relation. A new count, in the nature of an amendment to a declaration, relates back to the commencement of the suit; so that a plea to such new count, that the cause of action did not accrue within 14 years before "the filing of the new declaration," was held bad on demurrer. Dana v. McClure, 39 Vt. 197.

47. —as to time. Independently of any showing of the day on which an amendment of process was procured to be made in the county court, it will be taken to have been made on the last day of the term. Burns v. N. Bank of St. Albans, 45 Vt. 269.

48. Where the plaintiff procured an amendment of his writ on the last day of the second term, and the defendant within thirty days thereafter filed his motion to dismiss the action for causes arising from the amendment;—Held, that it was not error for the court, at the succeeding term, to entertain the motion and dismiss the action. Id.

49. —as to bail. Where an amendment does not make the bail liable to a greater sum, nor subject him to any new or additional responsibility, he is not thereby discharged, though the amendment be by a new count, and the recovery be upon that. Wright v. Brownell, 3 Vt. 435.

50. Amendment to conform to verdict. The declaration counted for an injury to the plaintiff's grist-mill, saw-mill and lath-mill and machinery and premises by the stopping of the flow of water thereto. The jury found specially that the plaintiff's right of water claimed was limited to the grist-mill. The court then before judgment allowed the declaration to be amended to correspond with the verdict. Held correct. Kimball v. Ladd, 42 Vt. 747. "Any court, &c., may at any time permit either of the parties to amend," &c. G. S., c. 30, s. 41. Dana v. McClure, 39 Vt. 201.

51. In an action by husband and wife for an injury to the wife, the plaintiffs were permitted, after verdict and motion in arrest and hearing thereon, but before judgment, to amend their declaration by striking out an allegation of expense and loss of service to the husband,—the trial having proceeded solely for damage to the wife;—Held, no error. Bates v. Cilley, 47 Vt. 1.

52. Amendment of verdict. The court has power to correct an informality in a verdict, even after the jury are discharged—as, where in an action of assumpsit the jury rendered a verdict of "guilty," and it was changed by the county court to "did assume and promise," &c. Potter v. Caldwell, 18 Vt. 176. So, where in an action of book account before a justice, the jury returned a verdict that the defendant did assume and promise—ruled, that the justice might have corrected the verdict and recorded it in proper form. Mason v. Lawrence, 2 Vt. 560.

53. A general verdict for the plaintiff in an action of ejectment was corrected by the supreme court to conform to the truth—it appearing by the bill of exceptions that the defendant had an interest in the premises. Warren v. Henshaw, 2 Aik. 141. 18 Vt. 190.

54. Non-assumpsit and the statute of limitations pleaded, and issues joined;—no evidence given on second issue;—verdict for plaintiff on first issue, without noticing the second. The court, at a subsequent day in the term, on motion, ordered the verdict amended so as to embrace both issues. Held correct. Davis v. Hoy, 2 Aik. 308.

55. —of judgment. Record of judgment in the supreme court amended upon motion, under a rule. Lowry v. Catlin, 2 Vt. 365.

56. Where a husband and wife were joined as defendants in ejectment, where the wife's title was not involved, and judgment passed against both, the supreme court allowed the plaintiff to amend, on terms, by striking out the name of the wife, and affirmed the judgment against the husband. Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326.

57. —after judgment. After the affirmance of a judgment for the defendant in an action of assumpsit upon the judgment of another State, the court refused to allow an amendment, changing the action to debt—the court being divided as to whether such amendment was allowable, upon any terms. Boston India Rubber Co. v. Hoit, 14 Vt. 92—quare suggested.

58. An amendment after judgment, upon the facts as they stood before the amendment, cannot render the judgment erroneous. An amendment may cure error, but cannot create it. White River Bank v. Downer, 29 Vt. 332.

59. Power of court to revise and correct its records. It is a power incident to a court of general jurisdiction, independent of any statute, to exercise a revisory power over its own records, and, by a direct inquiry into the matter, to correct the record according to the truth, and prevent the unjust operation of an erroneous or imperfect record. This is usually done on motion founded on affidavits and notice, in a summary way, in the sound discretion of the court, where the furtherance of justice requires it. Mosseaux v. Brigham, 19 Vt. 457. Pettes v. Montague, cited 26 Vt. 449. Scott v. Stewart, 5 Vt. 57.

60. This power exists to set aside a default. Scott v. Stewart; or the levy of an execution, &c. Tudor v. Taylor, 26 Vt. 444.

61. The county court, within certain limits, has such power over its records and judgments as to warrant the court in ordering them corrected, and, if necessary, for sufficient reasons, to order a case after final judgment to be brought forward, and to vacate that judgment and open the case for further proceedings. This is ordinarily so far a matter of discretion, that the supreme court will not revise the proceedings on exceptions. Peck, J., in Smith v. Howard, 41 Vt. 74.

62. The plaintiff had obtained final judgment in the county court in an action of assumpsit, on which he was entitled to an execution against the body. By inadvertence, the execution was issued against the goods, chattels and lands only, and was returned nulla bona. At the next term, on the plaintiff's petition, the county court vacated the judgment and rendered a judgment for the same damages, adding interest. The avowed purpose of the proceedings was to enable the plaintiff to procure a new execution against the body, so as to charge the bail on the original writ. Held erroneous; and that the motion should have been denied on the very ground on which the plaintiff prayed to have it granted, that is, the charging of the bail. Ib.

63. The original plaintiff died pending his suit and the same was prosecuted to judgment by his administrator, and execution issued in the name of the deceased plaintiff, and was delivered to an officer and returned in such way as, upon a proper execution, to charge the property attached. The county court afterwards, on the motion of the administrator, allowed the execution to be amended by the clerk. Held, that this was error; and, on the ground mainly, that such amendment might charge the officer or his bailees, who were already discharged by reason of the defect in the execution. Allen v. Thrall, 41 Vt. 79.

64. It is not competent for the county court, after judgment, to order the case brought forward and to hear evidence and adjudicate a fact and engraft into the record material statements, for the mere purpose of reviving a lien [as a mechanic's lien] that has lapsed and become extinct as against purchasers and owners of the estate who acquired title after such lien had lapsed and terminated. Haynes v. Kimpton, 47 Vt. 46.

65. Amendment in criminal cases. The complaint of a town grand juror may be amended by leave of court—like an information or indictment by those who presented them, with leave of court. State v. Batchelder, 6 Vt. 479. (Enlarged by stat. 1870, No. 5.)

66. —on appeal from probate court. On an appeal from the probate to the supreme court, the court refused to allow the referee, appointed by rule of the probate court, to amend his report. Wolcott v. Wolcott, 11 Vt. 207.

67. In what court motion to be made. On the remanding of a case to the county court for a new trial, an application for leave to amend pleadings should be made to the county court. Allen v. Parkhurst, 10 Vt. 557.

68. Record of town clerk. The refusal of the court to allow a town clerk to amend a town record was held not a judicial act, and so not the subject of error,—for the right of the clerk to correct his record did not depend upon the opinion of the court. Hoag v. Durfey, 1 Aik. 286.

ANCIENT LIGHTS.

Long continued use of light for the windows of one's dwelling, standing on or near the line of his land, raises no presumption of a grant, nor creates the right to a continued use against the owner of the adjoining land. The English doctrine of ancient lights discussed, and denied. Hubbard v. Town, 33 Vt. 295.

ANIMALS.

1. Duty to restrain vicious animals. It is the duty of the owner of a vicious ram, who knows of the propensity of the animal to butt persons, so to restrain him as to prevent him from doing injury. Oakes v. Spaulding, 40 Vt. 347. The same law as to a dog accustomed to bite mankind. Brown v. Carpenter, 26 Vt. 638.

2. The defendant, the owner of a cow accustomed to hook horses, and that known to him, was made liable for the hooking of the plaintiff's colt while the cow was in the highway, but upon the plaintiff's land on her way to water, and the colt had been turned loose in the highway by the plaintiff. Coggswell v. Baldwin, 15 Vt. 404.

3. The fact that a mare, in general kind and orderly, but which, when in heat, had on several occasions kicked at other horses, imposes no duty on the owner to restrain her when not in heat. Tupper v. Clark, 43 Vt. 200.

4. Dog. A dog may be used in driving off cattle trespassing upon one's lands, and, if so done in a prudent and careful manner, the owner is not responsible for an injury done by the dog to the cattle. Clark v. Adams, 18 Vt. 425. Davis v. Campbell, 23 Vt. 236.

5. Held, that it is lawful for any person, though not in self-defense, to kill a dog accustomed to bite mankind, as communis hostis or a common nuisance, when such dog is at large—that is, not confined or physically restrained. Brown v. Carpenter, 26 Vt. 638.

6. Ram. O and S were the owners in common of a vicious ram, known by each to have the habit of butting persons. The ram was kept for the separate use of both, each having the immediate charge of him from time to time as occasion required. The ram had been with the flock of S until the sheep-washing, when, both flocks being washed together, O, of his own accord and in the absence of S, took the ram and put him in his own pasture, S not thereafter interfering, or inquiring to know where or in what manner O was keeping the ram. While so in the pasture of O, running at large, the ram butted the plaintiff and injured her. Held, in an action against O and S for the injury, that S was liable equally with O. Oakes v. Spaulding & Oakes, 40 Vt. 347.

7. Barrett, J. No distinction can be made, as to the duty of restraining a vicious animal, between sole and joint owners; and what is the duty of one is equally the duty of the other, as to third persons; and, unless under peculiar circumstances, the duty rests solely upon ownership. Ib. 352.

8. Statutes. The forfeitures under sections 4 and 6 of G. S., c. 104, "for the restraint of rams," are distinct and independent and may both be enforced; and by the same person, if he be both the owner or keeper of the sheep and the person taking up the ram. Town v. Lamphire, 34 Vt. 365. Hall v. Adams, 2 Aik. 130.

9. In case of distinct and several owners of sheep running in the same flock, either owner, without joining the others, may sue for the penalty given by statute against the owner or keeper of a ram found with them. Hall v. Adams.

10. Where several rams, having escaped together and belonging to separate owners, are found off the inclosure of the common keeper of them and with the sheep of another, each owner is liable to the penalty of $5 for the escape of his own ram under G. S., c. 104, s. 6. Whether the keeper would be liable for more than one penalty,—quære. Town v. Lamphire, 37 Vt. 52.

11. The penalty imposed by G. S. c. 104, s. 6, is incurred, if the ram is found off its owner's or keeper's premises and with the sheep of another, unless it is made to appear that this was caused by some positive wrongful act of the prosecutor himself, or could not have been prevented by the utmost care and diligence of the owner or keeper. Town v. Lamphire, 36 Vt. 101. S. C. 37 Vt. 52. Hall v. Adams, 1 Aik. 166. Phelps v. Parish, 39 Vt. 516.

12. The neglect of the prosecutor to maintain and keep in repair his portion of the division fence through which the ram escaped, does not affect or qualify this liability (36 Vt. 101); although the prosecutor had said he would see that his part of the fence was properly up and would risk the ram's getting out over it—it not appearing that the defendant had acted upon this assurance so as to create an estoppel. 37 Vt. 52.

13. Suffer to run at large. Under the statute which provided that if any person should suffer his swine to run at large, &c., they might be impounded;—Held, that an avowry was insufficient which alleged only that the swine "were running at large," &c., "contrary to the form," &c., "of the statute entitled," &c.—the word suffer, or its equivalent, being omitted,—that word meaning to allow, or permit. Adams v. Nichols, 1 Aik. 316.

14. The defendant on several occasions rode his horse from his house along the highway, mostly off his own premises, through a village and over two railroad crossings at grade, to a distance of more than a mile and a half, and then fastened the reins to the surcingle so that the horse could not get its head down to feed, and left it to go back home alone, and went on himself about half a mile further, and out of sight of the horse, to his work. The horse was kind, and would when thus left go directly home, and did on these several occasions and on the occasion in question, when it was met by the defendant's son who was waiting to meet and care for it. In an action for the penalty under G. S. c. 100, s. 29, for suffering cattle, &c., to run at large in the highway;—Held, that if the horse, owing to his training, habits and instincts, would not wander about the highway when thus left, but would and did on such occasions go directly home, and was so under the supervision, care and control of the defendant and his son, this was not a "running at large," which subjected the defendant to the penalty. Russell v. Cone, 46 Vt. 600.

15. Joint action. A joint action upon the statute to prevent injury to sheep by dogs, does not lie against two separate owners of dogs for the damage done by them together. Adams v. Hall, 2 Vt. 9.

16. G. S. c. 104, s. 9, allows the several owners of dogs concerned jointly in the worrying, &c., of sheep to be joined as defendants, but does not require it. Rowe v. Bird, 48 Vt. 578.

As to impounding animals, see POUNDS; REPLEVIN.

APPEAL.

- I. EFFECT IN GENERAL.
- II. APPEAL FROM COUNTY COURT.
- III. APPEAL FROM JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

- 1. Taking an appeal.
- 2. From what judgment.
- 3. In what cases.
- 4. Proceedings after appeal.

IV. APPEAL FROM PROBATE COURT.

- 1. What order or decree may be appealed from.
- 2. Who may appeal.
- 3. Mode of appeal, and procedure thereafter.
- 4. Appellate court as a court of probate.

I. EFFECT IN GENERAL.

1. Vacates the judgment. An appeal vacates the judgment appealed from. Bates v. Kimball, 2 D. Chip. 88. Love v. Estes, 6 Vt. 286. Probate Court v. Rogers, 7 Vt. 198. Allen v. Fletcher, 14 Vt. 274. Fletcher v. Blair, 20 Vt. 124. Allen v. Rice, 22 Vt. 383. Small v. Haskins, 26 Vt. 209. Stearns v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 213. Probate Court v. Glead, 35 Vt. 24. State v. Remelee, 35 Vt. 562. Woodbury v. Woodbury, 48 Vt. 94.

2. If the appeal is carried up by neither party, this operates as a discontinuance. Bates v. Kimball. Love v. Estes. Allen v. Fletcher. Probate Court v. Glead.

Note.—By stat. 1865, No. 10, as to criminal cases, and by stat. 1866, No. 37, as to civil cases, an appeal from a justice only suspends the judgment unless the appeal is entered; and by stat. 1864, No. 65, the party appealing from a decree or denial of the probate court, or from the allowance or disallowance of commissioners, may withdraw his appeal before entry,—the effect of not entering the appeal, in the first case, and of withdrawing it, in the last, being to affirm the original judgment or decree.

3. Brings up whole case. An appeal vacating the judgment appealed from, brings up the whole case and opens it for new proof to the extent of the jurisdiction of the court below, upon the original complaint or declaration. State v. Remelee, 35 Vt. 562.

4. Judgment of respondent ouster on a plea in abatement, and trial thereafter on the merits,—on appeal, the question in abatement will be heard. Lacy v. Roberts, Brayt. 20.

5. Affirmance. A judgment is affirmed on appeal where it passes for the appellee, though for a less sum than below. Page v. Johnson, 1 D. Chip. 338. S. C. Brayt. 124.

6. Dismissal of appeal. The dismissal of an appeal annuls the appeal ab initio, and leaves the judgment appealed from in force as though never appealed from. Loveland v. Benton, 2 Vt. 521.

II. APPEAL FROM COUNTY COURT.

7. Practice. An appeal, on cause shown, may be allowed to be entered after the day fixed by the rules of court, and even after a complaint for affirmance. Bennet v. Whitney, 1 Tyl. 59. Miller v. Gould, 2 Tyl. 405.

8. An appeal from the county court to the supreme court and an entry of such appeal was allowed to each party. Hastings v. Hodges, 1 D. Chip. 124.

9. The entering of a review by one party did not prevent an appeal by the other. Hubbard v. Leonard, 1 D. Chip. 216.

10. Where one of several joint defendants appeals from a judgment in a prosecution under the forcible entry and detainer act, he is considered as appealing for all, and all may appear and plead. Hurlbutt v. Meachum, 2 Tyl. 397.

11. A parol submission to arbitration, pending an appeal, without an award wholly settling the controversy, nor carrying the hearing beyond the time for entering the appeal, was held not to deprive the party of the right to enter the appeal. Hayes v. Blanchard, 4 Vt. 210.

12. On an appeal from the county to the supreme court;—Ruled, that the defendant might change the issue from the court below to the jury in the supreme court, without notice to the other party. Stanton v. Loyd, 1 Aik. 35.

13. Subjects of appeal. Under former statutes, a judgment discharging trustees because the principal was not an absconding, &c., debtor, was held subject to an appeal to the supreme court. Page v. Hurd, 1 Aik. 105. Also a judgment by nil dicit. Smith v. Langworthy, 1 Aik. 106—and judgment on demurrer, that a plea in bar is sufficient. Durkee v. Mayo, 1 Aik. 129.

Note.—By stat. 1824 (Slade's Stat. 118), the right of appeal to the supreme court for the trial of issues of fact was taken away. Questions of law now pass to the supreme court only on exceptions, or by writ of error.

III. APPEAL FROM JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

1. Taking an Appeal.

14. The entering of bail is a part of the taking of an appeal from the judgment of a justice, and this must be done within the two hours, or the appeal is irregular. Webb v. Hopkinson, 10 Vt. 544; and see Finney v. Hill, 11 Vt. 233. Arnold v. Brooks, 36 Vt. 204.

15. Where a party had notice of a suit before a justice, and sent his son to appear for him and take an appeal, and the son appeared and consented to a judgment, but through misapprehension, neglected to enter bail in season for an appeal, and execution issued upon the judgment;—Held, that he was not entitled to relief by petition under the Act of 1829, for having been "illegally refused" an appeal; and judgment contra below was reversed. Finney v. Hill.

2. From what judgment.

16. Where a justice upon a hearing and trial rendered a judgment that the plaintiff become non suit;—Held, this being a trial upon the merits, that an appeal lay from the judgment; that its character was not changed by misnaming it. Smith v. Crane, 12 Vt. 487.

17. A judgment by a justice in favor of the plaintiff for costs alone, although clearly irregular, is such a judgment as either party can appeal from. McDaniels v. Johnson, 36 Vt. 687.

3. In what cases.

18. A prosecution founded on the Act of 1807, s. 8, entitled "an act to punish undue speculations," &c., was held appealable. Penniman v. Robinson, 5 Vt. 569.

19. An appeal does not lie from the decision of a justice, under the statute, that an extent issue against a collector of taxes for delinquency. Grimbold v. Rutland, 23 Vt. 324.

20. As depending on amount in controversy. Where the ad damnum in a justice writ is over ten dollars, the suit is appealable by either party, irrespective of the real amount of the claim presented. Fuller v. Howard, 6 Vt. 561.

21. In actions of tort—as trover—where the damages are open and uncertain, the right of appeal from a justice is to be determined by the ad damnum in the writ; and where this is set at ten dollars, the case is not appealable, though the value of the property named in the declaration is set at more than ten dollars, and the plaintiff's evidence may be that it was worth more. (G. S. c. 31, s. 70.) Cole v. Goodall, 39 Vt. 400. See Church v. Vanduzee, 4 Vt. 195.

22. Fictitious offset. A suit is not made appealable by the pleading of a fictitious offset,—as where the defendant introduces no evidence to sustain it, nor excuse therefor. Brush v. Hurlburt, 3 Vt. 46.

23. Where the ad damnum in a justice writ was ten dollars, although the declaration was in two counts each claiming ten dollars, but presumed to be for the same subject matter, and where there was nothing in the plaintiff's written exhibit or specification, or by the declaration itself, showing that the demand was above ten dollars;—Held, that the action was not appealable, and could not be made so by a fictitious plea in set-off. Weston v. Marsh, 12 Vt. 420.

24. Exhibits. Whenever the plaintiff's specification or exhibit, in an action before a justice, exceeds $10, so that the defendant has the right to litigate matters described in it to an amount exceeding $10, the action is appealable; and this right of appeal the plaintiff cannot limit by demanding not more than $10 in his writ and declaration. Williams v. Mason, 45 Vt. 372. Church v. Vanduzee, 4 Vt. 195. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Bates, 32 Vt. 420.

25. The defendant subscribed for one share of the plaintiffs' stock, and thereby contracted to pay the plaintiffs $100 in ten equal instalments, no part payable till the performance of a condition precedent. In an action before a justice, the declaration set forth this contract, averred performance of the condition, and claimed to recover the first instalment under an ad damnum of ten dollars. Held, that the action was appealable. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Bates.

26. In general assumpsit before a justice, the ad damnum in the plaintiff's writ and the sum demanded in the declaration was ten dollars. The debit side of the plaintiff's specification on trial was $38.32, and the credit side $32.16, leaving a balance of $6.66—for which balance, with 80 cents interest, the plaintiff obtained judgment. Held, that by reason of the specification, or exhibit, the action was appealable. Williams v. Mason, 45 Vt. 372.

27. In an action of book account before a justice, there was nothing in the writ, nor in the specification or exhibits produced by the plaintiff on trial, which made the case appealable. The defendant, on cross-examination, called out the plaintiff's book, on which appeared charges, in all, exceeding ten dollars. Held, that the book, drawn out in this way, could not be regarded as the plaintiff's exhibit, and that the case was not thereby made appealable,—the judgment, in such case, being a bar to a recovery for the items not presented. Warren v. Newfane, 25 Vt. 250.

28. Burden on appellant. A party appealing from a justice judgment must show affirmatively that the county court has appellate jurisdiction. Where the declaration contained three counts, each concluding with an ad damnum of ten dollars, but all descriptive of a single transaction and apparently for one cause of action;—Held, that the case was not appealable. Persons v. Center T. Co., 20 Vt. 170.

29. Action on note. Under the statute disallowing an appeal from a justice in any action upon a note, &c., of less than $20;—Held, that an appeal lay, nevertheless, where an offset was pleaded and tried, the subject matter of which would have entitled the parties to an appeal, if the action had been brought upon it. Baker v. Blodget, 1 Aik. 342.

30. A justice suit upon a note exceeding twenty dollars, but indorsed below ten dollars, the ad damnum in the writ being ten dollars, where no plea in offset is filed, is not appealable under the act of 1821. Boardman v. Harrington, 9 Vt. 151. G. S. c. 31, s. 70, has the same construction. Sumner v. Jones, 24 Vt. 320.

31. An appeal lies from a justice in an action upon a promissory note for less than $20, made payable with interest, when the amount, by adding interest, exceeds $20. Smith v. Smith, 15 Vt. 620.

32. An action before a justice upon a promissory note given for more than $20, although indorsed below $20, but not below $10, where the ad damnum in the writ exceeds $10, is appealable. Sumner v. Jones, 24 Vt. 317. Tyler v. Lathrop, 5 Vt. 170. 9 Vt. 152. 15 Vt. 632.

33. In a justice suit the declaration counted upon two promissory notes, both amounting to less than $20, and had a count for $20 money had and received—[ad damnum $20]. On trial, the plaintiff offered in evidence only the two notes, and waived the money count. Held, that the case was not appealable. Cooper v. Miles, 16 Vt. 642.

4. Proceedings after appeal.

34. Tender of judgment. After an appeal from a justice judgment, the tender of a confession of judgment before the same person, but who was not then in office as a justice, is nugatory, and will not avail to prevent an affirmance. Smith v. Fisher, 17 Vt. 117.

35. Payment. Where the plaintiff appealed from the judgment of a justice against him, and more than twelve days before the term of court to which the appeal was taken paid to the defendant (or to the justice), according to the statute, the costs allowed to the defendant, and the appeal was not entered in the county court;—Held, that this operated as a retraxit, or an open and voluntary renunciation of the suit and cause of action, and was a bar to a further action or claim for the same cause or duty; and that, to this extent, the effect was the same as if the judgment had been affirmed in the county court. Catlin v. Taylor, 18 Vt. 106. Small v. Haskins, 26 Vt. 209.

36. In such case,—Held, that the judgment of the justice in an action of trespass qua. clau., where the title to land came in question, was not conclusive of the title, inasmuch as the judgment was vacated by the appeal, and such payment did not, in this respect, operate as an affirmance. Small v. Haskins.

37. Entry of appeal. An appeal from a justice takes the case to the county court as it stood before the magistrate, and it stands upon the same pleadings [as, a plea in abatement], unless new pleadings are filed. Whittaker v. Perry, 37 Vt. 631.

38. The Act of 1866, No. 37, relating to appeals from judgments of justices, does not abridge the right of the appellee under G. S. c. 31, s. 64, to enter the appeal for affirmance. Idé v. Story, 47 Vt. 62.

39. Certificate of "wilful and malicious." Where the party appealing from a justice judgment does not enter his appeal in the county court and the judgment is there affirmed on the complaint of the appellee, it is affirmed with all its incidents, among which is the adjudication that the cause of action arose from the wilful and malicious act of the defendant, &c. Reynolds v. Provan, 31 Vt. 637.

40. Held, that where a justice judgment, appealed from by the defendant, is brought into the county court by the plaintiff on complaint for affirmance, the court can only affirm the judgment as rendered, and cannot grant a certificate for a close jail execution where none was granted by the justice. Spaulding v. Woodworth, 42 Vt. 570. Barrett, J., dissenting.

41. Copies of appeal papers. An appeal from a justice, entered in the county court upon appeal papers not properly certified (as, by the county clerk instead of the justice), gives the court jurisdiction, so that, notwithstanding a motion to dismiss, the cause may be continued and amended copies filed, and the court may proceed to trial and judgment. Carruth v. Tighe, 32 Vt. 626. Ib. 778. See Goodenow v. Stafford, 27 Vt. 437. Orange v. Bill, 29 Vt. 442.

42. An appeal from a justice will not necessarily be dismissed on motion, where the appeal copies do not disclose the right of appeal, since such right may grow out of the character of the defense, which may not appear in the copies; and the presumption is in favor of the regularity of the appeal, until the contrary is shown. Johnson v. Williams, 48 Vt. 565.

43. New copies of appeal from the judgment of a justice cannot be filed in the county court in vacation, after final judgment on the copies originally filed, so as to make them part of the record,—not even by the allowance of the county judges. Wood v. Davis, 48 Vt. 319.

IV. APPEAL FROM PROBATE COURT.

1. What order or decree may be appealed from.

44. Final order and effect. The order, sentence, decree or denial of the probate court from which an appeal lies must be a final one—that is, it must be a final disposition of the subject matter before the court. An appeal from the main question takes with it all incidental orders, and makes the whole, in effect, the subject of revision. Adams v. Adams, 21 Vt. 162.

45. Interlocutory. From a proceeding in the probate court, under G. S. c. 52, s. 7, for the examination of a party charged with embezzling the goods, &c., of an estate, no appeal lies until the case is finished in that court. An appeal from an order that the party answer certain interrogatories is premature, and will be dismissed. Kimball v. Kimball, 19 Vt. 579.

46. A decree of the probate court, that an administrator ought to render his account, is not a final decree from which an appeal lies in the first instance, but is rather interlocutory; though it affords a sufficient basis for a suit upon the bond conditioned to perform the orders of the court. French v. Winsor, 24 Vt. 402.

47. An order of the probate court, refusing to accept and record the report of the commissioners of claims, being matter of discretion, is but interlocutory, and is not such a final decree as is the subject of an appeal. Hodges v. Thacher, 23 Vt. 455.

48. An appeal does not lie from the presentation of a contingent claim to commissioners of an estate, but only from the subsequent allowance, or disallowance. Hobart v. Herrick, 23 Vt. 627.

49. An order of the probate court renewing a commission of claims on an estate is strictly interlocutory, and no appeal lies until the coming in and acceptance of the commissioners' report. Timothy v. Farr, 42 Vt. 43.

50. Special case. The refusal of the probate court, on petition, to reopen and revise a former decree allowing an administrator's account, which petition was preferred after the time for an appeal from such decree and a decree for distribution had passed, was held, under the circumstances, to be the subject of an appeal. Adams v. Adams, 21 Vt. 162. 28 Vt. 720.

51. Personal discretion. A bequest was made to a trustee to be applied to the benefit of the cestui que trust, as should be found necessary in the judgment and discretion of the judge of probate for the district of H;—Held, that the judge of probate in the exercise of his judgment and discretion acted personally, and not officially,—that no new jurisdiction was conferred upon him, and that no appeal lay from his proceedings. Downer v. Downer, 9 Vt. 231.

52. Guardian. By the probate act of 1821 (Slade's stat. 333, s. 7) an appeal lies from an appointment by the probate court of a guardian to an idiot, non compos, &c. Shumway v. Shumway, 2 Vt. 339. 8 Vt. 390.

53. An appeal does not lie from the decree of the probate court refusing to appoint a guardian of a person alleged to be insane, nor from a decree discharging such guardian, on the ground that the ward is no longer a proper subject of guardianship. Nimblet v. Chaffee, 24 Vt. 628.

54. Homestead. Proceedings for setting out the homestead of a deceased housekeeper, for the benefit of his widow and children, fall within the general jurisdiction of the probate court in the settlement of estates; and a right of appeal is given, under the general provisions of G. S. c. 48, s. 30, from an order or decree confirming the report of the commissioners in setting out the homestead. Byram v. Byram, 27 Vt. 295. True v. Morrill, 28 Vt. 672.

2. Who may appeal.

55. Party "interested." Under the statute authorizing any person "interested in any order, &c." of the probate court to appeal therefrom, such person must have some legal interest which may, by such order, &c., be either enlarged or diminished,—as, heir, creditor, legatee, widow, administrator, &c. Woodward v. Spear, 10 Vt. 420. Hemmenway v. Corey, 16 Vt. 235.

56. A person who has no interest in an estate cannot appeal from the decree of the probate court, assigning dower in the land which he claims adversely. Hemmenway v. Corey.

57. The administrator of an heir to an estate has the same right of appeal from commissioners, as the heir would have had if living. Arnold v. Waldo, 26 Vt. 204.

58. Under G. S. c. 53, s. 27, an appeal from commissioners, other than by the executor or administrator, can be taken only by a creditor, devisee, legatee or heir; and by such only in case the executor or administrator declines to appeal. Such interest of the appellant, as found by the probate court, must appear upon the record sent up; but such finding is not conclusive and may be inquired into on appeal. Gilbert v. Howe, 47 Vt. 402.

59. The intestate's widow, being administratrix of his estate, married, whereby her authority was extinguished. Thereupon the intestate's children applied to the probate court for the appointment of P as administrator de bonis non, and the widow applied for the appointment of her then husband. The court appointed P.—Held, that an appeal lay by the widow. Hilliard v. McDaniels, 48 Vt. 122.

3. Mode of appeal, and procedure thereafter.

60. The application. Where an appeal from a decree of the probate court is prayed for and the bond given within the 20 days, the appeal is not lost by the court's neglect beyond the 20 days to allow the appeal. Cummings v. Hugh, 2 Vt. 578.

61. An application for an appeal from commissioners, under G. S. c. 58, s. 19, is "filed in the register's office," if duly left with the judge of probate. Robinson v. Robinson, 32 Vt. 738.

62. An appeal from the probate court was left at the residence of the judge between 11 and 12 o'clock at night of the last day for taking an appeal, and the appeal was filed and lodged in the register's office on the morning following. It not appearing that the appeal came to the possession and knowledge of the judge until such following morning, it was dismissed, as not taken in time. Robinson v. Robinson.

63. After the appeal bond is taken, approved and filed, and the appeal has been allowed, the probate court has no power to permit the cancelling of such bond by substituting another. Blake v. Kimball, 22 Vt. 632.

64. Stating objections. On an appeal from the decree, &c., of the probate court the appellant should state, in writing, his objections thereto, and this lays the foundation for all further pleadings and proceedings. Hove v. Pratt, 11 Vt. 255. Baker v. Goodrich, 1 Aik. 395. (See G. S. c. 48, s. 30, and seq.)

65. No precise form of excepting to the order or decree appealed from has been established. It is necessary that every substantial averment upon which the appellant relies should be made, and such as are not denied are of course considered as admitted. Kendrick v. Harris, 1 Aik. 273.

66. Appellant from an entire decree of the probate court, which embraced distinct matters, was held confined, on his appeal, to the matters complained of in his objections filed. Banfill v. Banfill, 27 Vt. 557.

67. Withdrawing an appeal. Where an appeal was taken from the appointment of an administrator and a paper was afterwards filed in the probate court by the appellant withdrawing the appeal, which was not entered in the county court;—Held, that the appeal operated as a mere suspension of the decree of appointment, and that, upon such discontinuance of the appeal, the power of the administrator revived and took effect from the date of his appointment. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 29 Vt. 98.

68. Probate of will—Intervening damages. Where an appeal from a decree of the probate court allowing a will was taken subsequent to the issuing of letters to the executors;—Held, that the powers of the executors ceased at once, and that the appointment of a special administrator, pendente lite, became necessary; and where, in such case, the decree was affirmed on appeal;—Held, that the expenses of the special administration, beyond what would have been necessary if the estate had been settled by the executors without an appeal, are "intervening damages" within the meaning of the appeal bond. Sargeant v. Sargeant, 20 Vt. 297.

69. But that the words, "intervening damages and costs occasioned by the appeal," did not cover the expenses of the appellee in following the appeal, beyond his taxable costs. Id.

70. Guardian. A claim in behalf of a non compos, having no guardian, was presented to commissioners, which they disallowed for want of authority in the person presenting it. That person was afterwards appointed guardian and took an appeal. Held, that such appeal was an adoption and ratification of the act of presentment and, on motion to dismiss, the appeal was held regular. Thurston v. Holbrook, 31 Vt. 354.

71. Notice of appeal. Where an appeal from the probate court is entered in the appellate court without giving the appellee the required statute notice, the practice is not to dismiss the appeal, but to continue the case, ordering notice to be given. Woodward v. Spear, 10 Vt. 420. Meech v. Meech, 37 Vt. 414.

72. But this is matter of discretion, not revisable on exceptions. Treasurer v. Raymond, 16 Vt. 364. Rutland & Bur. R. Co. v. Wales, 24 Vt. 299.

73. Objection waived. An objection to the competency of commissioners appointed by the probate court to set out dower, cannot be urged on an appeal from a decree accepting their report. Kendrick v. Harris, 1 Aik. 273.

74. An objection that an appellant from a decree of the probate court had not sufficient interest to entitle him to an appeal the county court is not bound to consider, when first taken after issue joined and the trial begun. Steeens v. Joyal, 48 Vt. 291.

75. Appeal from commissioners. An appeal does not lie from the disallowance by commissioners, to an amount exceeding $20 in the aggregate, upon two or more several and distinct claims, required to be presented in the names of several parties, although both claims are owned by the same party, where the disallowance on each is less than $20; as where one claim was in favor of A and B, and the other in favor of A and C, and A owned and presented both. Barlow v. Thrall, 11 Vt. 247.

76. In taking an appeal from the allowance by commissioners of a claim against an estate, minuteness and precision are not required in stating the objections; and if, instead of being manifestly frivolous and impertinent, they tend to show that the claim ought further to be litigated, it must belong to the court of probate to determine whether they are stated in terms sufficiently positive and definite. Where the objection stated was that the claim was unjust, and the probate court allowed the appeal,—Held, that the county court erred in dismissing the appeal on motion, for want of a written statement of objections. Barnard v. Barnard, 16 Vt. 223.

77. The prayer for an appeal "from the decision and report of commissioners of claims" (G. S. c. 53, s. 19), was held sufficient, where expressed to be "from the order and decree of the probate court"—the court having made a decree accepting the report and ordering it to be recorded. Robinson v. Robinson, 32 Vt. 788.

78. An appeal from commissioners under G. S. c. 53, s. 27, is not perfected without the giving of a bond as well to secure the estate as the adverse party, and if the bond be only to secure the adverse party, the appeal will be dismissed,—and this upon motion, if the defect appear upon the record; nor can the defect be supplied by the filing of a new bond in the county court. Arnold v. Waldo, 36 Vt. 204.

79. A report of commissioners was returned to the probate court and endorsed, "Filed, accepted and ordered to be recorded this 31st May, 1860." Afterwards, this entry was made thereon, "On re-examination of this report, it is rejected for errors therein found and sent back to the commissioners for correction this 15th day of August, 1860." The plaintiff afterwards presented his claim to the commissioners, and, within twenty days from the final return and acceptance of the report, took an appeal. Held, that the appeal was taken in due time; that the probate court had power of its own motion, and summarily, to annul the order of record, and to recommit the report, on account of errors apparent on its face, so long as it was not actually recorded. Adarene v. Marlowe, 33 Vt. 558, and see Hodges v. Thacher, 23 Vt. 455. 32 Vt. 739.

80. Appeal not entered. On the allowance of mutual claims by commissioners of an estate, the administrator appealed from the allowance against the estate and duly filed his objections. The appeal was not entered at the next stated session of the county court. Held, that the administrator could not at a later term enter a complaint for an affirmance of the allowance in favor of the estate, or for his costs;—that by the neglect of both parties to enter the appeal at the first term, the whole proceedings were discontinued; and that the claim against the estate was forever barred;—as to the effect of such proceedings upon the claim allowed in favor of the estate, quære. Allen v. Fletcher, 14 Vt. 274.

81. Where an appeal was taken from an allowance of commissioners, but was entered by neither party;—Held, that no action lay upon the appeal bond—the appeal vacating the judgment, and the non-entry of the appeal operating as a discontinuance of the suit and carrying the bond with it—and this, although the appellee had no notice of the appeal and no order of notice was made by the probate court. Probate Court v. Gleed, 35 Vt. 24.

82. Declaration. On appeal from commissioners, the court allowed the claimant, upon terms, to file a declaration, where he had omitted to do so in the probate court, as required by statute. Francois v. Lathrope, 2 Tyl. 372.

83. On an appeal from commissioners, the claimant must declare according to the nature of the several classes of his demands, in the several forms of action and counts appropriate to each, though resulting in different forms of trial; and these must be met by various pleas suited to their nature. Adams v. Corbin, 8 Vt. 372. Abbott v. Keith, 11 Vt. 525.

84. Brings up whole claim. Where all the items of the plaintiff's claim before commissioners were recoverable in one suit and one form of action and he appealed, but the appeal taken was general;—Held, that the appeal brought his whole claim before the county court—as well the items allowed, as those disallowed. Morse v. Low, 44 Vt. 561.

85. —and set-off. An appeal by a claimant from the allowance by commissioners of an offset to his claim, vacates the decision and opens the case, both as to the offset and the principal claim. Stearns v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 213. Woodbury v. Woodbury, 48 Vt. 94.

86. The effect is the same where the administrator appeals from the allowance of the claim presented—or filed objections under the Stat. 1821. (Slade's Stat. 354.) Allen v. Rice, 22 Vt. 333.

87. Evidence. Where the commissioners' report does not show what claims were exhibited, this may be shown on appeal by evidence aliunde. Woodbury v. Woodbury, 48 Vt. 94.

88. Bail in appellate court. On the granting of an appeal from commissioners on petition to the supreme court, bail for the appeal was entered in that court. Wing v. Bates, 16 Vt. 148.

89. Creditor appealing. Where a creditor of an estate took appeals, under the statute, from the allowance by the commissioners of claims against the estate presented by the administrator and others, and prosecuted such appeals at his own expense and succeeded, and costs were awarded;—Held, that such creditor was entitled to the costs; and the administrator having received the costs and executed releases therefor, chancery decreed that he pay the same to such creditor. Sutton v. Sutton, 21 Vt. 74.

4. Appellate Court as a Court of Probate.

90. In appeals from the probate court, the proceedings will conform to the practice of that court. Wadsworth v. Fassett, 2 Tyl. 127.

91. An appeal from the probate court to the supreme court brings the whole case before that court, to be determined upon its merits, as the supreme court of probate. Smith v. Rix, 9 Vt. 240. (Since changed by statute—appeals lying only to the county court, and exceptions as to “all questions of law” arising in the county court “in probate matters” passing to the supreme court. G. S. c. 48, ss. 28, 29. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 38 Vt. 703. Clark v. Clark, 21 Vt. 490.)

92. The jurisdiction of the county court, as an appellate court in probate matters, is measured only by the extent of the jurisdiction of the probate court, and extends over all matters within the jurisdiction of the probate court, for the rehearing and re-examination of all subjects which have been acted upon in that court. Adams v. Adams, 21 Vt. 162. Boyden v. Ward, 38 Vt. 628.

93. On appeal from the probate court, the county court acts as a higher court of probate, and may revise all questions resting in discretion, as well as others; as, the removal of an administrator. Holmes v. Holmes, 26 Vt. 536. Adams v. Adams. Hilliard v. McDaniel, 48 Vt. 122.

94. Supreme court. Although matters resting in the discretion of the probate court pass to the county court upon appeal, they cannot be revised in the supreme court, not being questions of law. Phelps v. Phelps, 16 Vt. 73. Adams v. Adams, 21 Vt. 162. Frost v. Frost, 40 Vt. 625;—as, for the refusal to reconsider, revise and alter a decree of distribution after the time for an appeal had passed. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 38 Vt. 700.

95. Administrator's account. An appeal from the allowance of an administrator's account opens every item of the accounts for examination, whether or not presented or objected to in the probate court; and the commissioners should report each item, and whether allowed or disallowed, and the facts found as the reason of their decision. Barker v. Rogers, 2 Vt. 440.

96. On such appeal, either party may present any proper claim, whether presented in the probate court, or not. Clark v. Clark, 21 Vt. 490.

97. Certificate of decision. The certificate to the probate court of the final decision upon an appeal, as required by the statute, is designed to furnish notice to that court of the general result of the appeal, so that its subsequent action may be in conformity to such decision, rather than to restore jurisdiction to it. The want of such certificate, therefore, is not a legal bar to further proceedings in the probate court, though upon subjects affected by the decision of the appellate court; and the probate court can nevertheless act with effect, if its action is warranted by the law and the fact as they really exist at the time. Green v. Clark, 24 Vt. 136.

For Appeals in other cases, see the appropriate titles, as PAUPER; HIGHWAYS; CHANCERY, &c.

APPRENTICE.

1. Relation created by deed. The relation of master and apprentice can be created only by deed. Squire v. Whipple, 1 Vt. 69. 7 Vt. 450. Holgate v. Cheney, Brayt. 158.

2. A agreed by parol to bind his son to apprenticeship to B by written indentures, and put the son to service with B before executing the indentures. The boy left service, after having received necessary articles and instruction, and A then refused to execute the indentures. Held, that B could recover of A, on the general counts in assumpsit, for the articles and services so furnished the son. Squires v. Whipple, 2 Vt. 111.

3. Death of master. An indenture of apprenticeship becomes not void, but merely voidable by the death of the master. Phelps v. Culver, 6 Vt. 430.

4. An apprentice bound out by the overseers of the poor is assignable without his consent, and may be retained in the service of an administrator after the death of the master, with the assent of the overseer. Ib.

5. Revocation. Where an indenture of apprenticeship becomes voidable on election, the apprentice cannot recover for services under the indenture rendered before revocation, over and above benefits received. Ib.

6. Nor can the master recover for excess of expenses incurred above services rendered, before revocation. Hudson v. Worden, 39 Vt. 382.

7. The plaintiff, at ten years of age, was bound out by his father as an apprentice to the defendant until the plaintiff should become twenty-one. He served under the indenture until he was sixteen, when he went into the State of New York and there enlisted as a soldier in the U. S. army and went into military service, as a substitute for one C, from whom he received therefor $325, which he forwarded to the defendant. In an action to recover this money;—Held, that, as the indenture, on the defendant's arriving at the age of fourteen, became, at least, voidable at his election, the leaving and enlisting and going into the military service was an abandonment of the indenture, and in law a revocation of it, and that the plaintiff could recover. Ib.

8. Harboring. One may lawfully harbor and employ an apprentice who has left his master's service, though without cause, even after notice from the master not to harbor or employ him, if the master for any cause refuses to take back the apprentice. Conant v. Raymond, 2 Aik. 243.

9. In case for harboring the plaintiff's apprentice, knowledge by the defendant of the apprenticeship must be proved, and the measure of damages is the injury sustained by the plaintiff; while in assumpsit for the services of the apprentice, such knowledge is not material, and the measure of damages is the value of the services to the defendant. Such action is a waiver of the tort. Id.

As to binding out pauper children, see PAUPER I.

ARBITRATION.

I. GENERAL POWERS OF ARBITRATORS AND THEIR PROCEEDINGS.

II. REVOCATION.

III. AWARD,—Publication; Validity; Construction; Effect; Setting aside, &c.

IV. ACTION ON THE AWARD.

I. GENERAL POWERS OF ARBITRATORS AND THEIR PROCEEDINGS.

1. Their meetings. A declaration upon an award was held ill, where it set forth a submission to five, the award to be made by a majority, and an award made by three, but did not aver that the other two were notified, nor that they attended. Blin v. Hay, 2 Tyl. 304.

2. Where a submission required that the award should be made by the arbitrators, or a majority of them;—Held, that all must be present at the hearing, but that this fact need not appear upon the face of the award; if denied, it might be proved otherwise. Riazford v. Nye, 20 Vt. 132.

3. In case of a written submission to three persons named, and if either one of them could not be obtained, to accept another person named;—Held, that an award made by the four, acting by the mutual consent of the parties given on the day of hearing, was good. Blanchard v. Murray, 15 Vt. 548.

4. Umpire. It is no objection to an award, that the umpire was appointed before the arbitrators entered upon the business, nor that the umpire joined with the arbitrators in making the award. Woodrow v. O'Conner, 28 Vt. 776.

5. Postponement. The power of arbitrators is not determined by their neglect to attend at the time and place appointed for holding the arbitration; but they may appoint another session within any reasonable time, unless prevented by a revocation, or by the terms of the submission. Harrington v. Rich, 6 Vt. 666.

6. Correcting mistake. An arbitrator may, after publishing his award, correct a clerical mistake in it—as, by inserting the word "dollars," manifestly omitted by mistake, &c. Goodell v. Raymond, 27 Vt. 241.

7. Awarding costs. By early and general practice adopted in this State, the rule must be considered settled, that it is incident to the authority given to arbitrators, in a general submission, where no mention is made of costs, to award concerning the costs of arbitration. Bowman v. Downer, 28 Vt. 532. Hawley v. Hodge, 7 Vt. 240. But see contra, especially as to fees of the arbitrators, Morrison v. Buchanan, 32 Vt. 289.

8. Proceedings. It is not necessary that arbitrators should follow the rules of law in taking evidence, or in other matters, to make their award good. While governed by their own judgment, without corruption or partiality in their proceedings and decisions, the parties being present, or having a fair opportunity to be present at all hearings, the award should stand. Sabin v. Angell, 44 Vt. 528.

9. It is no objection to an award, that neither the arbitrators nor witnesses were sworn, where the parties agree that they need not be, or where the law of the place does not require it. Woodrow v. O'Conner, 28 Vt. 776.

10. Sunday. Although a judgment rendered on Sunday is void at common law, an award of arbitrators is not a judgment, and an award published on Sunday is not for that reason void, where the submission did not require this to be done, and the parties had no agency therein and did not act in violation of the statute. Blood v. Bates, 31 Vt. 147. Sargeant v. Butts, 21 Vt. 99.

II. REVOCATION.

11. Every submission to arbitration, though by deed and declared irrevocable, may be revoked before award and publication, and such revocation annuls all contracts relative to the submission, and leaves the other party solely to his redress upon the bond or agreement of submission. Aspinwall v. Tousey, 2 Tyl. 328.

12. Where a party to a written submission made a parol revocation, and thereupon the arbitrator declined proceeding;—Held, in an action upon the submission, that the defendant could not dispute the revocation because not in writing. Hawley v. Hodge, 7 Vt. 237.

13. An express revocation of a submission must follow the form of the submission. If the submission be by deed, the revocation must be under seal; if by writing, then so must be the revocation; and if simply by parol, then it may be so revoked. Sutton v. Tyrrell, 10 Vt. 91.

14. The entry and continuance of a cause in court, before an award made under a submission which provided that all pending suits should be discontinued, without saying when, was held not to work a revocation of the submission.—What is an implied revocation, or revocation in law, see Id.

15. A letter sent to the arbitrator by one of the parties "objecting to any decision of the case," until furnished with a copy of the brief of the counsel of the other party according to an agreement of counsel, is not a revocation, but only a request for delay; and the arbitrator may proceed to make a binding award, although such copy was not furnished, the counsel of each party having furnished the arbitrator his brief. Keyes v. Fulton, 42 Vt. 159.

16. The revocation of a submission is a breach of the condition of an arbitration bond to observe, perform and keep the award. Craftsbury v. Hill, 28 Vt. 763.

17. One party to a submission by bond legally revoked it by deed, but the other party got an award made in his favor notwithstanding, which the revoking party paid, but releases were not executed as the award provided. Held, that such payment was not per se a waiver of the revocation. Hathaway v. Strong, 2 Tyl. 105.

18. A parol agreement to alter the terms of an arbitration bond so as to include in it an additional subject of dispute, although omitted by mistake, was held not to merge or supersede the bond; and that a revocation of the agreement, which had not been so acted upon by the other party as that such revocation would operate as a fraud upon him, did not excuse him from not performing the bond. Patrick v. Adams, 29 Vt. 376.

III. AWARD—publication; validity; construction; effect; setting aside, &c.

19. What is an award. An award on a parol submission was held binding, although the parties supposed, and were so advised by the arbitrator, that the award would not be legally binding, as the submission was not in writing;—the court finding that the parties did in fact agree to abide the award. Ennos v. Pratt, 26 Vt. 630, citing Howard v. Puffer, 23 Vt. 365.*

20. What is not. Parties left out a matter of difference to others, introducing no testimony, but one of the parties made a statement. The referees, after retiring to consult, reported that they had agreed, but that neither party was to be bound by their determination and would be under no obligation to abide by it. The plaintiff said he would hear what they had to say and then determine; and the referees thereupon announced their conclusion. Held, that the action of the referees was intended to be, and was, in fact, merely advisory, and had no binding force as an award. Sartwell v. Horton, 28 Vt. 370.

21. Publication. An award is made and published when the terms of the submission, in these respects, are complied with. The delivery of an award to the party entitled to it, or notice to him that it is ready to be delivered, and of its contents, is a publication; and is sufficient, unless the submission requires something more. Morse v. Stoddard, 28 Vt. 445. Risford v. Nye, 20 Vt. 132.

22. A bond of submission provided that the arbitrators should "make and publish their award in writing under their hands and seals." The arbitrators so made their award, and informed the attorney of the recovering party of its contents. Held, that this was a sufficient publication under the submission, and that the submission could not be thereafter revoked by the other party, although he had not been informed of the award. Morse v. Stoddard.

23. Award as to real estate. A pending action of ejectment, and controversy as to the seizin and possession of land, may be the subject of arbitration, and may be awarded. Blanchard v. Murray, 15 Vt. 548.

24. An award of arbitrators in writing and under seal, concerning the title of lands, made in pursuance of a submission under seal, becomes part of the contract, and a court of equity will decree a specific performance as of any other contract under seal; and the award requires no subsequent ratification by the parties. Akely v. Akely, 16 Vt. 450. Id. 594.

25. An award as to a division line between adjoining proprietors, made upon an oral submission, if of any validity, has no greater effect than a parol agreement of the parties. To be conclusive, it must be acquiesced in for 15 years. Smith v. Bullock, 16 Vt. 592.

26. The owners of contiguous pieces of land, each acknowledging the sufficiency and validity of the title by which the other holds his land, may bind themselves by their written submission and an award, though not sealed, as to the location of the dividing line; and each will be estopped from afterwards denying that as being the true line. Stewart v. Cass, 16 Vt. 663.

27. Parol award. A parol award is good though the submission be in writing, unless the submission provide to the contrary. Marsh v. Packer, 20 Vt. 198. Goodell v. Raymond, 27 Vt. 241.

28. U. S. revenue stamp. No U. S. revenue stamp was required upon an award of arbitrators. Celley v. Gray, 37 Vt. 136.

29. Award must follow submission. The parties agreed to exchange farms, the difference in price to be paid to either according to the award of appraisers agreed upon, calling the orator's farm $5,000; but if, in the opinion of the appraisers, that was overvalued or undervalued, the defendant's farm should be valued in the same proportion. The appraisers appraised the farms at their real value and awarded to the orator the difference, which was much less than the difference by the other mode of estimate—the orator's farm being actually worth only about $3,000. Held, that the award was void, as not following the submission—and for this and other causes it was set aside in chancery. Howard v. Edgell, 17 Vt. 9.

30. If two entire subject matters are submitted to arbitration and only one of them is awarded upon, the award is not binding; and held, that this applies with peculiar force where the claims are upon different sides, and especially in case of mutual law suits. Morse v. Hale, 27 Vt. 660.

31. Agreement to extend. If parties to a written submission to arbitration do, upon the trial before the arbitrators, submit by mutual consent to the arbitrators matters not included in the written submission, and the arbitrators, acting under such mutual consent of the parties, try the matters so verbally submitted and make their award, neither party can, after publication, object that the award exceeded the submission; so held, where the submission was by a bond reciting the agreement to submit. Woods v. Page, 37 Vt. 252.

32. Certainty of award. The degree of uncertainty to avoid an award should be such as would avoid any other contract;—such as would leave the meaning of the arbitrators wholly in doubt. Akely v. Akely, 16 Vt. 450.

33. The fact that the arbitrators have stated results, without the processes which led to them, does not make an award uncertain. The amounts claimed, the respective accounts of the parties, and the findings upon them need not be stated. To make an award invalid for this cause, it must be the decision which is left uncertain, not the reasoning which led to the decision. Lamphire v. Cowan, 39 Vt. 420.

34. Where the claims on both sides in an arbitration are pecuniary, or for damages capable of being reduced to a certain sum, if the arbitrators, professing to decide on the whole subject, find a balance due from one to the other, such an award is conclusive, although the particulars from which that balance resulted are not stated;—unless the submission requires something more than the ascertainment of a sum due, as, e. g., a direction for the performance of some specific act. Bowman v. Downer, 28 Vt. 532.

35. An award that the plaintiff shall execute and deliver to the defendant "a good authentic deed of conveyance of all the land which the plaintiff holds by deed of conveyance from one

Samuel Martin, being a part of the old Cox farm,"—was held sufficiently certain. Whitcomb v. Preston, 18 Vt. 53.

36. In an action on an award that the defendant should pay the "taxable costs" of a certain suit;—Held, (1) that the award was not objectionable for uncertainty; (2) that no action lay upon it without averment and proof that the defendant had notice of the amount before suit brought. Wright v. Smith, 19 Vt. 110.

37. An award undertaking to define a boundary is void for uncertainty, which refers for description to monuments which do not in fact exist, and fixes upon a line which cannot be ascertained. Giddings v. Hadaway, 28 Vt. 342.

38. Mutuality and finality. An award is not binding, which is not mutual and final;—as where no protection or benefit whatever could result to one of the parties from the submission or award, but the original claim is left in force. Onion v. Robinson, 15 Vt. 510.

39. Where the award of an arbitrator was not full and final upon all the matters submitted, it was held fatally defective. Smith v. Potter, 27 Vt. 304.

40. An award was held to be final, which settled a partnership, and divided the assets and liabilities as between the parties, and established their rights and duties towards each other, although it did not provide a remedy or method of enforcement. It could do no more; and such award is mutual and final. Lamphire v. Cowan, 39 Vt. 420.

41. An award that one party shall pay a stranger a debt for which both parties are bound, is valid as between the parties to the award. Ib.

42. Divisibility. Where one article of an award is in itself so complete and independent of the rest, that its separate enforcement will work no injustice, it may be recovered upon, although other portions of the award are void. Ib. Giddings v. Hadaway, 28 Vt. 342.

43. An item improperly allowed in an award does not avoid the award, where it is so stated as to be separable. In such case it is to be severed and deducted. Hartland v. Henry, 44 Vt. 593.

44. In assumpsit upon a parol award of arbitrators declaring for the aggregate amount of the award, where the award was in fact made up of distinct and separate items, with their values, and it was so announced, some of which items were within the legal scope of the decision, and some not;—Held, that a recovery could be had, under such declaration, for the sum of the items which were properly awarded. Dalrymple v. Whittingham, 26 Vt. 345.

45. Where a submission was of all demands, and the arbitrators added to their award that the parties should execute mutual general releases; Held, that this was well enough, and did not affect the main award, which was itself a bar to all claims. Shepherd v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 81.

46. Under a parol submission to arbitrators of all matters of difference between the parties, the arbitrators awarded a certain sum to the plaintiff, and a further sum of $50 for further breach of contract, unless the defendant should within six days after notice pay the sum first stated. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover the $50, it being, as stated, a penalty for not performing the rest of the award, and not within the submission; but that this was severable, and did not vitiate the rest. Sabin v. Angell, 44 Vt. 523.

47. In an award one provision was, that the costs should "be made up by the parties." Held, that this did not vitiate other parts of the award. Rixford v. Nye, 20 Vt. 132. 39 Vt. 420.

48. Arbitrators, in adjusting sundry claims between the parties, made seven successive awards, five in favor of the plaintiff and two in favor of the defendant, each complete in itself, and struck no final balance of the awards; but this was mere matter of computation. In an action on the arbitration bond to pay "the award";—Held, that these were but details of one award, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the final balance. Semble, that if the defendant had withheld his portion of the award, the plaintiff might have had judgment for that part which was in his favor. Kendrick v. Tarbell, 26 Vt. 416.

49. Construction. Awards are to be liberally construed according to the intent of the parties. If, by manifest implication, that appears which, if positively expressed, would render the award good, that is sufficient to support the award. Rixford v. Nye, 20 Vt. 132. Lamphire v. Cowan, 39 Vt. 426. Young v. Kinney, 48 Vt. 22.

50. A submission and award very inartificially drawn, were sustained, the judge saying, that courts, very justly, ever strive to support and enforce the adjudications of these domestic tribunals created by the parties, as in the interest of peace and, generally, of substantial justice. Soper v. Frank, 47 Vt. 368.

51. The submission to arbitration of a cause pending in the county court provided, that "the costs in the county court shall follow the decision of the arbitrators, and shall follow the judgment of said arbitrators to be made as in a court of law." Held, that this provision referred to the costs only, and not to a rule of decision upon the merits. Edwards v. Harrington, 45 Vt. 63.

52. Arbitrators may award that payment be made at a future day, and by installments, and may require the performance of conditions by the other party before payment; and where the subject matter was a continuing contract for support during life, which was wholly broken;—Held, that they might award the payment of an annual sum during the life of the party entitled to such support, under a submission of "all questions of damages growing out of an alleged violation" of such contract. Remelce v. Hall, 31 Vt. 532.

53. A submission recited that "Whereas a controversy is now existing between us concerning the settlement of book accounts and all other deal and disputes between us," and then agreed "to submit all of said controversies which we cannot settle ourselves, if any there should be, &c." Held, that the submission did not include matters of deal not in controversy [as certain promissory notes not at that time disputed], and, therefore, such claims, not presented to the arbitrators, were not barred by the award. Robinson v. Morse, 29 Vt. 404. Id. 464.

54. Where a submission in writing was of "all differences and accounts,"—Held, that an award thereon was not a bar to a claim not presented, about which there was no dispute, and which stood adjusted by a previous award under a parol submission. Trescott v. Baker, 29 Vt. 459.

55. Effect. An award, acquiesced in by the parties to it, cannot be impeached by a third person who has got possession of the money awarded. Penniman v. Patchin, 6 Vt. 325.

56. An award will ordinarily have no greater effect than a judgment. It will only bar what is adjudged, unless perhaps, &c. Redfield, J., in Briggs v. Brewster, 23 Vt. 100. 29 Vt. 408. 29 Vt. 464. See Robinson v. Morse, 26 Vt. 392. Buck v. Buck, 2 Vt. 417.

57. Under a general submission to arbitration, not in writing;—Held, that matters within the submission, but not brought before the arbitrators, are not barred by the award; but the decision was limited to such submissions. Buck v. Buck.

58. In case of a written submission of all matters in difference, where only a part was embraced in the award;—Held, that in order to impeach the award on this ground, the party must distinctly show that the matters not awarded upon were so brought to the notice of the arbitrator that it became his duty to hear and determine them. Young v. Kinney, 48 Vt. 22.

59. Whether matters falling within the terms of the submission, but, through mistake, forgetfulness or accident, not presented to the arbitrators, are barred by the award—quære. Robinson v. Morse, 26 Vt. 392. It so seems:—see Barker v. Belknap, 39 Vt. 180.

60. Where a submission to arbitration is by deed, an award, made in pursuance of it, is a bar to an action for the recovery of any matters included in the submission, though not in fact brought before the arbitrators. Robinson v. Morse, 26 Vt. 392.

61. So, where the submission is in writing, and under a rule of the probate court authorized by statute. Barker v. Belknap, 39 Vt. 168.

62. The submission of the subject matter of a pending suit to arbitration and an award according to the submission, operate in law to discontinue and put an end to the suit. Rizford v. Nye, 20 Vt. 132. Babcock v. School District, 35 Vt. 250.

63. The plaintiff had a claim against the defendant, an officer, for the wrongful attachment of his last cow upon a writ in favor of G. The plaintiff and G afterwards submitted certain specified matters, and "all matters existing between them" to arbitration, and an award was made, this claim not being presented or adjudicated. In an action of trespass against the officer,—Held, that the award was no defense, for that the plaintiff was not bound to resort to G instead of the officer for remedy, even although he might have done so, and the officer was not a party to the submission. Robinson v. Hawkins, 38 Vt. 693.

64. The defendant had leased premises to the plaintiff for five years, and during the first year they agreed to "dissolve," and left to arbitrators to determine what sum the defendant should pay the plaintiff in consideration that the plaintiff would, at the end of the first year, surrender the term and premises. The arbitrators awarded a certain sum. Before the expiration of the year the plaintiff assigned the lease and remainder of the term to his son, and informed the defendant thereof and that he did not consider himself bound by the award, as the defendant had not paid; that he had nothing further to do with it, and the defendant must go to the son about it. The defendant did go to the son and paid him $100, to surrender the premises. In an action on the award;—Held, (1) that the award was payable only when the surrender was to be made; (2) that having refused to surrender and having assigned the estate, the plaintiff could not recover; (3) that as the defendant acted upon the notice given him in making the purchase of the son, this operated as an estoppel in pais to any claim of the plaintiff. Soper v. Frank, 47 Vt. 368.

65. Impeachment of award at law. Neither mistake, nor irregularity of conduct of arbitrators, nor both, not going to the whole award, is a defense in an action at law upon the award. Shepherd v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 81.

66. In an action upon an award, or an arbitration note, the award, like a judgment, cannot be collaterally impeached by evidence that it was procured by the plaintiff by false testimony. Woodrow v. O'Conner, 28 Vt. 776.

67. —in equity. Partiality or corruption in the arbitrators, or fraud of the party in obtaining an award, are grounds of defense exclusively of equitable cognizance. Emerson v. Udall, 13 Vt. 477.

68. An award is in itself conclusive of the legality and justice of the claim submitted and allowed, and of all inferences to be drawn therefrom. To avoid an award upon the score of fraud, it is necessary to prove facts not within the scope of the inquiry before the arbitrators, and from their nature not concluded by the award; simply to show that the claim allowed was unfounded, and that the party presenting it knew it, is not sufficient. Emerson v. Udall, 8 Vt. 357.

69. In order to warrant the setting aside of an award for fraud of a party, such party must, either by suggestion of falsehood or the suppression of truth, have presented to the arbitrators a state of facts in regard to the merits of his claim which were factitious, and which he at the time believed to be such. Redfield, J., in Emerson v. Udall, 13 Vt. 484. Howard v. Puffer, 23 Vt. 365.

70. An award will not be set aside by a court of equity on the ground that one of the parties, without any mistake as to the facts, misapprehended one of the legal consequences of the award—as, the settling of title to land. Howard v. Puffer, 26 Vt. 637.

71. No mistake in matter of fact, depending upon the misjudgment of an arbitrator, whether in weighing evidence, or the construction of contracts or written admissions, will avoid an award. The mistake must be one which shows that the arbitrator was misled, deluded, and so far misapprehended the case, that he failed to exercise his real judgment upon it—e. g. a mistake in computation. Redfield, C. J., in Vanderwerker v. Vt. Central R. Co., 27 Vt. 130, 137.

72. The court refused, on bill in equity, to set aside an award for misconduct of the arbitrators, where they were not satisfied that the misconduct was intentional, or sufficiently gross, although the court characterized it as "discreditable." Cutting v. Carter, 29 Vt. 72.

73. But where a party to an arbitration procured a false allowance in his favor by withholding from the inspection of the other party his books and papers, from which he was conscious the incorrectness of his claim would appear;—Held, that this was such a fraud as demanded setting aside the award. Id.

IV. ACTION ON AWARD.

74. Under a general submission arbitrators may award money, and releases; and assumpsit lies upon an award, though the submission contains no express promise to abide the award. Bellows v. Barnard, Brayt. 29.

75. If parties agree to submit, and actually do submit, and an award is made in the premises, an agreement to abide the award is implied, though not expressed in the submission. Stewart v. Cass, 16 Vt. 668.

76. Where an award orders acts to be done by both parties within a certain time, the party who refuses to perform within the time set cannot afterwards compel the other party to perform. Anon. Brayt. 29.

77. Certain property in the custody of the defendant was awarded by arbitrators to the plaintiff. At a later date, the parties executed mutual releases. Afterwards the defendant refused to surrender the property and converted it. Held, that an action therefor did not lie upon the covenant to perform the award, but trover. Bridgeman v. Eaton, 3 Vt. 166.

78. Arbitration notes. An arbitration note—that is, a promissory note executed by one party to the other, subject to indorsement to correspond with the award, and deposited with the arbitrator to be delivered to the recovering party—takes effect as a valid obligation upon its delivery to the party in whose favor a valid award is made; and a recovery may be had upon it, on the money counts. Woodrow v. O'Conner, 28 Vt. 776. Bagley v. Winwall, Brayt. 28.

79. Declaration. In declaring upon an award, it is sufficient to set forth that part on which the plaintiff relies, and to say that among other things the arbitrators awarded, &c. Blanchard v. Murray, 15 Vt. 548.

80. Damages. Where, as a consideration for submission to arbitration, the plaintiff released his original cause of action, and the defendant refused to proceed according to the submission;—Held, that the rule of damages was the plaintiff's cost and expenses, and the value of the claim or cause of action released. Day v. Essex Co. Bank, 13 Vt. 97.

81. Where parties agreed in the submission, each to perform the award, or, on failure, to pay to the other $500 in lieu of all other damages, and the award was for the payment of a sum of money less than $500;—Held, in an action on the award, that the plaintiff could recover only the amount of the award with interest. Whitcomb v. Preston, 13 Vt. 53.

ARREST.

1. Right to arrest. For the purpose of preventing the commission of crime, or breach of the peace, public officers may, upon common principles, without any statute authorizing it, make arrests, and take and detain the instruments of crime. In many instances, a private person may do the same. Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 9. In re Powers, 25 Vt. 261.

2. —to demand assistance. In the making of arrests for any criminal matter or cause, a sheriff, or other like officer, may command suitable aid and assistance (G. S. c. 12, s. 11); and any person so assisting may justify by the order of a known public officer, although the officer be not justified by his process. McMahan v. Green, 34 Vt. 70.

3. If there be a misnomer of the defendant in a criminal process, whether the arrest of the person intended cannot be justified by the officer under the warrant—quare: The order of the officer will justify the person assisting him in such case. Ib.

4. Duty to arrest. An officer having an execution against the body of a party whom he holds in arrest upon criminal process, or who is present while the party is so under arrest, is bound to wait the opportunity to make an arrest upon the execution, unless necessarily prevented; and for neglect so to do the officer was held liable. Warner v. Lowry, 1 Aik. 55.

5. Writ of protection. A writ of protection ad testificandum suspends all civil process against the subject of it, while coming to and attending upon court, and for a reasonable time for returning home after the rising of the court. Hall ex parte, 1 Tyl. 274.

6. Privilege from arrest. Parties, witnesses and bail are privileged from arrest, in a civil suit, during their attendance upon court, or before any tribunal sitting in the nature of a court in the administration of justice, and in going to and returning from it, whether compelled to attend or not. Fletcher v. Baxter, 2 Aik. 224.

7. The arrest of one having special privilege or exemption from arrest is not void, but merely voidable. The privilege may be waived. It cannot be pleaded and put in issue to the jury, but is ground for a motion to the court for a discharge, or for release on habeas corpus. Ib.

8. Where the principal was arrested while attending court as a witness, and gave bail and suffered judgment to pass against him without claiming his privilege;—Held, that he had waived his privilege, and that it was no defense to an action against the bail. Ib. (See G. S. c. 33, s. 84.)

9. One who is personally privileged from arrest must take the earliest opportunity to assert his privilege to prevent or defeat an arrest, or he will be held to have waived his privilege; and it cannot be afterwards asserted, so as to render his imprisonment unlawful, in an action for false imprisonment. So held, where the plaintiff was again imprisoned upon an execution regular on its face, after having been discharged on taking the poor debtor's oath. Wood v. Kinsman, 5 Vt. 588. Brayt. 118.

10. An officer, holding a writ of attachment against a person attending a justice court as a suitor, arrested him, but recognizing his privilege discharged him from arrest, and so made return, making no other service. Held, that this was no service of the writ. Wheeler v. Barry, 6 Vt. 579.

11. That the defendant was attending court as a witness when he was arrested upon the writ, is no cause for abating the writ. Booraem v. Wheeler, 12 Vt. 811. Changed by G. S. c. 33, s. 84 (1849).

12. The giving of bail is not a presumed waiver of privilege from arrest. Washburn v. Phelps, 24 Vt. 506 (1852).

13. G. S. c. 33, s. 84, giving persons "privileged from arrest" the right to plead such privilege in abatement, is intended for those only who are exempt from arrest on peculiar grounds, as parties and witnesses, attorneys, members of the legislature, &c., and does not include a person not so "privileged," who is arrested upon the filing of an affidavit that he is about to abscond, &c. Bank of Vergennes v. Barker, 27 Vt. 243.

14. The statute (G. S. c. 36, s. 20) exempting a party "in any cause" from arrest while going to, attending or returning from the trial of such case, does not extend to the respondent in a criminal prosecution. Scott v. Curtis, 27 Vt. 762.

15. Arrest on capias for debt. If one assume to justify by special process of capias, he should state such facts as justify that form of process. Wright v. Hazen, 24 Vt. 143.

16. An officer arresting one on a capias as an absconding debtor cannot be required to take the debtor for examination before the justice signing the writ, while the justice is out of his proper county, since the justice has no power to perform judicial acts there. Whitcomb v. Cook, 38 Vt. 477.

17. When at the time a debtor is arrested upon a writ procured against his body by affidavit, the magistrate signing the writ is temporarily absent from the county, and the debtor notifies the officer that he wishes to be taken before the magistrate for an examination, we think the officer ought not, and has no legal right to commit him forthwith to jail, so that he can have no opportunity to go before the justice and have an examination; that it is the duty of the officer to detain the debtor in custody for a reasonable time, at least, to afford opportunity for such examination, and that if he did not, in this case, but committed him, the imprisonment would be unlawful. But during the period of such delay, the officer may place the debtor in any safe and secure place for safe-keeping that is reasonable and proper, and may use the common jail for such purpose. Poland, C. J. Ib.

18. An officer having arrested one as an absconding debtor, may lodge him temporarily in the county jail for safe keeping, in view of the debtor's right to procure bail or to submit himself to examination in discharge of the arrest. But such custody remains in the officer until transferred to the jailer by a full commitment upon the writ, by leaving with him a copy, &c., as provided in G. S. c. 38, s. 61. Kenserson v. Bacon, 41 Vt. 578.

19. Until such full commitment, the debtor's right to be taken before the authority signing the writ for examination in discharge of his arrest continues; and if, after such request made at any time before such full commitment, the officer neglects or refuses to comply therewith and so commits the debtor, he becomes a trespasser ab initio, and liable for false imprisonment. Ib.

20. Under the Act of Nov. 5, 1845 (see G. S. c. 33, s. 78);—Held, (1), that where a debtor was arrested on an execution issued from the county court, the county clerk was the proper authority to examine him for a discharge; (2), that he was entitled to such examination in a case where the execution issued without other affidavit than the one upon which the original writ issued; and (3), that he was so entitled after he had been committed to jail and had given a jail bond, where he was not chargeable with neglect in seasonably claiming his privilege and had not waived it. Davis ex parte, 18 Vt. 401.

21. Discharge by judge. The written order of a county judge discharging a debtor from arrest, made in due form under G. S. c. 33, s. 79, not only justifies but requires the release of the prisoner; and where he has passed upon the question of reasonable notice to the creditor, and the order states that the proceedings were had "after proof of due notice" to the creditor, the question of due notice cannot be raised in an action against the sheriff for an escape. Brown v. Mason, 40 Vt. 167, and see Raymond v. Southerland, 3 Vt. 494.

22. —by creditor on execution. As a general rule, if the creditor discharge his debtor from arrest on execution, it is equivalent to a discharge from imprisonment, and virtually discharges the debt; but if so discharged by request of the debtor, or by mutual assent, it does not so operate. Foster v. Collamer, 10 Vt. 466. 20 Vt. 377.

23. Action for wrongful arrest. Trespass for false imprisonment does not lie for an imprisonment upon an alias execution, because of an arrest upon a former one and a discharge from custody by the creditor. Nason v. Sewall, Brayt. 119.

24. An action does not lie against the party procuring an arrest and imprisonment upon an execution issued upon a judgment not void, but voidable merely. Kimball v. Newport, 47 Vt. 88.

25. Where several, by combination and conspiracy, enticed a citizen of this State to go into another State that he might be there arrested on civil process, and he was so arrested;—Held, they were liable to him in an action on the case, although the debt for which he was so arrested was justly due. Phelps v. Goddard, 1 Tyl. 60.

Promise not to arrest;—see Steele v. Bates, 2 Aik. 338.

ASSIGNMENT.

I. ORDINARY ASSIGNMENTS.

II. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

1. At common law.
2. Under statutes.

I. ORDINARY ASSIGNMENTS.

1. Mode of assigning. If a draft, or order, is drawn on a debtor for funds of the drawer in his hands, in favor of a third person for good consideration, this operates as an equitable assignment which the assignor will not be allowed to defeat, although the drawee, having notice, neither pays nor accepts the order. Blin v. Pierce, 20 Vt. 25.

2. A promissory note, given and made payable to A, or bearer, was delivered by A to B, with an authority "to use the avails of it for the support and comfort of B, as she might need, or find occasion." Held, that this did not create an agency for the benefit of A, nor confer a mere power of attorney which was revoked by the death of A, but was an assignment, authorizing B to demand payment, and the maker of the note to pay to B, after the death of A; and, the maker having so paid, held, that he was not liable to the executor of A. Lamb v. Matthews, 41 Vt. 42.

3. A lease of lands, sheep, &c., from A to B, with conditions of purchase, had indorsed thereon the words, "Assigned the within instrument to C," signed by A, and it appeared that C had thereafter received the rents due upon the lease. Held, that these facts alone did not prove such a transfer to C of all interest in the lease, as to defeat an action by A to recover for a conversion of the property specified in it. Bradley v. Arnold, 16 Vt. 382.

4. Oral assignment. An assignment of a chose in action by words without writing operates as an equitable transfer of it, and, when followed by notice thereof from the assignee to the debtor, will be protected and enforced by courts of law against a subsequent attachment by trustee process. No symbolical delivery is essential to the assignment. Noyes v. Brown, 33 Vt. 431. Hutchins v. Watts, 35 Vt. 360. Spafford v. Page, 15 Vt. 490.

5. Dictum. An oral agreement assigning a chose in action requires a symbolical delivery. Whittle v. Skinner, 23 Vt. 531. Held contra in Noyes v. Brown.

6. Subject of assignment. A person in the actual employment of another and receiving wages under a subsisting engagement, may make a valid assignment of his future earnings for the security and payment of either present or future indebtedness—although such engagement is not for any set time and either party may terminate it at pleasure. Thayer v. Kelley, 28 Vt. 19.

7. An unliquidated balance of account is assignable, and may be held by the assignee, after notice to the debtor, against a trustee process. (Dictum contra of Redfield, J., in Whittle v. Skinner, 23 Vt. 531, denied). Trescott v. Potter, 40 Vt. 271.

8. A written instrument, as follows: "Due Harvey Groot $295, in part payment for a piano forte, said piano to be selected by Mr. Groot," is assignable, and the assignee or his agent takes the assignor's right of selection. Groot v. Story, 41 Vt. 533.

9. Protection of assignee. A note not negotiable is assignable in equity, so that, after notice, the maker can pay to the assignee only, and cannot be held as trustee of the payee. Newell v. Adams, 1 D. Chip. 346.

10. The equitable interest of the assignee of a chose in action will be protected at law; and in an action by the assignee, brought in the name of the assignor, the debtor can set up no defense which accrued after notice to him of the assignment,—as, payment, release, set-off, &c. Ib. Strong v. Strong, 2 Aik. 373. Lampson v. Fletcher, 1 Vt. 168. Haven v. Hobbs, Ib. 238. Weeks v. Hunt, 6 Vt. 15. Cummings v. Fullam, 13 Vt. 484. Day v. Abbott, 15 Vt. 632. Campbell v. Day, 16 Vt. 558. Stiles v. Farrar, 18 Vt. 444. Blake v. Buchanan, 22 Vt. 548. Upton v. Moore, 44 Vt. 552.

11. To avoid the effect of a release, pleaded or proved, it is not sufficient to reply or prove that the suit is brought for the benefit of another than the plaintiff of record, and that the defendant knew this before the release was given. To avoid the effect of the release, there must have been an assignment of the claim. Beech v. Canaan, 14 Vt. 485. Weeks v. Stevens, 7 Vt. 72.

12. C was sued upon a contract, and defended upon the ground that he was agent of M. He employed the plaintiffs as his attorneys, and was cast in the suit, on the ground that he did not disclose his agency when he made the contract. He then brought suit against M, to recover what he had been compelled to pay and his expenses, and, pending the suit, assigned his entire claim, upon sufficient consideration, to the defendant, and afterwards settled with the plaintiffs their bill for services in the first suit by giving them his note therefor, telling them that if such part of his claim against M should be allowed in the suit, they should have the benefit of it, and have so much of the judgment against M. A judgment was obtained against M in the suit, and the amount of the plaintiffs' claim against C was embraced in it. The defendant collected the whole amount of the judgment, and held the money. In an action to recover the amount of the plaintiffs' bill, as their money in the hands of the defendant;—Held, that the liability of C to the plaintiffs, equally as if paid, passed by his assignment to the defendant, as part of his claim against M, and that the giving of the note gave him no additional right against M; that C gained nothing and the plaintiffs lost nothing by that arrangement; that the equitable title to the whole claim, which became vested in the defendant by the assignment, could not be divested by any subsequent agreement between C and the plaintiffs; that the plaintiffs had no lien upon the judgment, and could not recover. Ormsby v. Fifield, 38 Vt. 143.

13. Where assigned as collateral security. The equitable interest of the assignee of a note not negotiable, which is assigned as collateral security merely for a debt owing, extends only to the amount of the debt, and does not cover costs accrued in a suit to recover the debt. As to the excess above such debt, the maker of the note may avail himself of a release by the payee, though executed after the assignment. Blake v. Buchanan, 22 Vt. 548.

14. The assignee of a promissory note for collateral security is entitled to recover the full amount of the maker, and to hold the excess, if any, above the claim secured in trust for the assignor. Sawyer v. Cutting, 23 Vt. 486. See Bank of Rutland v. Woodruff, 34 Vt. 89.

15. Assignee takes subject to equities. The assignee of a chose in action takes it subject to all the equity, existing at the time, in the original obligor or debtor. Foot v. Ketchum, 15 Vt. 258.

16. Where a deputy sheriff recovered judgment against a bank for money deposited, which he had collected on an execution, and the sheriff had been obliged to pay the creditor for the laches of the deputy in failing to pay over the money so collected;—Held, that the equitable title to the money deposited and the judgment was in the creditor, until he was paid by the sheriff, and that on such payment the sheriff became entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor in the judgment; and that this equity would prevail over the equitable rights of one who had taken from the deputy an assignment of the judgment, though taken upon good consideration and without notice of the pre-existing equity of the sheriff. Downer v. S. Royalton Bank, 39 Vt. 25.

17. The rule that a bona fide purchase, for value and without notice, is a good defense against prior equitable claims, applies only where the purchaser has acquired a legal title or a legal superiority in good faith and for value. But the purchaser of a chose in action, which is assignable only in equity, takes it subject to all equities attached to it, although without notice of them,—not only such as exist between the debtor and the assignor, but such as exist in favor of a third person as against the assignor. As between mere equities, priority in time gives priority of right. Wilson, J. Ib.

18. An assignment of a demand not negotiable, since it does not transfer the legal right of action, does not preclude the defendant from offsetting mutual demands against the plaintiff of record, which were mature and actionable previous to the assignment. Walker v. Sargeant, 14 Vt. 247.

19. The defendant was indebted to the plaintiff on book account, and was, at the same time, surety of the plaintiff for a larger sum. The plaintiff assigned his account, of which the defendant was notified, and the defendant afterwards paid the debt for which he was surety. In an action of book account by the assignee in the name of the plaintiff;—Held, that the sum so paid should be allowed to the defendant, notwithstanding the assignment, the defendant having an earlier equity than the assignee, and dating from his undertaking of suretyship. Barney v. Grover, 28 Vt. 391.

20. A party taking a railroad mortgage bond pendente lite, or after a foreclosure, as collateral security for the debt of the assignor, takes it subject to such equities as existed against it in the hands of the assignor, and with no greater rights under it. Knapp v. Sturgis, 36 Vt. 721.

21. Notice of assignment. The debtor will be protected as to all bona fide defenses—as payment to the assignor, &c.,—arising before he had knowledge of the assignment. Campbell v. Day, 16 Vt. 558.

22. To perfect an assignment of a chose in action as against bona fide creditors of the assignor, notice of the assignment must be given to the debtor before attachment; and this is so, whether it be an assignment of a single chose in action, or a general assignment for the benefit of creditors. Notice comes in lieu of possession taken, as in case of chattels. Ward v. Morrison, 25 Vt. 593. Barney v. Douglass, 19 Vt. 98.

23. Until notice of the assignment of a chose in action has been given, the same evidence that would be admissible between the original parties is admissible against the assignee;—as, an admission by the assignor that the debt had been paid,—for, until such notice, the rights and interests of the debtor are in no way affected by the assignment. Loomis v. Loomis, 26 Vt. 198.

24. The defendant had contracted with one S for a daily supply of milk for one year from April 1st, at a stipulated price per quart payable monthly. S so furnished the milk until Sept. 1st, when, without the knowledge of the defendant, he sold out his business to the plaintiff, who supplied the defendant through the month of September, the defendant all the while supposing that he was supplied by S under the special contract. Upon then being informed of the facts, and upon the plaintiff's refusing to carry out the contract of S for the rest of the year, the defendant refused to pay the plaintiff for the milk furnished by him during the month of September. In an action of book account brought therefor;—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, but only to the same extent as if the action had been by S after a like refusal on his part to carry out the special contract, and subject to a like deduction from the contract price, of the defendant's damages on account of such refusal. Smith v. Foster, 36 Vt. 705.

25. Form of notice. No particular ceremony or form of words is prescribed, or necessary, to constitute sufficient notice of the assignment of a demand, so as to protect it from trustee process against the assignor; but it must be such knowledge or information, communicated by the assignee or by his procurement, to the alleged trustee, as gives him fully to understand that he, the assignee, is the owner of the demand. A notice of this character may be sufficient, though the communication be merely casual and be made for no definite purpose. Dale v. Kimpton, 46 Vt. 76.

26. A, the assignee of an unsettled claim of M against B, said to B: "If there is anything due from you to M, I want you to pay it to me." B replied that he had been requested to do the same thing by two others that day. A answered: "I claim it." Held, that this did not fairly and reasonably give B to understand that A had an assignment of the debt, but was rather a request, and was not a sufficient notice of the assignment to protect the fund from a trustee process for the debt of M. Cahoon v. Morgan, 38 Vt. 234.

27. Action by assignee. The transfer of a chose in action not negotiable, whereby the assignee becomes the absolute owner, whether it be by purchase or gift, is a sufficient consideration to sustain a special promise by the debtor to pay to such assignee, and an action may be sustained upon such promise in the name of the assignee. Smilie v. Stevens, 41 Vt.

321. Moar v. Wright, 1 Vt. 57. Bucklin v. Ward, 7 Vt. 195. Hodges v. Eastman, 12 Vt. 358. Goodnow v. Parsons, 36 Vt. 46. Alis v. Jewell, Id. 547. 31 Vt. 565. Stiles v. Farrar, 18 Vt. 444. Goss v. Barker, 22 Vt. 520.

28. Where a note, not negotiable, had been assigned for a valuable consideration, and upon notice thereof given by the assignee the maker promised to pay it to the assignee;—Held, in an action thereon in the name of the payee, for the benefit of the assignee, that such promise amounted to an acquiescence in the assignment and a waiver of all right, or claim, to interpose an offset to the note, although then existing against the payee. Stiles v. Farrar.

29. The assignee of a judgment may maintain an action in his own name for neglect of an officer, after such assignment, to collect the execution. McGregor v. Walden, 14 Vt. 450. 31 Vt. 473.

30. So, for such neglect, or to pay over the money collected, the assignee may maintain an action in the name of the party recovering the judgment; and the rule of damages is the same in both cases. Chase v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 469. Bradley v. Chamberlain, 31 Vt. 468.

31. —against assignee. An action for the breach of a mere personal contract cannot be brought against one to whom the obligor has assigned his interest, unless the assignee has entered into some new contract with the plaintiff to perform it. Smith v. Kellogg, 46 Vt. 560.

II. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

1. At common law.

32. It was agreed between the owner of certain personal property and certain of his creditors, that the plaintiff, a third person who then had possession of the property, should keep it till a certain day and then sell it at auction and apply the proceeds among such creditors in a certain specified order. To this the plaintiff agreed, and employed one of such creditors to keep the property until the day of sale; but before that day the defendant, another creditor, attached and took away the property. Held, that the contract operated as a direct assignment to the plaintiff for the benefit of the particular creditors, and that the defendant was liable to him in trespass for the attachment. Mason v. Hidden, 6 Vt. 600.

33. A general assignment by a debtor of all his property, for the benefit of all his creditors, is valid. Hall v. Denison, 17 Vt. 310. (Subsequently prohibited by Act of 1843.)

34. A general assignment for the benefit of creditors imports a consideration,—especially where a nominal consideration is expressed, and the assignee executes a covenant for the faithful performance of the trust. Id.

35. It is no objection to such an assignment, that there is in it a reservation of the surplus to the assignor, after all his debts are paid. Ib.

36. The assent of creditors to an assignment in trust for their benefit, without conditions, will be presumed; and where the condition only affected the question of a preference—as, that creditors shall be preferred who shall within 90 days become parties to the assignment and release their claims, and after that the estate shall be distributed pro rata among all other creditors—and no such preference had been claimed;—Held, that the assent of creditors to such final distribution would be presumed, and the assignment was not invalidated by such condition of preference. Ib.

37. By a valid assignment in trust for the benefit of creditors the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is at once created between the assignee and the creditors, so that the assignee cannot revoke the instrument; and the assignee cannot be held as trustee, under the trustee process of attachment, where there is no surplus in his hands after paying the debts embraced in the assignment. Ib.

38. A reservation to the assignor of the residuum, in an assignment in trust for creditors, without providing for all the creditors, renders the assignment void at common law. Dana v. Lull, 17 Vt. 390. Goddard v. Hapgood, 25 Vt. 351. Therasson v. Hickok, 37 Vt. 454.

39. Where a voluntary assignment of all one's property to a trustee for the benefit of a part of the creditors of the debtor is objected to, because it leaves, expressly or by implication, a resulting trust to the debtor as to the surplus, it is no answer, that, in the end, it turned out that the property assigned was not sufficient to pay such preferred creditors. Dana v. Lull.

40. Held, that a person not in debt may make a voluntary conveyance of his property or a contract for his future support, which will be valid as to subsequent creditors. Buchanan v. Clark, 28 Vt. 799.

41. Fraud does not consist in transferring property with a view to prefer one creditor to another, but in transferring property with the intent to prefer one's self to all his creditors. He may lawfully pay or secure one creditor to the exclusion of another. Gregory v. Harrington, 33 Vt. 241.

42. An assignment in trust for the benefit of creditors, if made with intent to prevent a particular creditor from getting his pay from the property assigned, or otherwise, except at the assignor's pleasure, was held to be void as to such creditor, although the assignee was ignorant of such purpose, and although the assignment, in other respects and in its results, aside from such intent, was valid. Stickney v. Crane, 35 Vt. 88.

43. A party took and held possession of goods under a valid assignment from his debtor. He afterwards, for his better protection, attached the goods and irregularly sold them on execution. Held, as against other creditors of the assignor, that he had not thereby lost his right under the assignment. Tilton v. Miller, 34 Vt. 576.

44. Where a creditor accepted in writing the provisions of an assignment by his debtor for the benefit of creditors, by which he agreed to accept the dividends which might accrue after a faithful accounting by the assignee, and await the same;—Held, that the agreement was on sufficient consideration, and operated as a temporary bar to his right of action on his claim. Kingsbury v. Deming, 17 Vt. 387.

45. But the acceptance of a dividend under such an assignment, where there is nothing in the terms of the assignment binding the creditors to delay, does not preclude the creditor from suing at any time. Bank of Bellows Falls v. Deming, 17 Vt. 366.

46. So, too, if, under such an assignment, there has been an unreasonable delay in settling the estate and perfecting the accounting, a creditor who assented to the assignment, and joined in the agreement to delay, may bring his suit. Foster v. Deming, 19 Vt. 813.

2. Under statutes.

47. Stat. 1843—General assignment. Under the Statute of 1843 (C. S. c. 64, s. 6) enacting that "all general assignments made by debtors for the benefit of creditors shall be null and void as against the creditors of said debtors;"—Held, that to come within the statute the assignment must be of substantially all the debtor's property and in trust for the benefit of his creditors. If so, it is within the statute. Noyes v. Hickok, 27 Vt. 36. Mussey v. Noyes, 26 Vt. 462. Bishop v. Catlin, 28 Vt. 71. Therasson v. Hickok, 37 Vt. 454.

48. Unless the assignment be made to trustees in trust for creditors, it is not a "general assignment" under the act, although it be of all the debtor's property. Peck v. Merrill, 26 Vt. 686.

49. Where an assignment of an insolvent debtor conveyed to a trustee, by general description, all the property he owned or possessed in two towns named, and there was no allusion in the assignment to his ownership of any other property, the assignment being made, as expressed, "to save a great sacrifice and waste of property";—Held, that the court would not intend that there was other property, and that this should be understood as a general assignment of all the debtor's estate. Dana v. Lull, 17 Vt. 390; and see Bishop v. Catlin, 28 Vt. 71.

50. A deed of assignment by a debtor to assignees provided as follows: The assignees

"shall forthwith take possession, and faithfully, and as soon as practicable, and in the most beneficial manner, dispose of and convert into money the said real and personal estate, and collect the said choses in action, and apply the money therefrom arising (after paying expenses) in payment and discharge of the debts due the assignees, and for which they are holden as sureties, and pay the surplus to the assignor, or to such person as he shall appoint;"—Held, (1), that this did not give the assignees power to sell on credit; (2), nor power to compound with creditors; (3), nor was the preference given unlawful, or a violation of the statute against fraudulent conveyances; and (4), this purporting on the face of it to be but a partial assignment, must be so regarded until the contrary be shown, and therefore not a violation of the statute of 1843 against general assignments. Mussey v. Noyes, 26 Vt. 462.

51. Stat. 1852. This Statute of 1843 was repealed by implication by Stat. 1852, No. 18, relating to assignments. Farr v. Brackett, 30 Vt. 344.

52. Held, by a majority, that the Act of 1852, No. 18, embraced other than general assignments, and that an assignment of a portion of the debtor's property for the benefit of a part only of his creditors, not executed according to the provisions of that act, was inoperative as against an attaching creditor. Passumpsic Bank v. Strong, 42 Vt. 295.

53. In order that a conveyance should come within the statute regulating assignments (Stats. 1852 and 1855), there must be a trust created for the benefit of some person other than the assignee, or grantee. If made directly to a creditor to secure a debt of the grantor, or a liability incurred for him, it does not come within the statute. McGregor v. Chase, 37 Vt. 225. Noyes v. Brown, 33 Vt. 442.

54. Under the Assignment Act of 1852, No. 18, and the like Act of 1857, No. 11, the filing of a copy of the assignment, &c., in the clerk's office is a sufficient taking of possession by the assignee, to prevent an attachment of the assigned property. Vail v. Peck, 27 Vt. 764. Moore v. Smith, 35 Vt. 644.

55. A father leased his farm, farming tools and stock to his son for three years, at a stipulated yearly rent to be paid to the lessor's brother, to be applied on the lessor's indebtedness to such brother, and the lessee to keep one cow for the lessor on the farm. The lessor owed debts to others than his brother and was insolvent, and the lease was all of his attachable property, except an old horse worth perhaps $40. A creditor of the lessor attached the leased personal property. In an action therefor by the lessee;—Held, that the lease was not an assignment in such sense as to subject it to the special requirements necessary to the validity of assignments either at common law or under the statutes, and that it was upon its face valid as against the general creditors of the lessor. Stanley v. Robbins, 36 Vt. 422.

56. Law of place. A voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, made according to the laws of the domicile of the assignor, will pass the personal property assigned wherever situate, unless its operation is limited or restrained by some local law or policy of the State where the property is situate. Hanford v. Paine, 32 Vt. 442.

57. A resident of New York made in that State an assignment of all his property for the benefit of his creditors. Among his property was an interest as partner in a stock of goods in a store in Vermont, which his partner, a resident of Vermont, carried on. The assignment was valid by the laws of New York, but was not according to the Vermont Statute of 1852 (G. S. c. 67), relating to assignments. Held, that this statute did not apply to foreign assignments, and that the assignee, having taken possession of the stock of goods under the assignment, could hold them against the attaching and trusteeing creditors of the assignor. Ib.

58. Ratification. An assignment void (i. e. voidable) under the statute, may be remedied by a new assignment conforming to the statute, or by further declarations of trust, &c.. Merrill v. Englesby, 28 Vt. 150.

59. And it may be affirmed by the creditors assenting to it, so as to be binding not only upon themselves, but as against other creditors, if it be such a disposition of the effects as the debtor has a right to make. Ib.

60. A general assignment in trust for the benefit of creditors, which was void as to the plaintiff not assenting thereto, was held good as to every thing done under it down to the time that the plaintiff expressed his dissent by attaching a part of the estate assigned. Therasson v. Hickok, 37 Vt. 454.

61. Where a creditor, in such case, brought a trustee process against the trustee named in the assignment, this was held a ratification both of the assignment itself and of any disposition of the property which the trustee had made under it. Bishop v. Catlin, 28 Vt. 71.

ASSOCIATIONS.

1. Written articles. Persons associating under written articles for the purpose of building a meeting house, substantially, but not wholly, in accordance with the Act of Nov. 10, 1814, in addition to that of Oct. 26, 1797, were held to have become a corporation, although the acts were not referred to in the articles, nor did the articles allude to the creation of a corporation. Rogers v. Danby Universalist Ass'n., 19 Vt. 187.

2. Right of control. The right to control and manage the affairs of a voluntary association rests with the majority of the individual members. Though they may make constitutions and pass by-laws which they declare shall not be altered except in a certain way, as by the concurrence of two-thirds, &c., yet these may be altered or abrogated by the same power which created them: viz, a majority. Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 511.

3. The right to the control of the property of an association for religious worship, and of electing and employing a minister, is vested in the corporate body, or in the majority of the individual members. The relation of the minister chosen and ordained over such voluntary society, agreeably to the usages of the denomination or church to which they profess to belong, cannot be dissolved against his will and that of a majority of the association, by the proceedings of any ecclesiastical tribunal whatever. Id.

4. A majority vote of a church and society, acting as an existing organized association in a collective quasi corporate character, binds the minority—as to compromise a suit. Horton v. Baptist Church, &c., 84 Vt. 309.

5. Where by the constitution of a religious society, a vote laying a tax was required to be passed by two-thirds the members present;—Held, that where the record simply stated that it “was voted” to lay the tax, the court could not assume that it was by a two-thirds vote. Perrin v. Granger, 30 Vt. 595.

6. Church Law. The canon law of the Roman Catholic Church has no force or authority in this State, as such, and is not to be considered in determining the legal rights of parties except so far as recognized in or made part of some agreement under which those rights are derived. O’Hear v. De Goesbriand, 33 Vt. 598.

7. We have no religious establishment, no ecclesiastical law, or courts, established by any authority. All their laws are wanting in this essential requisite to give them any authority, that they are not prescribed by the supreme power in the State. And though they may form constitutions, enact canons, laws or ordinances, establish courts, or make any decisions, decrees or judgments, yet they can have only a voluntary obedience, and cannot affect any civil rights, immunities or contracts, or alter or dissolve any relations, or obligations, arising from contracts. When their proceedings are to be examined by ordinary tribunals of justice, their power is a phantom, and they can receive no other consideration than the regulations of any other voluntary associations, formed for trifling, or for grave and important purposes. Williams, C. J., in Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 549.

8. By-laws. In 1862 F became a member of a voluntary charitable society, by the by-laws of which the members, by paying their regular assessments, were entitled to 25 cents per day during their sickness, and the widow of each member dying should be paid 25 cents per day, so long as she remained a widow, &c.; but so long as there should be $20 in the treasury the society should not reduce its aid to the sick. The constitution provided for changes in the by-laws, and how such changes might be made. In 1868 the society became incorporated, the charter providing that the society might alter or change its by-laws. The by-laws remained unchanged until August, 1869, when the corporation adopted new by-laws providing that such widow should receive 25 cents per day, until she should get $200, in full of her right. F died in January, 1869. The plaintiff was his widow, and had received the $200. In a suit to recover the 25 cents per day from the death of F, less the $200 received;—Held, that the society had the right so to amend its by-laws, and thus limit the claim,—this being by a general law applicable to all, and there being no suggestion of fraud, or that the regulation was not wise and salutary; that such change in the by-laws was assented to by F in becoming a member of the society, with such right of change expressed in the constitution. Figure v. Mutual Society of St. Joseph, 46 Vt. 862.

9. Abandonment. The “Mount Lebanon Royal Arch Chapter” of Free Masons, an incorporated association, in 1836 voted to and did dispose of all their real and personal property, being their hall, furniture and equipment, and of their funds to the trustees of an academy, to use the interest, “and the principal to be returned when called for by this institution.” For 28 years the Chapter held no meetings, elected no officers, and did no act required by their laws and rules, and was without visible sign of existence. They then procured a new charter from the “State Royal Arch Chapter,” certified as a renewal of their original charter. On a bill in equity by the members (embracing some new ones) of the present Chapter, claiming as an association or society, and not in their individual and personal rights, to recover of said trustees the principal of said fund;—Held, that the original association had become dissolved and ceased to exist, by abandonment and non user, and that the new association had not legally succeeded to their rights or property, and the bill was dismissed. Strickland v. Prichard, 37 Vt. 324.

10. Contracts. Under a valid contract to pay an annual sum to a religious society for the support of the gospel;—Held, that the party could not release himself by giving notice of a change in his religious sentiments, and withdrawing himself from the church and society and joining another, although by the articles of compact a member ceasing to pay ceased to be longer a member of the society. Cong. Society v. Swan, 2 Vt. 222.

11. The members of a joint stock company are liable, in solido, for the debts of the company. Cutler v. Thomas, 25 Vt. 73.

12. Suit. The treasurer of a voluntary association for charitable purposes, after its dissolution, was, on bill brought by the remaining members, decreed to account for funds of the association in his hands, to be disposed of according to the original intention of the association. Penfield v. Skinner, 11 Vt. 296.

13. The treasurer of an unincorporated religious association was allowed to maintain a bill to recover, for the association, a legacy given to it, he suing in behalf of the whole. Any members of the association might maintain such suit in behalf of the whole, if recognized by them. Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 511.

14. Proceedings of the presbytery and synod of the Associate [Scotch] Church, in relation to the Associate congregation of Ryegate, considered and overhauled. Ib.

15. Committee. The building committee, or agents, of a voluntary association for the building of a meeting house, of which they and the plaintiff are members, are not liable to an action for services rendered or material furnished by the plaintiff in the building of the house, he knowing the facts, although done at the request of the defendants, where it does not appear that the defendants made an express promise to pay, or pledged their individual credit, or that funds of the association were in their hands with which to make the payment. Abbott v. Cobb, 17 Vt. 593. Cheeny v. Clark, 3 Vt. 431. 12 Vt. 325.

16. The fixing of the amount of the capital stock in the articles of association for the building of a meeting house, was held, under the circumstances, not to limit the building committee as to cost of building. Rogers v. Danby Univ. Society, 19 Vt. 187. The same, also, where the expense was to be based on an estimate of the number of pews, and the average price at which they should be sold. Sawyer v. Meth. Ep. Socy. in Royalton, 18 Vt. 405.

17. Sale of pews. In order to justify the sale of a pew for non-payment of a tax or assessment, it is necessary, (1), that the shares be defined; (2), that the assessments be upon the shares; (3), that the forfeiture or sale, as well as the assessment, be in conformity with the constitution and by-laws of the society. Perrin v. Granger, 33 Vt. 101. S. C. 30 Vt. 595.

See MEETING HOUSE.

ASSUMPSIT.

1. When maintainable, and when not. The allowance of a claim by commissioners is matter of record;—assumpsit does not lie thereon. Woods v. Pettis, 4 Vt. 556.

2. Where the time for the performance by the plaintiff of a contract under seal is enlarged by parol agreement of the parties, the plaintiff's remedy for a breach is assumpsit, and not covenant, or other action counting upon the contract as under seal. Smith v. Smith, 45 Vt. 433.

3. Assumpsit will not lie against a sheriff, or other officer, for a misfeasance, or non-feasance, in the execution of his official duties. Walbridge v. Grinnold, 1 D. Chip. 162;—nor against the sheriff upon the promise of his deputy, expressed in his receipt given for an execution, that he will execute it and return it according to law. Tomlinson v. Wheeler, 1 Aik. 194;—nor against a tax collector for neglect to levy, collect and pay over taxes. Charleston v. Stacy, 10 Vt. 562.

4. Where the defendant, without fraud, claimed to pass a turnpike gate, toll free, on the ground of exemption or privilege, and on such claim was permitted to pass;—Held, that an action of assumpsit did not lie to recover the tolls, although his claim of exemption, or privilege, was not well founded. Center Turnpike Co. v. Smith, 12 Vt. 212.

5. A postmaster, who receives a letter containing money which is lost through his lack of proper care, though liable for his neglect in a proper action, is not liable in an action for money had and received, unless he has put the money to his own use. Danforth v. Grant, 14 Vt. 283. 23 Vt. 663.

6. Where the plaintiff purchased wool for the defendants and was to have a share of the profits on the defendants' sales, the court say: Whether the plaintiff's remedy may be assumpsit, or must be account, depends upon whether he had any property in the wool, and so in the specific money for which it was sold;—or whether the form of the contract was only a mode of determining his compensation for services. Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 118.

7. Matters of tort. Assumpsit for goods sold does not lie where the goods were taken tortiously, there being no sale in form or fact. Winchell v. Noyes, 23 Vt. 303.

8. Where the defendant wrongfully sold a note belonging to the plaintiff;—Held, that although the plaintiff could maintain trover, he might waive the tort and recover in assumpsit for money had and received. Wier v. Church, N. Chip. 95.

9. Where the plaintiff's property has been wrongfully taken or appropriated and converted into money, he may waive the tort and recover of the wrong doer in assumpsit, in a count for money had and received. Burnap v. Partridge, 8 Vt. 144. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 518. Stearns v. Dillingham, 22 Vt. 624. Phelps v. Conant, 30 Vt. 277. Ehrell v. Martin, 32 Vt. 220. Kidney v. Persons, 41 Vt. 386. Turnpike Co. v. Smith, 12 Vt. 217.

10. But it must appear that the defendant has actually received money to the use of the plaintiff, or that he has received that which he considered as equivalent thereto and accounted for it as such. Williams, J., in Burnap v. Partridge, 3 Vt. 146.

11. As, a promissory note or negotiable paper, or the satisfaction of a money demand. Prout, J., in Kidney v. Persons, 41 Vt. 392.

12. The conversion into money may sometimes be presumed as matter of fact, as where other property has been received which is salable and time has elapsed without accounting for it; and perhaps where the property was disposed of at a fixed price, or was purchased for the purpose of selling again, and sufficient time has elapsed for that purpose and it is not otherwise accounted for. Williams and Prout, J. J., supra. Flower Brook Mfg. Co. v. Buck, 18 Vt. 238.

13. But where the defendant has received no money, as where he wrongfully sold the plaintiff's property and took his pay in a harness, such action will not lie. Kidney v. Persons, 41 Vt. 387.

14. Under a count for money had and received from the sale of timber wrongfully cut and converted, where the plaintiff's claim was only to recover the net proceeds, or the value of the "stumpage";—Held, that there could be no recovery where the defendant had not received enough to pay the expense of cutting and marketing the timber. Lemington v. Stevens, 48 Vt. 38.

15. One cannot of his own mere motion waive a tort and sue therefor in assumpsit, or on book account. Thus, he cannot convert a trespass upon his lands by the defendant's sheep, into a charge for pasturing the sheep. Stearns v. Dillingham, 22 Vt. 624.

16. Nor recover in this action or in book account for a quantity of manure taken and appropriated under a claim of right, beyond the amount which the defendant had a license to take. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507.

17. Nor, in an action on book, for money delivered to the defendant only to be carried by him to a third person, which the defendant received for that purpose, and agreed but neglected to deliver. Drury v. Douglas, 35 Vt. 474.

18. Otherwise, where the money is received to be used for the benefit of the plaintiff, and to be accounted for. Whiting v. Corwin, 5 Vt. 451.

19. Instances given where a person is virtually made liable in assumpsit for a tort. Center Turnpike Co. v. Smith, 12 Vt. 212.

20. Other cases. C, an apparent agent of the defendant, used the plaintiff's railroad ties, without license from the plaintiff, in the repair of the defendant's railroad; and afterwards agreed with the plaintiff that the defendant should pay for them; to which the plaintiff assented, supposing C to have authority to purchase ties for the defendant. C in fact had not such authority. Held, that the plaintiff could recover in assumpsit. Beecher v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 43 Vt. 138.

21. Where the plaintiff paid the defendant money upon a note, and the defendant failed to indorse the payment, and afterwards denied having received the money and claimed the whole note;—Held, that the defendant was liable for the money paid in indebitatus assumpsit. Eastman v. Hodges, 1 D. Chip., 101 (1797).

22. Assumpsit lies against a bank, after notice and demand, upon a bill of the bank destroyed, but not upon a bill lost. Ross v. Bank of Burlington, 1 Aik. 43.

23. If one decoy another from a foreign government, under promise not to sue or arrest him, and in violation of his faith he does sue, or arrest him, the process may be avoided for the fraud; or assumpsit will lie for such breach of promise to recover just damages. But if, instead of avoiding the process for the fraud, he pleads to the action and judgment passes against him, he cannot in such action of assumpsit include as damages the amount of such judgment. Steele v. Bates, 2 Aik. 338.

24. The defendant received of the plaintiff an absolute deed of land, but with the parol understanding that it should be sold, if necessary, and the avails applied towards the discharge of a liability assumed for the plaintiff. The defendant went into possession of the land, treated and used it as his own absolutely, neglected a favorable opportunity to sell it, and compelled the plaintiff to discharge out of other property such assumed liability. The plaintiff brought this action of assumpsit for land sold, and on the trial the defendant claimed that the transaction was an absolute sale, and that he had paid for the land. Held, that the defendant, this claim failing, could not also set up the trust character of the transaction as a defense, but that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of the lands, with interest from the time of the discharge of the liability assumed by the defendant for the plaintiff. Crane v. Thayer, 18 Vt. 162.

25. Trusts. Matters of trust are of original and special equity jurisdiction, and assumpsit does not lie to recover money held in trust, where parties not on the record are interested in the distribution. Congdon v. Cahoon, 48 Vt. 49.

26. Common money counts. The plaintiff, under a parol contract with the defendant for the purchase of lands subject to a mortgage but to be of no effect if the defendant did not obtain full title thereto, paid a part towards the purchase. The defendant suffered the land to pass on a foreclosure of the mortgage. Held, that the plaintiff could thereafter recover the sum so paid, in an action of general indebitatus assumpsit, without demand. Way v. Raymond, 16 Vt. 371.

27. Where a judgment, after being paid by the defendant therein, was reversed on writ of error;—Held, that an action for money had and received did not lie against the plaintiff in that suit where he was, to the knowledge of the defendant therein, a mere nominal party—the suit being prosecuted wholly for the benefit of a third person, and where the judgment was paid to such third person, and not to the plaintiff. Catlin v. Allen, 17 Vt. 158.

28. Under the statute (G. S. c. 20, s. 6) providing that a town may (under certain circumstances), “by an action,” without specifying what form of action, recover of the town where a pauper was last legally settled, the expenses of maintaining such pauper;—Held, that general indebitatus assumpsit was a proper action. Pawlet v. Sandgate, 19 Vt. 621.

29. The plaintiff's clerk, having authority to borrow money on the credit of the plaintiff to be used in the plaintiff's business, borrowed a sum on the plaintiff's credit with the intent, unknown to the lender, to use the same in gambling, and lost the same, together with other money wrongfully taken from the plaintiff's store, in gaming with the defendant. Held, that all this was the plaintiff's money illegally obtained and held by the defendant, and that he was liable therefor to the plaintiff in assumpsit, as for money had and received. Burnham v. Fisher, 25 Vt. 514.

30. Assumpsit for money had and received lies to recover back money paid upon a false claim, not made in good faith, nor supposed to be right, if there is duress, or any undue advantage taken of the payer's situation, or if paid under the terror of inceptive legal proceedings, fraudulently instituted. Sartwell v. Horton, 28 Vt. 370.

31. General indebitatus assumpsit on the common money counts:—the plaintiff's evidence was, that the defendants agreed to pay him $800, in consideration that he would become a substitute for a drafted man. The defendants' evidence was that they would pay him $100, and that he should have in addition the bounties which might be paid by the State of Maine and the United States, understood by both parties to be $100 each. Held, that if the contract was as claimed by the defendants, the plaintiff could not recover in this action the $100 expected to be received from the U. S., but which was not paid, nor payable under the U. S. regulations, to such substitute. Glover v. Greenlaw, 38 Vt. 182.

32. The defendant having bargained with N for the purchase of his farm, stock and produce, but taking no deed, agreed with the plaintiff by parol, that they together would carry out the contract with N, sell the property in a short time, and divide the profits. The plaintiff advanced money to the defendant to be paid to N towards the property, and assisted in the transaction. The property was all sold in the name of N, but under the direction of the defendant, the purchasers taking their deeds direct from N. The proceeds were received by the defendant, and there was a balance of profits in his hands. In an action of assumpsit to recover the one-half of such profits;—Held, 1st, that such action would lie; 2d, that the contract was upon sufficient consideration; 3d, that it was not within the statute of frauds. Bruce v. Hastings, 41 Vt. 380.

33. Under a parol agreement, that if the plaintiff would work upon the defendant's farm and aid in paying off incumbrances the defendant would deed to the plaintiff the farm (or a part of it), where the plaintiff performs on his part and the defendant refuses to convey, or if there is a mutual abandonment of the contract, the plaintiff may recover for his services and money paid, on the common counts in assumpsit. Stone v. Stone, 48 Vt. 180. Graham v. Chandler, 38 Vt. 559.

34. Where money was deposited with the clerk for a defendant in a petition of foreclosure, as a condition imposed by order of the chancellor for the passing of a decree, and the decree was taken and the money paid over to the defendant, it was held, that the plaintiff's obvious misadventure in the foreclosure suit could not be corrected in an action of assumpsit to recover back the money. Sweet v. Tucker, 43 Vt. 355.

35. General assumpsit lies to recover the consideration paid for the purchase of property, where the sale is avoided for fraud, or where the consideration entirely fails. James v. Hodaden, 47 Vt. 127.

36. Indebitatus assumpsit for money lent was held to lie upon a due bill of the following tenor: “Due F. H. eighty dollars on demand.” Hay v. Hide, 1 D. Chip. 214.

37. Where the plaintiff, being surety for a third person, paid the debt upon the guaranty of the defendant that he would see the debt paid and save the plaintiff harmless therefrom;—Held, that a recovery could be had under the common count in assumpsit for money paid at the defendant's request. Lapham v. Barrett, 1 Vt. 247.

38. (Money's worth). The plaintiff, being surety for the defendant, gave his own note for the amount which the creditor received as payment. Held, that this was equivalent to the payment of so much money, and sustained a count for money paid. Lapham v. Barnes, 2 Vt. 213.

39. Where, on the dissolution of a partnership between the plaintiff and the defendant, the defendant retained a portion of the partnership assets sufficient to pay a particular partnership debt, and agreed with the plaintiff to pay it, and the plaintiff was afterwards obliged to pay that debt;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover for the amount so paid upon the common money counts in assumpsit—such assets being treated as money's worth, and fairly presumed to have produced money. Hicks v. Cottrill, 25 Vt. 80.

40. The defendant authorized the plaintiff to settle a suit pending against him by a third person, and pay $12 therefor; and he settled the same by giving his own note for $13, and the claim was discharged. Held, that the defendant had received money's worth, and that the plaintiff could recover in assumpsit, on the count for money paid, $12, without proof of payment of the note. Houston v. Fellows, 27 Vt. 634.

41. Indebitatus assumpsit for money had and received was held not to lie to recover interest accrued on the plaintiff's execution against the defendant, which the plaintiff had forborne to collect at the defendant's request, and on his promise to pay such interest. Beedle v. Grant, 1 Tyl. 433. (1802.)

42. An order drawn by the plaintiff on a third person in favor of the defendant, is competent evidence under a count for money had and received. Phelps v. Mott, Brayt. 76.

43. Assumpsit for money had and received does not lie to recover back money voluntarily paid upon a note given in consideration of a contract to build a house, which has not been performed. Rollins v. Walker, Brayt. 222.

44. G drew an order on B, in whose hands he had property for sale, in favor of S for a certain sum. B declined to accept the order, but promised S, if the order was left with him, to pay on account of it any balance, not exceeding that amount, which might remain in his hands after his own claims should be satisfied. S accepted the promise and left the order with B. Held, that after the subject matter of the accounts between G and B was closed so that the balance could be ascertained, and after demand, B was liable to S on a count for money had and received. Sutton v. Burnett, 1 Aik. 197.

45. The defendant by deed, without covenants, and for "a valuable consideration," as expressed, conveyed to the plaintiff all the right, title, interest and claim which he, as heir, had in the estate of his ancestor deceased. He afterwards received certain moneys distributed to him as heir. Held, that he was liable to the plaintiff therefor in assumpsit for money had and received;—that no action lay upon the deed, but it was evidence in this action to show the plaintiff's right to the money. Colgrove v. Fullmore, 1 Aik. 847.

46. The plaintiff conveyed land to the defendant in trust to sell, and, out of the avails, to indemnify himself against certain liabilities, and account. He sold the land in part upon credit, by consent of the plaintiff, taking a note therefor payable to his own order, the cash payment not being sufficient for his indemnity. Held, that until the money was received upon the note, or at least until expiration of the time of credit, the defendant was not liable on a count for money had and received. Beach v. Dorwin, 12 Vt. 139.

47. The county of W being about to build a court house, the plaintiff, being interested in the question of location, signed a subscription paper, promising to pay a certain sum to the defendant "for land sufficient to set a court house upon," provided the court house should be located in the particular place specified. The defendant thereupon conveyed to the county the land specified, by a deed satisfactory to the locating committee, containing a clause that the land should revert to him whenever the county should voluntarily cease to occupy it as a site for a court house. After this deed was recorded the plaintiff paid his subscription. The court house was erected on the spot, and in about two years was consumed by fire. The county then determined to abandon that site and not rebuild upon it, unless the entire lot could be procured without expense to the county; and another subscription was raised and the whole lot purchased, the defendant getting on this second purchase a price equal to the value of the entire lot at the time of the first purchase. In an action of assumpsit for money had and received to recover back the amount of his subscription;—Held, that there was no fraud, mistake, or failure of consideration which entitled the plaintiff to recover. Barnes v. Baylies, 18 Vt. 430.

48. A writing in these words: "For value received of Cummings & Manning, or order, thirty dollars and eighty-three cents on demand and interest annually," signed by the defendant, was held to express with proper certainty, that the defendant had received money of the plaintiffs to the amount of $80.83, and was sufficient to sustain a count for money had and received; and it seems, the omission in the note might be supplied by intentment. Cummings v. Gassett, 19 Vt. 308.

49. Assumpsit for money had and received is "an appropriate action" to recover back money paid for liquors sold in violation of law. (G. S. c. 94, s. 32). Laport v. Bacon, 48 Vt. 176.

50. The plaintiff sought to recover a balance due him on settlement, and also an additional sum paid to defendant as usurious interest and allowed in the settlement. Held, that this could not be done on the basis of an account stated, for the defendant had never agreed to the larger sum, and it could not be assumed that he would have done so if the plaintiff had refused to make the allowance he did. Rowell v. Marcy, 47 Vt. 627.

51. The plaintiff contracted by parol with the defendant for the lease of the defendant's tavern house for one year from a future day named, and delivered to the defendant a watch in part payment of the agreed rent. The defendant afterwards refused to carry out the agreement, and tendered the watch back to the plaintiff, which the plaintiff refused to receive, and brought his action of assumpsit to recover for the watch. Held, that the title to the watch vested in the defendant by the contract, and that it did not become re-vested in the plaintiff by the tender; and that the defendant was liable therefor as for goods sold. Hawley v. Moody, 24 Vt. 608.

52. No recovery can be had upon the money counts in assumpsit, against one who acted as known agent of the owner in the sale of lands, where the money was paid by the plaintiff directly to such owner. Dyer v. Graves, 37 Vt. 369.

53. — for use and occupation. Assumpsit for use and occupation will lie upon a contract expressed or implied, where a tenant enters and enjoys the premises by the consent or permission of the owner. Howard v. Ransom, 2 Aik. 252.

54. Where the holding is by the permission of the owner, an implied undertaking to pay rent may be inferred from slight circumstances. Watson v. Brainard, 33 Vt. 88.

55. Dictum. The mere fact of occupancy, might create a presumption of tenancy, prima facie, but subject to be rebutted. Keyes v. Hill, 30 Vt. 759.

56. Assumpsit for use and occupation will not lie, unless there is a contract, express or implied, in regard to the occupancy of the premises, by which the relation of landlord and tenant (substantially) is created between the parties. Hough v. Birge, 11 Vt. 190. Keyes v. Hill, 30 Vt. 759. Stacy v. Vt. Central R. Co., 32 Vt. 551. Watson v. Brainard, 33 Vt. 88. 44 Vt. 59.

57. It will not lie where the defendant's possession was under a contract of purchase, which failed without his fault. Hough v. Birge. Way v. Raymond, 16 Vt. 371. 44 Vt. 59.

58. Nor where it was under a claim, or agreement to procure the title by proceedings in invitum under a statute. Stacy v. Vt. Central R. Co., 32 Vt. 551.

59. The plaintiff and her daughter occupied a homestead left by the plaintiff's husband at his decease, but not set out by the probate court. In the plaintiff's absence from home, the defendant married the daughter and moved upon the place and continued to occupy it, refusing, on demand, either to buy it, leave it, or to pay rent, but offering to let the plaintiff occupy with him, which she declined to do. The plaintiff then brought ejectment, which failed for want of proof of proper notice to quit. In assumpsit for use and occupation, the court directed a verdict for the plaintiff. Held, erroneous,—and that the case should have been submitted to the jury, to find whether or not an implied contract of tenancy existed. Chamberlin v. Donahue, 44 Vt. 57.

60. Indebitatus assumpsit for use and occupation does not lie upon a contract for agistment, where the plaintiff retains possession of the land. Howard v. Ransom, 2 Aik. 252.

61. To recover for use and occupation, the declaration must be appropriate for such claim,—as, a count for use and occupation. It cannot be recovered under a count for money had and received. Beach v. Dorwin, 12 Vt. 189.

62. Under the common money counts, the indorsee of a negotiable promissory note may recover against the maker. Chase v. Burnham, 13 Vt. 447. Brigham v. Hutchins, 27 Vt. 569:—although the indorsee be one of the payees and the note is indorsed by the payees in blank. Malley v. Weinman, 48 Vt. 180.

63. An action cannot be sustained upon the money counts by the introduction of a promissory note not due at the commencement of the suit. This would be absurd. Harrington v. Rathbun, 11 Vt. 58.

64. Special counts. Where there is a special contract, so long as the parties profess to proceed under it there can be no recovery in general assumpsit, nor in the action of book account, for any labor performed under it, but the remedy must be upon the contract. Camp v. Barker, 21 Vt. 469. Myrick v. Slason, 19 Vt. 121.

65. Damages sustained by the non-performance of an executory contract for the purchase of property, cannot be recovered under the general money counts in assumpsit. Hemenway v. Smith, 28 Vt. 701.

66. Where a contract is for the manufacture and delivery of an article at a future day, and the party is prevented from completing his contract by the fault of the other party, he cannot recover as for goods sold and delivered, or for work and labor and materials furnished, under the general counts in assumpsit, but is out to a special count to recover his damages for breach of the special contract. Allen v. Thrall, 36 Vt. 711. Curtis v. Smith, 48 Vt. 116.

67. A declaration in assumpsit need be special, only when the plaintiff claims damages for the breach of a special contract. Whatever stipulations may have been made about the price, mode or time of payment, if the terms have transpired so that money has become due, and nothing remains to be done under a special contract but to pay money, the general counts are sufficient. Way v. Wakefield, 7 Vt. 228. Matlocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 118. S. C. 18 Vt. 96. Perry v. Smith, 22 Vt. 301. Groot v. Story, 41 Vt. 583. Wainwright v. Straw, 15 Vt. 215. Kent v. Bowker, 38 Vt. 148. Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214.

68. In this State it has been repeatedly and uniformly held, that where goods are sold, or services performed under a special contract for payment in other goods, or in services, and the time of payment has elapsed, and payment has not been made according to the contract, such special agreement is no obstacle to a recovery in general assumpsit or by an action of book account. Poland, C. J.—and so held in Kent v. Bowker. Way v. Wakefield. Stearns v. Haven, 16 Vt. 87. Matlocks v. Lyman. Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191.

69. Issue and evidence. In assumpsit, declaring in one count upon a special contract and adding the general counts, a demurrer was sustained to the special count. On trial under the common counts;—Held, that the special contract could not be read in evidence, for that it did not support the general counts. Culver v. Barnett, 1 Tyl. 182.

70. Where the declaration contained a special count upon a contract and also the common money counts, and the special count and the proof only tended to show that the plaintiff had advanced his money at the defendant's request and for his benefit, upon a promise of being reimbursed in a particular manner at a day certain, and that time had expired;—Held, that a recovery could be had on the common counts, although the contract set up in the special count might not be proved as laid. Stevens v. Talcott, 11 Vt. 25.

71. In assumpsit for services performed under a special contract and for damages for improperly discharging the plaintiff;—Held, that under the general issue evidence was admissible for the defendant, both as tending to show a good cause for such discharge and to reduce the value of the plaintiff's services, that it was part of the contract of hiring that the plaintiff should act as foreman of the defendant in his absence and keep his men industriously at work, whereas the plaintiff had induced the men to neglect their work and to lose time. Stoddard v. Hill, 38 Vt. 459.

72. In assumpsit part payment need not be specially pleaded. Britton v. Bishop, 11 Vt. 70. (Changed by G. S. c. 83, s. 15.)

73. Pleading. In an action on simple contract, a plea denying any consideration is bad on special demurrer, as amounting to the general issue. University of Vt., &c., v. Baister, 42 Vt. 99.

74. Declaration held bad on demurrer for not setting forth a valid consideration for the defendant's promise; also for stating that the defendant verbally promised, in a case required by the statute of frauds to be in writing. People's Bank v. Adams, 43 Vt. 195.

75. A declaration in assumpsit upon a warranty alleging a breach, but concluding in the common form of a count in indebitatus assumpsit for money had and received, was held sufficient on motion in arrest, by rejecting such conclusion as surplusage. Parlin v. Bundy, 18 Vt. 582.

76. Where a judgment is set aside on audita querela, the money collected on the execution is embraced and recoverable under the general ad damnum of the writ. Alexander v. Abbott, 21 Vt. 476.

77. In declaring upon a contract payable in such goods as the plaintiff should want, it is not sufficient to aver a general demand; but it should be averred that the plaintiff designated the goods he wanted, or else that he waived his right to select and authorized the defendant to deliver such as suited his convenience. Stevens v. Chamberlin, 1 Vt. 25.

78. In an action declaring specially upon a certificate of deposit made payable "on the presentation of this certificate," there was no averment of a demand by presentation of the certificate. The declaration was held ill on general demurrer. Bellows Falls Bank v. Rutland Co. Bank, 40 Vt. 377.

79. The plaintiff declared upon a special contract of the defendants, that "for a certain reasonable hire and reward to be thereupon paid by the plaintiff to the defendants in that behalf," they would furnish a railroad car for the carriage of certain sheep of the plaintiff and would carry them therein, &c., and alleged, as a breach, the refusal to furnish the car. On motion in arrest;—Held, that the contract was susceptible of the interpretation, that the plaintiff's promise was to pay for the car and freight at the end of the carriage, and that therefore the declaration was sufficient without averring a readiness to pay the freight at the time of demanding the car. Waterman v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 707.

80. Where the time of payment mentioned in any written contract, not under seal, is enlarged by agreement, it is sufficient, in declaring upon such contract, to allege the non-payment according to the contract, without noticing the agreement to enlarge the time; and if payment was in fact made according to the enlarged time, the defendant is left to show the agreement to enlarge the time of payment, and payment accordingly. Pike v. Mott, 5 Vt. 108.

81. An averment that on, &c., in consideration that the plaintiff "had then and there" delivered to the defendant a certain horse of the plaintiff in exchange for a certain horse of the defendant, he, the defendant, "then and there" promised that the latter horse was sound, &c., was held to be an averment that the warranty was given at the time of the exchange, and not afterwards, and so there was a sufficient consideration for the promise. Wightman v. Carlisle, 14 Vt. 296, contradicting Bloss v. Kittridge, 5 Vt. 28.

82. Parties. The ultimate grantee of land incumbered by a mortgage and an intermediate grantor with warranty, while a bill of foreclosure was pending against them, called upon the mortgagor, whose debt it was, to pay the mortgage debt, and he promised to do so; but he failing, they jointly paid the debt. Held, that they could maintain a joint action of indebitatus assumpsit against him for money paid to his use. McIntyre v. Ward, 18 Vt. 434. See Whipple v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 65.

83. A bank, by mistake, surrendered to the defendant a note before that time discounted for him, and which others had signed with him as his sureties. Held, that indebitatus assumpsit lay against him alone for the amount due upon the note. Vt. State Bank v. Stoddard, 1 D. Chip. 157.

84. Non-joinder. In an action of assumpsit upon the common counts, the non-joinder of a proper defendant must be pleaded in abatement, or the objection is waived, although no specification was filed or furnished. The rule in book account actions does not apply here. Mellendy v. N. E. Protective Union, 36 Vt. 31. Hardy v. Cheney, 42 Vt. 417.

85. Damages. Indebitatus assumpsit is an equitable action, in which the plaintiff should recover no more than the defendant ought in equity to pay. Wheeler v. Shed, 1 D. Chip. 208.

86. The orator and the defendant were two of four joint executors who had given a joint bond for faithful administration. The other two ultimately became insolvent. The orator, by decree in chancery, had been compelled to pay for the default of one of the insolvent executors before his insolvency, without fault of the orator. Held, that the defendant was liable to him for one-half of the sum so paid and for one-half of all the expenses incurred in defending the suit in chancery—such defense having been reasonable, hopeful and prudent. Marsh v. Harrington, 18 Vt. 150. 23 Vt. 593. 37 Vt. 541.

87. In general assumpsit to recover the consideration paid on the fraudulent sale of a patent right, the plaintiff was allowed to recover what he had paid in good faith, by way of compromise, to the indorsee of the note he gave on the purchase, although the note bore a notice that it was given for a patent right;—that, assuming that he might have successfully defended a suit by the indorsee, he was under no legal obligation to attempt it. James v. Hodsdon, 47 Vt. 127.

88. If the plaintiff has performed labor on his own material under a contract to furnish a specific article or a perfected work, in estimating his damages for a breach, the value of the material not gone to the use of the defendant must be taken into account. Allen v. Thrall, 36 Vt. 711. Curtis v. Smith, 48 Vt. 116.

89. Judgment. In assumpsit, the statute (G. S. c. 30, s. 78) does not warrant separate judgments against several defendants. Machine Co. v. Morris, 39 Vt. 393.

ATTACHMENT.

I. OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

1. What is attachable.
2. What is not attachable.
3. Requisites and validity of attachment.
4. Rights and liabilities of attaching officer.
5. Rights and liabilities of creditor as to debtor.
6. Requisites for preserving lien.
7. Discharge of attachment lien.
8. Bailment to receiptor.
9. Sale on attachment.

II. OF REAL ESTATE.

III. DEFENSE BY SUBSEQUENT ATTACHING CREDITOR.

IV. ATTACHMENT AIDED IN CHANCERY.

I. OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

1. What is attachable.

1. Generally. "Goods, chattels and estate."—(Statute form of process.)

2. Bank bills, or money, can be attached or taken in execution, under the general provision in relation to goods and chattels, if they can be so taken without committing an assault and violating the personal security of the debtor. Lovejoy v. Lee, 35 Vt. 430. Prentiss v. Bliss, 4 Vt. 513.

3. Intoxicating liquor is subject to attachment, and may be sold on execution for a lawful purpose. Nutt v. Wheeler, 30 Vt. 436.

2. What is not attachable.

4. Generally—perishable property. The law impliedly forbids the attachment of property which is peculiarly perishable in its nature, whenever it is manifest that the purposes of the attachment cannot be effected before it will decay and become worthless—as, fresh meat during a portion of the year, fresh fish, green fruits and the like. Royce, J., in Wallace v. Barker, 8 Vt. 443; but held, that fresh beef in December was subject to be taken on execution. Leavitt v. Holbrook, 5 Vt. 405.

5. Where a log coal pit about half burned and incapable of being removed, requiring care and skill to save the property and render it of any value, was attached by an officer who suffered it to remain in the debtor's hands, and he disposed of the coal made;—Held, that the officer could not claim the coal by his attachment. Wilds v. Blanchard, 7 Vt. 138.

6. Where part of a charcoal pit was burned and the work completed, and the residue had so far progressed as to have been entirely burned to coal, though some labor and skill were still necessary in order to separate and preserve it properly;—Held (consistent with Wilds v. Blanchard), that if the sheriff saw fit to attach and take possession of the coal and run the risk of being able to keep it safely, he had a right to do so. Hale v. Huntley, 21 Vt. 147.

7. Money collected. Money collected by an officer on an execution cannot be attached while in his hands, as the property of the creditor in the execution. The officer stands as debtor to such creditor, not for the identical pieces of money, but for the sum. Conant v. Bicknell, N. Chip. 66. 1 D. Chip. 50. Prentiss v. Bliss, 4 Vt. 513.

8. Where an officer had attached personal property and sold it on the attachment, and such attachment had been dissolved;—Held, that the proceeds of such sale could not be taken upon another writ returning as attached "the amount of the money made" upon such sale, which then stood to the general credit of such officer in bank; but that the officer stood as debtor of the defendant for such proceeds, and the same could be attached only by trustee process. Adams v. Lane, 38 Vt. 640.

9. Semble, it might be otherwise, if the first attachment had not been dissolved so that the money had remained in the official possession and custody of the officer, and potentially under his control. Id.

10. Property leased. Property held by a tenant under a subsisting lease cannot be specifically attached as the property of the lessor; and a sale of it on execution will convey no title to the purchaser, although sold with a reservation of the right of the lessee to retain possession during his term. Smith v. Niles, 20 Vt. 315. 26 Vt. 236. 36 Vt. 433.

11. Personal property in possession of a lessee cannot be attached as the property of the lessor, except in the manner provided by the statute (G. S. c. 33, ss. 31, 32). It cannot be taken from the lessee's possession. Brigham v. Avery, 48 Vt. 602.

12. Trust property. Trust property is not subject to be taken on attachment, or execution, for the debt of the trustee; and this rule applies to property in the hands of an executor, both real and personal, whether coming directly from the testator, or from the collection of debts, or other assets of the estate. Williams v. Fullerton, 20 Vt. 346. 38 Vt. 639.

13. Statutory exemptions. Construction. It is established by the whole current of decisions in this State on the subject, that the statutes exempting certain property from attachment are remedial in their character, and ought to receive a liberal construction in favor of the debtor. Peck, J., in Mundell v. Hammond, 40 Vt. 644. The exemption is charitable and in the cause of humanity, and ought to receive a liberal practical construction. Collamer, J., in Dow v. Smith, 7 Vt. 470. Haskins v. Burnett, 41 Vt. 702. Webster v. Orne, 45 Vt. 40.

14. Instances. Thus, a cooking stove is exempt from attachment, as an article of household furniture "necessary for upholding life." Crocker v. Spencer, 2 D. Chip. 68. Hart v. Hyde, 5 Vt. 328.

15. So is a brass time piece, or clock—the word "necessary" extending to things of convenience and comfort which are suitable to the situation. Leavitt v. Metcalf, 2 Vt. 342.

16. So, one cow being exempt, the butter made from the cow is exempt. Id.

17. And the only cow is exempt, though the debtor reside in Canada, the cow having strayed into this State and been here attached. Haskill v. Andros, 4 Vt. 609.

18. A two-year-old heifer, forward with calf, the owner having no other cow, is a cow within the intent and scope of the statute. Dow v. Smith, 7 Vt. 465. So, though the heifer be not with calf. Freeman v. Carpenter, 10 Vt. 433.

19. Under the statute exempting "one yoke of oxen or steers, as the debtor may select;"—Held, that a pair of steer calves, less than a year old, were exempt. Mundell v. Hammond, 40 Vt. 641.

20. The statute exempting from attachment two horses [or one horse], "kept and used for team work," does not require that they be kept and used exclusively for team work. Webster v. Orne, 45 Vt. 40.

21. Articles appropriate for use as household furniture cannot be legally presumed to be household furniture, and so exempt from attachment, from the mere fact that the owner had boxed them up and was about to move away. The fact that they were so used, or intended to be used, is matter of affirmative proof. Bourne v. Merritt, 22 Vt. 429.

22. A person who had been a hotel keeper owned, and had used in the hotel, 5 carpets, 5 dozen knives, 5 dozen forks, 7 large fluid lamps, 20 small fluid lamps, 2 fluid cans, 5 pails, 12 tumblers, 18 goblets, and certain other articles of household furniture, the whole valued at $100 and being all the property that he owned. Although he was the head of a family, these articles were not in actual use by him for house-keeping, but they were used by his permission by his successor in the hotel where he boarded, and he was negotiating for the sale of them. Held, that they could not be held by trustee process, being exempt from attachment. Clark v. Averill, 31 Vt. 512.

23. A piano forte, though in use in the family, is not exempt from attachment and execution as an "article of household furniture necessary for upholding life." Dunlop v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 224.

24. A horse and saddle, belonging to a member of a cavalry company, were held not exempt from attachment under the statute exempting the "uniform, arms, ammunition and accoutrements" of a militiaman. Fry v. Canfield, 4 Vt. 9.

25. The exemption from attachment and execution of such military arms and accoutrements as the debtor "is required by law to furnish," is of a temporary character, and continues only so long as the debtor remains under this obligation. Owen v. Gray, 19 Vt. 548.

26. Such farming tools as are used by hand and are convenient or useful, and are procured by one for his personal use, unless extravagant, and such mechanical tools of like character and use which are indispensable for the repairing of farming implements, are such "suitable" tools "necessary for upholding life" as are by statute exempt from attachment and execution. Garrett v. Patchin, 29 Vt. 248.

27. A shovel, spade, dungfork, three pitchforks, a scythe and snath, a potato hook, hog hook, common axe, broad axe, adz, hatchet and five augers, all worth $10.80, and belonging to one whose principal occupation or trade was shoemaking, but who carried on farming to some extent, and lived rather isolated and did his own mending or "tinkering" of sleds, ox-yokes, &c., were held to be so exempt. Ib.

28. The word tools, as used in the statute of exemptions from attachment, is construed as applying to simple instruments, ordinarily used in manual labor, and not as embracing machinery, or an article usually denominated a machine. Kilburn v. Demming, 2 Vt. 404. Spooner v. Fletcher, 3 Vt. 137. Henry v. Sheldon, 35 Vt. 427.

29. Moulds used in the manufacture of paper, also a portable machine called a billy and jenny used for spinning and manufacturing cloth, capable of being worked by hand, or by water power, costing about $100;—Held, not to be tools. Kilburn v. Demming, 2 Vt. 404.

30. Same, as to a printing press and types. Spooner v. Fletcher, 3 Vt. 133.

31. Same, as to a machine for shaving and splitting leather, operated by hand, steam, or water power, costing $250 and weighing six to nine hundred pounds. Henry v. Sheldon, 35 Vt. 427.

32. A wooden boot, hung up at the door of a boot and shoemaker's shop as a sign of the owner's trade, is not exempt from attachment for his debts. Wallace v. Barker, 8 Vt. 440.

33. A barber's chair and foot-rest, used by a barber in his business, are exempt from attachment, as being "such suitable tools" * * as are "necessary for upholding life." Allen v. Thompson, 45 Vt. 472.

34. Where property exempt from attachment has been voluntarily sold by the debtor, the debt due therefor or the proceeds of such sale are subject to trustee process and attachment. Edson v. Trask, 22 Vt. 18. Scott v. Brigham, 27 Vt. 561. Keyes v. Rines, 37 Vt. 263. (Altered by Stat. 1865, No. 14.)

35. But where property not subject to attachment is converted into a mere right of action by a proceeding wholly in invitum, such right of action and the money collected are also exempt from attachment, the same as the property itself. Stebbins v. Peeler, 29 Vt. 289. Keyes v. Rines, 37 Vt. 260.

36. Where the plaintiff sued for the taking of his only cow upon an attachment;—Held, that this was none the less his only cow, and so exempt from attachment, because he had before disposed of all his other cows by a sale which was fraudulent as to his creditors, providing such sale was not merely colorable but operated as an actual transfer of the property. The creditors might attach the other cows, in case of such fraudulent sale. Sanborn v. Hamilton, 18 Vt. 590. Dow v. Smith, 7 Vt. 465.

37. The plaintiff owned two cows, one of which the defendant attached. The plaintiff claimed that the cow attached was his only cow, claiming and supposing that the other belonged to his deceased wife's estate. In trespass for the cow attached, it appeared on trial that the other belonged also to the plaintiff. Held, that if the plaintiff had, at the time of the attachment, an election which cow he would retain as the "one cow" exempt from attachment under the statute, he had waived the right to elect, and could not recover. Sumner v. Brown, 34 Vt. 194.

38. Debtor's selection. Under G. S. c.

47, s. 13. exempting from attachment "one yoke of oxen or steers, as the debtor may select," where either one or both yoke are attached in his absence, he may make his selection upon his return. Haskins v. Bennett, 41 Vt. 698.

39. The plaintiff sold and delivered to L a yoke of oxen upon credit, the oxen to remain the plaintiff's property until paid for. He also owned and had in his possession another yoke. Under the statute exempting from attachment "one yoke of oxen";—Held, that it was the latter yoke that was exempt, notwithstanding the plaintiff's interest, as conditional vendor, in the other yoke, and although L had paid nothing towards the purchase. Wilkinson v. Wait, 44 Vt. 508.

40. Where the defendant levied on the plaintiff's three horses, the plaintiff claimed that he owned one (the "Bemis" horse), and that the title to the other two was in A, and whether he had any interest in them or not could not be ascertained until he and A had settled; but the Bemis horse he claimed as his team and as exempt from execution, and declined to make any selection as between the three horses for the reason above stated. On the day of sale, the plaintiff forbade the sale of the Bemis horse, claiming it as his team. It turned out on the trial that the plaintiff did own the three horses; but it did not appear but that he told the truth as to his interest in the two depending on his settlement with A, nor that there was any attempt at concealment, or to mislead the defendant. Held, that this was a sufficient "selection" of the Bemis horse to exempt it from the levy. Plimpton v. Sprague, 47 Vt. 467.

41. Team. Under the exemption of horses used for team work, neither a wagon nor harness, though used and needed with the team, is exempt. Carty v. Drew, 46 Vt. 346.

3. Requisites and validity of attachment.

42. Taking possession. To constitute a legal attachment of personal property, the officer must have the custody or control of it, either by himself or his servants, in such way as either to exclude all others from taking the custody of the property, or, at least, to give timely and unequivocal notice of his own custody. Lyon v. Rood, 12 Vt. 233. Burroughs v. Wright, 16 Vt. 619. S. C. 19 Vt. 510. Adams v. Lane, 38 Vt. 645. See Newton v. Adams, 4 Vt. 445. Fitch v. Rogers, 7 Vt. 403. 18 Vt. 457.

43. The plaintiff, an officer, in the course of service of a writ of attachment, went within five or ten rods and in full view of a wagon of the debtor then in the road or field, when the creditor's attorney directed him to attach the wagon and the plaintiff declared it attached, but did nothing more, and went in pursuit of other property about the premises, and in an hour or so returned and found the defendant in possession of the wagon, who had in the mean time purchased it of the debtor on a bona fide debt, not knowing of the doings of the plaintiff. Held, that here was no such attachment as entitled the plaintiff to hold the wagon against the defendant. Fitch v. Rogers, 7 Vt. 403.

44. Property of a debtor was in the possession of a third person who held it as a security for a debt due him, and notice was given him by an officer having a writ in his hands against the debtor for service that he attached the same, and he returned it as attached upon the writ, but took no possession. Held, that this was not such an attachment as entitled the officer to maintain an action for a subsequent attachment and removal of the property. Blake v. Hatch, 25 Vt. 555.

45. Where an officer attached goods in a building, locked up the building and took the key, this was held a sufficient taking of possession as against later attachments; and any further securing of the building against entry by the attorney of the creditor was treated as done for the officer. Newton v. Adams, 4 Vt. 437.

46. An officer, who had the exclusive possession of a room, had permitted W to store certain property therein. He afterwards attached that property without removing it, but locked all the outer doors of the room so as to cut off all public access to it, leaving unfastened an inner door which led into a room occupied by another party. The officer marked the property as "attached," and gave notice of his attachment. Held, that the attachment was valid as against a subsequent attachment against W. Slate v. Barker, 26 Vt. 647.

47. Joint property. Upon an attachment or execution, the officer may seize and retain an entire chattel or the whole property which the debtor owns in common, or as joint tenant or partner, with others. There is no other mode in which the attachment can be made; but the officer can sell only the debtor's interest therein. Reed v. Shepardsen, 2 Vt. 120. Whitney v. Ladd, 10 Vt. 165. 26 Vt. 428.

48. Attachment of body and property. A writ, issued as an attachment of the estate, or body of the defendant, with trustee process, was served by summoning the trustee and attaching the body of the defendant. Held to be an illegal and unauthorized writ and service, both in the plaintiff and officer, and the writ was quashed. A man may be attached by his body or property, but not by both on the same process. Cleft v. Hooford, 12 Vt. 296.

49. Mode of service and return. Where an officer takes possession of personal property attached by valid process, the attachment is valid, notwithstanding the process, or the service, may be so informal as to be abatable. Newton v. Adams, 4 Vt. 487. 23 Vt. 331. Judd v. Langdon, 5 Vt. 231.

50. Where property is attached from time to time upon a writ, one copy with full return of service is sufficient. U. S. Bank v. Taylor, 7 Vt. 116.

51. The return of the officer upon a writ of attachment, where personal property was attached, concluded—"and delivered him a copy of this attachment and a list of the articles so attached by me,"—in the precise words of the statute. Held, on plea in abatement, to be sufficient. Strickland v. Baldwin, 23 Vt. 484.

52. Description of property. All that is necessary in the way of description of property attached by copy, in order to create a valid lien, is, that the officer's return should have so much precision as may be necessary to identify the property attached. Fullam v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 443.

53. Reasonable certainty in the description of property attached is all that can be required in an officer's return, and its sufficiency, in this respect, can only be determined by applying it to the actual state of the debtor's property at the time, as shown by extrinsic evidence. Bucklin v. Crampton, 20 Vt. 261. Fletcher v. Cole, 26 Vt. 170. Jewett v. Guyer, 38 Vt. 209.

54. Where property attached was described in the officer's return as "thirty tons of hay on the premises;"—Held, that it would be intended as premises in the occupation of the debtor; and that such return was sufficient in an action of trover by the officer against a purchaser from the debtor, there being no evidence of other hay of the debtor to which the description could apply. Bucklin v. Crampton.

55. Where an officer attaches an article but misdescribes it in his return, and the appearance and use of the article are such that it may have been naturally and in good faith so misdescribed, such error should not avoid the attachment; and a plea stating such facts was held to be a justification. Briggs v. Mason, 31 Vt. 433.

56. Return of writ. In trespass de bonis, the defendant justified the trespass under a writ of attachment served by him as an officer, and averred that this suit was brought before the return day of that. Held, on general demurrer, that the plea was good without averring his return of that writ. Briggs v. Mason,—citing Andrews v. Chase, 5 Vt. 409.

57. Illegal claim. Where the same property or debt is attached by different creditors, and the whole or part of the consideration of a single demand of the first attaching creditor is illegal, his attachment is wholly void as against the subsequent attachment. Harding v. Harding, 25 Vt. 487.

58. Fraudulent. Where an attaching creditor agreed with the debtor and other attaching creditors not to enter his suit in court, and took his writ from the officer without completion of service by copy to the debtor, but afterwards caused the writ, with such imperfect service, to be entered in court and took judgment by default and issued execution;—Held, that the proceedings were so far irregular and fraudulent, that he acquired no lien upon the property attached which he could enforce against other creditors. Bank of Middlebury v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 182.

59. Property left with debtor. Where an officer attaches a chattel and leaves it in the custody of the debtor, he so far loses his lien that a second attachment, or purchase of the property, bona fide, and not as subject to the attachment, will always prevail against him. Pomroy v. Kingsley, 1 Tyl. 294. It has ever since been so held. Briggs v. Mason, 31 Vt. 433.

60. The defendant, a deputy sheriff, formally attached property in the possession of the legal owner, as the property of another, but left it with the owner, who insisted on his right but agreed not to dispose of the property nor put it out of the way. While in this situation, the plaintiff, another deputy sheriff, attached the same property as that of the same debtor, and removed it, and while in the plaintiff's possession the defendant seized it and sold it on the execution following his attachment. Held, in trespass, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of the property. Fisher v. Cobb, 6 Vt. 622. Royce, J., dissenting.

61. Several attachments by different officers. Where personal property has been attached by one officer and is in his legal possession and custody, it cannot be afterwards attached by another so as to create a lien upon it, but to this end the second writ must be served by the first officer having possession. Burroughs v. Wright, 16 Vt. 619. Nor will an agreement between the two officers for the creation of such lien, without an actual taking, make it an attachment. S. C. 19 Vt. 510. See Adams v. Lane, 38 Vt. 645.

62. Where personal property has been attached by an officer, either by taking it into his actual possession, or by leaving a copy in the town clerk's office, no subsequent legal or valid attachment can be made of the same property, except by the same officer, while the first attachment remains in force; and this rule applies the same between the sheriff and his deputies as between other officers. West River Bank v. Gorham, 38 Vt. 649; and see Rogers v. Fairfield, 36 Vt. 641.

63. Copy in town clerk's office. Where personal property has been attached by one officer by copy left in the town clerk's office, a second officer would be a trespasser by attaching and taking possession of all such property except sufficient to pay the first debt; and would not be bound to do so, without express directions and indemnity from the plaintiff in the writ. West River Bank v. Gorham.

64. An attempt to attach personal property by leaving a copy of the writ in the town clerk's office, where the return thereon describes the property as being all of its kind "in the town," and nothing more, is wholly inoperative as an attachment, and creates no lien. Paul v. Burton, 32 Vt. 148. Rogers v. Fairfield, 38 Vt. 641. West River Bank v. Gorham.

65. But where, in such case, the officer takes actual possession of the property, the taking, notwithstanding such return, constitutes a valid attachment. Paul v. Burton. Fletcher v. Cole, 26 Vt. 170.

66. In attaching property by copy left in the town clerk's office, it is not necessary that the officer should see the property or go near it (Fullam v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 443);—nor is it essential to the attachment that a copy should be delivered to the defendant at the time. It is enough that a copy be delivered to him at any time before the time for legal service of the writ has expired. Putnam v. Clark, 17 Vt. 82.

67. The leaving of the copy in the town clerk's office, in such case, is the act of attaching and taking possession and giving notice to all concerned, and the officer's possession is from that time legal against all others. Id.

68. Property sold conditionally. Where property, held by a conditional purchase, is attached under Stat. 1854, No. 12, the attaching creditor will be liable in trespass to the conditional vendor, unless he shall have paid or tendered to the vendor a definite sum, being the amount due upon the vendor's claim, within ten days after the attachment, and shall have brought the money into court. Hefflin v. Bell, 30 Vt. 134. (Changed by G. S. c. 33, s. 28.)

69. In order to hold, under an attachment or execution, a chattel sold conditionally, as against the vendor, the purchase money being unpaid, the tender of the unpaid purchase money must be made by the attaching creditor "within ten days after notice of the amount thereof remaining unpaid," although by the terms of the conditional sale the price has not yet fallen due, and although the sum due is in dispute. Fales v. Roberts, 38 Vt. 503. (G. S. c. 33, s. 28.)

70. The plaintiffs sold and delivered to M a wagon for $120, to remain the plaintiffs' property until paid for. The defendant, as constable, attached the wagon as M's property on a writ in favor of P. The wagon was stolen from the defendant, without his fault, within three days after the attachment, and was never after found. At the time of the attachment, $60 of the purchase price remained unpaid. Soon after the attachment, the plaintiffs gave the defendant and P notice of their claim and forbade the defendant taking the wagon. No tender or offer of the amount unpaid was within ten days after notice, or ever, made to the plaintiffs, as required by G. S. c. 33, s. 28. Judgment was rendered again M, and execution was issued and delivered in time to charge the property. The value of the wagon at the time of the attachment was $95. Held, by a majority, that the defendant was liable in trover for the full value of the wagon; that by his default for ten days in making the tender, he had lost the right to stand in the place of M as to payment, and stood as a mere stranger as to the plaintiffs. Duncans v. Stone, 45 Vt. 118.

71. Property held in common.
See TENANCY IN COMMON.

4. Rights and liabilities of attaching officer.

72. —in making service. An officer who receives an attachment for service is not thereby constituted the agent of the creditor for receiving payment of the demand. If paid to him, he holds the money as agent of the debtor, till paid over to the creditor. Wainwright v. Webster, 11 Vt. 576.

73. Where boxes were left at a railroad depot for transportation, containing attachable articles, and some exempt from attachment;—Held, that the attaching officer had the right to take possession of the boxes, and open them, and take the attachable articles; but that he was not authorized to remove the boxes from the depot without showing a necessity therefor; and, if he did so, he was liable in trespass for the excess. Peeler v. Stebbins, 26 Vt. 644.

74. An officer having legal process against the goods of one may enter the store of another where the goods are, for the purpose of executing the process. He may even break open the door, if refused admittance on request, and may remain there long enough and do whatever is necessary, to take, secure and remove the goods; but he cannot take entire possession of the store and expel the owner therefrom. For so doing, or for remaining longer than necessary, he would be liable as a trespasser. Fulleton v. Mack, 2 Aik. 415.

75. A sheriff, or other proper officer, may, either by night or day, break open the outer door of a store or warehouse for the purpose of taking upon legal process the goods of any person therein, after refusal of admittance upon proper demand—as of the person having the custody and care of the key. Burton v. Wilkin-son, 18 Vt. 186.—using so much force as is necessary, and no more. Fullam v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 448.

76. — according to the precept. Where an officer receives for service a writ of attachment, without special instructions as to service, he is bound to serve it according to its precept, by attaching the property of the debtor to the amount and value specified, if such can be found in the exercise of reasonable diligence, and it is not of doubtful ownership. Hill v. Pratt, 29 Vt. 119.

77. An agreement with an officer to serve a writ for less than his legal fees, was held not to vary his duty to serve the writ according to its precept. Ib.

78. In order to sustain an action against an officer for neglecting to attach property upon a writ, according to the precept of it;—Held, that it is not necessary that the plaintiff should have taken out his execution and placed it in an officer's hands within 30 days after judgment. Ib.

79. Directions of creditor. A sheriff is not liable for refusing to attach property which is pointed out to him by the creditor and directed to be attached, if in fact it belongs to some person other than the debtor, although the creditor may tender the officer a sufficient bond of indemnity. Hutchinson v. Lull, 17 Vt. 133. 24 Vt. 260. Deming v. Lull, 17 Vt. 398.

80. Where a party gave an officer a writ to serve and directed him to attach certain hemlock bark;—Held, that it was not the legal duty of the officer, without instructions, to examine the town records to ascertain whether the bark had not already been attached, and, if so, to place the writ in the hands of the first attaching officer. West River Bank v. Gorham, 38 Vt. 649.

81. Where a sheriff had attached certain hemlock bark by copy left in the town clerk's office, and was afterwards informed by his deputy that he had attached the same property;—Held, that the sheriff was not under legal obligation to inform his deputy that the bark had previously been attached by himself, and, without any directions from the creditor, to take the writ from the deputy and himself serve it by attaching the bark. Ib.

82. A direction to an officer by the creditor, to attach particular property and not to attach other property, does not operate to release the officer from his liability for the safe keeping of such as he did attach. Austin v. Burlington, 34 Vt. 506. Howes v. Spicer, 23 Vt. 508.

83. Property exempt. Trespass lies against an officer for the taking upon attachment, or execution, property which by law is exempt from such process. Dow v. Smith, 7 Vt. 465;—or trover. Sanborn v. Hamilton, 18 Vt. 590.

84. Excessive attachment. In order to sustain an action for making an excessive attachment, the plaintiff must allege and prove much the same that he would in a suit for a malicious action,—that is, want of probable cause and malice express. Abbott v. Kimball, 19 Vt. 551.

85. Taking receipt. Where an officer took a receipt for attachable personal property in the possession of a debtor;—Held, that this was a sufficient attachment to oblige him to make return thereof upon the process, and for neglect to do so he was held liable to the creditor. Howes v. Spicer, 23 Vt. 508.

86. Special property of officer. The general property in chattels attached remains in the defendant; but the attaching officer acquires a special property therein, defeasible by the plaintiff's failing in his action, or by not duly charging the same in execution. Johnson v. Edson, 2 Aik. 299. Mussey v. Perkins, 36 Vt. 690-1.

87. An officer can maintain an action for property attached by him, only upon the ground and in case of his liability for it, either to the attaching creditor or the owner. Where the debtor in the attachment consumed the property before the judgment against him, but the creditor failed to charge the property in execution;—Held, that the attachment was thereby dissolved, and that the attaching officer could not maintain an action against the debtor for the property. Collins v. Smith, 16 Vt. 9; and see Weeks v. Martin, 16 Vt. 287.

88. In an action by an attaching officer against the general owner of chattels for taking them from the possession of the officer, he can recover only to the extent of his lien, though less than the value of the property. Houston v. Howard, 39 Vt. 54.

89. The plaintiff, as an officer, attached certain property. The defendant, as an officer, on another writ against the same debtor, afterwards attached and removed the same property. Judgment was first obtained in the second suit, and the defendant sold the property on execution on that judgment. The plaintiff brought trespass, and, pending his suit, judgment was recovered in the first attachment, but no execution issued thereon. Held, that the plaintiff could recover nominal damages only with taxable costs; for that he was not liable to the debtor, the property having gone to his benefit; nor to the first attaching creditor, as he had not charged the property in execution. Goodrich v. Church, 20 Vt. 187.

90. If one of two joint owners of personal property forcibly take it from the possession of the officer who has taken it on legal process against the other joint owner, the officer may maintain trespass therefor. Whitney v. Ladd, 10 Vt. 165. (Phelps, J., dissenting.) 12 Vt. 686. 26 Vt. 428.

91. Copy in town clerk's office. The attachment of hay, &c., by copy left in the town clerk's office, according to the statute, gives to the officer a sufficient possession to enable him to support trespass or trover for any wrongful taking or conversion of the property. Lowry v. Walker, 4 Vt. 76. S. C. 5 Vt. 181. Stanton v. Hodges, 6 Vt. 64. Putnam v. Clark, 17 Vt. 82;—and such action can as well be sustained against the defendant in the attachment as against a stranger. Blodgett v. Adams, 24 Vt. 23.

92. Trespass, trover, or replevin will lie against an officer attaching personal property by copy in the town clerk's office, when brought by some person, other than the debtor, having title. Angell v. Keith, 24 Vt. 371.

93. Care of property attached. An attachment of hay, &c., by leaving a copy in the town clerk's office, gives the officer a special property in the hay, &c., attached, and the legal custody and possession of it; and the degree of care required of him, as to its custody, is the same as if he had taken it into his personal possession. If the property is not forthcoming to answer upon the execution, he is bound to show that it is out of his power to restore it, and that this has happened without any fault on his part. Fay v. Munson, 40 Vt. 468. Smith v. Church, 27 Vt. 168. McOrmsby v. Morris, 29 Vt. 417.

94. Where an officer attaches grain in the straw, it is his duty to thresh it, when that is necessary to preserve it. Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57.

95. An officer attaching property is liable only for the same degree of care in the keeping of it, as other bailees for pay. Bridges v. Perry, 14 Vt. 263. Smith v. Church, 27 Vt. 168. Walker v. Wilmarth, 37 Vt. 294.

96. Prima facie, he is liable to produce the property on execution, but may excuse himself by showing that it is not in his power, and that he has been guilty of no fault. Bridges v. Perry. McOrmsby v. Morris, 29 Vt. 417. Fay v. Munson, 40 Vt. 468.

97. Neither the attaching officer, nor the receptor, is liable for the property attached where it has been injured, or has perished, or been destroyed, without his fault. Ido v. Fassett, 45 Vt. 68. Bridges v. Perry. Walker v. Wilmarth, 37 Vt. 289.

98. In an action on the case against an officer for a neglect to return property attached after the termination of the suit on which it was attached, where it was lawfully attached and holden down to the time of a sale upon the attachment, and at that time it had deteriorated in value by being injured without his fault;—Held, that he was liable in such action only for the value of the property at the time of the sale, although such sale, for want of conformity to the statute, was illegal. Walker v. Wilmarth.

99. If a constable, or a town, be sued for neglect of such constable in not keeping the property attached by him so as to be taken on the execution, he is not entitled to have deducted from the claim what he expended in prosecuting to effect his suit against another officer for taking the property from him, unless so taken by irresistible force. It was his privilege and duty to resist, even with force. Sawyer v. Middletown, 10 Vt. 237.

101. Directions of creditors. Instructions were given by an attaching creditor to the officer in writing, which the court construed to be equivalent to the following, viz:—"You need not attach real estate, and for the personal property you attach you may take receiptors, and before you remove it you may go to the debtor and see if he will furnish receiptors." The officer attached personal property and, without removing it, took receiptors. In an action by the creditor for not safely keeping the attached property, the receiptors having failed;—Held, that the officer was not by such directions released from any official responsibility, and was liable for the loss. Austin v. Burlington, 34 Vt. 506. See Strong v. Bradley, 14 Vt. 55. Hoves v. Spicer, 23 Vt. 508. Mason v. Ide, 30 Vt. 697.

102. Charges of keeping, &c. Where an officer attached a horse, and used it without injury to it, sufficiently to pay for the keeping, and the horse died pending the suit;—Held, that the officer could not recover of the attaching creditor for the keeping of the horse, since it was already paid for by the debtor in the use of the horse. Dean v. Bailey, 12 Vt. 142.

103. Where property is attached and the defendant recovers in the suit, he is entitled to have his property back without paying any costs or charges for keeping. The attaching officer must look for his charges to the person who employed him. Aldis, J., in McNeil v. Bean, 32 Vt. 481. Johnson v. Edson, 2 Aik. 299.

104. So too if the suit is settled before judgment, and the attachment is dissolved. Felker v. Emerson, 17 Vt. 101.

105. But if the defendant settle the suit [after judgment] so that no execution comes into the officer's hands, he may recover such charges of the defendant. Jackson v. Scribner, 12 Vt. 145. 16 Vt. 655. (See 17 Vt. 102.)

106. Where an officer attaches and makes an official sale of the property, he may retain from the proceeds the expenses of keeping the property, although the debtor has discharged the attachment lien by paying the debt. Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135.

107. The charges of an officer for keeping attached property during the pendency of the action are a lien upon the property, and where the property is sold upon execution, the avails must, in the first instance, after paying the costs of levy and sale, be applied in payment of such charges, and the balance be applied on the execution; and it is not necessary that such charges should be taxed and included in the judgment. McNeil v. Bean, 32 Vt. 429.

108. Action against officer for not keeping property attached. In an action against an officer for not having the property attached by him forthcoming to be taken in execution;—Held, that he could show in defense an offer of other property to be levied upon, sufficient to satisfy the judgment. Hoit v. Barron, Brayt. 117.

109. Where a sheriff's deputy attached property and his receptor converted it;—Held, that the defendant in that action, after judgment in his favor, could maintain trover against the sheriff without demand. Johnson v. Edson, 2 Aik. 299.

110. Several creditors of the same debtor attached the same property in succession, and all, except the last, agreed with each other (the debtor assenting) upon an immediate sale of the property by one of their number, and an application of the proceeds to the satisfaction of all the claims in the order of the attachments. The sale was so made, was fairly conducted, and was for a sum probably greater than would have been obtained by sale on execution. Judgments were obtained in each case and executions issued seasonably to charge the property attached, and the officer applied the whole proceeds of the sale in part satisfaction of the execution of the first attaching creditor. In an action by the last attaching creditor against the officer for neglect to keep the property attached;—Held, that he could not recover, the property having been exhausted in satisfying the prior lien. Munger v. Fletcher, 2 Vt. 524. 24 Vt. 236. 32 Vt. 767.

111. An officer attached the same property on two writs in favor of the same plaintiff against the same defendant, at the same time. In an action against the officer for not keeping the property to respond upon one of the executions;—Held, that the damages were the value of the property, less the sum which he had been obliged to pay the plaintiff for a like default as to the other writ and execution, although the return upon neither of the writs stated that the same property was attached on the other. Southwick v. Weeks, 8 Vt. 49. Hutchinson, J., dissenting.

112. Evidence. In an action against a town for the failure of its constable to make a valid attachment, whereby the same property was held upon a later valid attachment by other parties;—Held, that it could not be shown in defense, that judgment was confessed in the first case after the attempted attachment, without the assent of the subsequent attaching creditor; nor that the judgment confessed was for more than the sum due, and so taken with intent to defraud creditors—it cannot be impeached in this collateral manner. Rogers v. Fairfield, 36 Vt. 641.

113. The fact that an execution was committed to a particular officer is no evidence that he made the original attachment. Angell v. Keith, 24 Vt. 371.

5. Rights and liabilities of creditor as to debtor.

114. Right. A party who has a lien upon property for advances, where it is afterwards attached by creditors of the general owner, may purchase in the judgments at a discount and bid in the property on the execution without having to account to the general owner beyond the amount of his bid, where this is not done by request of the general owner, nor undertaken for his benefit; and it is immaterial that this was done for the purpose of protecting his lien. Gordon v. Chase, 47 Vt. 257.

115. Liability. An attaching creditor is not liable in trover to the debtor, after non-suit in his action, for neglect to return on demand property attached upon the writ, although he turned out the property to be attached by the officer, but never had personal possession. In such case, the officer only is liable for a return of the property. Adams v. Abbott, 2 Vt. 383.

116. Where a suit is brought in good faith, and property attached, though the suit be abandoned, and the property lost or destroyed in the hands of the attaching officer, the party attaching, being in no fault, is not liable for the loss. Jones v. Wood, 30 Vt. 268.

6. Requisites for preserving lien.

117. Where an attachment of chattels is made by one officer and the execution is delivered to another, it is necessary, in order to a preservation of the lien by a "taking of the property in execution," that the second officer should, within thirty days from the rendering of the judgment, either actually levy upon the attached property, or else demand it of the first officer. Blodgett v. Adams, 24 Vt. 28. Enos v. Brown, 1 D. Chip. 285. Clark v. Washburn, 9 Vt. 302. Ayer v. Jameson, 9 Vt. 368. Collins v. Smith, 16 Vt. 9.

118. But where the execution is delivered within thirty days from the judgment to the same officer who made the attachment, the attached property is thereby charged and the lien of the attachment preserved, although the execution be not actually levied upon the attached property, nor demand be made upon the receipts, within the thirty days; but this must be done within the life of the execution. Strong v. Hoyt, 2 Tyl. 208. Enos v. Brown, 1 D. Chip. 280. Bliss v. Stevens, 4 Vt. 88. Clark v. Washburn. Ayer v. Jameson. Dewey v. Fay, 34 Vt. 188.

119. An attachment made by the sheriff's deputy is the same as if made by the sheriff, and the lien is preserved by delivering the execution, within thirty days from the judgment, either to another deputy of the same sheriff or to the sheriff himself. Bliss v. Stevens. Ayer v. Jameson. See Flanagan v. Hoyt, 86 Vt. 565-8.

120. The delivery of process to a deputy sheriff is a delivery to the sheriff; but a delivery to the sheriff is not a delivery to the deputy. Thus, where property is attached by a deputy, a seasonable delivery of the execution to the sheriff does not charge the property without due demand. Jameson v. Mason, 12 Vt. 599.

121. A deputy sheriff attached property on a writ and suffered it to remain in the possession of the debtor, who absconded with it out of the county. The execution was delivered to the sheriff seasonably to charge the property, but he made no demand of it of the deputy. Held, that the deputy was not liable for not safely keeping the property and having it forthcoming. Ib.

122. The defendant, an officer, attached personal property upon three writs, and at the same time levied an execution upon it subject to the three attachments, and took the property into his possession. The executions obtained upon the three writs served were placed for service in the hands of the plaintiff, another officer, leaving the first execution still in the hands of the defendant. Held, that the plaintiff acquired and had no right in the property as against the defendant to take it from him, or to retain it after having got it from him by a revocable consent, which was revoked. Burroughs v. Wright, 19 Vt. 510. S. C. 16 Vt. 619.

123. A judgment and a charging of the attached property in execution are essential to a perfecting of the lien created by the attachment. If the attaching officer suffers the property to pass to an earlier attaching creditor in satisfaction of his debt, and that lien is not so perfected, he is liable to a later attaching creditor who so perfects his lien. Brandon Iron Co. v. Gleason, 24 Vt. 228; and see Wilder v. Weatherhead, 32 Vt. 785.

124. Sufficiency of the demand. In an action against a town for the default of its constable in not keeping property attached so as to be forthcoming on execution, where the constable had removed from the State, and the officer holding the execution had within the 80 days made demand of the property of the debtors, and of one of the receptors, of the selectmen and of the town agent;—Held, that the demand was sufficient to charge the property in execution, and to fix the liability upon the town. Austin v. Burlington, 34 Vt. 506.

7. Discharge of attachment lien.

125. An officer who takes property on process and delivers it to a third person to keep, taking his receipt and agreement to redeliver, does not thereby part with his lien, but that still continues, and he may retake the property into his possession at any time. Pierson v. Hovey, 1 D. Chip. 51. N. Chip. 77. 5 Vt. 265.

126. If a chattel be attached and receipted, and pass from the receptor to a third person, though by purchase, who knows of the attachment and receipt, and gives the receptor a bond to indemnify him against his receipt, the attaching officer may retake the property at any time during the pendency of the attachment. Briggs v. Mason, 31 Vt. 433.

127. Property attached in New York was delivered by the officer there to the creditor for safe keeping, who brought it into this State where it was attached by the defendant in a suit against the same debtor. In trespass by such creditor,—Held, that the defendant was liable,—for that the attachment lien was not discharged and the officer's liability continued. Utley v. Smith, 7 Vt. 154.

128. A sale upon mesne process, under the statute, of a part only of the property attached, although for a sum exceeding the plaintiff's claim and exceeding the command in the writ, does not dissolve the attachment as to the remainder, nor impair the creditor's lien. Marshall v. Town, 28 Vt. 14.

129. If a plaintiff obtain final judgment against his debtor, his lien by attachment, or by trustee process, is preserved, though the debtor die before the taking out or levy of the execution upon the property attached, or before the proceedings have ended as to the trustee. Miller v. Williams, 30 Vt. 386.

130. A lien created by attachment is dissolved by a confession of judgment, out of course—as before a justice, in a suit returnable to the county court; or, in a justice suit, before the same justice, on some other than the return day—and a subsequent attachment thereby becomes first in right. Hall v. Walbridge, 2 Aik. 215. Murray v. Eldridge, 2 Vt. 388. (Altered by R. S. c. 106, s. 5, and again by G. S. c. 125, s. 5.)

131. Where a suit is commenced by attachment, a confession of judgment does not of its mere force operate to discontinue the suit and dissolve the attachment, although it may furnish matter of defense by a merger of the cause of action; and if, before any steps are taken or any prejudice suffered by other creditors, the parties enter into a binding agreement to waive the confession and proceed with the original suit, this equally concludes the subsequent attaching creditors and the debtor found the use of such technical defense to the action. Fletcher v. Bennett, 36 Vt. 659.

132. A suit is not necessarily discontinued and an attachment dissolved, because a defense has arisen to it—as by a confession of judgment merging the cause of action, or by a judgment in a cross-action embracing the same matter. Id., citing Whipple v. Walker. Id. 665.

133. One is not in a position to assert the peculiar rights of a creditor as to property of his debtor sold without change of possession, who, after attaching it, abandoned his attachment and suffered his debtor to sell the property and to pay him from the proceeds. Wooley v. Edson, 35 Vt. 214.

8. Bailment to receptor.

134. An attaching officer may, if he choose, deliver the property to the creditor for safe-keeping, and may take security for its redelivery. Gassett v. Sargeant, 26 Vt. 424.

135. Where an officer, on the attachment of property, took the receipt therefor of the nominal plaintiff in that suit, and of another person;—Held, that this was no defense in a suit against him by the same party for not keeping the property attached, so as to have it forthcoming on the execution, where the suit was prosecuted for the benefit of a third party who was the real owner of the claim. McOrmsby v. Morris, 29 Vt. 417.

136. A creditor is not bound to take at his own risk the receipt taken by the officer for property attached. Howes v. Spicer, 23 Vt. 508.

137. In an action against an officer for not safely keeping property attached, it is no defense that the receptor of the property, who was selected without the procurement or concurrence of the plaintiff, was amply responsible when the receipt was given, and likely to remain so, but had become insolvent, whereby the property could not be restored. Gilbert v. Grandall, 34 Vt. 188. Austin v. Burlington, 34 Vt. 506. See Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 414.

138. Scope of contract. The receptor of property attached undertakes to redeliver the property, or to show what will excuse the officer from all liability to any one on account of the property not being surrendered. Redfield, J., in Adams v. Fox, 17 Vt. 365.

139. A receipt given to an officer for property attached is a contract, which is binding according to its terms, and is not subject to contradiction or explanation like an ordinary simple receipt; and this whether the action be assumpsit upon the receipt, or trover. Brown v. Gleed, 33 Vt. 147. Soule v. Austins, 35 Vt. 519.

140. Thus, it is conclusive as to the value stated, within the liability of the officer. Parsons v. Strong, 13 Vt. 235.

141. Also, that the property was in fact attached, and in the possession of the officer, and was delivered to the receptor, as stated. Spencer v. Williams, 2 Vt. 209. Lowry v. Cady, 4 Vt. 504. Allen v. Butler, 9 Vt. 122. Pettes v. Marsh, 15 Vt. 454.

142. A receipt to an officer for property attached promising to return it on demand, “or pay the debt and costs,” &c., “or indemnify him against all damages, &c.”—is an absolute undertaking to return the property on demand; the alternative only limiting the extent of the recovery. Cutlin v. Lowry, 1 D. Chip. 396. Sibley v. Story, 8 Vt. 15. Page v. Thrall, 11 Vt. 230. Brown v. Gleed, 33 Vt. 151.

143. Trover upon an officer's receipt in ordinary form.—Held, that it was not admissible in defense, that the receipt was given under an arrangement that the receptors might sell the property attached, and that they had sold it under that arrangement. Brown v. Gleed, 33 Vt. 147.

144. The plaintiff, an officer, attached ten “swarms” of bees, and the defendant receipted them by that designation. The bees having died without fault of the receptor;—Held, that the defendant was not liable on his receipt for the hives. Id. v. Fassett, 45 Vt. 68.

145. The plaintiff, an officer, attached a railroad passenger car which was, in fact, car No. 3, but which in his return he described simply as “one passenger car,” and by the same designation the defendant receipted it. In an action upon the receipt;—Held, that the defendant was bound by his receipt to redeliver the very car attached, and that the plaintiff was not bound to receive any other—the defendant having taken no pains or care to inform himself what particular car had been attached. Bowman v. Conant, 31 Vt. 479.

146. Where an officer, holding an execution, was induced by the receptor of the property attached to levy upon other property than that receipted, and it was afterwards claimed by other persons and under such circumstances as to create fair and reasonable doubt as to the officer's right to sell it upon the execution, and the receptor declined to give satisfactory indemnity against such claim;—Held, that the officer was justified in abandoning his levy, and that the receptor was liable on his receipt. Id.

147. Demand of the property. By a receipt for property attached promising to return it to the officer on demand, both by the terms of the contract and the very nature of the bailment, there is no duty cast upon the receptor to return the property, and no cause of action arises against him on his receipt, until a demand is made for the property. Carpenter v. Snell, 37 Vt. 255. Page v. Thrall, 11 Vt. 230. Bliss v. Stevens, 4 Vt. 88.

148. The statute of limitations begins to run only from the demand. Page v. Thrall.

149. Any officer holding the execution sufficiently represents the attaching officer to make demand of the property attached, so as to entitle the attaching officer, upon neglect to deliver, to maintain an action against his receipt-man. Davis v. Miller, 1 Vt. 9.

150. Where an attachment is made by one officer and the execution is delivered to another, it is sufficient to charge the receptor, that proper demand of the property attached be made within the thirty days, by the second officer upon the first, and so as to charge him. The demand need not be made on the receptor within the thirty days. Allen v. Carty, 19 Vt. 65. 24 Vt. 28.

151. Where property is attached and a receipt given therefor, a neglect to demand the property of the receptor within the life of the execution will release him from his receipt, where the property is in the hands of the receptor or the debtor, although the property was duly "taken in execution" (G. S. c. 33, s. 94) by demand made of the attaching officer within thirty days from the rendering of the judgment. Devey v. Fay, 34 Vt. 138.

152. Where the receptor of property attached died before judgment and an administrator was appointed, and no demand was made of either before the expiration of the execution, and it did not appear that the property had been used or disposed of, or the receptor or his administrator disabled from returning the property if demand had been made;—Held, that the estate of the deceased was not liable on the receipt; that in order to perfect a right of action, demand should have been made of the administrator for a return of the property, within the life of the execution; that such demand could not be dispensed with, unless in a case where there was no personal representative at the time when the demand ought to have been made. Carpenter v. Snell, 37 Vt. 255.

153. An attaching officer demanded of the receptor the attached property, when it was agreed between them that it should be delivered at a time and place of sale to be thereafter appointed by the officer. The officer did not make the appointment, but without further demand sued the receipt. Held, that here was no refusal to deliver, and that the officer could not recover. Id. v. Fassett, 45 Vt. 68.

154. Declaration upon the receipt. In an action upon a receipt for property attached, where the breach alleged is the non-delivery of the property on demand of an officer holding the execution other than the attaching officer, it is material to aver notice to the receptor that the officer making the demand held the execution issued on the judgment rendered in the cause in which the attachment was made. Walbridge v. Smith, Brayt. 178.

155. A declaration in assumpsit upon an officer's receipt for property attached, which set forth the plaintiff's title as derived from the attachment, was held ill on demurrer, for lack of averring a return of the writ, or any subsequent proceedings. Cooper v. Cree, 4 Vt. 289.

156. Party to sue. A sheriff may maintain an action in his own name upon a receipt taken to his deputy, for property attached by the deputy. Davis v. Miller, 1 Vt. 9. 2 Vt. 212. 36 Vt. 568.

157. Where a deputy sheriff takes a receipt to himself for property attached, he may sue thereon in his own name. Spencer v. Williams, 2 Vt. 209. 6 Vt. 67.

158. A person specially authorized to serve a writ, may maintain an action upon the receipt given him for the property attached. Maxfield v. Scott, 17 Vt. 634.

159. Evidence. An officer's return upon the execution, that he demanded the property attached, is not evidence of such demand. Green v. Holmes, 1 Vt. 12.

160. In an action between an attaching officer and his bailees or receptors, the attaching of the property may be proved otherwise than by the writ and return; the receipt itself, if one be taken, is the appropriate evidence, and, in a suit upon it, is conclusive upon the party executing it. Lourry v. Cady, 4 Vt. 504.

161. Where an officer brings suit upon a receipt for property attached by him, he need not show an actual attachment of the property and delivery thereof to the receptor by other evidence than his return and the receipt. Stimson v. Ward, 47 Vt. 624.

162. In an action of trover founded upon an officer's receipt;—Held, that the words "we being the receptors thereof," used in a written acknowledgment of demand of the property, was not sufficient evidence of the tenor of the receipt, to warrant a judgment; that this was only evidence that a receipt had been given. Taylor v. Rhodes, 26 Vt. 57.

163. Damages. The receptor of horses attached, being duly charged by a demand, delivered other horses of the debtor for which the first had been exchanged, and these last were sold upon the execution. In an action upon the receipt;—Held, that the rule of damages was the value of the property attached, deducting the price at which the substituted property sold. Sewell v. Sowles, 18 Vt. 171.

164. Where the value of all the property attached was expressed in the officer's receipt at one entire sum, and a portion of the property had been withdrawn from the receptor in such way as to release him therefor;—Held, that the damages to be recovered of the receptor were the whole assumed value named in the receipt, less, not the actual, but the proportionate, value of the receipted articles for which he was not liable. Allen v. Carty, 19 Vt. 65.

165. Defense. Where an officer attaches property and takes the ordinary receipt therefor, and afterwards the same officer takes the same property from the possession of the receptor or of the debtor by another process, the receptor is thereby released on his receipt. Beach v. Abbott, 4 Vt. 605. Rood v. Scott, 5 263.

166. But where property was so attached by and receipted to a sheriff, and it was afterwards taken from the possession of the debtor upon another process against him by a deputy of the same sheriff, but without the consent of the sheriff;—Held, that the receptor was not thereby released. Flanagan v. Hoyt, 36 Vt. 565.

167. The receptors of property attached by copy left in the town clerk's office which afterwards went to the debtor's use, were held not discharged by the fact that the plaintiff in the first suit had, after that attachment and before the giving of the receipt, attached the same property as a deputy sheriff by a like copy, upon a writ in favor of another party against the same debtor. Mason v. Whipple, 32 Vt. 554.

168. Where property was attached and receipted to the officer, and, before demand made of the receptors, was sold by the officer at public auction, with consent of all the parties in interest;—Held, that this operated to rescind the contract of the receptors, and that no action would lie thereon, although the avails of the sale were paid into the hands of the receptors, and the sale was for their benefit and under their directions,—they thereby incurring a new and different liability. Kelly v. Dexter, 15 Vt. 310.

169. In an action upon an officer's receipt given for property attached, it is a defense to the receptor, that the property belonged to himself and that he so informed the plaintiff at the time of the attachment. Adams v. Foz, 17 Vt. 361. 24 Vt. 260.

170. A judgment against the receptor of property attached in favor of the sheriff is merely collateral to the debt, and for the benefit and security of the sheriff merely. The payment of the debt discharges the obligation of the sheriff to the creditor, and his right to enforce the judgment for the creditor's benefit. If, after payment of the debt, the creditor seeks to enforce such judgment, chancery will enjoin him. Paddock v. Palmer, 19 Vt. 581.

9. Sale on attachment.

171. Property attached may be sold upon mesne process under G. S. c. 33, before the delivery of a copy of the writ to the defendant. Marshall v. Town, 28 Vt. 14.

172. Where application is made for the sale of property attached on mesne process, and the officer has given the proper notice to the debtor of the time and place when and where he will proceed to have appraisal made, it is not necessary to his justification in selling the property, that he should notify the debtor that the appraisal has been had, and the amount of it, although the debtor was not present at the appraisal or sale. Abbott v. Kimball, 23 Vt. 542.

173. On a sale of property attached, made on application of the creditor, the officer gave the debtor verbal, but not written notice of the application, as required by G. S. c. 33, s. 41;—Held, that the sale was illegal; and held, that the want of due notice was not, as matter of law, waived by the debtor's presence at the appraisal and sale without objecting to the proceedings. Walker v. Wilmarth, 37 Vt. 289.

174. Where attached property becomes, by process of law, converted into money in the officer's hands, and is invested by him so as to produce interest, such interest will belong to the party who may be ultimately entitled to the money, and not to the officer. Richmond v. Collamer, 38 Vt. 68.

175. The plaintiff, an officer, sold property on an attachment which was bid in by the defendant as the friend and agent of the debtor, and the defendant gave the plaintiff his note for the purchase upon interest, and suffered the property to go back into the hands of the debtor. The suit was settled, and the creditor directed the plaintiff to surrender to the debtor all the property and securities derived from the attachment. The plaintiff then gave up to the defendant his note, but claimed the accrued interest upon it as legally belonging to him, to which the defendant acceded, and gave the plaintiff his written promise to pay the same. In an action on such promise;—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the interest upon the note; that the written promise to pay the same was without consideration, and that the plaintiff could not recover. Id.

II. ATTACHMENT OF REAL ESTATE.

176. An attachment of a whole town as the property of a defendant will hold all the lands which the defendant owns, as appears of record, in that town. Young v. Judd, Brayt. 151; but such attachment will not hold as against an apparent owner by the record, other than the defendant. Hoy v. Wright, Ib. 208.

177. Under the act of 1823, it was a sufficient attachment of real estate for the officer to leave a properly certified copy of the writ and return with the town clerk, with a request that he record the substantial part of it, and to pay him the fees therefor. Huntington v. Cobleigh, 5 Vt. 49. 28 Vt. 550.

178. An attachment of real estate by a copy left in the town clerk's office, though not recorded as required by the act of 1823, was held to prevail against a subsequent purchaser who saw the copy on file before his purchase. Ib.

179. If the copy of an attachment left in the town clerk's office is so wholly defective that the original, if like it, would be altogether void and could not be made good by amendment, this is no notice of a valid attachment—otherwise, if the variance is but trifling. Ib. citing Herring v. Harmon, 5 Vt. 56. 22 Vt. 331.

180. Ever since the Revised Statutes of 1839 the law has been as it was before the act of Nov. 6, 1823 (Slade's Stat. 108), that an attachment of real estate is effected by the officer's leaving in the town clerk's office a true and attested copy of the attachment with his return thereon. The entry and record required to be made by the town clerk is not essential for the creating of the lien, and it will not be defeated by his omission to make such entry and record. (G. S. c. 33, s. 37.) Braley v. French, 28 Vt. 546.

181. The plaintiff's writ against W was served by lodging a copy of it in the town clerk's office with a return properly made and certified to attach W's real estate. The town clerk did not keep it safely, nor make any record of the attachment, and through this failure the copy was soon lost, or taken from the office, and no trace of the attachment was left there. Afterwards, and before final judgment in the suit, W conveyed the premises, for adequate consideration advanced, to other parties, who had no notice of the attachment and believed the title to be as shown of record, and they procured their deed to be recorded. Held, that no lien was created by the attachment as against such purchasers, and that the town was liable to the plaintiff for such default of their town clerk. Burchard v. Fairhaven, 48 Vt. 327.

182. Where the return of service of an attachment of lands was complete as to the defendant therein, but showed only a copy of the writ left in the town clerk's office;—Held, that no lien upon the land was created thereby. Cox v. Johns, 12 Vt. 65. 22 Vt. 331.

183. An officer attaching real estate acquires no special property therein, and no act or declaration of his can defeat the lien thereby created—as by withdrawing the copy left with the town clerk. Such lien is in the creditor, and he only can release or discharge it. Braley v. French, 28 Vt. 546.

184. An attaching creditor of real estate with notice, either actual or constructive, of the true state of the debtor's title, stands in no better position than a purchaser with the same notice. Perrin v. Reed, 35 Vt. 2. Hackett v. Callender, 32 Vt. 97. Hart v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 33 Vt. 252.

III. DEFENSE BY SUBSEQUENT ATTACHING CREDITOR.

185. The statute which gives subsequent attaching creditors the right to appear and defend the earlier suit makes them so far parties, that their right to an appeal follows, as an incident. Chaffee v. Malarkee, 26 Vt. 242.

186. A subsequent attaching creditor, coming in to defend against a prior attachment, may set up some defenses which the debtor could not;—as by showing that the first was fraudulent as to other creditors. Harding v. Harding, 25 Vt. 487. 36 Vt. 662.

187. G. S. c. 30, s. 44, allowing a subsequent attaching creditor "wishing to contest the validity of the debt or claim on which the previous attachment is founded" to appear and "defend the suit," allows only a defense to the merits, such as the debtor might make, and, in addition, in his right as creditor, that the prior claim is collusive or fraudulent; and he cannot plead in abatement, or make other dilatory objection to the action, or urge any mere technical irregularity. Farr v. Ladd, 37 Vt. 156. Fletcher v. Bennett, 36 Vt. 659.

IV. ATTACHMENT AIDED IN CHANCERY.

188. If one acquire a lien upon property by attachment, he may claim the aid of a court of equity to make it available, if he has taken the proper measures to preserve and enforce it. Rowan v. Union Arms Co., 36 Vt. 124. S. C., 45 Vt. 160.

189. Such aid granted, where there was a claim upon the property by a conditional vendor, and an accounting was necessary to ascertain the sum to be tendered upon it, within the ten days limited in G. S. c. 33, s. 28, and the bill was brought within such ten days, and the lien of the attachment was preserved by a judgment afterwards obtained, with stay of execution. Ib. See Fales v. Roberts, 38 Vt. 503.

ATTORNEY (AT LAW).

- I. HIS AUTHORITY.
- II. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES.
- III. RIGHTS.
- IV. PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

Rules for the admission of attorneys, and regulating their practice:

1 Tyl. 2 (1800)—Rule 15 and seq. Brayt. 14 (1817).—1 D. Chip. 508 (1824)—1 Aik. 408 (1827).—14 Vt. 565 (1848)—24 Vt. 673 (1853).

I. HIS AUTHORITY.

1. There is, in this State, combined in the character of attorney that of agent to a certain extent; and, held, that an attorney, who receives a demand for collection from a creditor who resides at such a distance that he cannot be consulted, and is without express instructions as to the course to be pursued, has a discretion not to have the debtor committed to jail, or to release him from jail after commitment, and is not liable for so doing, provided he believes such course best for the interests of the creditor, and he acts with common prudence; and, in so doing, he may be guided by the apparent circumstances of the debtor, after reasonable examination. Hopkins v. Willard, 14 Vt. 474.

2. The attorney of an execution creditor has full authority to direct an officer as to the time and manner of enforcing the execution, short of discharging it without satisfaction—as to proceed, or to suspend proceedings, &c. Willard v. Goodrich, 31 Vt. 597. Kimball v. Perry, 15 Vt. 414.

3. The fact that the plaintiff's attorney in the original suit acts also as the attorney of the defendant in making a replevin writ to regain possession of the property attached, and draws up and consents to the replevin bond, does not necessarily free the officer serving the replevin writ from liability for the insufficiency of the bond. To have this effect, the officer must be aware that such attorney was the attorney of the plaintiff in the original suit, and the attorney must either act in behalf of such plaintiff in consenting to the bond, or give the officer good reason to believe that he consents to it in such plaintiff's behalf. Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 414.

4. The authority of an attorney does not appertain to the station of an attorney's clerk, as such. Carter v. Talcott, 10 Vt. 471.

5. Whether an attorney can in any supposable case, without express authority, borrow money to prosecute an action, and bind his client thereby—quære. Held, in this case, that the credit was in fact given to the attorney. Bell v. Mason, 10 Vt. 509. 15 Vt. 321.

6. An attorney who only prosecutes or defends a suit, has no power, as such attorney, to bind his client by the employment of assistant counsel. Whether such authority was given him by his client in the particular case, is a question of fact. Paddock v. Colby, 18 Vt. 485. Briggs v. Georgia, 10 Vt. 68.

7. Under peculiar circumstances, as in an unexpected emergency, when the principal is at a distance and cannot be consulted for instructions, such authority might be implied. Willard v. Danville, 45 Vt. 98.

8. An attorney, as such, and without special authority, has no power to bind his client by a compromise and settlement of the cause of action, without receiving the full amount of the claim. Vail v. Conant, 15 Vt. 314. (Contra, Butler v. Knight, 2 Law Rep. Ex. 109, in 1867); nor to assign the demand. Penniman v. Patchin, 5 Vt. 346. Carter v. Talcott, 10 Vt. 471.

9. The appearance for a suitor in court, whether a natural person or a corporation, by an attorney of the court, is evidence of his authority which cannot be questioned by the adverse party;—as by showing the irregularity of the corporate meeting at which he was appointed. Proprietors, &c., v. Bishop, 2 Vt. 231.

10. Whether a suit is authorized by the plaintiff is a matter resting between attorney, or solicitor, and client, with which the court never interferes at the suggestion of the respondent. Doolittle v. Gookin, 10 Vt. 265.

11. Where the record shows the appearance of a party by attorney, it cannot be controverted. If the attorney entered without authority, the party's remedy is against him. Coit v. Sheldon, 1 Tyl. 300. Abbott v. Dutton, 44 Vt. 546. St. Albans v. Bush, 4 Vt. 58. Newcomb v. Peak, 17 Vt. 302. Spaulding v. Swift, 18 Vt. 214.

II. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES.

12. It is the duty of an attorney who undertakes the collection of a debt, without special instructions, to pursue it through all the stages, as well against the sheriff and bail as against the principal, till the object is effected; but he is justified in not prosecuting, unless specially directed, in cases where he is influenced by a prudent regard to the interests of the creditor. Crooker v. Hutchinson, 2 D. Chip. 117. S. C., 1 Vt. 73. 15 Vt. 421.

13. Thus, he is bound to pursue the bail in due course, though insolvent, where there is a probable cause of action against the sheriff for taking insufficient bail, and that course is necessary to lay the foundation for proceedings against him. Crooker v. Hutchinson, 1 Vt. 73.

14. In ordinary cases, where an attorney is employed to take the care and management of a suit, he has a right to consider his employment as continuing to the end of the litigation, unless dismissed by his client, and, indeed, he would have no right to abandon it, without giving the client seasonable notice. Langdon

v. Castleton, 80 Vt. 285. Davis v. Smith, 48 Vt. 52.

15. A suit upon a recognizance given for an appeal is not a branch of the first suit, in such sense that the retainer of an attorney to defend the first suit extends to an employment to defend the second. Smith v. Dougherty, 87 Vt. 580.

16. An attorney is not liable, without special undertaking, to pay the fees of his client's witnesses. Sargeant v. Pettibone, 1 Aik. 355.

17. From the indorsement by an attorney of his name, as attorney, upon a writ given out for service, the law does not imply a promise on his part to pay the officer his fees for service. Wires v. Briggs, 5 Vt. 101.

18. In an action against an attorney for negligence (as for failure to collect a debt), the damages are to be measured by the amount of loss sustained, and not by the amount of the debt; and any fact which may tend to reduce the value of the debt below the nominal amount is proper to be considered. Crooker v. Hutchinson, 2 D. Chip. 117.

19. In an action against an attorney for neglect to issue a scire facias against insolvent bail, whereby the right of pursuing the officer for taking insufficient bail was lost;—Held, that the damages recoverable were the same as if the bail was solvent,—taking into account the right of such bail to surrender the principal in his own discharge. Crooker v. Hutchinson, 1 Vt. 78.

20. S, an attorney in a suit, employed H, another attorney, to assist him in its management. H assisted him, and was employed by no one else; nor did it appear that S had any authority from his client to employ H, nor did he profess to employ H in behalf of his client. Held, that S was liable to H, without proof of an express promise to pay; that his request was equivalent. Scott v. Hossie, 18 Vt. 50.

21. An attorney having a demand to collect, by fraudulently representing its condition and value, purchased it of his client at a discount, and afterwards collected it in full. Held, that he was not liable to the debtor for the difference—his liability was to his client. Marshall v. Joy, 17 Vt. 546.

III. RIGHTS.

22. Compensation. There is no reason nor authority to distinguish the rule of compensation for the services of lawyers, from that which obtains in every other employment for service;—that is, in the absence of any stipulation as to price, that he should be paid such sum as his services are reasonably worth, or as he reasonably deserves to have, having a proper reference to the nature of the business performed, and his own standing in the profession for learning and skill, whereby the value of his services are enhanced. Vilas v. Downer, 21 Vt. 419.

23. For the purpose of aiding in determining such reasonable compensation, it is proper to receive evidence as to the prices usually charged and received for similar services by others of the same profession, in the same vicinity, and in the same courts. Id. 28 Vt. 568.

24. Where a lawyer is employed by one who has a full knowledge of his rate of charges, without stipulating at all as to price, it might fairly be inferred, perhaps, that the client expected to pay at such rates, and might be equivalent to an express contract to pay them; but where a knowledge of the rate of charges, (as by a presentation of a copy of the account) only comes to the client during the employment, as in prosecuting a suit, his mere silence upon the subject, or suffering the lawyer to complete his then engagements, cannot fairly be construed into such an acquiescence in the amount of the charges, as to estop him from afterwards disputing them. Id.

25. An attorney cannot recover for services, which, through his omission or mistake, become of no avail to his client,—as where he neglected to take out an execution in the case and commit it to an officer in season to charge property attached, or so as to afford his client an opportunity to test his claim to a lien. Nixon v. Phelps, 29 Vt. 198.

26. —when demandable. Where an attorney puts a demand in suit for his client, the law does not imply an agreement that he is, in the first instance, to look to the demand as a means of satisfying his costs; nor that he is to wait for his pay until it shall be determined whether the demand is collectable or not; and there is no such general or settled usage upon the subject as will furnish evidence of an implied contract to that effect. Nichols v. Scott, 12 Vt. 47.

27. His retainer being but one employment, continuous and entire, the statute of limitations does not begin to run upon his charges in the suit until the suit is ended, unless sooner discharged. Davis v. Smith, 48 Vt. 52.

28. Legality of contract. An agreement between attorney and client, that the attorney should be paid a fair compensation for his services and money expended about a suit, and the one-half of what might be recovered, was held void as to such excess. Mott v. Harrington, 12 Vt. 199.

29. A guaranty given by an attorney to the creditor of a third person, that he will pay the debt, in consideration that the demand be committed to him and be under his control as attorney for the creditor, does not savor of maintenance or champerty, and is upon sufficient consideration. Gregory v. Glead, 88 Vt. 405.

30. An attorney or solicitor employed in a cause does not acquire, by the purchase of the interest of the adversary party, the right, as against his client, of such adversary party, and the client may, at his election, treat the purchase as made for himself. Davis v. Smith, 43 Vt. 269.

31. Lien for fees, &c. An attorney has a lien upon the judgment recovered by him, to the amount of such fees as are allowed to the party for his term, travel and attorney fee, and for all moneys expended in prosecuting the suit; but not the extra fees of counsel for argument, &c. Heartt v. Chipman, 2 Aik. 162. Walker v. Sargeant, 14 Vt. 247.

32. Such lien for costs, applies to an award of arbitrators. Hutchinson v. Howard, 15 Vt. 544.

33. As between the creditor and his attorney, the money to the amount of the lien of the latter is his, and cannot be assigned by the former. If received by the assignee, the attorney may recover it out of his hands by an action for money had and received. Heartt v. Chipman, 2 Aik. 162; and may hold it as against a trustee process. Hutchinson v. Howard. (See Patrick v. Hazen, 10 Vt. 183.) Root v. Ross, 29 Vt. 488.

34. An attorney has no such lien as will prevent the parties settling and abandoning a litigated suit, though notified of the lien. Foot v. Tewksbury, 2 Vt. 97.

35. Nor, any such lien previous to final judgment, as to prevent or affect a bona fide settlement of the parties. Hutchinson v. Pettes, 18 Vt. 614; though a default has been entered and the cause stands continued. Hooper v. Welch, 43 Vt. 169.

36. Where an attorney is sued for money upon which he has a lien, he need not plead the lien in set-off, but may urge it in defense under the general issue. Patrick v. Hazen, 10 Vt. 188.

37. Where an attorney had in his hands for collection a demand against B, and B gave the attorney a demand against C to collect and apply the avails upon the first demand;—Held, that this alone, and without a distinct contract to that effect, did not create a lien upon the last demand in favor of the first; and that an officer was justified in taking the direction of B in the management of his execution against C. Goodrich v. Mott, 9 Vt. 395.

38. If an attorney, having a lien for his costs, sue his client therefor and obtain judgment, and assign the judgment, the lien is lost and does not attach to the claim in the hands of the assignee. Beech v. Canaan, 14 Vt. 485.

39. A solicitor in chancery acquires no specific lien, for his services and disbursements, upon lands recovered in a suit in chancery. Smalley v. Clark, 22 Vt. 598.

40. An attorney's lien will not be protected against pre-existing rights of others,—as, against a set-off. Walker v. Sargeant, 14 Vt. 247.

41. If there is any collusion or design in the settlement or payment of the judgment to cheat the attorney of his lien, the debtor is not protected by payment to the creditor, although there is no notice given of the lien by the attorney to the debtor. Heartt v. Chipman, 2 Aik. 162.

42. Notice of such lien need not be given in person to the judgment debtor; but knowledge of the intention of the attorney to insist upon his lien, derived from other evidence of such a character as would and ought to obtain credit under ordinary circumstances, is sufficient and binding upon the debtor. Lake v. Ingham, 8 Vt. 158.

43. But notice of such lien will not prevent the conclusiveness of a settlement of a contested action sounding in tort, especially where the damages claimed were unliquidated. Hutchinson v. Pettes, 18 Vt. 614. Foot v. Tewksbury, 2 Vt. 97.

44. An attorney has a general lien upon all papers of his client in his hands, and upon the balances equitably due thereon, not only for the expenses incurred in the particular suit, but for any general balance due him. Redfield, J., in Hutchinson v. Howard, 15 Vt. 546.

IV. PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

45. The general rule is, that all communications which the client makes to his attorney, for the purpose of professional advice upon the subject of his rights or liabilities, are privileged. Wetherbee v. Ezekiel, 25 Vt. 47.

46. An attorney's privilege from testifying to communications of his client is the privilege of his client, and not of the attorney, and is limited to such disclosures as are made in confidence by the client to his attorney in the course of his employment. Dixon v. Parmelee, 2 Vt. 185.

47. An attorney will not be compelled to produce to a grand jury a paper intrusted to him, in professional confidence, by his client. State v. Squires, 1 Tyl. 147; nor to produce it on trial of a cause. Durkee v. Leland, 4 Vt. 612.

48. The privilege of refusing to disclose in court confidential communications, does not extend to one who is not an attorney, or attorney's clerk, or counsellor, although he may be studying law and have an office and do business as a lawyer, and may be acting as counsel and attorney for the party when, and in the business about which, the communications are made. Holman v. Kimball, 22 Vt. 555.

49. Where a party had a conversation with an attorney in reference to his matters about which litigation was probable, but where there was no retainer, and nothing to show that the party sought the advice with any view to regulate his future conduct in regard to a pending, or expected, litigation;—Held, that his communications were not privileged. The loose practice of the profession of giving gratuitous street opinions, commented upon and condemned. Thompson v. Kilborne, 28 Vt. 750.

50. In order that a communication to an attorney be privileged, the relation of attorney and client must exist, and the attorney must for the time being be acting in the character of legal advisor of the party making the communication, or, at least, the party should have good reason to suppose he is so acting, and the communication must be of a confidential and professional character. Coon v. Swan, 30 Vt. 6.

51. Where an attorney acted simply as a neighbor in the business of another, but by his request, not charging nor expecting compensation, and this was so understood;—Held, that a communication to him by the party employing him was not privileged. Id.

52. Communications made to an attorney in a suit by one who is a mere nominal party having no interest, are not privileged from disclosure in evidence by the attorney. Allen v. Harrison, 30 Vt. 219.

53. Communications to an attorney, to be privileged, must be made to him confidentially, as counsel; the relation of attorney and client must exist at the time, and the communication be made for the purpose of obtaining counsel, advice, or direction in regard to the client's legal rights. A general retainer in the matter is not necessary, but the attorney must be counsel upon the subject upon which the conference is had, and the communication must be made to him as such counsel. The burden is upon the party who seeks to have his statements suppressed as evidence, to prove the facts which make them privileged. Earle v. Grout, 46 Vt. 113.

54. It was offered to be proved by the attorney who assisted a party in confessing a judgment and having an execution issued thereon and sale of property, that such party told him he wanted the property sold so it could not be attached by his creditors. Held, that the communication was privileged, and not admissible. Mazham v. Place, 46 Vt. 434.

55. The plaintiff's agent, who, as such, had sold the goods in question, went to an attorney to have him bring a suit for the price. The attorney, after hearing the agent's story, declined to bring the suit on the sole ground that he thought a suit could not be maintained, and so advised. Held, that the communication of the agent was privileged. Strong v. Dodds, 47 Vt. 348.

AUDITA QUERELA.

- I. WHEN MAINTAINABLE.
- II. WHEN NOT MAINTAINABLE.
- III. NATURE OF WRIT, PARTIES, &c.

I. WHEN MAINTAINABLE.

1. Generally. Audita querela lies to vacate a judgment sought to be enforced, where a defense has arisen since the judgment; also where defense to the claim existed before the judgment, but the party had no opportunity to make it for want of notice; or, having notice, was deprived of his opportunity by the fraud of the other party. Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. 321.

2. It bears solely upon the acts of the opposite party, and not at all upon the judgment of the court. The complaint sounds in tort; the proper plea is not guilty, and damages are recoverable. Little v. Cook, 1 Aik. 363.

3. An audita querela to vacate a judgment, alleging that the complainant was deprived of his day in court by the fraud of the defendant, was held good, without an averment that the complainant had a good defense to the action. Eddy v. Cochran, 1 Aik. 359.

4. A writ of error fastens upon errors committed by the court, does them away, and proceeds to do that justice between the parties which the court below ought to have done. An audita querela seizes upon the misconduct of the recovering party, as a reason for setting aside an execution for a cause arising after judgment, or for setting aside the judgment, on the ground that the complainant has had no day in court. Hutchinson, J., in Weeks v. Lawrence, 1 Vt. 437.

5. It is not the office of an audita querela to correct errors in a judgment rendered in a case where the court had jurisdiction. Lamson v. Bradley, 42 Vt. 165.

6. It lies to set aside the judgment of a justice of the peace in a cause where he had not jurisdiction of the subject matter—as, in an action of covenant for breach of covenant of title, Hastings v. Webber, 2 Vt. 407;—action of slander. Ball v. Sleeper, 28 Vt. 573;—replevin of one kind, Glover v. Chase, 27 Vt. 533.

7. Execution. If an execution has been irregularly issued, although by mistake, and has been delivered to an officer for service, the debtor may proceed by audita querela to supersede it, and may pursue his remedy until he knows that he is in no danger from the execution. Phelps v. Slade, 13 Vt. 195; and see Hovey v. Niles, 26 Vt. 541.

8. It is not necessary that the complainant should be actually in execution, or that an execution should have actually issued. It is sufficient if he is exposed to and is threatened with an irregular and invalid execution. Glover v. Chase, 27 Vt. 538.

9. Fraud as to notice. An audita querela was held good, which complained that the respondent procured a deputized person to make return of service upon the complainant and took judgment against him, well knowing that such service had not been made, and that the complainant had no notice of the suit. Stone v. Seaver, 5 Vt. 549.

10. Agreement to discontinue. A judgment of a justice, taken by default, was set aside on audita querela, where the complainant failed to appear because he understood that the suit was agreed to be discontinued, and the other party knew that he so understood it. Perkins v. Cooper, 29 Vt. 729.

11. Out of State. Where the judgment of a justice has been rendered against a defendant who was out of the State at the commencement of the suit, to whom no notice was given and where no recognizance was given for a writ of review, the judgment may be set aside upon audita querela. Martin v. Wilkins, 1 Aik. 107. Alexander v. Abbott, 21 Vt. 476. Whitney v. Silver, 22 Vt. 634. Kidder v. Hadley, 25 Vt. 544. Eastman v. Waterman, 26 Vt. 494.

12. The record in such case must show notice, or else a compliance with the statute requirements in lack of notice, and the giving of a recognizance for a review. Upon the trial of the audita querela, notice in fact cannot be proved by parol. Kidder v. Hadley.

13. Where there were three trustees of a railroad, one resident and two non-resident, and a trustee process was issued against the three, but was served only by a copy left with the agent for the non-resident trustees appointed under G. S. c. 28, s. 118, and judgment passed by default against those two only, as trustees;—Held, that the irregularity was not such as that the judgment could be set aside on audita querela. Hamilton v. Wilder, 31 Vt. 695.

14. Execution against body. An audita querela lies to set aside an execution wrongfully issued against the body, instead of against the property only, of the complainant. Sawyer v. Vilas, 19 Vt. 43. Stoughton v. Barrett, 20 Vt. 385.

15. Void execution. It lies to set aside a void execution in the hands of an officer;—as where a justice execution was made returnable in 60 days, which should have been 120 days. Hoey v. Niles, 26 Vt. 541;—so, where it misdescribed the judgment as to the amount. Wilson v. Fleming, 16 Vt. 649.

16. Wrongful levy. It is an appropriate remedy to vacate the levy of an execution on land, where the levy is good upon its face, but the officer set off a different piece of land and of greater value than the one appraised; or where, by direction of the creditor, more of the debtor's property was set off, on the basis of the appraisal, than was sufficient to satisfy the execution. Hurlbut v. Mayo, 1 D. Chip. 387. Hopkins v. Hayward, 34 Vt. 474. Stanley v. McClure, 17 Vt. 255.

17. So in any case, where, the execution is used in a manner not lawful, and such use is oppressive and burdensome, and where the use of it can be set aside, this is an appropriate remedy. Fairbanks v. Deveraux, 48 Vt. 550.

18. Insane person. A judgment of a justice of the peace against an insane person under guardianship, where his guardian was not notified of the suit and no guardian was appointed for him by the justice, was vacated on audita querela. Williams, C. J., dissenting. Lincoln v. Flint, 18 Vt. 247.

19. Infant. An audita querela lies to set aside a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace against an infant, who had no guardian notified, or appointed by the court. Judd v. Downing, Brayt. 27. Lincoln v. Flint, 18 Vt. 247. Sturbird v. Moore, 21 Vt. 529. See Blackmer v. Dow, 18 Vt. 293.

20. But not, where his father and natural guardian was sued jointly with him, and appeared and defended the suit. Wrisley v. Kenyon, 28 Vt. 5. Priest v. Hamilton, 2 Tyl. 50.

21. Nor, in favor of an officer who suffered judgment by default for neglect to collect an execution against the infant, while the judgment against the infant remained in force. Soluce v. Downing, Brayt. 27.

22. A judgment in the county court against an infant, without the appointment or appearance of a guardian, cannot be vacated by audita querela, but only by writ of error. Chase v. Scott, 14 Vt. 77.

23. Bankrupt. Audita querela lies to release a certificated bankrupt from close jail. Comstock v. Grant, 17 Vt. 512. Altier, where he is in the jail liberties on jail-bond. Gould v. Mathewson, 18 Vt. 65. 21 Vt. 566.

24. Refusal of appeal. By long usage in this state, an audita querela is held to be a proper remedy for the party aggrieved by the wrongful refusal of a justice of the peace to allow an appeal. Tyler v. Lathrop, 5 Vt. 170.

25. The above case has been followed in cases precisely identical, yet we are not disposed to extend it, by a supposed analogy of reasonings, so as to make it an authority for other cases. Bennet, J., in Spear v. Flint, 17 Vt. 498. And see Harriman v. Swift, 31 Vt. 385.

II. WHEN NOT MAINTAINABLE.

26. In order to warrant the setting aside of a justice judgment on audita querela for refusing an appeal, the complainant must in fact have done everything which the law requires in order effectually to take an appeal—as, the actual offer of bail, so as to enable or entitle the justice to take the recognizance. It is not enough that he intended to do this, and supposed he had done it, and had actually paid the fees for the appeal. Harriman v. Swift, 31 Vt. 385.

27. The complainant had notice of a justice suit against him and sent an agent to appear for him, and to take an appeal. After judgment, the agent paid the fees for an appeal, but, not understanding the law, neglected to enter bail, and thereupon execution issued on the judgment. Held, that an audita querela could not be sustained. Finney v. Hill, 18 Vt. 255.

28. An audita querela will not lie to set aside a justice judgment, on the ground that an appeal was improperly denied, where the case was not on the face of the writ nor by the plaintiff's claim appealable, but was made such by the character of the defense set up. The remedy in such case is by petition. (G. S. c. 38, s. 7). Bradish v. Redway, 35 Vt. 424.

29. Chancery. An audita querela does not lie to set aside an execution issued on a decree in chancery. Garfield v. University of Vt., 10 Vt. 536;—or issued in violation of an injunction of chancery. The remedy is only by application to the court of chancery. Porter v. Vaughn, 24 Vt. 211.

30. Other remedy. It is no objection to an audita querela that there is another remedy,—as habeas corpus. Comstock v. Grout, 17 Vt. 512; or petition, under the statute, to set aside a justice judgment rendered without due notice. Alexander v. Abbott, 21 Vt. 476; or for refusing an appeal. Edwards v. Osgood, 33 Vt. 224.

31. Limitations. An audita querela is not within the statute of limitations applicable to a writ of error, or certiorari. Stone v. Seaver, 5 Vt. 549.

32. Error of court. It does not lie where the matter of complaint is a proper subject for a writ of error, though the statute has prohibited a writ of error in such case. Tuttle v. Burlington, Brayt. 27. Weeks v. Lawrence, 1 Vt. 433. Dodge v. Hubbell, 1 Vt. 491. Potter v. Hodges, 18 Vt. 239. Tittlemore v. Wainwright, 16 Vt. 173. Betty v. Brown, 16 Vt. 669. Spear v. Flint, 17 Vt. 497. Clough v. Brown, 33 Vt. 181.

33. Nor for any error of the justice in the judgment rendered;—as for assessing damages or excessive damages, on default, upon insufficient evidence, or without evidence. Dodge v. Hubbell, 1 Vt. 491. Foster v. Stearns, 3 Vt. 322. Betty v. Brown, 16 Vt. 669;—or for refusing a trial by jury, Spear v. Flint, 17 Vt. 497;—or for an error in the taxation of costs, though alleged to have been induced by the fraudulent practices of the other party. Har- riman v. Swift, 31 Vt. 385 (G. S. c. 31, s. 28), overruling Weed v. Nutting, Brayt. 28.

34. Nor, where the cause alleged is the fraud or misconduct of the justice. Tittlemore v. Wainwright, 16 Vt. 173.

35. An audita querela to set aside an execution alleged an error in the judgment, rendered by nil dicit—that the complainant had made payments on the note sued, which the defendant had not indorsed, and that he caused the damages to be made up without deducting such payments; also that the clerk in computing the interest had made an error, making the judgment and execution larger than was due. On demurrer, held insufficient,—that it presented no ground of complaint whatever, and was brought obviously for delay. Perry v. Ward, 18 Vt. 120.

36. A verdict in an action of book account before a justice, that the defendant did not assume and promise, was accepted by the court, and judgment thereon. Held, not a ground for an audita querela. Mason v. Lawrence, 2 Vt. 560.

37. An audita querela does not lie to set aside a judgment rendered in favor of one as administrator, on the ground that he was not in fact administrator but pleaded profert of letters as such. Barrett v. Laughan, 6 Vt. 243.

38. Discretion. It is discretionary with a justice whether to recall and vacate a judgment rendered by default, and to revive the action, when applied for within two hours from the rendition of the judgment; and an audita querela does not lie for his refusal so to do, although he based his decision upon his want of power. Potter v. Hodges, 18 Vt. 239.

39. Where a question, whether of law or fact, is properly within the cognizance of a justice of the peace, his decision cannot be revised by audita querela—as, for refusing to allow an appearance for the defendant by one professing to have authority. Sutton v. Tyrrell, 10 Vt. 87. School District v. Rood, 27 Vt. 214. Or for refusing to continue a cause. Amidon v. Aiken, 28 Vt. 440.

40. Informality. For mere matters of error and informality, audita querela will not ordinarily be sustained, unless the complainant has thereby been subjected to some injustice or wrong. Aldrich v. Bonett, 33 Vt. 204.

41. Extent. Where a justice, under the statute, issued an extent against a collector of taxes for delinquency, after due notice, appearance and hearing, the matter being within his jurisdiction;—Held, that the decision of the justice could not be reversed on audita querela. Griswold v. Rutland, 23 Vt. 324.

42. Audita querela does not lie to set aside an extent for the collection of taxes—as an extent for State taxes from the Treasurer of the State—the same not being a judgment or record of a court. Poultney v. Treasurer, 25 Vt. 168.

43. Complainant in fault. Where a party has had a legal opportunity of defense, or the injury of which he complains is to be attributed to his own neglect, he cannot be relieved by an audita querela. Stanisford v. Barry, 1 Aik. 321. 8 Vt. 323.

44. On a justice writ dated in December 1840, and made returnable, by mistake, Jan'y. 9, 1840, the justice rendered judgment by default Jan'y. 9, 1841. Held, that such judgment was not void, and could not be set aside on audita querela;—the complainant not having been misled by the obvious error in the writ. Betty v. Brown, 16 Vt. 669.

45. No wrong done. A sued B before a justice and B gave him to understand that he should appear and defend. On the return day A appeared, but was unable to remain for a trial, and, supposing B would appear, in good faith applied for and procured a continuance, and on the continuance day took judgment by default. B did not appear on either day, and afterwards brought an audita querela to set aside the judgment, claiming that the proceedings on the return day worked a discontinuance. Held, that as no wrong was intended and no injury occasioned, the complaint should be dismissed. Aldrich v. Bonett, 33 Vt. 202,—qualifying and limiting Paddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 529.

46. Although in the copy left with the defendant by the officer serving a writ, the signature of the authority issuing it be omitted, this may have effect as notice of the suit; and where the defendant had actual notice of the time and place of trial, and judgment was rendered against him without appearance;—Held, that it could not be set aside on audita querela. Collins v. Merriam, 31 Vt. 622.

47. Officer's return. Audita querela cannot be sustained to set aside a judgment for want of notice, where the return of the officer serving the writ shows notice. The return is conclusive. Hawks v. Baldwin, Brayt. 85. Witherell v. Goss, 26 Vt. 748.

48. Attorney. It does not lie to set aside a judgment on the ground that it was commenced by an attorney in the name of the complainant and pursued to judgment, without the complainant's knowledge. Sheldon v. Kelso, Brayt. 26.

49. Nor, upon the allegation of want of due service of the writ and want of notice, where there was an appearance entered for the party by an attorney of the court. This appearing on the record, the fact of the appearance cannot be traversed in this action. Spaulding v. Swift, 18 Vt. 214. Abbott v. Dutton, 44 Vt. 546.

50. By Redfield, J. Doubtless, in some way, the party affected by a judgment collusively obtained by the fraudulent instrumentality of an attorney, whether the attorney acted willingly, or as a dupe, may obtain relief. But we think it should be by application to the court upon petition, or motion, and possibly by writ of error for error in fact, rather than by audita querela. Ib.

III. NATURE OF WRIT, PARTIES, &c.

51. A judicial writ. A writ of audita querela is a judicial writ to the court having the record. It must issue from the supreme court, if the record is there. Shumway v. Sargeant, 27 Vt. 442. (Phelps v. Slade, 18 Vt. 195. Commonstock v. Grout, 17 Vt. 512.)

52. The county court has no jurisdiction to issue such writ to vacate a judgment of the supreme court. Warner v. Crane, 16 Vt. 79.

53. Parties. Like scire facias, error, certiorari, and all other judicial writs, it must be between all the parties to the former proceeding, and no others. Gleason v. Peck, 12 Vt. 56.

54. All the parties to a judgment or execution sought to be set aside by audita querela, must be made parties to the writ. Herrick v. Orange Co. Bank, 27 Vt. 584. Tittemore v. Wainwright, 16 Vt. 173. Starbird v. Moore, 21 Vt. 529.

55. Judgment by default against two, without notice to either;—this judgment sued, and served upon one, and a new judgment against him; afterwards the other was sued upon the original judgment. On audita querela to set aside the original judgment;—Held, that it was properly brought in the name of both. Godfrey v. Downer, 47 Vt. 599.

56. An audita querela to set aside an execution issued upon a judgment in favor of two, may be abated if served upon only one of the two; but a judgment rendered against the one on whom service was made, setting aside the execution but leaving the original judgment in full force, was held correct. Clark v. Freeman, 5 Vt. 122.

57. Case of a trustee. An audita querela will not lie in favor of the principal debtor and the trustee jointly, to vacate the several judgments rendered against them respectively in a trustee action. Johnson v. Plimpton, 30 Vt. 420.

58. Where an audita querela was brought to set aside a judgment against the complainant, and a trustee;—Held, that the trustee had no such interest in the judgment, as that he could object to a discharge and discontinuance of the audita by the complainant. Braynards v. Burpee, 27 Vt. 616.

59. —of subsequent attaching creditors. Subsequent attaching creditors cannot use the name of the debtor, against his will, in bringing and sustaining an audita querela to vacate a judgment and execution against him in favor of the first attaching creditor, either on the ground that such judgment was rendered upon default and without notice, and such execution was issued without giving the recognizance required by the statute; nor on the ground that such judgment was fraudulent as to creditors; nor on the ground that the first attaching creditor agreed with the others to share with them in the proceeds of his execution, and has violated such agreement. The debtor in such case was allowed to control the audita querela brought in his name, and to enter a non-suit against the protest of such subsequent attaching creditors. Essex Mining Co. v. Bullard, 43 Vt. 238.

60. Service. A writ of audita querela against a corporation must be served like any other writ against a corporation. Clark v. National Hydraulic Co., 12 Vt. 435.

61. Death of defendant. Where the object of an audita querela is to recover damages, and the defendant dies pending the suit and commissioners are appointed, the suit should be discontinued, and the claim be presented to the commissioners. Warner v. Crane, 16 Vt. 79.

62. —of complainant. An audita querela, whose basis is altogether personal, not going to the foundation of the judgment, dies with the complainant, and the recognizance falls with it. In such case, the administrator cannot be cited in to prosecute it. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Bliss, 24 Vt. 411.

63. Recognizance. An action was held to lie on a recognizance taken by a judge on issuing an audita querela, though the recognizance had not been returned into court. Anon. Brayt. 214.

64. Where two judges of the county court were authorized to allow a writ of audita querela, taking surety;—Held, that such writ allowed by the two, but the recognizance taken by only one, should abate. Hiecock v. Hiecock, 1 D. Chip. 133.

65. No other recognizance for costs was required by the statute of 1822, than was required by sec. 11 of the judiciary act. Brown v. Stacy, 9 Vt. 118.

66. Under the judiciary act of 1797, a minute of a recognizance upon a writ of audita querela, "to insure costs of prosecution in due form of law," was held sufficient as a minute;—and quare, whether the want of a minute is any ground of abatement. Ponter v. Carpenter, 11 Vt. 589. But see Sisco v. Hurlburt, 17 Vt. 118.

67. The minute of recognizance signed by a judge allowing the writ, is matter of record, and cannot be contradicted by parol. Hinman v. Swift, 18 Vt. 315.

68. An audita querela will not be dismissed, because of the neglect of the judge signing the writ and granting the supersedeas, to take a copy of the writ and recognizance and to file the same in the office of the county clerk. (G. S. c. 42, s. 8.) Kidder v. Hadley, 25 Vt. 544.

69. Affidavit. It is not necessary that the affidavit to the truth of an audita querela should be annexed to, or become part of, the process. The certificate of the judge allowing the writ, that the facts set forth in it were sworn to, and the production of the affidavit on trial of a motion to dismiss, were held sufficient. Hinman v. Swift, 18 Vt. 315.

70. Supersedeas. A writ of audita querela, with the certificate of the judge signing it, that it ought to operate as a supersedeas, will not so operate, if, in the recognizance taken by the judge, a material condition required by the statute be omitted. Perry v. Ward, 20 Vt. 92. State Treasurer v. Wells, 27 Vt. 276.

71. Where an execution is superseded on audita querela by the judge of the county court allowing the writ, the supersedeas, without some order professing to dissolve it, continues in force, though the suit should be removed into the supreme court on exceptions and during its pendency there. Perry v. Ward.

72. In an audita querela, operating as a supersedeas, in behalf of a party standing committed to jail, where the recognizance was conditioned for the redelivery of the execution debtor to the custody of the officer, and the payment of all intervening damages, and, in default thereof, the payment of the debt, damages and costs;—Held, that on failure to redeliver the debtor the recognizor was liable for the whole debt, as well as for intervening damages and costs;—that the recommitment in such case would be upon the original execution, and it was no excuse to the recognizor that an alias execution had not been issued to commit anew. Hubbell v. Dodge, 4 Vt. 56.

AUTHORITY.

1. Joint—The rule. Where several are associated in a public trust, a majority may act and bind their principals; but, in the case of a private trust or agency, the concurrence of all is necessary. Low v. Perkins, 10 Vt. 532.

2. Where an act granting a lottery required three managers and provided a mode of filling all vacancies;—Held, that one alone had no power as manager. May v. Brownell, 3 Vt. 463. Rogers v. Hough, 4 Vt. 172.

3. Where lands were conveyed by will to three persons in fee, and to the survivors or survivor of them, in trust to sell and convey and pay debts and legacies, and the same parties were named executors;—Held, that in order to pass the title, all living, although some had not accepted the executorship, must join in the conveyance, and that the deed of one alone conveyed no title. Williams v. Matlocks, 3 Vt. 189. 10 Vt. 571.

4. If an authority, in a matter of mere private concern, be confided to more than one agent, it is requisite that all should join in the execution of the power, and they are jointly responsible for each other; but in matters of public trust, or of power conferred for public purposes, if all meet, the act of the majority will bind. Hodges v. Thatcher, 23 Vt. 455.

5. The case of commissioners appointed by the probate court falls under the last branch. Id.—also auditors. Nevell v. Keith, 11 Vt. 214. Thompson v. Arms, 5 Vt. 546.

6. The case of commissioners appointed by a town to make a subscription for stock in a railroad under an act of the legislature, falls under the first branch, as a matter of private appointment. Danville v. Montpelier & St. J. R. Co., 43 Vt. 144.

7. Revocation of authority. The plaintiff verbally requested the defendant, his debtor, to pay a certain sum to D, the plaintiff's creditor, which the defendant verbally promised to do, and the plaintiff afterwards requested D to call upon the defendant for the money. D did so, when the defendant declined to pay. The plaintiff then brought this suit on the original indebtedness, after which the defendant paid D the sum ordered. Held, that the bringing of the suit was an implied revocation of the parol direction, or order, and the payment was without authority of the plaintiff and could not be allowed to the defendant. Sargent v. Seward, 31 Vt. 509.

8. —by death of principal. The death of the principal instantly terminates the power of the agent, so that all subsequent dealings with the agent are void and of no effect, though the parties were ignorant of such death. Davis v. Windsor Savings Bank, 46 Vt. 728.

9. Where a person had given a letter of credit authorizing another to "value" on him to a certain amount within a limited time, agreeing to accept the drafts drawn and to pay them if not paid by the drawee at maturity, the death of such person was held to operate, per se, as a revocation of the authority thereafter to draw upon him, although the time specified in the letter had not then expired, and although the person for whose security the letter was given had no notice of such death. Michigan State Bank v. Leavenworth, 28 Vt. 209.

10. A bill of exchange, with date and time of payment blank, was indorsed by L to R. Afterwards, and after L's death, R presented it to the plaintiff for discount, who, having no suspicion of L's death, and relying upon the indorsement, at the request of R filled the blanks in the bill, dating it as of that date, and discounted it in the ordinary course of business, paying the avails to R. In an action against L's estate to recover the amount of the bill;—Held, that upon the face of the bill L was an accommodation indorser; that, as such, the authority given to fill up the bill and pass it was not coupled with an interest and was revocable, and that the death of L operated per se to revoke the agency and authority of R, and that the estate of L was not liable upon the bill. Mich. Ins. Co. v. Leavenworth, 30 Vt. 11.

See AGENT.

B.

BAIL ON MESNE PROCESS.

1. How to charge bail. In order to charge bail upon a writ, the execution must be returned into the office from which it issued, with a non est inventus return thereon, within the life of the execution. Turner v. Lowry, 2 Aik. 72, overruling Stevens v. Adams, Brayt. 29.

2. A return of non est made upon an execution after it has expired, but dated back within the life of the execution, is a false return, for which the officer is liable to the bail who may have suffered damage thereby. Cooper v. Ingalls, 5 Vt. 508.

3. A return of an execution, non est, made at any time within the sixty days, is prima facie sufficient to charge bail upon the writ;

but if made prematurely, and to the injury of the bail, the effect of the return may be avoided by plea. Howe v. Ransom, 1 Vt. 276. 12 Vt. 197.

4. To hold bail on mesne process, where the debtor is arrested in a county other than that of his residence, the return of non est upon the execution must be made by an officer of the county where the debtor resides. Fuller v. Howard, 6 Vt. 561. (Collamer, J., dissenting.)

5. The requirement of G. S. c. 33, s. 63, that a writ of scire facias against bail on mesne process be brought within one year after the judgment against the principal, is in the nature of a condition, in order to create and establish a claim against the bail, rather than a statute of limitation upon the creditor's remedy to enforce a right, or duty, already due and fixed upon the bail. Strong v. Edgerton, 22 Vt. 249.

6. Where such writ was taken out within the year, but was made returnable before a justice more than sixty days after the expiration of the year, so that it could not be legally served within the year;—Held, that this was not a bringing of the writ within the year, and that the bail was discharged. — Id.

7. Pleading. A declaration in scire facias against bail, upon a writ in an action upon contract, must aver that the execution issued against the body of the principal. Blood v. Crandall, 28 Vt. 396. Davis v. Dorr, 30 Vt. 97.

8. Officer may become bail. An officer serving mesne process may himself become bail for the debtor, by indorsing the writ as such; and, in an action against him as such bail, he is estopped from averring that no bail was in legal effect taken by him. Merriam v. Armstrong, 22 Vt. 26.

9. Action for neglect to take bail. In an action for the neglect of an officer to take bail upon a writ, it seems not necessary that there should be a formal return, if any, of non est inventus upon the execution. Orois v. Isle La Motte, 12 Vt. 195. 18 Vt. 456.

10. —for taking insufficient bail. In an action against a sheriff for taking insufficient bail on mesne process, it is no defense that the bail was apparently good when taken. He must make it appear that the bail was "amply sufficient,"—that he possessed a substantial responsibility in point of property, and such as would probably continue. Hazard v. Slade, 1 D. Chip. 199. Harrington v. Bogue, 15 Vt. 179. Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 427.

11. Privy of bail. Persons standing as bail are so far privies to a judgment against their principal, that they cannot avoid it for any irregularity in the proceedings upon which it was obtained. Stedman v. Ingraham, 22 Vt. 346. 27 Vt. 213. Parkhurst v. Sumner. 23 Vt. 538. Chamberlain v. Godfrey, 36 Vt. 880.

12. Release. Before the Statute of 1818;—Held, that the death of the principal after a return of non est inventus did not release the bail on the back of the writ. Boardman v. Stearns, Brayt. 35.

13. Held, that the bail was excused from surrendering his principal where the principal was confined in the State's prison of another State, before the bail had become fixed by a non est return upon the execution. Hall v. Stearns, 13 Vt. 35.

14. Surrender of principal. After judgment rendered by a justice, the application by the defendant to be admitted to the poor debtor's oath was continued to a future day. Held, that the surrender of the principal by his bail on such adjourned day was seasonably made. Chase v. Holton, 11 Vt. 347.

15. Bail can only surrender his principal into court, i. e. while the court is in session. It cannot be done after the adjournment of a justice court, although within the two hours of the time set for trial. Converse v. Washburn, 43 Vt. 129.

16. The surrender of the principal by his bail should be pleaded as matter of discharge, and not of performance; but if pleaded as performance, this is but a defect of form, and, upon general demurrer, the court will give the facts pleaded their legal operation as a discharge of the recognizance. Gray v. Fulsome, 7 Vt. 452.

17. Release on motion. Where one privileged from arrest is arrested and gives bail, it is within the general discretion of the court where the suit against either the principal or the bail is pending, to enter an exoneretur on the bail bond, on motion of either the principal or the bail. Where this is done, it is conclusive upon the parties and all interested. Washburn v. Phelps, 24 Vt. 506.

18. Defense to scire facias. Under Vermont practice, wherever bail are entitled to be discharged in the original action, the same facts may be pleaded as a bar to a scire facias. Van Ness v. Fairchild, 1 D. Chip. 153. Mattocks v. Judson, 9 Vt. 343. Aiken v. Richardson, 15 Vt. 500. 17 Vt. 365. 20 Vt. 610. Belknap v. Davis, 21 Vt. 409. McFarland v. Wilbur, 35 Vt. 342.

19. Where the surrender of the principal could not be legally followed by further proceedings against his body, his bail may be released, and are not liable upon a scire facias—as, where no execution could legally issue against the body by reason of a defect in the original affidavit. Aiken v. Richardson, 15 Vt. 500.

20. So, where the principal after the original arrest has been discharged in bankruptcy. Belknap v. Davis, 21 Vt. 409. See Comstock v. Grout, 17 Vt. 512.

21. So, where the principal by enlisting as a soldier had, by act of the legislature, (1861 No. 8), become privileged from arrest. McFarland v. Wilbur, 35 Vt. 342.

22. In scire facias against bail on mesne process, a plea averred, that in consideration that the defendants would cause their principal to attend at the trial, the plaintiff promised that he would release them as bail, and that they did cause him so to attend;—Plea held good on general demurrer. — Id.

BAILMENT.

I. IN GENERAL.

II. PARTICULAR BAILMENTS, AND NEGLIGENCE THEREIN.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. As distinguished from a sale. Where property, as cattle, sheep &c., are left to another under a contract that he should return the same or others of equal value, or shall return the same or pay a certain sum in lieu thereof, such alternative is not inconsistent with the continued ownership of the bailor, nor necessarily converts the bailment into a contract of sale, or bailment with a power of sale. Downer v. Rowell, 22 Vt. 347. Smith v. Niles, 20 Vt. 315. Grant v. King, 14 Vt. 367.

2. The plaintiff delivered certain sheep to the defendant for which he executed his receipt agreeing to keep the sheep, or cause them to be kept, for "the full term of three years, and return the same, or others in their place as good as they are, at the expiration of the three years." Held, that this was not a sale, nor bailment with power of sale; and that on the defendant's neglect on demand at the end of the term to return the sheep, he was liable in trover. Downer v. Rowell.

3. The plaintiff delivered to the defendant a quantity of palm leaf, for which the defendant gave a written receipt and agreement to get it worked into hats, or return it when called for, and, if used, to account for it at specified prices. Held, as to the leaf not worked into hats, that this was not a sale, but a bailment, and that the defendant was liable for lack of ordinary care in the preservation of the leaf. Brown v. Hitchcock, 28 Vt. 452.

4. Power of sale. A bailment of property with a power of sale, is a personal trust which the bailee cannot delegate. Hunt v. Douglass, 22 Vt. 128.

5. Where one bails property to another to sell, or to use with a power of sale, this does not authorize an exchange; but if the bailee in such case makes an exchange, the property procured by the exchange does not, as matter of law, become the bailee's. This depends upon whether the bailor, within a reasonable time, adopts or repudiates the exchange, as to which he has an option. The bringing of an action for the original property would be a repudiation; while a suit for the property got by the exchange would be a ratification—ordinarily. Strong v. Adams, 30 Vt. 221. Hunt v. Douglass.

6. Misappropriation—Conversion. If the bailee of an article for use sells it without authority, the owner may recapture it from the possession of the purchaser,—not committing a breach of the peace. Heacock v. Walker, 1 Tyl. 338.

7. Any misuse or abuse of the thing bailed or leased, in the particular use for which the bailment was made, will not enable the general owner to maintain trespass or trover against the bailee. But if the thing be misappropriated or put to a different use from that for which it was bailed, by consent of the bailee or lessee—as where it is sold—such act determines ipso facto his right of possession, and revives the right of the bailor to immediate possession, and he may maintain trespass, trover or replevin. Swift v. Moseley, 10 Vt. 208. Briggs v. Oaks, 26 Vt. 138. Briggs v. Bennett, 26 Vt. 146. Gray v. Stevens, 28 Vt. 1.

8. In case of a conditional sale, without power of sale given, the very act of sale by the conditional vendee terminates the bailment and gives the conditional vendor the right of immediate possession—although part of the purchase price has been paid—and the right to retain the property until the balance is paid. Dunham v. Lee, 24 Vt. 432.

9. The plaintiff let to the defendant a carriage suitable to be drawn by two horses, to be used in the village of B, and not to be run out of that town. The defendant, without the plaintiff's knowledge, sent the carriage, with two pairs of horses attached and heavily laden, twelve miles out of the town, and the carriage was injured in such use. Held, that the defendant was liable in trover for the value of the carriage; and that the offer of the defendant, even after he had got the carriage repaired, to return it to the plaintiff, did not go in mitigation of damages;—that the defendant could not compel him to take it back. Hart v. Skinner, 16 Vt. 138.

10. Use as a conversion. As to the right of a bailee to use the property bailed, no general rule of universal application can be laid down, but, generally, cases must be governed by their own particular circumstances, in the absence of any contract on the subject of the use. Peck, J., in Atwood v. Davenport, 43 Vt. 30.

11. A horse and wagon were left by P with the defendant, to be kept at P's charges for eight or ten days, when he would call for them. P left and never returned, nor was heard of afterwards. The defendant became satisfied, after a time, that P did not own the property, but had abandoned it and was acting in bad faith towards the owner. The defendant did not know who or where the owner was. He continued to keep the property for about five years, and after a time used it in his business. Held, that, under the circumstances, the defendant had a right to use the property moderately and prudently, to the extent of compensating him for his charges; and that he was not answerable to the owner therefor as for a conversion. Id.

12. In an action on the case, the declaration alleged the bailment of the plaintiff's mare to the defendant to be kept through the winter, and that the defendant, without consent of the plaintiff, rode, drove and used the mare, and by such use the mare was greatly injured and miscarried her foal; but did not set up any contract or breach of contract as to the use of the mare;—Held, that the plaintiff had by his declaration tied himself up to a recovery upon the ground of an injury to the mare by the use of her, and that, without proof of such injury, he could not recover. Graves v. Severens, 40 Vt. 636.

13. Joint conversion. The wrongful sale of property by a bailee is a conversion in both the seller and the purchaser—a joint conversion—for which the bailor may maintain trover against both jointly. Buckmaster v. Mower, 21 Vt. 204. Grant v. King, 14 Vt. 367.

14. The owner of cattle leased them, with a farm, for four years, under an agreement that at the expiration of the four years the lessee might return the cattle, or pay a stipulated price [an under price] for them. Before the expiration of the term the lessee sold the cattle from the farm, and the lessor, within the term, brought trover therefor against both the lessee and the purchaser. At the end of the term, the lessee tendered the stipulated price. Held, that by such sale the right of possession was restored to the plaintiff, and that the lessee forfeited his own accruing rights under the contract; and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, as against both defendants, the value of the cattle at the time of the sale, and interest thereon. Grant v. King.

II. PARTICULAR BAILMENTS, AND NEGLIGENCE THEREIN.

15. Measure of diligence—In general. The true measure of liability in all cases of bailment [as, of an officer in case of property attached] is, that the bailee is bound to that degree of diligence which the manner and the nature of his employment make it reasonable to expect of him, as a prudent and careful man. Redfield, C. J., in Briggs v. Taylor, 28 Vt. 180; and see Folsom v. Underhill, 36 Vt. 591.

16. Mutual benefit. Where the defendant injured the plaintiff's sulky while driving it for the mutual gratification and pleasure of both parties, as a means of recreation and amusement;—Held, that the defendant's liability was to be measured by the rule of common or ordinary care—common prudence—and he was liable for ordinary neglect. Carpenter v. Branch, 13 Vt. 161.

17. Deposit. Money deposited with another for safe keeping, and for the sole benefit of the bailor, without any special undertaking on the part of the bailee, and without compensation offered, asked or expected for keeping the money, constitutes a simple depositum or naked deposit. In a bailment of this nature, the bailee is bound to exercise only slight diligence, and is responsible only for gross neglect. Spooner v. Mattoon, 40 Vt. 300.

18. In such case, the county court, on a trial by the court, found that the defendant, the bailee, "was not only lacking in the exercise of ordinary care, but was chargeable with actual negligence," but without finding it to have been gross negligence; and having, on such finding, rendered judgment against the defendant;—Held erroneous, and the judgment was reversed. (Different degrees of care and of negligence, as legal rules, recognized.) Ib.

19. On a review of facts and evidence reported;—Held, that the loss of money held by a bailee as a naked deposit, and lost through a brief forgetfulness in the keeping of the money on his way to return it, is not necessarily gross negligence, since this is consistent with an honest intention and effort to return the money. Ib.

20. A mere depositary of money is not liable to an action for the money, unless his relation has been changed to that of a debtor, by a refusal to pay over the money upon proper request, or by a wrongful appropriation of it. Jackman v. Partridge, 21 Vt. 558.

21. Pledge. The general property in a chattel pledged remains in the pledgeor, and only a special property passes to the pledgee. It is essential to the validity of a pledge, that it be accompanied by delivery of possession; and if allowed to go back into the possession of the pledgeor, the special property created by the bailment is determined and gone. Fletcher v. Howard, 2 Aik. 115.

22. By the mortgage of a chattel the general property passes, whereas by a pledge only a special property passes. Possession by the pledgee is essential to a pledge, whereas, in case of a mortgage, the mortgagor may, as between the parties, retain possession. The same terms which create a pledge, if possession passes, will generally be held to create a mortgage, if possession is retained. Connor v. Carpenter, 28 Vt. 237, and see Wood v. Dudley, 8 Vt. 480. Atwater v. Mower, 10 Vt. 75. Coty v. Barnes, 20 Vt. 78. Blodgett v. Blodgett, 48 Vt. 82.

23. A pledgee may convey such title as he has in the pledge. Bullard v. Billings, 2 Vt. 309.

24. A pledgeor has the right of redeeming the pledge at any time before a foreclosure or sale; and he is not a trespasser by peaceably taking possession of the pledge after a tender of the amount due, although after the day fixed for payment. Taggart v. Packard, 39 Vt. 626.

25. The holder of a promissory note, rightfully holding the same as collateral security, is entitled to retain the note until payment of, or offer to pay, the full amount for which it is held as security. Benoit v. Paquin, 40 Vt. 199.

26. A, the owner of a mowing-machine, by his writing certified that he "pledged, pawned and delivered" the same to B as security for the payment of his note to B. The writing contained a stipulation, that A "has the right to sell said machine at any time, by paying B the said note and interest." A, without paying the note, and against the prohibition of B, sold the machine. Held, that A had the right of selling the machine only by paying the debt secured by the pledge, and that he was liable to B in trover for such sale. Prescott v. Prescott, 41 Vt. 131.

27. Where W turned out or pledged goods to B, with the understanding that they should be sold through a named factor, and that B should credit W the proceeds of the sale deducting the factor's commissions, and B committed the goods to the factor to be sold, taking a receipt therefor to himself;—Held, in a suit by B against W, that it was not a sufficient accounting for B to credit W the proceeds of the sale as reported by the factor, where the amount so reported was much less than the market price of the goods; that, the factor being liable to that extent, B was the proper party to call him to a just accounting, in case W should not assume to do so himself, and where B had not, on reasonable notice to W, abandoned in his behalf any further claim on the factor. Bigelow v. Walker, 24 Vt. 149.

28. Where one is liable to account for property rightfully taken and disposed of, he is liable only for the amount actually realized, where he has acted with good faith and common prudence and due diligence; and where he receives, as collateral security, the property in such an unfinished state that chancery would have ordered it finished by a receiver, and he finishes it with his own means, he is entitled in equity to have such expenses allowed him in accounting for the property; and the right of an attaching creditor of the general owner is subordinate to such equity. Rowan v. State Bank, 45 Vt. 160.

29. Livery stable keeper. Livery stable keepers, and others who let horses and carriages for hire, are answerable to the hirer for an injury which happens by reason of a defect in the carriage, which might have been discovered by the most careful and thorough examination; but not for an injury which happens by reason of a hidden defect, which could not, upon such an examination, have been discovered. Hadley v. Cross, 84 Vt. 586.

30. Warehouseman. Although a wharfinger or warehouseman receiving goods to keep, cannot, ordinarily, in a suit against him, dispute the title of his bailor, yet if the bailor claims the goods by an illegal title, and they are taken out of the custody and care of such bailee by authority of law, the latter may show this in excuse for not delivering them. Burton v. Wilkinson, 18 Vt. 186.

31. Wharfinger. A delivery of goods on a wharf is not necessarily a delivery to the wharfinger. Blin v. Mayo, 10 Vt. 56.

BANK.

1. Directors. If a particular line of procedure has been resolved upon, or is necessarily incident to the business of a bank, it is not essential that every expenditure of money, or engagement of service, or other item within the line so marked out, should receive the consideration of all the directors outside a meeting, or that a meeting of the board should act upon it; nor does all the executive business pertaining to a bank come solely within the province of the cashier. So held, where the contract for service to a bank having five directors was concluded by two directors and subsequently approved by a third, but without formal vote or conference with the other two directors, and without their knowledge or that of the cashier, but not designedly concealed. Bradstreet v. Bank of Royalton, 42 Vt. 128.

2. Cashier. Held, that a bank was bound by the representations of its cashier, made in the ordinary course of business, as to the payment of a note in the bank, upon the faith of which the maker of the note acted. Manufacturers' Bank v. Scofield, 39 Vt. 590.

3. The defendant signed a writing addressed to the person, by name only, who was cashier of the plaintiff bank, saying: "I wish you to discount a note," &c., and guaranteeing its goodness and payment. The bank, on the credit of the guaranty, discounted the note. Held, that an action on the guaranty lay in the name of the bank, counting upon a promise to the bank. Woodstock Bank v. Downer, 27 Vt. 482.

4. Notice to the attorney of a bank, or to the cashier, while acting in the matter of attaching land for the benefit of the bank, of an equitable right in a third person—as, by a defective deed on record,—is notice to the bank. Vt. Mining Co. v. Windham Co. Bank, 44 Vt. 489.

5. The forfeiture of $500, imposed by Stat. 1865, No. 6, s. 5, upon cashiers of banks for failing to transmit to town clerks a list of shareholders, seems to be a fixed compensation to the town for the wrong done, and an exclusive remedy. Newman v. Waite, 48 Vt. 587. So held—Brattleboro v. Wait, 44 Vt. 459.

6. An action by the town to recover such forfeiture is remedial, not penal, and is not barred by the two years' limitation of G. S. c. 62, s. 5. Id. See Burnett v. Ward, 42 Vt. 80.

7. Certifying checks. The business of advancing certified or accommodation checks by banks to brokers beyond their deposits, to be made good during the day, is one in which the strictest and utmost confidence and good faith are understood and expected, and scrupulous fidelity and punctuality are required; and it is a fraud in the drawer to procure his check to be certified after he has become to his knowledge insolvent, and unable to make his check good, as agreed. Bank of Republic v. Baxter, 81 Vt. 101.

8. S, being insolvent, fraudulently procured the certification of his check on Bank A, which he deposited in Bank B to the credit of Bank C for the use of H, to whom he was indebted in the same sum. H had previously directed S to deposit that sum for him in bank, but had had no communication with Bank B on the subject. On receiving the deposit, Bank B addressed a letter to Bank C, informing them of such deposit and credit, but, before receipt of the letter, notified them by telegraph, by procurement of Bank A, not to make payment upon this credit as there was something wrong. H was also informed by telegraph from S that payment of the check had been stopped, and these telegrams were received as early, at least, as H received notice of the deposit, and before he had in any way acted upon it. Bank A, before becoming fully informed of the fraud, had paid the money on the check to Bank B. On a bill in chancery brought by Bank A;—Held (Bennett, J., dissenting), that Bank B was not the agent of H, so that the reception of the money by that Bank was in law a payment to him, and that Bank A was entitled to reclaim the money. Id.

9. Bank stock. The return of payments made on subscriptions for bank stock, such return being made in the form of loans to the subscribers upon private security, was held a violation of a bank charter; but, on information for this cause, the court in their discretion refused to vacate the charter. State v. Essex Bank, 8 Vt. 489.

10. Where the banking law prohibited the votes, either personally or by proxy, of stockholders residing out of this State;—Held, that such stock could not be voted upon by residents of this State to whom it had been regularly transferred upon the books of the bank, but only for the purpose of enabling them to vote upon it, and who held it only in trust for the non-resident real owner. State v. Hunton, 28 Vt. 594.

11. There was a provision in a bank charter that no transfer of stock should be valid unless recorded in a book to be kept by the bank for that purpose, and unless the person making the transfer should have previously discharged all his debts to the bank. A, a stockholder, without consideration and for the purpose of increasing the vote upon his stock at elections, transferred upon the book certain shares to B, but A afterwards, for years, wholly controlled the shares and took the dividends, and then B purchased the shares of A. Before such purchase, A became indebted to the bank, upon the faith that he was the owner of the shares, and after such purchase, but without knowledge thereof by the bank, the bank attached and sold the shares upon the debt of A. Held, that B, under the circumstances, was bound to make inquiries as to the state of the title before he purchased, and that as between him and the bank his title did not accrue until he had given notice of his purchase, whereby he had become the beneficial owner; and that the title of the bank must prevail. Sabin v. Bank of Woodstock 21 Vt. 358.

12. The bona fide purchaser of bank stock of one in whose name the shares stand on the books of the bank acquires good title against the world. The mode of transfer pointed out in the charter is the only mode which the public are bound to regard as conveying the title; and all persons, unaffected with notice to the contrary, are at liberty to act upon the faith of the title being where it appears on the books of the corporation to be. Redfield, J. Id.

13. Law regulating interest. A bank incorporated in this State cannot recover more than six per cent. interest for its loans, nor upon securities taken therefor, though the loans may be made and the securities executed in another State where a higher rate of interest is allowed by law. Farmer's Bank v. Burchard, 33 Vt. 346.

14. In this State, since the statute of 1836, the contracting by an incorporated bank for interest upon loans or discounts exceeding the rate prescribed by the laws of the State, whether this be treated as aviolation of its charter and the laws governing its existence and acts, or, as ultra vires, as the term is technically used, has no other effect upon the contract than to render it void as to such excess. Id. Bank of Middlebury v. Bingham, 33 Vt. 621.

15. Law restricting loans. Where the statute prohibited banks from loaning more than ten per cent. of their capital to one person and subjected the directors consenting thereto to a penalty, and to an action for damages therefor;—Held, that neither the party who had obtained such loan, nor his surety, could set up in defense such violation of the statute. Farmer's Bank v. Burchard.

16. "Bank fund." Under the safety fund bank act of 1831 (C. S. c. 84),—Held, that such part of the safety fund as had been contributed by a particular bank could not be withheld from appropriation for payment of the debts of an insolvent bank, although such bank became insolvent before the other came into existence. Ehwood v. State Treasurer, 23 Vt. 701.

17. To a bill by the receiver of an insolvent bank brought to charge the "bank fund," the State Treasurer is a proper party defendant. Danby Bank v. State Treasurer, 37 Vt. 541.

18. The Danby Bank was in business several years without contributing to the "bank fund," the directors giving bonds instead. In 1856 no bonds were given, and for 1856 and 1857 the bank contributed to the "bank fund," and became insolvent. Held, that the liability of the "bank fund" for payment to the bill holders attached at once upon the failure to give the bonds. Id.

19. Under the Bank Act (C. S. c. 84);—Held, that the giving of bonds for redemption, according to s. 87, did not authorize a bank to withdraw, or the State treasurer to pay to it, any part of the fund previously deposited, except upon the expiration of its charter. Held, also, that the "bank fund" was the property of the banks contributing to it, and was not absorbed by the State as part of its general assets, but was to be kept separate and be managed by the treasurer; and hence, though reduced by the wrongful act of the treasurer in paying it back to other banks not entitled to it, the order by mandamus should not require him, as treasurer, to pay to the receiver of an insolvent bank, which had contributed to the fund, any money of the State as distinguished from the "bank fund." Miner v. State Treasurer, 39 Vt. 92.

20. Payment in bills of the bank. In an action to recover a debt to an insolvent bank brought in the name of the bank by an equitable assignee, where the defendant had notice of such interest before suit brought;—Held, that, under the charter, the debt could be paid in the bills of the bank, but not the costs of the suit. Bank of Bennington v. Booth, 16 Vt. 360.

21. Negotiable paper, not made payable upon its face or by direct indorsement to a bank, was held not subject to C. S. c. 84, s. 82, after the bank had ceased to be the owner of it;—the act providing, that the bills of a bank shall be received by the bank in payment of all demands "made payable to, or the property of, the bank." Bruce v. Hawley, 31 Vt. 643.

22. National banks. Held, that the proviso to Sec. 41 of the national banking act of June 3, 1864, allowing the assessment and taxation of shares in a national bank against the owner "imposed by or under State authority at the place where such bank is located, and not elsewhere," is not in conflict with the statute requiring such shares to be set in the list of the town where the owner resides, being other than that where the bank is located;—that this proviso merely requires that the tax, to be valid, shall be imposed under the State authority existing at the place where the bank is thus located, and does not limit the place of assessment. Clapp v. Burlington, 42 Vt. 579.

23. The cashier of a National Bank is subject to the penalty imposed by act of 1865, No. 6, for neglect to return to town clerks the names of the stockholders residing in such town. Newman v. Wait, 46 Vt. 689.

24. The taking of special deposits to keep, merely for the accommodation of the depositor, is not within the authorized business of banks organized under the National Banking Act of 1864; and their cashiers have no power to bind them to any liability on any express contract accompanying, or any implied contract arising out of, such taking. Wiley v. National Bank of Brattleboro, 47 Vt. 546.

25. Savings bank. A deposit in a savings bank stated in the depositor's "deposit book," not made payable to order or bearer, cannot be assigned so as to enable the assignee to maintain an action therefor against the bank. Howard v. Savings Bank, 40 Vt. 597.

BANKRUPTCY.

I. U. S. BANKRUPT ACT OF 1841.

II. U. S. BANKRUPT ACT OF 1867.

I. ACT OF 1841.

1. Act of bankruptcy. A conveyance or assignment by a trader in embarrassed circumstances, of all his property to a particular creditor, whether made voluntarily or under pressure of legal process, or whether made with the intention of taking the benefit of the bankrupt act or not, is an act of bankruptcy under the Act of 1841. Gassett v. Morse (U. S. D. C.), 21 Vt. 627.

2. Preference. To constitute a preference, the prevailing doctrine seems to be, that a payment, where it consists of an appropriation of a part only of the debtor's property, must be made in contemplation of bankruptcy, and must be voluntary. Both must concur. Something more must appear than mere insolvency; and to be voluntary, the payment must originate with the debtor, the first step being taken by him and not by the creditor. In re Rowell (U. S. D. C.), 21 Vt. 620. Id. 631.

3. A man may be insolvent, and yet go on with his business and with the bona fide intention and expectation of saving himself from breaking or failing, and of being able to pay his debts; and a payment or transfer under such circumstances, though voluntary, would not be a preference within the meaning of the Bankrupt Act. In re Pearce (U. S. D. C.), 21 Vt. 611.

4. Lien. Held, that where property was attached before the alleged act of bankruptcy was committed, and judgment was obtained and the property seized in execution before the filing of the petition, though after the act of bankruptcy, this created a lien, in the absence of fraud or collusion, which was protected by the Act; yet where the creditor had notice of the act of bankruptcy before his attachment, or of the debtor's intention to take the benefit of the act, the attachment was a fraud upon the act and did not create a lien; and that the pendency of the petition was itself notice such as to defeat the attachment. Downer v. Brackett (U. S. D. C.), 21 Vt. 599. Hovess v. Spaulding (U. S. C. C.), 21 Vt. 610.

5. Under the Bankrupt Act, where a creditor has acquired a lien by an attachment which is protected, he is entitled to have judgment in his suit, and to take execution against the property attached. In re Rowell (U. S. D. C.), 21 Vt. 620.

6. The term lien, in common acceptation, is understood and used to denote a legal claim or charge on property, either real or personal, for the payment of any debt or duty, although the property be not in the possession of him to whom the debt or duty is due. Thus an attachment is denominated a lien in the statutes of this State, and the term is used in this sense in the U. S. Bankrupt Act of 1841. Downer v. Brackett (U. S. D. C.), 21 Vt. 599.

7. Such lien by attachment is protected under that Act. Id. In re Rowell, 21 Vt. 620. In re Reed, 21 Vt. 635.

8. Claim assigned. Where one, prior to his petition in bankruptcy, absolutely assigns a chose in action, an action thereon may, after such petition, and after his discharge, be maintained either in his own name for the benefit of the assignee of the demand, or in the name of the assignee in bankruptcy. Stedman v. Gassett, 18 Vt. 346. Hayden v. Rice, 18 Vt. 553, and note.

9. The plaintiff before his bankruptcy made, for good consideration, an equitable assignment of a chose in action [a book account]. Held, that this claim did not pass to his assignee under the Bankrupt Act; and that having purchased it back after his certificate of discharge, he could sustain an action in his own name to recover it. Blin v. Pierce, 20 Vt. 25.

10. Remedy under State laws. Held, that a creditor who had not proved his debt might, before the bankrupt had procured his discharge, pursue such remedies against the bankrupt as were afforded by the State laws; and the U. S. District Court in bankruptcy refused, before such discharge, and in such case, to discharge the bankrupt from imprisonment under State process. In re Comstock (U. S. D. C.), 22 Vt. 642.

11. Injunction. Held, that the District Court could grant an injunction in behalf of the assignee of a bankrupt, where the proceedings in bankruptcy were instituted and the estate was being administered in another District. Moore v. Jones (U. S. D. C.), 23 Vt. 739.

12. Debts provable. A judgment in an action of tort is a debt provable against the estate of the bankrupt, and, although not proved, is barred by the final discharge, although the cause of action arose from the wilful and malicious act of the defendant, and was so adjudged and certified. Comstock v. Grout, 17 Vt. 512. In re Comstock (U. S. D. C.), 22 Vt. 642.

13. Held, that debts of the bankrupt, originating between the filing of the petition and the decree of bankruptcy, were provable under the commission, and, although not proved, were barred by the certificate of discharge. Spaulding v. Dixon, 21 Vt. 45.

14. Discharge. Held, that a judgment obtained pending the bankruptcy proceedings, for a provable debt, was barred by such certificate, not only as to the debt, but the costs also. Harrington v. McNaughton, 20 Vt. 293. Downer v. Rowell, 26 Vt. 897.

15. Discharge refused, by reason of a fraudulent preference, upon the facts stated. In re Chase (U. S. D. C.), 22 Vt. 649.

16. The objection to a bankrupt's discharge, on the ground of concealment of his property, involves not only a charge of gross fraud, but also the crime of false swearing, and therefore ought to be substantiated, either by direct testimony, or by such facts as afford unequivocal circumstantial evidence of it. In re Pearce (U. S. D. C.), 21 Vt. 611.

17. Where all the property of a bankrupt was under an attachment when he filed his petition;—Held, that it was no objection to his discharge, that he had consented to the sale of his personal property on the attachment under the statute of this State, nor that he had confessed judgment in the suit—it appearing that the debt was bona fide and due—nor that he had executed to the creditor a quitclaim deed of all his interest in the real estate—it being previously incumbered by mortgage to nearly its full value. In re Reed (U. S. D. C.), 21 Vt. 635.

18. Impeachment of discharge. A discharge in bankruptcy cannot be impeached for any instances of fraud which were urged in the U. S. District Court in objection to the discharge; but may be, for further and other instances of fraud. Downer v. Rowell, 25 Vt. 386.

19. In answer to a plea of discharge in bankruptcy under the Act of 1841, the plaintiff may, under the 4th section, give written notice specifying the several fraudulent acts or concealments relied upon to avoid the plea; but if, instead of so doing, the plaintiff adopts the form of a special replication, thereby calling for a rejoinder and special traverse, his replication must be single; and where it set up more than one distinct transaction, it was held ill on special demurrer. Downer v. Rowell, 26 Vt. 397.

20. The effect of a discharge in bankruptcy, as to a particular debt, is not avoided by the omission of the bankrupt to state such debt in his schedule, unless such omission involved a fraudulent concealment. Downer v. Dana, 22 Vt. 337.

21. Effect of discharge. A discharge in bankruptcy is not a bar to an action against the sureties of the bankrupt upon a jail bond, for an escape committed between the decree in bankruptcy and the final discharge. Dyer v. Cleveland, 18 Vt. 241.

22. A note discharged by a certificate in bankruptcy is functus officio and ceases to be negotiable. The indorsee cannot recover thereon by force of a new promise made to the payee. It is the new promise alone which gives the action, and this is not negotiable. The action must be in the name of the person to whom the promise is made. Walbridge v. Harroon, 18 Vt. 448.

23. A discharge in bankruptcy was held to be no bar to an action for contribution by a co-surety on account of a payment made after the discharge, upon a liability for the principal which existed before the bankruptcy. Swain v. Barber, 29 Vt. 292.

24. An audita querela lies in behalf of a debtor confined in close jail, against the creditor who refuses to release him after he has received his discharge in bankruptcy. Comstock v. Grout, 17 Vt. 512. 21 Vt. 566.

25. Aliter, where the debtor is admitted to the jail liberties upon jail bond. In such case he must judge for himself, and the creditor is not bound to do any act to ratify the discharge. Gould v. Mathewson, 18 Vt. 65. 21 Vt. 566.

26. Pleading. A plea alleging the decree in bankruptcy, and the subsequent discharge of the defendant and certificate thereof without setting forth the previous proceedings, and concluding with a verification, was held sufficient. Downer v. Chamberlin, 21 Vt. 414.

27. In an action on a promissory note against several, with a joint plea of the general issue, the plaintiff put in evidence the discharge in bankruptcy of one of the defendants, with his consent but against the objection of the other defendants, and verdict and judgment were rendered in favor of that defendant but against the others. Held not erroneous. Miner v. Downer, 20 Vt. 461.

28. A joint contractor who has obtained his discharge in bankruptcy must, nevertheless, be joined as defendant in an action upon the contract. For non-joinder in such case, the writ was abated. Roberts v. McLean, 16 Vt. 608.

29. A surety, after the discharge of his principal in bankruptcy, not having proved his contingent claim in bankruptcy, paid the debt. Held, that he could recover of the principal therefor in an action of indebitatus assumpsit upon an implied promise. Wells v. Mace, 17 Vt. 508. (Reversed in U. S. Sup. Ct., 7 Howard, 272.) 26 Vt. 785.

30. The plaintiff went into bankruptcy having an account against the defendant; but this account was not included in his schedule, nor acted on by his assignee, and was not before the court in bankruptcy. Held, that such facts did not toll the plaintiff's right to maintain an action therefor. Steele v. Towne, 28 Vt. 771.

31. New promise. The moral obligation and duty of a discharged bankrupt to pay his debt contracted before his bankruptcy, afford a sufficient consideration to sustain a new promise to pay it; and such promise need not be in writing. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Flint, 17 Vt. 508.

32. A promise to the creditor, or to his agent, to pay the debt, with an intent to confirm the original demand, is sufficient to remove the bar of a discharge in bankruptcy. Hill v. Kendall, 25 Vt. 528.

33. The defendant promised to pay a debt, discharged in bankruptcy, when he should become of sufficient ability. Held, that the promise was conditional, depending upon a condition precedent, viz., his ability to pay. Sherman v. Hobart, 26 Vt. 60.

34. The defendant, after his discharge in bankruptcy, stated an account with the plaintiff and agreed upon a balance due, which account was of items which accrued before the bankruptcy. Held, that from the naked fact of so stating the account the law did not imply an obligation to pay it, but that such obligation must rest upon an express promise; and where the promise was to pay this balance by his share in the avails of certain demands in the hands of the plaintiff;—Held, that the plaintiff must be content with that and could not recover such balance in an action, since the debt had been legally discharged in bankruptcy. Warren v. Bishop, 23 Vt. 607.

35. The discontinuance by a debtor of his petition and proceedings in bankruptcy, under the Bankrupt Act of 1841, is a sufficient consideration to sustain a written contract by his creditors to give further time of payment. Loomis v. Wainright, 21 Vt. 520.

II. U. S. BANKRUPT ACT OF 1867.

36. Exemptions. Property exempt from attachment by the State law does not pass to an assignee in bankruptcy, nor is the title of the bankrupt thereto impaired or affected by the bankrupt act. Wilkinson v. Wait, 44 Vt. 508.

37. The defendant, as constable, attached a yoke of oxen of the plaintiff which were exempt from attachment. While so held, the plaintiff was adjudged a bankrupt, and the defendant was enjoined by the bankrupt court (simply) from selling the oxen. The assignee in bankruptcy afterwards demanded the oxen of the defendant, and he delivered them, under protest, to the assignee, who sold them and held the proceeds. In trover for the oxen;—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover their full value; that the proposition that the assignee, of his own motion, without any order of court, had a right to take the property, and compel the plaintiff to abandon his remedy against the defendant and follow him, the assignee, into the U. S. District Court, is untenable. Id.

38. Discharge. A judgment rendered in an action declaring upon a contract is not "a debt created by fraud," within the meaning of the U. S. Bankrupt Act, although in fact the contract declared upon was induced by fraud. The action in that form and judgment therein are a waiver of the fraud; and the court will not go behind the record. Hence, the debtor's discharge in bankruptcy is a bar to an action on such judgment. Palmer v. Preston, 45 Vt. 154.

39. A discharge in bankruptcy will not defeat a lien created by trustee process more than four months before the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, but such lien may be enforced in chancery by a special decree in rem. Stoddard v. Locke, 43 Vt. 574.

40. A discharge in voluntary bankruptcy is not a bar to an action to recover a provable claim, where the debtor fraudulently deprived the creditor of notice of any proceedings in bankruptcy. Batchelder v. Low, 43 Vt. 662.

41. A promise to pay a debt discharged in bankruptcy is valid though made by parol, and may be proved by parol, and by the plaintiff himself, where he is made a general witness by statute. Barron v. Benedict, 44 Vt. 518.

42. The claim of a conditional vendor for an illegal sale by the vendee is not barred by the vendee's discharge in bankruptcy, although the vendor has proved his claim in bankruptcy for the contract price:—his lien is preserved. Johnson v. Worden, 47 Vt. 457.

43. Plea in bar, that since the commencement of the suit the defendant had been adjudged a bankrupt, that the plaintiff had proved his debt in bankruptcy and that the bankrupt proceedings were still pending, was held ill on general demurrer,—the debt not being extinguished without a discharge, and the proceedings only operating to suspend final judgment. Brandon Mfg. Co. v. Fruzer, 47 Vt. 88.

44. A bankrupt who purchases of his assignee a claim originally due himself can sue thereon in his own name. Udall v. School District, 48 Vt. 588.

BASTARDY.

1. Bastard—Right of inheritance. Under the statute of 1821 (Slade's Stat. c. 44, s. 77), a bastard can inherit from another bastard of the same mother. Burlington v. Fosby, 6 Vt. 88; but not from a legitimate child of the same mother. Bacon v. McBride, 32 Vt. 585.

2. The adoption of an illegitimate child by the putative father, under G. S. c. 56, s. 6, legitimates the child only "as respects such father," and does not render the child capable of inheriting through the father as his representative. Safford v. Houghton, 48 Vt. 236.

3. Bastardy prosecution—A civil suit. A prosecution for bastardy is in effect but a civil suit, though conducted under some of the forms of a criminal proceeding. Robie v. McNiece, 7 Vt. 419. Gray v. Fulsome, 7 Vt. 452. Gaffery v. Austin, 8 Vt. 70. Holcomb v. Stimpson, 8 Vt. 141. Allard v. Bingham, 8 Vt. 470. Coomes v. Knapp, 11 Vt. 543. Spears v. Forrest, 15 Vt. 435.

4. It requires no minute of the true day, &c., when the complaint was exhibited. Spears v. Forrest.

5. Defects of form in a bastardy prosecution are cured by verdict, this being a civil proceeding. Robie v. McNiece, 7 Vt. 419; as, that the complaint was not signed by the complainant; and that the justice returned to the county court copies instead of the original papers. Ramo v. Wilson, 24 Vt. 517.

6. In a bastardy prosecution, costs are to be taxed in favor of the defendant, where he is discharged, whether the judgment be rendered on a verdict, or on demurrer, or on quashing the proceedings, or on non-suit,—as in other civil suits. Allard v. Bingham, 8 Vt. 470.

7. A prosecution for bastardy is not such a "civil cause" as is reviewable under the statute. Robinson v. Dana, 16 Vt. 474. Sweet v. Sherman, 21 Vt. 28.

8. When maintainable. A bastardy prosecution may be maintained in the name of a married woman, where the child was born before her marriage,—her husband in such case joining in the request and prayer for a warrant. Sisco v. Harmon, 9 Vt. 129. But not where the child was conceived and born during her coverture, even by proof of non-access of the husband. Gaffery v. Austin, 8 Vt. 70. 9 Vt. 133.

9. A bastard child born out of this State, its mother having at the time no domicile within this State, cannot be affiliated, or its maintenance charged upon the father, under our statute. Graham v. Monsergh, 22 Vt. 543. Egleston v. Battles, 26 Vt. 548.

10. But if the mother at the time of the birth is bona fide an inhabitant of this State, the birth of the child out of the State, by accident or during a temporary absence from this State, will not deprive her of the statute remedy against the father. Egleston v. Battles.

11. Where brought. A bastardy prosecution may be brought where the mother resides, irrespective of the place where the child was begotten. Allen v. Ford, 11 Vt. 367.

12. Complaint. A bastardy complaint must be in writing, and this implies signing by the complainant, by herself, or by some person for her, by her authority. Graves v. Adams, 8 Vt. 130.

13. It is not necessary that the complainant should swear she is a single woman. It is sufficient that she appears before the justice as such, and in that character makes her complaint. Robie v. McNiece, 7 Vt. 419.

14. A bastardy complaint by J G, alleging that the defendant did beget a child on one J G, &c., was held insufficient—"one J G" implying a third person. Graves v. Adams, 8 Vt. 130.

15. The complaint alleged the proceedings to be under a statute which was in fact repealed, but it was good under other statutes. Held, that this was of no importance; no reference to any statute was necessary, since the court takes notice of the general statutes of the State. Blood v. Morrill, 17 Vt. 598.

16. Warrant. An objection for defect in the service of the warrant in a bastardy case, if not made before the justice, is waived and cannot be taken in the county court. Quow v. Conlin, 31 Vt. 620.

17. Copies. Under the practical construction of the Bastardy Act, copies of the proceedings before the magistrate, instead of the original papers, have been sent up and used in the county court, which is, perhaps, the proper course. Sisco v. Harmon, 9 Vt. 129.

18. Although in bastardy proceedings the statute in terms requires the justice to return the original papers to the county court, yet where he returned copies instead;—Held, after verdict, that no objection for this cause lay; that it was the same as if copies had been substituted by order of the court. Ramo v. Wilson, 24 Vt. 517. 32 Vt. 629.

19. G. S. c. 83, s. 11, authorizing the filing of a new declaration in case of the loss, &c., of "the writ and declaration," does not apply to a prosecution for bastardy, where the original complaint, justice's record and warrant are lost. Bingham v. Marcy, 32 Vt. 278.

20. Interposition by overseer of the poor. By the Bastardy Act of 1822 (Slade's Stat. 366, s. 5), where the overseer of the poor neglected for three months to take the control of a bastardy prosecution commenced;—Held, that it might be settled and released by the complainant. Hurd v. Seeker, 12 Vt. 364. (The law is since changed.)

21. A bastardy proceeding cannot be commenced in the name of the overseer of the poor, under G. S. c. 74, s. 17, where the woman had, before her delivery, commenced a prosecution in her own name, and during its progress had compromised it and given a discharge. Norwich v. Yarrington, 20 Vt. 473.

22. Where the overseer of the poor had taken charge of a bastardy prosecution according to the statute, and the mother had afterwards released the respondent, and the town was afterwards secured or indemnified against the support of the child;—Held, that such release was a good defence to the further prosecution of the complaint. Humphrey v. Kason, 26 Vt. 760.

23. In a prosecution against the mother of a bastard, under G. S. c. 74, s. 17, no certificate of the overseer of the poor of his intent to prosecute, as under s. 13, is necessary. Hale v. Turner, 29 Vt. 350.

24. The mother's right. In settlement of a bastardy prosecution commenced by the mother, the father of the child gave her his promissory note, but was afterwards prosecuted by the overseer of the poor and was compelled to give a bond to indemnify the town against the support of the child. The mother always supported the child. Held, that the note was on good consideration, and a recovery by her was had thereon. Knight v. Priest, 2 Vt. 507.

25. Money received by the overseer of the poor in settlement of a bastardy prosecution controlled by him and paid into the town treasury, may be recovered of the town by the mother of the bastard, who supported him until he became old enough to support himself. It was the duty of the overseer, under the statute, to apply the money "solely for the support of the child." Drake v. Sharon, 40 Vt. 35.

26. Settlement. The discharge or compromise of a bastardy prosecution is a sufficient consideration for a note to the complainant.

Hoen v. Hobbs, 1 Vt. 238. Knight v. Priest, 2 Vt. 507. Holcomb v. Stimpson, 8 Vt. 141.

27. A settlement made with the mother of a bastard by the putative father, or her release executed to him, operates only as a satisfaction or release of her own claim, and does not, unless made with the consent of the overseer of the poor, defeat his right to commence or control a prosecution in the name of the mother, or to commence one in her own name. Sherman v. Johnson, 20 Vt. 567. 26 Vt. 764. 29 Vt. 353.

28. Nor will the consent to such settlement by the overseer of the town where the mother resides, avail against a prosecution by the overseer of the town where she has her legal settlement, and to which she becomes chargeable. Hale v. Turner, 29 Vt. 350.

29. Satisfaction by intermarriage. The intermarriage of the parties to a bastardy prosecution, although after the birth of the child, and although control of the prosecution has been assumed by the overseer of the poor, abates and terminates the prosecution. Gordon v. Amidon, 36 Vt. 735.

30. Evidence. The declarations of the plaintiff in a bastardy prosecution are evidence against her in chief, though made after the overseer of the poor has taken control of the prosecution. Sterling v. Sterling, 41 Vt. 80.

31. In a bastardy prosecution, evidence tending to show sexual intercourse between the plaintiff and others than the defendant, and acts of indecent familiarity with them, outside of the time within which according to the course of nature the child could have been begotten, was held inadmissible, either as independent evidence, or as contradicting what the plaintiff had, as a witness, denied on cross-examination. Id.

32. So, also, evidence that the plaintiff endeavored to procure an abortion. Id. See Sweet v. Sherman, 21 Vt. 23.

33. Default. An order of affiliation, and other orders, in a bastardy prosecution, may be made upon default of the defendant to appear. Blood v. Morrill, 17 Vt. 598.

34. Recognizance. The original recognizance entered into before the justice in a bastardy prosecution, conditioned that the defendant shall appear in the county court to answer the complaint and abide the order of the court (G. S. c. 74, s. 3), stands as a security for the performance of the orders of the court, unless there be a surrender of the principal, or a new recognizance be entered into. Simmons v. Adams, 15 Vt. 677. Freeman v. Batchelder, 36 Vt. 13.

35. The liability of bail on such recognizance taken before the justice may be discharged by a surrender of the principal, at the term of the county court when he is required to appear. Mather v. Clark, 2 Aik. 209. Gray v.

Fulsome, 7 Vt. 452. Simmons v. Adams, Supra. 35 Vt. 15. Humphrey v. Kasson, 26 Vt. 760.

36. In order to the discharge of a surety on such recognizance, it is not enough that the principal appear in the county court and defend the suit, but there must be a formal surrender of the principal into the custody of the court, and an exoneretur entered upon the record. Blood v. Morrill, 17 Vt. 598. Humphrey v. Kasson.

37. It is no defense to an action against the surety upon such recognizance, that by reason of the sickness of the principal he could not be surrendered in court. Humphrey v. Kasson.

38. A recognizance under the bastardy act to perform the order of the court, which order included an installment over-due at the time the recognizance was taken, was held valid as to the whole. Hand v. Allen, 25 Vt. 103.

39. Enforcement of order. The mode of enforcing the orders of the court in a bastardy case, upon the recognizance taken by the justice, is the same as is prescribed as to a substituted recognizance in the county court (G. S. c. 74); and a judgment in scire facias upon such original recognizance, for the present worth of the sums by the order made payable in future, was held erroneous. Freeman v. Batchelder, 35 Vt. 13.

40. A judgment in the Supreme court against a surety on the recognizance given in a bastardy case falls within G. S. c. 30, ss. 65-7, and, by s. 68, a scire facias thereon may be brought in the county court. Freeman v. Batchelder, 36 Vt. 292.

As to legal settlement of bastard, see PAUPER, II. 2.

BILL OF LADING.

The indorsement and transfer of a bill of lading as collateral security for the payment of a draft drawn upon the faith of it, was held to transfer the title to the cargo. (This applied to goods transported by railroad.) Tilden v. Minor, 45 Vt. 196, and see Davis v. Bradley, 24 Vt. 55. 28 Vt. 118.

BILLS AND NOTES.

- I. FORM, OPERATION AND VALIDITY.
- II. PRESENTMENT AND ACCEPTANCE OF BILLS.
- III. EFFECT WHERE NOTE IS GIVEN FOR A SUBSISTING CLAIM.
- IV. TRANSFER.

1. Mode.

2. Time of transfer; Holder bona fide—for value.

3. Effect as to cutting off defenses and equities.

4. Demand and notice to charge indorser.

V. ACTION.

1. Note payable in specific chattels.

2. Lost note.

3. Parties.

4. Pleadings.

5. Defenses.

I. FORM, OPERATION AND VALIDITY.

1. Signing. The payor of a note is bound by his signature affixed thereto by the nominal payee by the payor's request. The person so affixing the signature is regarded not so much an agent, as an instrument used by the payor to perform the act by which he binds himself. Haven v. Hobbs, 1 Vt. 238. Bellows v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 608.

2. Delivery. The maker of a promissory note took it from the payee for the purpose of obtaining the signature of a surety, but, after obtaining such signature, refused to redeliver the note. Held, that for want of delivery the surety was not bound by the note. Chamberlain v. Hopps, 8 Vt. 94. 30 Vt. 25.

3. A note given under an agreement not to be used unless signed also by certain others, is not effective in the hands of any person who takes it with knowledge of such agreement, unless fully signed as agreed. Harrington v. Wright, 48 Vt. 425;—and see Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Hathaway, 36 Vt. 539. Holmes v. Crossett, 33 Vt. 116.

4. Void for uncertainty. A note promising to pay J B "sixteen the first day of March next with interest," was held void for uncertainty, and that parol evidence was not admissible to explain it; and that a recovery could be had, counting on the original consideration. Brown v. Bebee, 1 D. Chip. 227.

5. The same was held, where the note was to pay "J. & Wainwright" (a sum named) "in one from the first of Oct. next, in cattle or merch'ble grain by the first of January following, with use." Wainwright v. Straw, 15 Vt. 215.

6. Marginal memorandum. A memorandum made at the bottom or in the margin of a written contract at the time of signing it—and this will be presumed unless the contrary appears—which forms an important qualification of the contract, and especially when this is for the ease of the maker, has the same effect as if inserted in the body of the contract. Whether such memorandum of the place of payment merely is to be considered a part of the contract—quære. Fletcher v. Blodgett, 16 Vt. 26.

7. A promissory note payable in cash one day after date, had a memorandum in the margin "Payable in merchantable fulled cloth in one year, &c." Held, that the note was payable according to the memorandum. Fletcher v. Blodgett.

8. A memorandum on the margin of a note specifying certain items of property at certain sums—as "Stove $26," &c.—the sum total of which, as added, equalled the sum expressed in the note, was held, in an action for money had and received, to be too uncertain to be relied upon to determine that the consideration of the note was other than money. Cummings v. Gassett, 19 Vt. 308.

9. A condition written on the back of a note was treated as if incorporated in the note. Henry v. Colman, 5 Vt. 402. 16 Vt. 29.

10. In an action on a note, upon which an indorsement of part payment appeared erased;—Held, that the note might be read in evidence without first explaining the erasure, such indorsement being no part of the note. Kimball v. Lamson, 3 Vt. 138.

11. Canadian instrument. A writing, signed by the defendant, acknowledging before two notaries in Canada an indebtedness to the plaintiff for value received, and promising to pay that sum to him or order with interest, was held to be a promissory note which could be declared upon as such in this State. Hitchcock v. Cloutier, 7 Vt. 22.

12. Negotiability not essential. An open letter of request from one to another to pay a third person a certain sum of money—as, in this case, an order—is a bill of exchange; and it is not essential to the validity of a bill of exchange, or promissory note, that it should be negotiable. Arnold v. Sprague, 34 Vt. 402.

13. Payable in specific articles. A contract in the form of a promissory note, payable in specific articles, is treated in this State as a promissory note, as to the form of declaring upon it, and the necessity of proof of consideration. Denison v. Tyson, 17 Vt. 549. Brooks v. Page, 1 D. Chip. 340. Devey v. Washburn, 12 Vt. 580.

14. It is so treated with reference to the statute of limitations as to promissory notes witnessed. Meed v. Ellis, Brayt. 203;—although no consideration be expressed in it. Leonard v. Walker. Id. Bragg v. Fletcher, 20 Vt. 351.

15. A recovery can be had on such note in assumpsit, under the common counts for money had and received. Perry v. Smith, 22 Vt. 301. Reed v. Sturtevant, 40 Vt. 521.

16. The indorsee of such a note, though not negotiable, must, in order to charge the indorser, follow the rules of the law merchant with respect to negotiable paper in the matter of due demand and notice. Aldis v. Johnson, 1 Vt. 136.

17. Where a note is payable in collateral articles at a time and place fixed, the maker must, at the time and place fixed, designate the articles he offers in payment. If payable on demand and a demand is made, he must deliver the articles so as to place them at the disposal of the payee. Wood v. Beeman, Brayt. 227.

18. Writing name on the back. One who writes his name on the back of a promissory note, not before being a party to it, assumes, prima facie, the obligation of maker, and may be sued as such, the same as if he had signed the note on its face. But, the indorsement being in blank, parol evidence may be given of the real obligation intended to be assumed—as, of guarantor, indorser, &c. Barrows v. Lane, 5 Vt. 161. Knapp v. Parker, 6 Vt. 642. Flint v. Day, 9 Vt. 345. Nash v. Skinner, 12 Vt. 219. Sanford v. Norton, 14 Vt. 228. S. C. 17 Vt. 285. Strong v. Riker, 16 Vt. 554. Sylcester v. Downer, 20 Vt. 355. 23 Vt. 163.

19. Where the defendant, not a party to a promissory note, wrote his name on the back of it in blank long after it was made, and after it had passed from the payee without his indorsement:—Held, that the defendant could be sued as maker, in the name of the payee, for the benefit of the holder. Strong v. Riker.

20. Where the defendant, in the State of New York, put his name upon the back of a promissory note signed by A and made payable to the plaintiff in New York, for the purpose of enabling A to purchase therewith property of the plaintiff, and the note was so used;—Held, that the defendant was liable thereon as an original promisor; and that this liability was not limited by a declaration of the defendant, at the time he put his name upon the note, that he would stand by such signature only as a second indorser, where this declaration was not brought to the knowledge of the plaintiff. Nash v. Skinner, 12 Vt. 219. 17 Vt. 292. 31 Vt. 320.

21. Other forms. Where in the body of a promissory note the language was: "We the subscribers, jointly and severally, each one for himself, as principal," &c., but one of the signers attached to his signature the word surety;—Held, that he must be treated as surety. People's Bank v. Persons, 30 Vt. 711. Otherwise, in like case—except that the word surety was not added to the signature. Claremont Bank v. Wood, 10 Vt. 582.

22. A promissory note in the terms following: "We, in behalf of the First Methodist Episcopal Society in Middlebury, promise," &c., and signed by the defendants in the usual form without any additions, was held to be, at least prima facie, the note of the defendants and their personal obligation. Pomeroy v. Slade, 16 Vt. 220.

23. The purchaser of the plaintiff's goods of the plaintiff's factor gave his note therefor payable to his own order, and simultaneously indorsed it in blank. Held, that this was in effect a note to the plaintiff, and not to the factor. Blackman v. Green, 24 Vt. 17.

24. The validity of a negotiable promissory note, or the payee's title thereto, is not impeached by the fact that it appears to have been indorsed in full to a third person, but with such indorsement erased. Tappan v. Nutting, Brayt. 137.

25. In cases of promissory notes and bills of exchange, a promise to the agent, naming him and not his principal, although the word agent, or cashier, be added to his name, is a promise to the agent as an individual, and the addition is simply descriptive of the person. Johnson v. Catlin, 27 Vt. 87.

26. A negotiable promissory note given for a patent right, without the words, "Given for a patent right" inserted, as required by Stat. 1870, No. 68, is good in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, who takes it before maturity without notice of what it was given for. Pendar v. Kelley, 48 Vt. 27.

27. So, it is good without these words in the hands of an assignee, though with notice of the consideration, if the patent right was good and formed an adequate consideration for the note,—the statute not declaring such note void, but being designed only to prevent the transfer to innocent and bona fide purchasers. Streit v. Waugh, 48 Vt. 298.

28. Condition. Where a note was given, subject to the condition that it should not be enforced unless there should be a failure of title in C to certain lands by him mortgaged;—Held, that the question of title could be determined in an action on the note, so far as respected the obligation of the note. Reed v. Field, 15 Vt. 672.

29. On demand. There is no difference between a note payable "when demanded," and on demand. In either case, the note is due immediately, and may be sued without demand, and the statute of limitations begins to run from its date. Kingsbury v. Butler, 4 Vt. 458.

30. A note given by one who is a constable, to an attorney, made payable "in officer's fees, as constable," without more, is by legal construction payable on demand or on request. Thrall v. Mead, 40 Vt. 540.

31. Grace. A note dated Aug. 25 and payable, with grace, four years from date, falls due Aug. 28. Ripley v. Greenleaf, 2 Vt. 129.

32. Place of payment. Where a promissory note is made payable generally, no particular place of payment being named therein, the place where it was made is the place of payment, without regard to the residence of the parties or the place of date. Blodgett v. Durgin, 82 Vt. 861, and see Bryant v. Edson, 8 Vt. 325.

33. Where a note is made payable at a particular place—as at a bank—the holder may recover against the maker for non-payment, without averring or proving a presentment and demand. A deposit of the money there, when due, would be a payment of the note. Hart v. Green, 8 Vt. 191.

34. A note made payable to (not at) a bank, like a note payable to an individual person, is, whether negotiable or not, payable wherever it may be in lawful custody. Bank of Newbury v. Richards, 85 Vt. 281.

35. Consideration. The compromise without fraud of a doubtful claim, or contingent liability—as the settlement of a bastardy prosecution—is a sufficient consideration to support a promissory note, and it cannot be avoided by proof that the maker was not in fact or law originally liable. Holcomb v. Stimpson, 8 Vt. 141.

36. Chancery will not relieve the maker of a promissory note given to compromise a pending action for slander, where it does not appear that the action was maliciously brought, or that there was such overreaching and fraud on the part of the payee as makes it unconscionable for him to retain the note. Paris v. Dexter, 15 Vt. 370.

37. Information given in good faith to a party litigant, and disclosing the names of important witnesses in his suit, may be a good consideration for a note. Chandler v. Mason, 2 Vt. 193.

38. The consideration of a note was a quitclaim deed of land of which the grantor had no title, but of which he fraudulently pretended to have title. Held, a good defense to the note. Hawley v. Beeman, 2 Tyl. 288.

39. A note given for a patent right may be defended against, on the ground that the patent was void by reason of its not being for a new invention, although the patent remains unrepealed, and although the pretended patent was conveyed by deed with covenant. Parot v. Farnsworth, Brayt. 174.

40. The right of raising money by a lottery, once granted by the State, but dormant for about thirty years and without regularly appointed managers, was held not to furnish a good consideration for a note given for a purchase of the right. Rogers v. Hough, 4 Vt. 172.

41. A promissory note, the only consideration of which, however expressed, is love and affection, cannot be enforced at law or in equity against the maker or his estate. Holley v. Adams, 16 Vt. 206. Smith v. Kittridge, 21 Vt. 288.

42. A and B executed, each to the other, a note of $2,000, and placed the notes in the hands of a third person under a condition, that if A did not drink more than three glasses [of liquor] a day during his natural life, B's note was to be obligatory; but if A drank more than that number, then his note was to be in force. A forfeited the condition [of course] and his note was delivered to B by the holder. Held, that the note could not be enforced. Conant v. Jackson, 16 Vt. 385.

43. L, being indebted to the plaintiff, procured H to sign a note with him, as his surety, running to the plaintiff, payable in 60 days, which the plaintiff received in payment of L's debt. In procuring the signature of H to the note, L represented to him that he wished to use the money in an operation that he could make immediately profitable, and he had found a friend who would let him have the money on the note. L was wholly destitute of property, insolvent, and so remained. H signed the note, relying upon these representations and that L would realize from his operation and pay the note. In an action against L;—Held, that he was liable on the note. Quinn v. Hard, 43 Vt. 375.

44. Held, also, there being nothing in the facts to create a suspicion of notice to the plaintiff of any fraud, or any suspicion of bad faith on his part, that it was for the defendant, if he imputed any such thing, to prove it. Ib., 380.

45. The légat indendment is, that the payee of a note takes it upon the faith of the persons whose names appear upon it as makers. Smith v. Hill, 45 Vt. 90.

46. Illegal. A note given in whole or in part for the compounding of penalties or suppressing of a criminal prosecution is void, the consideration being illegal. Hinesburgh v. Sumner, 9 Vt. 23. Woodruff v. Hinman, 11 Vt. 592. Boven v. Buck, 28 Vt. 308.

47. A note given for the suppression of a criminal prosecution for obtaining goods by false pretences, is upon an illegal consideration and void; and this, although the representation that such prosecution had been commenced was false, but was acted upon as true, and although the note given is only for the amount of the debt justly due. Boven v. Buck.

Further as to consideration, see CONTRACT, I.

48. Guaranty of genuineness. A person giving a security in payment, or procuring it to be discounted, vouches for its genuineness; but this rule has not been extended to the case where the party, when receiving or discounting the paper, is presumed from his relation to it to have the means of correct knowledge as to its genuineness, or where it has been kept an unreasonable time without notice to the other party of its spurious character. Bank of St. Albans v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 10 Vt. 141. 11 Vt. 520. 19 Vt. 206.

49. On the sale of a promissory note, though indorsed "without recourse," a warranty of its validity is implied. Hunnum v. Richardson, 48 Vt. 608.

50. Recognition. The indorsement of part payment upon a note by the holder, without proof of actual payment, has no tendency to prove the maker's recognition of the validity of the note. Brown v. Munger, 16 Vt. 12.

51. Where the purchaser of property, for which he has given his promissory note, insists upon holding the property under his purchase, this operates as an affirmation of the contract in all its particulars, and he cannot question either the validity or the amount of the note. Harrington v. Lee, 33 Vt. 249.

52. Negotiability of notes. An action does not lie in favor of an assignee of an instrument, in form a negotiable promissory note, but sealed—it being a specialty. Read v. Young, 1 D. Chip. 244.

53. A note payable to order, or bearer, in current bills, cannot be sued in the name of an indorsee—the same not being payable “in money.” Collins v. Lincoln, 11 Vt. 268.

54. A note was made payable to “M, or bearer, on demand, after a lease shall be given up from M to O, dated,” &c. In the absence of any proof as to the length of time the lease was to run;—Held, that the note was payable upon a contingency, and therefore not negotiable, and could be sued only in the name of M. Downer v. Tucker, 31 Vt. 204.

55. The negotiability of a note or bill, or certificate of deposit, is not destroyed by a contingency which depends on an event which necessarily must happen, so that the only contingency, or uncertainty, is as to time; nor, if the contingency, as to time of payment, depends on an act to be done by the holder in reference to the instrument itself, to hasten or fix the time of payment; as if made payable a given number of days after presentment and demand. In such case, the instrument imports an absolute indebtedness. Peck, J., in Smilie v. Stevens, 39 Vt. 315. Bellows Falls Bank v. Rutland Co. Bank, 40 Vt. 377.

56. But where the contingency is collateral to the instrument, and depends on an act to be done, on the performance of which the liability of the party sought to be charged depends, it is not negotiable;—and so held, where a certificate of deposit, in form negotiable, was made payable on the return of a certain outstanding guaranty, given by the signer of the certificate, of a certain note of the payee of the certificate. Smilie v. Stevens.

56. The plaintiff, as bearer, brought suit upon the following note: “Brandon, March 14, 1868. For value received I promise to pay Barzillai Davenport, or bearer, seventy-five dollars, one year from date with interest annually; and if there is not enough realized by good management in one year, to have more time to pay in the manufacture of the plaster bed on Stearn's land. S. A. Capron.” Held, that the note was payable in money, and not upon a contingency but at all events, and was negotiable; the uncertainty as to time of payment being made certain by the law, viz: reasonable time after the expiration of the year, “if there was not enough realized.” Capron v. Capron, 44 Vt. 410.

57. Deposit certificate. A certificate of deposit made payable to the order of the depositor, “on the return of this certificate,” or “on the presentation of this certificate properly indorsed,” is negotiable. Smilie v. Stevens, 39 Vt. 315. Bellows Falls Bank v. Rutland Co. Bank, 40 Vt. 377.

58. County order. An order drawn by the judges of the county court upon the county treasurer, payable to A B, or order, is not negotiable so as that an action will lie upon it in the name of an indorsee. Hyde v. Franklin County, 27 Vt. 185.

59. Town order. A town order, negotiable in form, was held negotiable in Datrymple v. Whittingham, 26 Vt. 345. Cook v. Winhall, 43 Vt. 434. Contra, Taft v. Pittsford, 28 Vt. 288.

60. Time of negotiating, &c. A note originally negotiable ceases to be so by the death of the maker and an adjudication thereon by the commissioners. Jarvis v. Barker, 3 Vt. 445.

61. As it relates to the negotiability of notes payable on demand, and in questions between the indorsee and indorser, and between the indorsee and the maker, they are to be considered as payable in a reasonable time; and what is a reasonable time is a question of law to be decided by the court, on the facts which may be found by the jury. Dennett v. Wyman, 13 Vt. 485.

62. The defendants were partners, and K, one of them, furnished money to be used in the partnership business and took a note therefor, payable to himself or order, signed by himself and the other defendants individually. K's wife became owner of the note and sent it to the plaintiff by K for collection, and K indorsed it to the plaintiff for collection merely. K made no defense. Held, that the plaintiff could recover against all the defendants. Ormabee v. Kidder, 48 Vt. 361.

63. Place of payment—Lex loci. A promissory note payable generally, that is, where no particular place of payment is mentioned, is to be treated as a note of the place or country where made, and to be payable there; and the rights, duties and obligations growing out of it, and matters in discharge of it, are to be determined by the laws of that place, or country. Peck v. Hibbard, 26 Vt. 698.

64. The liability of the maker of a promissory note and to what person liable, whether the payee, indorsee, or a creditor under an attachment by the trustee process, is to be determined by the laws of the State which determine the obligation of the contract. Emerson v. Patridge, 27 Vt. 8. Chase v. Houghton, 16 Vt. 594. Worden v. Nourse, 36 Vt. 756. Wheeler v. Winn, 38 Vt. 122.

65. If the situs of the debt is here, the subject matter being within this jurisdiction, the validity and effect of a judgment, wherever pleaded in defense, would be determined by our law, and not by the law of the foreign forum. So held as to an attachment by trustee process. Ib. See Baylies v. Houghton, 15 Vt. 626.

66. The maker, resident in this State, of a negotiable promissory note drawn and made payable in this State, though to a resident citizen of another State, may be held as trustee of the payee under the trustee process. Chase v. Houghton, 16 Vt. 594.

67. This is so, although, by the laws of the State where the payee resides, such paper is not subject to the trustee process, and although the payee may have transferred the note before its maturity to another resident citizen of that state, if the indorsee fail to give notice of such transfer to the maker before service of the trustee process. Emerson v. Patridge, 27 Vt. 8. Worden v. Nourse, 36 Vt. 756. Wheeler v. Winn, 38 Vt. 128.

68. So, under like circumstances, where no place of payment was specified in the note, but the note was executed and delivered in this State, for a debt contracted in this State, and in part settlement of a business which continued down to the service of the writ;—Held, that the note must be taken to be payable in this State; that the situs of the debt was here, and the law of this State controls; and the maker of the note was held chargeable as trustee of the payee. Worden v. Nourse.

69. A negotiable promissory note, executed by a citizen of this State in the State of Massachusetts, and payable and delivered to a citizen of that State, but without place of payment specified, was held, by intendment, as payable in Massachusetts, and not subject in this State to attachment by trustee process for the debt of the payee, it being exempt from such process by the law of Massachusetts. Baylies v. Houghton, 15 Vt. 626. Approved, Worden v. Nourse, 36 Vt. 760; but the place of execution ought not to be decisive. Peck, J. Ib.

70. Where a promissory note was executed in the State of New York between parties resident there, and was there negotiated while current, but was paid by the maker before maturity, and suit was afterwards brought thereon in this State in the name of the bona fide holder for value;—Held, that the law of New York furnished the rule of decision; and that the maker could not set up such payment in defense, although by the law of this State, as it then was, such payment would have been a defense if this had been a Vermont contract. Harrison v. Edwards, 12 Vt. 648.

71. Where a promissory note was executed and dated in the State of New York and made payable generally with interest, and from the circumstances attending the transaction it appeared reasonably certain that the parties contemplated and understood that it was to be paid in Vermont;—Held, in an action by an assignee who took the note overdue, that interest should be cast at the Vermont rate, six per cent. Austin v. Imus, 23 Vt. 286. [The circumstances were these: The payee, residing on his farm in Addison, Vt., sold the farm to the maker, then residing at Moriah, N. Y. The deed of the farm and this mortgage note with others given therefor, were executed and dated at Moriah, the payee, by the deed, reserving the use of part of the dwelling house on the farm, and part of the fruit, for himself and family, for a time extending beyond the maturity of the notes;—the note read: "For value received in Moriah," &c.]

72. The law of the place of payment of a promissory note determines as to days of grace. Blodgett v. Durgin, 32 Vt. 361. Bryant v. Edson, 8 Vt. 825.

73. The plaintiff residing in New Hampshire, sold to D in Massachusetts where he resided, cattle, and took D's note therefor dated in Massachusetts, payable generally in 15 days from date. The plaintiff brought the note to Vermont where the defendant resided, and the defendant there signed it. Held, that the note was payable in Massachusetts, and the defendant was entitled to grace under the law of Massachusetts. Bryant v. Edson.

74. Upon notes and drafts drawn in this State and payable in New York the current rate of exchange, as customary and legal in that State, was allowed in making up the judgment. Farmers' Bank v. Burchard, 33 Vt. 346.

Further as to the law of place, see CONTRACTS, II. INTEREST, 27 and seq.

II. PRESENTMENT AND ACCEPTANCE OF BILLS.

75. The holder of a bill of exchange made payable in any specified time after sight, or after demand made, must present it for acceptance within a reasonable time; but where the bill is made payable at a given time from the date, he is not bound to present it for acceptance until the day named for payment. Bank of Bennington v. Raymond, 12 Vt. 401.

76. There is no rule requiring that a bill of exchange must be actually shown to the drawee, in order to a valid and binding acceptance. It is enough, if, when applied to for acceptance, he is enabled by seeing the bill, or otherwise, to give an intelligent answer. Fisher v. Beckwith, 19 Vt. 31.

77. A contract to pay an order to be drawn upon a party, binds him to pay it according to the contract, and he cannot change it by a qualified acceptance of the order when presented. Havens v. Griffin. N. Chip. 42.

78. A parol acceptance of a bill of exchange is binding. Fisher v. Beckwith, 19 Vt. 31. Bank of Rutland v. Woodruff, 34 Vt. 92. Arnold v. Sprague, 34 Vt. 402.

79. At common law a parol or oral acceptance of a bill is binding. It is not within the statute of frauds, nor is it void for want of consideration;—for the common presumption is, that the bill was drawn on account of some indebtedness from the drawee to the drawer, and so the acceptance is an undertaking by the drawee to pay his own debt. Fisher v. Beckwith. Arnold v. Sprague.

80. A parol acceptance of a draft is binding; and such acceptance, varying the time of payment from the time specified in the bill, is as binding as if absolute according to the terms of the bill, if the holder receives this as an acceptance. Vt. Marble Co. v. Mann, 36 Vt. 697.

81. The defendants, residing in New York, were drawees of two bills of exchange to which the drawer and indorser were parties only for the accommodation of the drawees. The defendants presented the bills to the plaintiff's agent resident in New York to be forwarded by him to the plaintiff's bank in Vermont for discount for their use, assuring such agent that the bills should be paid, but they did not accept the bills in writing, as required by the statute of New York. The agent presented the bills at the bank in Vermont, and upon his report of what had taken place between him and the defendants in New York, the bank discounted the bills, and the proceeds were sent to the defendants in New York and were used by them. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon the common counts as for money loaned, treating the bills as collateral security;—also, semble, this might be treated as a valid parol acceptance in Vermont, and a recovery be had on the special count for an acceptance. Bank of Rutland v. Woodruff, 34 Vt. 89.

82. The acceptance of a bill by the drawee is prima facie evidence of his having in his hands effects of the drawer to the amount of the bill. Hence, such acceptance and payment will not, of themselves, sustain a count in assumpsit against the drawer for money paid to his use. Chittenden v. Hurlburt, 2 Aik. 183. 19 Vt. 84.

83. A debt due from the drawer of a bill of exchange to the payee is a good consideration for the acceptance of the bill by the drawee; and the acceptor cannot set up, as against the payee, that, as between himself and the drawer, there was no consideration. Arnold v. Sprague, 34 Vt. 402.

84. Where a bill of exchange is drawn upon the party personally, and he accepts it in his own name, he is bound personally although he is in fact agent of another, and this known to the payee. Ib.

85. Where a bill for value is accepted, the acceptor is the party primarily liable, and the drawer is but his surety, or guarantor. The release of the drawer, in such case, by the holder, is a relinquishment merely of so much of his security, and does not affect the liability of the acceptor. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Rathbone, 26 Vt. 19.

86. Where a bill of exchange was drawn and accepted at the time when the drawer had an open account with the acceptor for goods which the drawer was in course of sending to the acceptor for sale, with the apparent understanding that the bill was to be paid by the acceptor and charged in the general account;—Held, that the bill should be treated as drawn for value, and not as an accommodation bill, and imposed upon the acceptor the primary obligation to pay it; and that its legal character, in this respect, was not affected by any subsequent alteration in the balance of the account, nor by the fact, afterwards ascertained, that the drawer was indebted to the acceptor at the time of the acceptance. Ib.

III. EFFECT WHERE NOTE IS GIVEN FOR A SUBSISTING CLAIM.

87. Prima facie payment. A promissory note, either of the debtor or of a third person, given in settlement of an account or for a previous debt, is prima facie payment, so that a suit cannot be maintained upon the original indebtedness, whether the note be paid or not. Hutchins v. Olcott, 4 Vt. 549. Torrey v. Barter, 13 Vt. 452. Farr v. Stevens, 26 Vt. 299. Collamer v. Langdon, 29 Vt. 32. Wait v. Brewster, 31 Vt. 516. 46 Vt. 460.

88. Such presumption may be rebutted by evidence that the note was not received as payment, and whether so received is a question of fact dependent upon the contract or understanding of the parties. Follett v. Steele, 16 Vt. 30. Fare v. Stevens. Collamer v. Langdon. Wait v. Brewster. Dickinson v. King, 28 Vt. 378.

89. Where the creditor accepts either the promissory note of his debtor, or of a third person, in settlement of a previously unsettled matter of account or dealing, this, prima facie, is payment. But if the debtor's note be by mistake defective, so that no recovery can be had upon it, or if such note, or bill, of a third person prove unavailable, without the creditor's fault, he may resort to his original demand. Torrey v. Baister, 13 Vt. 452. 29 Vt. 42-3.

90. Otherwise in case of fraud, &c. Though a promissory note be received in payment of an account or debt, yet if so received by fraud or misrepresentation, or misapprehension as to facts, the creditor supposing other parties to be bound by it who are not, or there be any infirmity in the note by reason of which it cannot be enforced, the intention to receive it as payment is rebutted, and the creditor may sue upon the original debt. Hutchins v. Olcott, 4 Vt. 549. Torrey v. Baister. Farr v. Stevens, 26 Vt. 299. Wait v. Brewster, 31 Vt. 516. Wemet v. Missisquoi Lime Co., 46 Vt. 458.

91. Partnership debt. The taking of the note of one member of a firm on account of a copartnership debt, and receipting the account, is prima facie a satisfaction of the debt against the firm. Stephens v. Thompson, 28 Vt. 77.

92. But this presumption may be rebutted by proof that the note was not received as in satisfaction. Spaulding v. Ludlow Woolen Mill, 36 Vt. 150.

93. Payment only in qualified sense. Where a promissory note is given for an existing debt, the debt still exists although evidenced by the note. In an action for the collection of the debt the creditor, in form, is confined to his remedy on the note; and in this sense, and for this purpose, it is often said in this State that the giving of a promissory note for an existing debt is prima facie payment. But it is not a payment in the sense of extinguishing the debt so as to discharge the creditor's claim upon collateral securities for the original debt, unless so agreed. Pinney v. Kimpton, 46 Vt. 80.

94. Taken as a security. Where a note is taken for an account, but not as payment, a recovery can be had upon the account without a surrender of the note, provided the note remains in the custody or power of the party. But if negotiable, and it has been negotiated, it must be surrendered before the plaintiff can have execution upon his judgment. Street v. Hall, 29 Vt. 165.

95. A promissory note taken in payment of a pre-existing debt, as a former note, is taken upon a valuable and valid consideration; and it is not essential to payment, that the former note should be surrendered. Dixon v. Dixon, 31 Vt. 450.

96. New York law. By the law of New York the taking of a note, either of the debtor or of a third person, for a pre-existing debt, is no payment, unless so expressly agreed. Rosseau v. Cull, 14 Vt. 83. Street v. Hall, 29 Vt. 165.

97. The defendant's account with the plaintiffs was settled by giving therefor the note of a third person, and the plaintiffs receipted the bill as follows: "Received payment by D.

Platt's note at three months, payable at Missisquoi Bank." The whole was a New York transaction. Held, that the receipt, by the law of New York, imported nothing more than that the plaintiffs had received the note, which, if paid, would be payment of the account. Street v. Hall.

98. The plaintiff had an account against the defendants, H & M, as partners, also one against H individually, and another against H & Bro., partners, and settled them all with H, by taking his individual note therefor, payable in four months. M objected to the settlement of H & M's account in that way, preferring that it should be kept separate, and to pay their own debts; but the plaintiff insisted, for the reason that it stood on the ledger to M's account and that he was acquainted with H and was not afraid to trust him. The plaintiff credited the note received and balanced all the accounts so settled, and H charged H & M the amount of their account so included in the note. Two months afterwards, M requested the plaintiff to send him a statement of his account against the then late firm of H & M, and the plaintiff sent one embracing only those items which had accrued since the said settlement. The note was not paid. In an action of book account against H & M to recover the items included in the note, the auditor reported the special facts, and that he "did not find that the plaintiff did expressly agree to accept the note in payment of the account." The court assumed this to be a New York transaction and to be governed by the law of New York, viz., that the taking of a note for a pre-existing debt does not, prima facie, discharge such debt, but that to have such effect, it must appear affirmatively to have been taken with an express agreement that it should be in payment, or discharge, of the debt; and—Held, that there was here such express agreement—that is, an agreement as matter of fact, the result of the mutual understanding and meeting of minds of the parties as distinguished from an agreement which the law implies; and that the account was paid by the note. Robinson v. Hurlburt, 34 Vt. 115.

99. The giving of a note on settlement of a claim does not preclude the party from impeaching the consideration by proof of facts then supposed to exist, but of which he then knew no evidence. Middlebury College v. Williamson, 1 Vt. 212.

100. Statute. After judgment upon a promissory note given for a pre-existing account, for the purpose of determining whether the defendant could be admitted to the poor debtor's oath, the contract was held to have been "made and entered into" at the date of the note. Beckwith v. Houghton, 11 Vt. 602.

101. Consideration. Where a bill or note is taken as a collateral security for a debt, the antecedent debt is a sufficient consideration for the transfer, and the party giving it cannot withdraw it at will; but whether, in such case, the consideration is sufficient to cut off all equities between the original parties to the collateral, where there is no agreement to give time upon the original debt—quære. Austin v. Curtis, 31 Vt. 64. See Atkinson v. Brooks, 26 Vt. 569.

IV. TRANSFER.

1. Mode.

102. By indorsement. The administrator of the payee of a negotiable promissory note may indorse the same, and his indorsee may sustain an action thereon in his own name, as indorsee. Grinbold v. Barnum, 5 Vt. 269. Cahoon v. Moore, 11 Vt. 604.

103. An indorsement of a promissory note made and signed with a lead pencil was held good. Closson v. Stearns, 4 Vt. 11.

104. The words value received are not essential to the validity of an indorsement, in order to pass the legal property and right of action to the indorsee of a note, so long as no terms are employed which tend to negate or restrict his right—as, by directing payment to be made to the indorser's use, or to the use of a third person; nor can the maker defend in an action by the indorsee on the ground of a mere want of valuable consideration for the indorsement, in the absence of illegality and fraud. Snow v. Conant, 8 Vt. 301.

105. Where a promissory note payable to A B, or order, was indorsed, "pay to C D";—Held, that such indorsement was not restrictive, but was in legal effect the same as if indorsed to C D, or order, in terms; and that the indorsee of C D could maintain an action against A B as indorser. Hodges v. Adams, 19 Vt. 74.

106. A promissory note, payable to the order of the payee, was negotiated and indorsed in these words: "Mr. Keyes [the maker], Sir,—please pay the bearer the within without recourse to the indorser," and this signed by the payee. Held, that this was a sufficient indorsement to enable the assignee to maintain an action upon the note in his own name, as indorsee. Keyes v. Waters, 18 Vt. 479.

107. The firm of A, B & Co., a partnership consisting of A, B and C, was dissolved by the death of C. The defendant afterwards executed a promissory note made payable to "the late firm of A, B & Co." B sold his interest in the note to A, and then A indorsed the note, without recourse, in the name of A, B & Co., to the plaintiff. Held, (1), that the note was legally payable to the surviving partners, A and B; (2), that it could be legally indorsed by use of the same names to whom it was in terms made payable, "A, B & Co."; (3), that A being sole owner of the note, could sell and indorse it, and by such indorsement had transferred the legal interest to the plaintiff as indorsee. Douglass v. Hall, 22 Vt. 451.

108. An indorsement of a negotiable promissory note in this form: "I warrant this note collectable when due," is sufficient to transfer the legal title to the note and enables the assignee to sue as indorsee by adding to it an order to pay to himself; but this does not create the same liability as a general or blank indorsement, but is limited and restricted according to the terms used. Benton v. Fletcher, 31 Vt. 418. Hammond v. Chamberlin, 26 Vt. 406. See Partridge v. Davis, 20 Vt. 499.

109. A blank indorsement of a promissory note may be filled up according to the real obligation created by it. But this is mere form and may be made at any time, and, if made wrong, may be corrected at any time; and it is just as well if not made at all. Sylvestor v. Downer, 20 Vt. 355.

110. An indorsement of a blank note, or bill of exchange, without sum, date or time of payment, will bind the indorser to pay any sum, payable at any time, which the person to whom the indorser intrusts it may choose to insert. Mich. Ins. Co. v. Leavenworth, 30 Vt. 11.

111. By delivery. By force of the common law without the aid of any statute, a promissory note payable to A B, or bearer, may be sued in the name of a bona fide bearer, as such, without indorsement. Matthews v. Hall, 1 Vt. 816, Skinner, C. J., dissenting. 3 Vt. 542. 6 Vt. 249. 10 Vt. 162.

112. The actual possession of a promissory note payable to A B, or bearer, is evidence of title in the holder, and of such legal interest as to entitle him to maintain a suit upon it in his own name—the note being transferable by delivery, which is equivalent to an indorsement and passes the legal interest. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 29 Vt. 98. Boardman v. Roger, 17 Vt. 589.

113. Deposit. The case of depositing a note with a third person, upon the terms that he have one-half he can collect upon it, is not understood to vest any interest in the note in such depositary, or as precluding the owner from collecting it himself, if he have an opportunity. Manwell v. Briggs, 17 Vt. 176.

114. Re-transfer. Where a party to a promissory note has, after negotiating it, paid and taken it up, he has, as to all parties prior to him to whom he has the right to look for payment, the same right, and to again transfer it, that he had originally. Norton v. Downer, 33 Vt. 26.

2. Time of transfer; holder bona fide, for value.

115. Presumption. In the absence of proof as to the time when a note was indorsed, the legal presumption is that it was indorsed before due and while current. Washburn v. Ramsdell, 17 Vt. 299. Leland v. Farnham, 25 Vt. 553.

116. So, a note payable to bearer, passing by delivery, is presumed to have come to the party claiming as bearer, before its maturity. Harri-son v. Edwards, 12 Vt. 648.

117. Where a note payable on demand appeared to be indorsed, and there was no proof of the time of the indorsement;—Held, that it should be presumed to have been indorsed at a time earlier than five months after its date, and while current. Leland v. Farnham, 25 Vt. 553.

118. Note payable on demand. A negotiable promissory note, payable on demand with interest, indorsed ten months after its date, was held past due when indorsed, and subject to all defenses that would be available, if the suit had been brought by the original payee. Morey v. Wakefield, 41 Vt. 24.

119. Such a note indorsed two months after date, was held to have been past due when indorsed. Camp v. Clark, 14 Vt. 387.

120. Otherwise, where a note payable on demand was indorsed two days after date. Den-nett v. Wyman, 13 Vt. 485.

121. As relates to the negotiability of notes payable on demand, and in questions between the indorsee and indorser and between the indorsee and maker, they are to be considered as payable in a reasonable time, and what is a reasonable time is a question of law, to be decided by the court on the facts which may be found by the jury. Id.

122. Holder for value. Recognized, as the law of New York, that a negotiable promissory note passed in payment or as security of a precedent debt, is not received "in due course of trade," so as to cut off defenses as against the payee. Russell v. Buck, 14 Vt. 147.

123. Where a negotiable bill or note is assigned and delivered before its maturity, as collateral security for a debt which is created at the time of the assignment, the assignee becomes a holder for value. Griswold v. Davis, 31 Vt. 890.

124. The purchaser of a negotiable note, who gives his own note for the purchase price, is a holder for value in the commercial sense. Adams v. Soule, 33 Vt. 538.

125. One who takes a bill or note indorsed while current, in payment and extinguishment of a pre-existing debt, is regarded as a holder for value. Atkinson v. Brooks, 26 Vt. 574. Dixon v. Dixon, 31 Vt. 450. Quinn v. Hard, 43 Vt. 375. Russell v. Splater, 47 Vt. 273.

126. The plaintiff, a tenant in common with W, in land, requested W to sell it. W sold and conveyed it as his own to the defendant, and took the defendant's notes therefor payable to W's wife or bearer, and was guilty of a fraud in the sale in respect to the boundaries. The plaintiff afterwards conveyed his half of the land to W, and received from W therefor one of said notes while current, and without notice of the fraud of W. Held, that the plaintiff was not a holder for value in the sense of the commercial rule; that this was not a purchase of the note for value, but a division of the avails of the sale of the land, and that the note was subject to the defense existing against it in the hands of W. Kelly v. Pember, 35 Vt. 183.

127. —bona fide. The purchaser of negotiable paper must exercise reasonable prudence and caution in taking it. If the circumstances are such as ought to excite the suspicion of a prudent and careful man, as to the validity of the paper as between the parties to it or the propriety of the transfer, and the purchaser takes it without inquiry, he does not stand in the position of a bona fide holder, but in the position of the party from whom he takes it, though he may have paid value for it. Roth v. Colvin, 32 Vt. 125. Gould v. Stevens, 43 Vt. 125. See Sandford v. Norton, 14 Vt. 234.

128. A, one of a partnership doing business as wharfingers at Port Kent, N. Y., there made three promissory notes in the name of his firm, but beyond the scope of the partnership, amounting to $2,500, payable to the order of C, and delivered them to C without consideration and for the accommodation of C in his business. C indorsed these notes while current to the plaintiff in Troy, N. Y., who discounted them, supposing them to be business notes; but C was then largely indebted to him, and he knew C to be insolvent. In purchasing the notes he relied almost entirely upon N, who, as he was informed and the fact was, was one of the firm and owned considerable property and lived at Burlington, Vt., and the plaintiff did not know the responsibility of the other members of the firm. He made no inquiry as to N's knowledge of the making of the notes, nor whether they were business or accommodation notes. In an action upon the notes the referee reported the above facts, and added: "The referee is of opinion from the facts here found and submitted, that the plaintiff ought, in good faith towards N, to have inquired before taking these notes of C, whether N had authorized the making of them, and was wanting in due and reasonable diligence in not making any inquiry of N, or C, whether the same were accommodation notes merely, and, if so, whether they were authorized by the defendant." Held, that this statement of the opinion of the referee was to be treated as a finding of the fact of a want of due care and diligence on the part of the plaintiff in the purchase of the notes, and as such was conclusive; that the special facts detailed legally tend to support such finding of the referree, and that the plaintiff could not recover against N. Roth v. Colvin.

129. The plaintiff purchased, before due, a negotiable promissory note, at a discount of $50, of a stranger who professing to be the payee's agent. He refused to guaranty payment of the note, but the plaintiff knew the maker, and that he was apparently good. He did not know the payee, and had no communication with him, nor with the maker, nor inquired as to the consideration of the note, but supposed there was no defense to it. The note was in fact without consideration. In an action upon the note, the court directed a verdict for the plaintiff. Held erroneous; that these facts were sufficient to put the plaintiff upon inquiry, and that the case should have been submitted to the jury, to determine whether the plaintiff, on reasonable inquiry, could have ascertained that the note was without consideration. Gould v. Stevens, 48 Vt. 125.

130. Consideration of indorsement. The indorsement of a negotiable promissory note, although as collateral security for a smaller sum due, is irrevocable, and vests the title in the indorsee, and he may recover against the maker the whole amount of the note, holding the surplus, after payment of his claim, in trust for the indorser; and, in such suit, the maker cannot set up in defense any claims of the indorser against the indorsee in respect to the note, the maker being a stranger thereto. Tarbell v. Sturtevant, 26 Vt. 513.

131. The maker of a note cannot defend an action upon it by an assignee, on the ground that the assignee took it of the payee in payment for liquors sold him in violation of law. Streit v. Waugh, 48 Vt. 298.

3. Effect as to cutting off defenses and equities.

132. Statute of 1798. Where the maker of a promissory note, payable to A B, or bearer, is sued by one as bearer, no demand can be pleaded in set-off except a demand against the plaintiff in the action;—distinguished from the case of an action by an indorsee under the Stat. of 1798. Parker v. Kendall, 3 Vt. 540.

133. The statute of 1798, allowing indorsees of notes to maintain actions thereon in their own names, had a proviso securing to defendants such rights of set-off as they had against the original payee before notice of the indorsement. The Stat. Nov. 17, 1836, repealed this proviso, but provided that the act should not impair any right which had accrued under the former act. Held, that the right of set-off as against the original payee, for a breach of the covenant against incumbrances before the passage of the act of 1836 and before notice of the assignment, was saved by that act, and that this right extended to payments in extinguishment of the incumbrance made after the passage of that act, and after notice of the assignment. Alden v. Parkhill, 18 Vt. 205.

134. While the statute of 1798 was in force, allowing the maker of a note to make the same defense against an indorsee as against the payee, the defendant gave his negotiable note, payable in one year, to J, and received therefor from J a deed, and a written agreement to deliver up the note to the defendant whenever the defendant should re-deed or deliver said deed to him, which should be in full payment of the note, and the note be void. J indorsed the note to the plaintiff before due and absconded. Upon notice thereof, the defendant exhibited the contract to the plaintiff and offered to rescind the trade, and to re-deed, and insisted on his right to do so. The plaintiff declined to take a conveyance, and the defendant procured the deed to him to be recorded. Held, that this was a defense to the action by the indorsee. Goodall v. Rich, 13 Vt. 602.

135. Notice given by the payee of a note to the maker, that he had indorsed it, is sufficient notice under the statute of 1798 to protect the indorsee against any after payment or credit to the payee. Stewart v. Barnum, Brayt. 178. 30 Vt. 704.

136. At common law—Transfer before due. In an action by the holder against the maker of a promissory note made payable to bearer, and presumably transferred before due;—Held, that a payment made before the note fell due, but not indorsed, could not be shown in defense. Potter v. Bartlett, 6 Vt. 248.

137. By Williams, C. J. It is not necessary for the holder to show that he paid any consideration for the note, unless the maker can in some way impute force or fraud to him, and the note is not subject to any offset or equitable considerations between the original parties thereto. If the maker shows that the note was put in circulation by fraud or force and throws suspicion upon the title of the holder, or shows that he took it after it became due, he may compel the holder to prove that he paid a consideration for it, or took it in the regular course of business. Id.

138. Where a negotiable promissory note has been assigned before due, the payment of it to the payee, though made in good faith and without notice of the assignment, will not avail against the holder. In such case, if the maker does not find his note in the hands of the payee when it falls due, he should presume, as the law presumes, that it has been transferred, and should pay it when and where he finds it. Notice of such assignment is required for no purpose, except, under the statute, to protect the note from attachment by trustee process for the debt of the payee. Grinwald v. Davis, 31 Vt. 390.

139. The maker of a negotiable promissory note became surety for the payee upon another note, and promised to pay the latter before notice of the transfer of the first, but paid the second after such notice. Held, that such payment could not be applied in set-off as against the first in the hands of the indorsee. Sherwood v. Francis, 11 Vt. 204.

140. The indorsement of a negotiable promissory note, for a valuable consideration while current, by the payee thereof who holds the same in trust, will pass a good title, as against the cestui que trust, to an indorsee who has no notice of the trust. Keyes v. Wood, 21 Vt. 381.

141. Illegality, fraud, duress, want or failure of consideration, is no defense to a negotiable promissory note negotiated before due, and in the hands of a bona fide holder for value. Powers v. Ball, 27 Vt. 662.

142. Knowledge of defense. A promissory note assigned to a party with knowledge of its consideration, though taken before due, is subject to any defense, as respects the consideration, which might be made to it if taken when overdue. Thrall v. Horton, 44 Vt. 386.

143. The consideration of a promissory note was land sold, and the note was assigned by the payee, while current, to the plaintiff having knowledge of the consideration. Held, that a suit then pending against the payee, which affected the title of the land, was not constructive notice to the plaintiff, that the consideration of the note had failed. Sawyer v. Phaley, 33 Vt. 69.

144. Burden and order of proof. Where the plaintiff sues as indorsee of a note or bill, the indorsement in common form imports, prima facie, a bona fide transfer for value, and he is not bound to show, in opening his case, how he came by the note or bill, even where notice to that effect has been served upon him before trial. But where the defendant, either by calling witnesses or cross-examining the plaintiff's witnesses, makes out a case upon which none but a bona fide holder for value is entitled to recover against him, it then becomes incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that he is entitled to the advantage of suing in such a character:—as, that he paid value, and that he was guilty of no want of ordinary care in taking it. Sanford v. Norton, 14 Vt. 228. See Roth v. Colein, 32 Vt. 125. Potter v. Bartlett, 6 Vt. 250.

145. Held, that where a bill has been indorsed for value before due and without knowledge that it was an accommodation bill, the holder may treat all parties to it as liable to him according to their relative positions on the bill, and this right is unaffected by any subsequent knowledge that the bill was given for accommodation. Hence, in such case, the release of the drawer will not discharge nor affect the primary liability of the acceptor; and, by Isham, J., the rule is the same in equity;—and, quære, whether the rule is not the same, where the indorsee had knowledge, at the time he received the bill, that it was given for the accommodation of the drawer. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Rathbone, 26 Vt. 19.

146. Transfer after due. A negotiable note not indorsed, but assigned by parol after due, is subject to all the equity existing at the time in the maker. Foot v. Ketchum, 15 Vt. 258.

147. A promissory note indorsed or assigned when overdue is subject in the hands of the assignee to all equities between the original parties arising out of the note transaction itself, and to the application of all payments thereon, and of any demands due the maker from the payee where there was an agreement to that effect before the transfer;—as, an agreement to apply another note which the maker held against the payee. Britton v. Bishop, 11 Vt. 70;—an account found due the maker on settlement after the note was given. Walbridge v. Kibbee, 20 Vt. 548. 28 Vt. 384;—a like agreement, made at the time the note was given, to apply an existing account, the balance to be thereafter ascertained. Pecker v. Sawyer, 24 Vt. 459.

148. In an action by the holder of a promissory note assigned after it fell due by its terms, a contract made with a former holder to extend the time of payment beyond its terms, and beyond the time of the commencement of the suit, of which the plaintiff before he became owner of the note had notice, was used as a defense. Paddock v. Jones, 40 Vt. 474.

4. Demand and notice to charge indorser.

149. Law merchant. The law merchant, as applied to negotiable promissory notes, was held not applicable to the general circumstances and situation of this State. Rhodes v. Risley, N. Chip. 84. 1 D. Chip. 52. (1791.)

150. In an action by the indorsee against the indorser of a note not negotiable, and indorsed after due;—Held, that the defendant might prove that it was agreed by parol, at the time of the transfer, that he should be liable only in the event that the holder should be unable to collect the note by suit against the maker. Miner v. Robinson, 1 D. Chip. 392.

151. The law merchant, as applicable to demand and notice to charge the indorser of a promissory note, was first adopted in Nash v. Harrington, 2 Aik. 9. Ib. 265. (1826.)

152. In general. There must be due demand and notice back, to charge an indorser, although the maker be insolvent. Ib.

153. What is reasonable notice to an indorser of a note in order to charge him, is purely a question of law, where the facts are found. Ib.

154. To charge the indorser of a note, the holder must present it for payment on the day it falls due and give notice to the indorser of non-payment within a reasonable time; which, according to the general rule, if he resides in the same place, must be on the same, or, at farthest, by the next day, or, if in a different place, by the next post. If the holder gives time to the maker, the indorser is discharged. Whittlesey v. Dean, 2 Aik. 263.

155. The indorsement of a note waiving notice is not a waiver of demand upon the maker; and if demand be not duly made, the indorser will be discharged. Buchanan v. Marshall, 23 Vt. 561.

156. Place of demand. A note was dated Bennington, Vt., Dec. 29, 1838, payable April 1, 1840. At the time the note was executed, the maker resided at Wrentham, Mass. At the time it was indorsed, viz., the spring of 1869, he came to Bennington with a son and daughter, leaving his wife in Wrentham, and began to keep house with his son and daughter, his housekeeper, and was engaged in business there, and remained there personally until July following, when he returned to Wrentham and continued to reside there ever after, but left his son and daughter living in the same house, the son being his agent and a partner in his business at Bennington. Held, that demand of payment made at the maturity of the note, of the daughter at the house, in the absence of the son, was sufficient to charge the indorser, it not appearing that the maker had abandoned his residence in Bennington, or given up the idea of returning to his house there. Sanford v. Norton, 17 Vt. 285.

157. Where a promissory note, executed in the State of New York between parties resident there, but made payable at "Orwell, Vt.," was indorsed to the plaintiff who, as the maker knew, resided at Orwell;—quare, whether any formal demand of payment was necessary to charge the indorser, as the maker had no domicile or place of business at or near the place of payment; but, if so;—Held, that presentation and demand at the Bank of Orwell, the most public banking-house, which was also the plaintiff's principal place of business, were sufficient. Austin v. Wilson, 24 Vt. 630.

158. A note payable at a bank may be presented there for payment at any time during banking hours on the day of its maturity, and if not paid when so presented, the holder is at liberty to treat it as dishonored; and notice thereof, given on the same day, will charge the indorser. Thorpe v. Peck, 28 Vt. 127.

159. Where a promissory note was made payable "at any bank in Boston;"—Held, that demand made at any bank which the holder might elect, was sufficient to charge the indorser—the maker having made no election. Brickett v. Spalding, 33 Vt. 107.

160. Notice, how given. Notice of the dishonor of a bill or note, in order to charge a party, must be addressed to him at the place of his residence, unless he is shown to have a private business place elsewhere. Commercial Bank v. Strong, 28 Vt. 316.

161. Where the defendant resided at Rutland, but was president of a corporation having its office at Poultney, and it was not shown that he had any place of private business at Poultney;—Held, that notice addressed to him at Poultney of the dishonor of a bill of which he was indorser, was not sufficient. Ib.

162. The law does not require that the fact, that notice to an indorser was seasonably deposited in the postoffice, should be proved by a single witness who can swear positively to the fact; but all, who had anything to do about the matter of depositing the notice, should be called. There is no such rule of proof, as that the fact must be established by positive evidence and cannot be left to inference or presumption, although the law requires very great certainty of proof. Ib.

163. Notice of the dishonor of a bill or note addressed to the indorser and directed by mail to the town postoffice in the town where he resides, is sufficient to charge him, notwithstanding there is another postoffice in the town, nearer his residence, and at which he does his postoffice business. Bank of Manchester v. Slason, 13 Vt. 334.

164. If the holder of a note does not know, and cannot by diligent inquiry ascertain the residence of the indorser, it is sufficient to charge him if the holder give notice of presentment and non-payment at the first opportunity. Blodgett v. Durgin, 32 Vt. 361.

165. Case of transfer after due. A note indorsed after due is to be treated, as to demand and notice to charge the indorser, as if it fell due on the day when indorsed. Nash v. Harrington, 2 Aik. 9.

166. Where a note was indorsed after some months due, the indorser and indorsee living in the same village and the maker about two miles distant;—Held, that in order to charge the indorser, demand should have been made in a day or two at the farthest, and notice given to the indorser on the same day of the demand. Ib.

167. Indorsement of paper not negotiable. The assignee of a note not negotiable, who takes upon himself to pursue the maker in the first instance, or the holder of a note in trust, must, in order to charge the assignor, demand payment as in case of a note indorsed, and, if not paid, must forthwith attach the estate of the debtor if to be found, and if not, to attach his body,—unless the maker should abscond leaving no effects, or become bankrupt. Whittleary v. Dean, 2 Aik. 263. (1827.)

168. The assignee by indorsement of a note payable in specific property demanded payment of the maker at the time and place fixed, but without having the note present, and the maker refused to pay it. Held, that the indorser was thereby discharged. Eastman v. Potter, 4 Vt. 313.

169. As to paper not negotiable and not designed for commercial purposes, as an order for payment in specific articles, a demand of payment and notice of non-payment is sufficient to charge the drawer, if he has sustained no damage in consequence of the demand and notice not having been sooner made and given. Hawkins v. Barney, 27 Vt. 392.

170. Void note. The indorsee of a note void in its creation, as for want of consideration, may, upon a proper declaration, recover of the indorser without proof of demand. Chandler v. Mason, 2 Vt. 193. (1829.)

171. Waiver of demand and notice. If the indorser with knowledge of the existence of facts which discharge him, as want of proper demand and notice, promise the holder to pay the note, this operates as a waiver of demand and notice, and is binding. Blodgett v. Durgin, 32 Vt. 861.

172. Such promise is prima facie binding, and if the indorser would exonerate himself therefrom the burden is on him to prove his ignorance of the facts. Nash v. Harrington, 1 Aik. 39.

173. Part payment by the indorser, a promise to pay, or an acknowledgment of liability, after the note becomes due, is prima facie evidence, not only of notice, but of presentment. Bank of U. S. v. Lyman (U. S. C. C.), 20 Vt. 666.

174. The indorser of a note had notice of non-payment, before the expiration of the day on which the note fell due, and thereupon promised to pay it. Held, that this was a waiver of further notice. Seeley v. Bisbee, 2 Vt. 105.

175. The drawer of a bill, five days before its maturity, gave the holder a mortgage to secure the payment of it four months afterwards. Held, that this was a waiver of demand on the acceptor, and satisfied the usual averment of demand and notice in a declaration on the bill against the drawer. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Catlin, 13 Vt. 39.

176. A written admission by the indorser of a bill, made out of court, that he received due notice of dishonor, is evidence of the fact, but not conclusive. He may show that the writing was signed by mistake, or under a misapprehension of facts. Commercial Bank v. Clark, 28 Vt. 325.

V. ACTION.

1. Note payable in specific chattels.

177. Demand. The payee of a note, payable in cattle at the house of the maker on a day certain, called for the cattle at the time and place named, but, at the request of the maker, he agreed to defer the payment and call another day and take the cattle. In a few days after, he did call at the maker's house to take the cattle on the note and made known his business, but the maker was not at home to turn out the cattle. The payee afterwards saw the maker and told him he had called for the cattle as he had agreed. Held, that it was the duty of the maker, after such information, to pay the cattle forthwith on the note; and that having neglected so to do for three months, he was subject to an action and recovery upon the note. Pike v. Mott, 5 Vt. 108.

178. The payee of a note for so many dollars payable in hemlock bark on demand and dated in February, during the summer following,—the summer being the proper time for peeling such bark,—demanded payment of the note, of the maker, requesting him to have the bark peeled that summer and delivered the next winter,—winter being the most convenient time for delivering the bark; all which the maker agreed should be done. Held, that this demand was the most appropriate for such a note, and, that the maker by failing to answer it as he promised, had become liable to pay the note in money, and under the common counts in assumpsit. Read v. Sturtevant, 40 Vt. 521.

2. Lost note.

179. Lost or destroyed. A promissory note lost or destroyed will not be treated as a merger of the original consideration, so as to prevent a recovery counting upon the original indebtedness. Lazell v. Lazell, 12 Vt. 443.

180. Where a note not negotiable, or, if negotiable by being payable to order, not negotiated, is lost, an action at law may be maintained on the note, on proof of its loss, to recover its contents. To defeat such action, it should appear affirmatively that such lost note was negotiable and had been in fact negotiated, or else was payable to bearer, so as to pass by delivery. But if the note is shown to have been negotiable and actually negotiated, and so (probably), if made payable to bearer, and the evidence shows merely the loss of the note and not its destruction, the remedy is in chancery, and the court will require an indemnity to be given before granting relief. Ib. Hough v. Barton, 20 Vt. 455; and see Miller v. Rut. & Wash. R. Co., 40 Vt. 399.

181. On a bill in equity to enforce the payment of a lost promissory note not negotiable, or, if negotiable, not negotiated, an affidavit of the loss is essential to the jurisdiction; but not so an offer of indemnity;—this may be left for the defendant to move. If the note has been negotiated, indemnity should be required. The court, in this case, decreed payment of a lost note without an indemnity, and where the orator had refused to give one—the claim being barred by the statute of limitations at the date of the decree. Hopkins v. Adams, 20 Vt. 407.

182. In an action of indebitatus assumpsit brought to recover for a lost promissory note, in the name of the original payee, by a party to whom he had transferred his interest;—Held, that the fact that the name of the payee was written across the back of the note, at the time he transferred it, did not prove that the note was made payable to order, or bearer, and was therefore negotiable. Hough v. Barton, 20 Vt. 455.

183. Surrendered. A party may, under certain circumstances, recover upon a promissory note, counting upon the note which he has voluntarily given up to be cancelled. Edgell v. Stanford, 6 Vt. 551.

184. If a debtor, by false and fraudulent representations as to his solvency, induce his creditor to give up his note upon part payment, he may still be sued upon it and compelled to pay the balance. Reynolds v. French, 8 Vt. 85. 29 Vt. 415.

185. Mode of declaring. It is not necessary to declare specially on a lost promissory note, as lost. Viles v. Moulton, 11 Vt. 470.

186. Venue. A negotiable note may be sued in the town where the indorsee resides, although the consideration was for goods sold in some other town. (Slade's Stat. c. 12, No. 4.) Ellis v. Kelly, Brayt. 202.

3. Parties.

187. Plaintiff's title. In an action upon a note, not negotiable, no measure of interest in a third person can affect the right of action in the name of the payee—he not dissenting. Sanford v. Huxley, 18 Vt. 170.

188. In an action upon a promissory note, by one having apparent right to sue, the defendant is allowed to raise the question as to the plaintiff's title only for the purpose of protecting himself from a subsequent suit in the name of some one having a better title, and who has not acquiesced in the present suit. Hackett v. Kendall, 23 Vt. 275.

189. In an action upon a promissory note, the defendant cannot contest the plaintiff's apparent legal title and right to sue upon it, provided that the payment, or recovery upon it, will bar any further claim on the note by others. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 29 Vt. 98.

190. Where the plaintiff of record is by the terms of a promissory note a proper party to sue upon it, and assents to the use of his name by the real owner for the purpose of the suit, the action cannot be defeated by denying the plaintiff's title, although in fact the note had never been delivered to the plaintiff, and his name was used in the note without his consent. Boardman v. Roger, 17 Vt. 589. Smith v. Burton, 3 Vt. 233. Hackett v. Kendall, 23 Vt. 275. Bank of Burlington v. Beach, 1 Aik. 62. Keith v. Goodwin, 31 Vt. 268. Bank of Montpelier v. Joyner, 33 Vt. 481. Bank of Newbury v. Richards, 35 Vt. 281. Bank of Middlebury v. Bingham, 33 Vt. 633.

191. And where the real owner has a right to use the name of such plaintiff for the purposes of a suit, the suit cannot be defeated by refusing assent to the prosecution; but an indemnity against costs may be required. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Humphrey, 36 Vt. 554.

192. The owner and holder of a negotiable promissory note may maintain a suit thereon in the name of another who, at the time the suit was brought, was neither owner nor holder, nor had possession of or any interest in the note, but consents that his name be used as plaintiff, and produces the note on trial. Austin v. Birchard, 31 Vt. 589.

193. Where a joint and several negotiable promissory note had been indorsed in blank, and judgment thereon had been recovered against one of the signers in the name of a certain indorsee;—Held, that an action lay against the other signer in favor of another indorsee upon the same indorsement—both suits being for the benefit of the payee who made the indorsement. Sawyer v. White, 19 Vt. 40.

194. Plaintiff's interest—legal or beneficial. No person, although in fact a principal or partner, can sue or be sued upon a bill or negotiable note, unless he appears upon its face to be a party to it. Where a note was made payable to "Samuel Javdon, Esq., cashier, or order";—Held, that an action upon it did not lie in the name of the Bank of the U. S., of which he was cashier. Bank of U. S. v. Lyman (U. S. C. C.), 20 Vt. 666. 23 Vt. 732.

195. It is the settled law of this State (contrary to general commercial law and as held in Bank of U. S. v. Lyman, in U. S. C. C., supra), that an action upon a promissory note may be maintained in the name of the party beneficially interested, where the note is in terms made payable to his agent—as, treasurer, cashier, &c. Rutland & Burlington R. Co. v. Cole, 24 Vt. 33. Arlington v. Hinds, 1 D. Chip. 431. Farms. & Mechs.' Bank v. Day, 18 Vt. 86. Bank of Manchester v. Slason, 18 Vt. 834. Vt. Central R. Co. v. Clages, 21 Vt. 80, and see Perkins v. Bradley, 24 Vt. 66.

196. The action may also be maintained in the name of the person to whom the note is in terms and by name made payable. Binney v. Plumley, 5 Vt. 500. 24 Vt. 89. Johnson v. Catlin, 27 Vt. 87.

197. Upon a note payable to A, "guardian of B," the action must be in the name of A. Wheelock v. Wheelock, 5 Vt. 438.

198. An action upon a promissory note payable to A and B, "Trustees of the Newmarket and Kingston Wesleyan Academy," was held well brought in the name of A and B. Binney v. Plumley, 5 Vt. 500. 24 Vt. 89.

199. An action cannot be sustained by a town treasurer, as such, upon a note given to him as "town treasurer." Hinds v. Stone, Brayt. 230. See 1 D. Chip. 481.

200. The defendant executed his note of the following tenor: "Arlington, Sept. 27, 1808. For value received I promise to pay Luther Stone, Town Treasurer, or his successors in office, eighty-four dollars." It was proved that Stone was Town Treasurer of Arlington, and that the consideration of the note moved from the town. Held, that an action upon the note lay in the name of the town. Arlington v. Hinds, 1 D. Chip. 481. 5 Vt. 438. 8 Vt. 395. 21 Vt. 87. 24 Vt. 89. 27 Vt. 89.

201. A note was allowed against the estate of the maker of a promissory note in favor of "Andrew T. Hall, President of the Tremont Bank." Held, that this was no defense to an action against the indorser brought by the Tremont Bank. Tremont Bank v. Paine, 28 Vt. 24.

202. Where one named agent, or cashier, is the payer of a bill or note which is accepted or given for value, he may, in an action in his own name against the acceptor or maker, recover the sum due upon the common money counts. Johnson v. Catlin, 27 Vt. 87.

4. Pleadings.

203. Declaration—suit by payee. In declaring upon a note payable in specific articles at a given time and place, it is not necessary to aver that the plaintiff was ready at the time and place to receive pay, since the maker may discharge his contract by a tender at the time and place, and is bound to do so, whether the payee attends or not. Devey v. Washburn, 12 Vt. 580. Barney v. Bliss, 1 D. Chip. 399. (Brooks v. Page, 1 D. Chip. 340, overruled on this point.)

204. Where a promissory note, or bill of exchange, is made payable at a specified time and place, it is not necessary that it should be there and then presented, in order to charge the maker, or acceptor. If presentment be averred in the declaration, this is surplusage and need not be proved. It is matter of defense, that the party was ready there and then to pay the debt, and on proof of this fact and bringing the money into court, he will be discharged of the damages and costs, as in case of a tender. Terbell v. Downer, 27 Vt. 509. Hart v. Green, 8 Vt. 191. 16 Vt. 29.

205. In declaring upon a promissory note, it is sufficient to declare simply upon the promise to pay contained in the note, without raising thereupon a liability to pay and a further promise based upon such liability. Binney v. Plumley, 5 Vt. 500. 12 Vt. 580.

206. The defendants were summoned "to answer to the Bank of Montpelier, at," &c., "in a plea of the case for that the defendants by their promissory note dated at Richmond, May 12, 1858, for value received, jointly and severally promised the President, Directors and Company of the Bank of Montpelier to pay them the sum of five hundred and seventy dollars in three months from date, which is unpaid, though demanded." This declaration was held good on general demurrer. Bank of Montpelier v. Russell, 27 Vt. 719.

207. A declaration upon a promissory note payable to A B, or bearer, in which the only averment of the transfer and of the plaintiff's title was, that the plaintiff "is the bona fide owner and bearer of said note," was held sufficient on general demurrer. White v. Tarbell, 27 Vt. 573.

208. Such declaration, not alleging any time of payment, was held good on general demurrer;—the presumption being, that the note was declared upon according to its terms, and therefore, according to its legal effect, as payable immediately, or on demand. Ib.

209. In an action upon a joint and several promissory note signed by four persons, the original declaration counted against the four. The writ having been served only on three, with a non est return as to the other, the plaintiff filed additional counts against only the three on whom service had been made. On demurrer, the declaration was held ill for misjoinder of counts. Claremont Bank v. Wood, 12 Vt. 252.

210. —by indorsee. The indorsee of a negotiable promissory note may recover against the maker under the general money counts. Brigham v. Hutchins, 27 Vt. 569; and this, although he holds the note only in trust for the purposes of collection. Chase v. Burnham, 18 Vt. 447.

211. Whether an indorsee can recover on the money counts in assumpsit against a mere accommodation indorser, known to be such when the note was negotiated,—quære. Austin v. Burlington, 34 Vt. 506.

212. In an action by the indorsee, a concise statement of the indorsement is sufficient;—as that the payee did indorse and deliver the note to the plaintiff—this being a technical word having in law a distinct meaning. Brooks v. Edson, 7 Vt. 351.

213. In a declaration as indorsee of a promissory note indorsed by an administrator, it is not necessary to make profert of the letters of administration, nor to aver by whom they were granted. An averment that the appointment was duly made is sufficient. Cahoon v. Moore, 11 Vt. 604. Griswold v. Barnum, 5 Vt. 269.

214. In an action by the indorsee of a promissory note against the maker, the declaration averred that the defendant made his note in writing payable "to the order of the Treasurer of the Burlington Mill Company, and that said Treasurer indorsed said note before payment to the plaintiff," &c., not otherwise describing said Treasurer or Mill Company. Upon special demurrer, "that said declaration does not set forth to whom the said note was made payable, nor by whom indorsed,"—Held, that it was sufficient. Perkins v. Bradley, 24 Vt. 66.

215. Evidence. In an action by indorsee against indorser, the declaration averred demand of payment and notice of non-payment. Held, that the declaration was sustained by proof of waiver of demand and notice. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Day, 13 Vt. 36.

216. —under general issue. In an action upon a promissory note given for the purchase of land, the defendant cannot, under the general issue, give in evidence the breach of a covenant contained in the deed against incumbrances. Alden v. Parkhill, 18 Vt. 205.

217. Witnessed note. In a declaration counting upon a promissory note in common form, and adding the common money count, the defendant pleaded to the whole action the statute of limitations of six years. The replication, professing to answer the whole plea as to both counts, averred that the action was brought to recover only the note mentioned in the special count, and that that was a witnessed note. On demurrer;—Held, that the replication was ill, as being no answer to the plea as to the common count. Carpenter v. McClure, 38 Vt. 375. The plaintiff then entered a nolle prosequi as to the common count, and amended his replication by averring that the note was a witnessed note;—Held, that the defendant's plea, as applicable to the common count, fell with it, and that the amended replication answered the plea. S. C., 40 Vt. 108.

218. To bring a case within the privilege of the statute of limitations of fourteen years, in a suit "brought on a promissory note signed in the presence of an attesting witness," the declaration must count specially upon the note. If the declaration be in the common counts, a plea of the common limitation of six years is a sufficient bar, though the witnessed note be filed as a specification. Lapham v. Briggs, 27 Vt. 26. Carpenter v. McClure, 38 Vt. 375. S. C., 40 Vt. 108. Dana v. McClure, 39 Vt. 197.

219. A witnessed note may be counted upon in common form, and, upon a plea of the statute of limitations of six years, the plaintiff may reply, that it was a witnessed note, and this is a good answer to the plea and is no departure. Carpenter v. McClure. Bragg v. Fletcher, 20 Vt. 351.

5. Defenses.

220. Payment. In an action by the payee against the maker of a promissory note made payable at a certain day at a certain bank, and in a form to be negotiated at such bank, the defendant offered to prove that the plaintiff told him at the time of the execution of the note that he might mail the money to the plaintiff and he would take up the note for him; and that on the day after the note fell due, he deposited in the mail a letter, containing the money, properly addressed to the plaintiff. The county court excluded the evidence offered. Held, (1), that the defense was not objectionable as tending to vary the terms of the note; that the proposition was a separate and distinct matter from the contract described in the note; that being without consideration it was revocable at will before performance, but that if performed, the note would have been discharged; that if the money had been mailed in due season, its reception would have been at the risk of the plaintiff. But, (2), not having been mailed in season for taking up the note on the day it fell due, the risk was the defendant's, and that, without showing the arrival and reception of the money, the note would not be discharged. Judgment for plaintiff affirmed. Follett v. Eastman, 16 Vt. 19.

221. It was agreed between the parties to a promissory note that the note might be paid by paying certain debts of the payee. Held, that such payments were a defense to an action upon the note by the administrator of the payee. Gilson v. Gilson, 16 Vt. 464.

222. The maker of a negotiable promissory note will be protected in paying or settling it with a holder who has the apparent legal title, where the maker acts in good faith and there is nothing to awaken suspicion of the holder's title. Ellsworth v. Fogg, 35 Vt. 355.

223. It is no defense to an action against the indorser of a promissory note, that it has been allowed against the estate of the maker, nor that the probate court has ordered a dividend to be paid upon it. Tremont Bank v. Paine, 28 Vt. 24.

224. The defendant gave the plaintiff a promissory note, taking back a writing that he was only surety, and that the note was for the plaintiff to pay. The parties afterwards settled, and the defendant on good consideration agreed by parol to pay the note. In an action on the note, the defendant set up the writing in defense. Held, that evidence of the subsequent parol agreement was admissible and was effective against the writing, to reinstate the note according to its terms. Norton v. Downer, 88 Vt. 26.

225. Statute. The fact that a note was purchased for the purpose of putting the same in suit and thereby harassing the defendant, is not a defense to an action thereon brought in the name of the original payee. McOrmsby v. Gilman, 24 Vt. 437. (G. S. c. 125, s. 13.)

226. Note to wife. Where the vendor of property takes a note therefor to his wife, from whom no consideration moves, it is subject to the same defenses as if made payable to himself. Kelly v. Pember, 35 Vt. 183.

227. Failure of consideration. It is a good defense to a note given as payment of a judgment, that the judgment was afterwards set aside on audita querela. Dennison v. Brown, 8 Vt. 170.

228. Where the sale of a patent right for a mowing machine constituted the sole consideration of a promissory note given therefor;—Held, that it was a good defense to the note, as a total failure of consideration, that the patent right was of no value because of a defect in the principle of construction, so that the machine could not be made to work as a mowing machine, although the letters patent were authentic and not vacated. Clough v. Patrick, 37 Vt. 421.

229. Williams v. Hicks, 2 Vt. 86, which is seemingly contra, criticized and limited. Id.

230. Where a promissory note was given for the patent right of a broad cast seed-sower to be used by horse power, and the machine was entirely worthless as such;—Held, that the failure of consideration was total, although it was afterwards discovered that the machine was capable of being cut down and varied in its construction, so as to be operated by hand, —a substantially different thing, and not that for which the purchaser bargained. Craigin v. Fowler, 34 Vt. 326.

231. Partial failure. A partial failure of consideration cannot be set up as a defense pro tanto to an action upon a promissory note, where the sum to be deducted cannot be ascertained by computation, but is unliquidated and subject to the estimation of a jury. Briggs v. Boyd, 37 Vt. 534. Williams v. Hicks, 2 Vt. 39. Walker v. Smith, 2 Vt. 539. Stone v. Peake, 16 Vt. 213. Burton v. Schermerhorn, 31 Vt. 289. 27 Vt. 435. Hassams v. Dompier, 28 Vt. 32. Richardson v. Sanborn, 33 Vt. 75. Harrington v. Lee, 33 Vt. 249. Foster v. Phaley, 35 Vt. 309. Farrar v. Freeman, 44 Vt. 63.

232. Where there is a partial failure of the consideration of a promissory note—as by fraud or misrepresentation—three things must concur to have an abatement in the assessment of damages, viz: fraud in procuring the note for the sum named; an offer to rescind; and ability by computation to fix the amount to be deducted. Barrett, J., in Harrington v. Lee. Walker v. Smith. Stone v. Peake.

233. “If there is such a rule, there ought not to be; it is sustained by no principle of policy, convenience or justice.” Peck, J., in Kelly v. Pember, 35 Vt. 186. Note—This rule is now changed by Stat. 1867, No. 51, when the suit is between the original parties to the note or bill, but not otherwise. Farrar v. Freeman, 44 Vt. 63. Thrall v. Horton, 44 Vt. 386.

234. It is not a defense to an action upon a promissory note, that its consideration, in part, and not liquidated, was a piece of land conveyed with warranty, on which was an outstanding mortgage which the grantee has since paid. Hassams v. Dompier, 28 Vt. 32.

235. The defendant purchased of the plaintiff a pew in a meeting house, and gave the plaintiff his promissory note therefor, and the plaintiff agreed to deed the pew to the defendant in a few days. In an action on the note,—Held, that the plaintiff's neglect to deed the pew was no defense to the note,—for, (1), the promises were independent; (2), the consideration had not failed, it being promise for promise, and the plaintiff's promise remained; (3), the plaintiff's promise was not void by the statute of frauds, but good until avoided by him. Chapman v. Eddy, 18 Vt. 205.

236. The defendant gave his note towards the purchase of a sawmill conveyed with warranty, and, after occupying for two years, his title failed but not so as to make him accountable for the past use. In an action on the note, defense was made that the consideration had wholly failed; but it appeared that the use of the premises was of greater value than the note; against which the defendant urged that he had made improvements upon the premises to more than the value of such use. Held, that the expense of only such improvements could be reckoned against the value of the use, as were necessary to render the use of value. Foster v. Phaley, 35 Vt. 303.

BOND.

1. What is. The word “bond” does not necessarily import an instrument under seal. A railway bond may be negotiable, and may be declared upon in assumpsit as an instrument importing a consideration, like a bill or promissory note, though called in the declaration a "bond." Ide v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 32 Vt. 297.

2. A lost bond of this character was allowed in chancery upon furnishing an indemnity. Miller v. Rut. & Wash. R. Co., 40 Vt. 399.

3. A bond in these words: "We A B and C D are jointly and severally bound," &c., where signed and sealed by A B, C D, and E F, is good against E F. Campbell v. Campbell, Brayt. 38.

4. Delivery. Where a bond contains, in the obligatory part, the names of several persons as sureties, if only a part sign the bond and with an understanding and on condition that it is not to be delivered until signed by the others, it does not become effectual as to those who do sign, until the condition is complied with, although handed to the obligee by the principal signer. Such bond carries notice on its face to the obligee of its incompleteness. Fletcher v. Austin, 11 Vt. 447. 31 Vt. 318.

5. Two parties signed a deputy sheriff's bond and handed it to him with directions not to deliver it to the sheriff, the obligee, until and unless signed by certain other persons, who were named also as sureties in the obligatory part of the bond. The deputy delivered it to the obligee without such additional signatures, and after the expiration of the deputy's office and after he had become liable for official default, the other named sureties signed the bond. Held, that the two who first signed were not liable thereon, without proof of their consent to such subsequent signing and delivery. Ib.

6. Where the probate court, upon the appointment of an administrator, determined the form and amount of the bond and who should sign it, and directed that when so signed it might be delivered to one S, and should be the same as if returned to the judge, and the bond on the same day was so signed and delivered to S;—Held, that it took effect on that day, although it was not returned to the judge and filed in the probate court until 18 days afterwards. Clark v. Tabor, 22 Vt. 595.

7. Official bond. A bond taken by color of one's office is void, if it contain provisions not authorized by law;—as a jail bond to a sheriff, conditioned to behave as a good orderly prisoner, pay board, jailor's fees, &c. Lyon v. Ide, 1 D. Chip. 46. S. C., N. Chip. 49.

8. A condition not provided nor authorized by law inserted in an official bond is void,—as in an administration bond. Probate Court v. Matthews, 6 Vt. 269.

9. A guardian's bond to the probate court was held obligatory and effective, although the condition was not in its details strictly according to the provisions of the statute, but provided, in general terms, for the faithful execution of the office "in all parts thereof, according to the rules and directions of the law," &c. Probate Court v. Strong, 27 Vt. 202.

10. Where a guardian's bond, filed in the probate court, was to A B, Esq., "judge of the court of probate," &c., "to be paid unto the said judge, or his successor in said office," &c.;—Held, that this was an official bond, and was in legal effect a bond to the probate court. Ib.

11. A like bond to "the judge of probate" of a county in New Hampshire was held to be an official bond to the probate court, and not enforceable in this State. Judge of Probate v. Hibbard, 44 Vt. 597.

12. Annual office. A bank charter required an annual election of directors, who should hold their offices for one year and until their successors should be appointed and qualified; and that no director should enter upon or discharge any of the duties of his office, until his bond had been executed and approved, as provided in the charter. M was elected director in 1849 and gave his bond, with sureties, conditioned for the due performance of his duties as director, "while he shall be a director of said bank." M was annually re-elected and acted as a director for several years thereafter, but never executed any other bond. In an action upon the bond;—Held, that it did not cover official defaults occurring after the expiration of the term of office under the first election, viz., one year. State Treasurer v. Mann, 34 Vt. 371.

13. Action—Pleadings. Where the action is founded on a deed, the deed must be declared upon; and in such case the plea of nil debet is ill on general demurrer. So held in an action of debt on a jail bond. Dyer v. Cleaveland, 18 Vt. 241.

14. In assigning breaches of the condition of an indemnifying bond, it is not necessary to aver that the defendant had notice of those facts which constitute a breach of the bond. Topliff v. Hayes, 20 Vt. 362.

15. Declaration on a bond of indemnity, assigning breaches:—After oyer, there was a general plea of non damnificatus concluding with a verification. Held, well enough on demurrer. Williams v. Willson, 1 Vt. 266.

16. In debt upon bond, the condition set out upon oyer appeared to be, that the defendant should make his appearance before certain arbitrators and pay such sum as they should award; and thereupon the defendant pleaded no award. Held ill on demurrer, because not answering the first of said conditions. North v. Johnson, 1 D. Chip. 131.

17. In actions of a certain class—as covenant, or debt on bond with condition—every part of the declaration not answered is admitted. Freeman v. Henry, 48 Vt. 553. Carpenter v. Briggs, 15 Vt. 34.

18. Payments amounting to penalty. In an action upon a bond in the penal sum of $1,000, conditioned to pay the obligee during his life the annual sum of $100;—Held, that the punctual payment of the first ten yearly sums was no satisfaction of the bond, so as to bar an action thereon to recover for further accruing yearly sums during the life of the obligee. Blackmer v. Blackmer, 5 Vt. 355.

19. Tender of performance. Where a bond is conditioned to become absolute upon the performance of a collateral thing by the obligee, a tender of performance, wrongfully refused, has the effect of actual performance so far as to give a right of action on the bond, but has not the effect of performance as to damages. Boardman v. Keeler, 21 Vt. 77. 36 Vt. 720.

20. Form of judgment. The stipulation in the condition of a bond, that if the obligor shall not carry on a particular business, &c., then the bond shall become void, is, under G. S. c. 30, s. 65, in legal effect a "covenant" or "agreement" that he will not carry on such business. And in an action on such bond, where the breaches and the injury may be continuous, or from time to time, judgment is to be rendered for the penalty, and execution to issue only for the damages assessed for past breaches. Marvin v. Bell, 41 Vt. 607.

21. Distinction taken between such case under s. 65, and a case under s. 63, where there can be but one breach and assessment—as on jail bonds; bonds conditioned for the payment of a single sum of money; or the performance of a single service or duty. Id. Williams v. Willson, 1 Vt. 266.

22. Damages—Interest. In an action on a bond conditioned to indemnify against a certain payment, interest on the sum paid, though exceeding the penalty, may be recovered as damages. Williams v. Willson.

23. In an action against the surety on a jail bond, interest in excess of the penalty was refused. Mattocks v. Bellamy, 8 Vt. 463.

24. Construction—Instances. The plaintiff had covenanted to support his mother. A, one of the defendants, as principal, and the others, as sureties, gave a bond to the plaintiff that A should support the mother, and save the plaintiff harmless from such expense by virtue of his said covenant. In an action on the bond;—Held, that the defendants were liable for such support as the plaintiff had furnished for the mother upon the neglect of A to furnish it; and that the plaintiff was not bound to wait for a suit to be brought against him on his covenant, before furnishing the support and charging the defendants; and that the sureties were equally bound with the principal. Seaver v. Young, 16 Vt. 658.

25. A bond to indemnify the plaintiff "from all costs and expenses" in consequence of the plaintiff's making [having made] certain attachments, was held to cover costs and expenses incurred by the plaintiff in defending a suit brought against him for having made such attachments, in which suit the attachments were sustained;—the words used being construed with reference to the subject matter, and the contemporaneous circumstances. Chilsons v. Downer, 27 Vt. 536.

26. The plaintiff, an authorized person, had attached on four writs certain property which was appraised under the statute at $213, and was delivered up to the debtor upon the giving by W to the plaintiff a bond, conditioned to pay the plaintiff, or any officer having executions which might be obtained in said suits, $213, or to indemnify the plaintiff "from all damages and costs which may accrue to him if such payment is not made to him to meet such executions." Before the taking of the bond and the delivery of the property, the plaintiff had been at expense in keeping and appraising it. In one of the suits only was judgment recovered against the defendant therein, and the execution on that judgment was paid by W. In an action against W on the bond;—Held, that he had performed the second alternative of the condition, and that the plaintiff could not recover such expenses. Mason v. Whipple, 31 Vt. 473.

27. Where a bond was given conditioned to become absolute if the obligee should make and deliver a certain number of pairs of boots by certain times named, the obligor to furnish the leather;—Held, that the refusal to furnish the leather was a direct breach of the bond and worked a forfeiture. Boardman v. Keeler, 21 Vt. 77.

BOOK ACCOUNT.

- I. CHARGES;—FORM OF CHARGE AND RIGHT TO CHARGE.
- II. FOR WHAT THE ACTION LIES.
 1. In general.
 2. As effected by agreement and course of dealing.
- III. WHEN THE ACTION DOES NOT LIE.
- IV. JURISDICTION.
- V. JUDGMENT TO ACCOUNT.
- VI. AUDITOR AND AUDIT.
- VII. EFFECT OF JUDGMENT AS A BAR.
- VIII. TENDER.
- IX. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.
- I. CHARGES;—FORM OF CHARGE AND RIGHT TO CHARGE.
 1. Form. Erasures and alterations in a book account do not destroy its character as an original. These only go to its credit, and the book is evidence notwithstanding. Sargeant v. Pettibone, 1 Aik. 355.

2. The form in which a charge on a book is made does not effect the right of recovery in an action of book account. Stone v. Pulsipher, 16 Vt. 428. Gassett v. Andover, 21 Vt. 342. Tobias v. Blinn, 21 Vt. 544; as where it is made in gross. Newell v. Keith, 11 Vt. 214.

3. That the charge was made against a certain party, and the account in form kept with him, is not conclusive evidence that the credit was given to him. Scott v. Shipherd, 3 Vt. 104.

4. A charge on book against a wrong party does not preclude a recovery against the right party. Goodrich v. Drew, 10 Vt. 187.

5. The charge of a party's note on his book is proper and may be adjusted in the book action, where there is a credit entered to which the note was intended to be applicable. Barlow v. Butler, 1 Vt. 146.

6. Right. The general usage and practice of the country is important in determining what is a proper subject of charge on book. Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474.

7. It is no objection to maintaining the action on book, that the charge was not made at the time the right to charge accrued. Kingsland v. Adams, 10 Vt. 201. Nor does the right depend upon the plaintiff's having kept books of account, or accounts in any form, but he may make up his account in court. Bell v. McLeran, 3 Vt. 185.

8. The right to make a charge on book must exist at the time of delivering the article, or performing the service, and cannot depend upon the happening of subsequent events. Slasson v. Davis, 1 Aik. 73.

9. The right to make a charge on book does not require that there should be an immediate and present right of action upon it. It is sufficient, in any case, if an obligation to account for the money or property received results directly from the transaction between the parties. On this obligation, or liability, the right to charge is founded; and it does not depend on the time or mode of accounting, nor on the question whether the obligation is already absolute and perfect, or is subject to be modified by some act or condition to be performed by the other party. That a demand is necessary to perfect the right, is no objection to maintaining the action of book account. Jackman v. Partridge, 21 Vt. 558. Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474. Rogers v. Miller, 15 Vt. 431.

10. In order to entitle the plaintiff to maintain an action of book account, it is not necessary that he should have contemplated making a charge, or even that he should have supposed that he was entitled to make it, provided the facts then existing, but of which he was not apprised, gave him the right to make it. Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520.

11. Property may have been delivered under a contract which gave no right to charge on book; but when a new contract supervenes which changes the ownership, the right to charge and to recover in an action of book account may arise. So, too, of contracts for services. Perry v. Buckman, 33 Vt. 7.

II. FOR WHAT THE ACTION LIES.

1. In general.

12. Concurrent with general assumpsit. In every case, where a recovery could be had under the general counts in assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, labor, &c., and these are the ordinary subjects of book charge, a recovery therefor can be had in the action of book account. Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214.

13. The action of book account, with some few exceptions, is concurrent with the action of general assumpsit. Gassett v. Andover, 21 Vt. 342.

14. Instances. The action of book account lies for a hogshead of gin, Field v. Sawyer, Brayt. 89;—for 2,088 lbs. wool sold and delivered, Leach v. Shepard, 5 Vt. 368;—for lottery tickets lawfully issued and sold, Mills v. Brownell, 8 Vt. 468;—for postages charged by one while postmaster, Sargeant v. Pettibone, 1 Aik. 355;—for fees charged for services as a justice of the peace, Id.;—on a charge for money, Warden v. Johnson, 11 Vt. 455. Chelius v. Woods, 11 Vt. 466;—as for money loaned, or money paid at the defendant's request, Sargeant v. Pettibone, 1 Aik. 355;—or money of the plaintiff received by the defendant from a third person on the plaintiff's order, Stone v. Foster, 16 Vt. 546.

15. Also, for money advanced to be paid for in transportation thereafter to be done, to be adjusted upon the defendant's rendering an account,—where the defendant fails to perform the service. Hickok v. Ridley, 15 Vt. 42;—also, for money paid for the defendant at his request, under an agreement that the defendant would secure the payment by mortgage, which he failed to do. Weller v. McCarty, 16 Vt. 98.

16. Where an application was made to the probate court, by an overseer of the poor, for a commission for inquisition and the appointment of a guardian for an insane person;—Held, that the probate judge could recover of the town, in an action of book account, his fees as judge for issuing such commission, although the application was so defective as not to warrant any proceedings under it. Sargeant v. Sunderland, 21 Vt. 284.

17. It is no objection to a recovery in the action of book account for money, that the defendant gave a receipt for the money, as expressed, "to be accounted for." Boutwell v. Tyler, 11 Vt. 487.

18. All attempts to establish any general rule, as to what may or may not be charged on book, have failed. It is no objection to such action, * that the account consists of a single item,—as a horse sold. The case of Ames v. Fisher, Brayt. 39, for "the domestic spinning jenny," has often been overruled. Kingsland v. Adams, 10 Vt. 201. 21 Vt. 528.

19. The action of book account was sustained for trees growing upon the plaintiff's land, which were cut and carried away by the defendant by the plaintiff's permission. McLeran v. Stevens, 16 Vt. 616.

20. In this action a recovery may be had for charges arising from a former settlement of partnership deal between the parties, where the suit does not involve the closing of unsettled partnership deal and recovering a balance. Snycer v. Proctor, 2 Vt. 580.

21. Sale. For the purpose of recovering the price or value of property, the action on book should be limited to cases of actual sale, or to cases where the party has admitted his indebtedness and liability as upon a sale; in other words, where he has consented that his previous appropriation of the property should be treated as a purchase of it. Royce, J. in Tyson v. Doe, 15 Vt. 571, citing 11 Vt. 79. 12 Vt. 13.

22. Where property has been sold conditionally and payments have afterwards been made towards it by way of services, the services may be charged on book to await a subsequent application; and, in a proper case, as if the vendor disaffirm the contract by taking back the property before such application has been made, the vendee may recover for his services in an action on book, deducting, in a proper case, for the use of the property. Stone v. Pulispher, 16 Vt. 428. Martin v. Eames, 26 Vt. 476.

23. An agent to sell, having sold a part, purchased the remainder of the goods. Held, that the whole amount was properly chargeable on book and recoverable in the book action. Starr v. Huntley, 12 Vt. 13. 15 Vt. 575.

24. Special contract. It is no objection to the maintaining of an action of book account to recover for items otherwise properly chargeable on book, that they accrued under a contract special as to the time and manner of performance, or the time and manner of payment. Austin v. Wheeler, 16 Vt. 95. Stearns v. Haven, 16 Vt. 87. Eddy v. Stafford, 18 Vt. 285. Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191. Waterman v. Stimpson, 24 Vt. 508. 38 Vt. 152. Boardman v. Keeler, 2 Vt. 65. Newton v. Higgins, 2 Vt. 366. Fry v. Slyfield, 3 Vt. 246. Weller v. McCarty, 16 Vt. 98.

25. Where a party sues to recover the stipulated price for services actually rendered under a special contract fully performed on his part, it is no objection to the action on book that the services were performed under a special contract still unrescinded. Myers v. Baptist Society, 38 Vt. 614.

26. Received to account for. Where promissory notes of the plaintiff went into the hands of the defendant to be held or collected as a security for the defendant's account against him, and to be held until such account should be settled, and the plaintiff in fact owed the defendant nothing;—Held, that the plaintiff could, after demand, recover therefor in an action of book account. Woodward v. Harlow, 28 Vt. 338.

27. Money received by an agent to be accounted for, when he becomes a debtor by receipt of the money, may be recovered of him by his principal in the action of book account. Vt. Mutual Ins. Co. v. Cummings, 11 Vt. 503.

28. Where articles have been left with an agent for sale, they may be charged on book, and, when sold, a recovery therefor may be had in the action of book account. Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474. Gallup v. Merrill, 40 Vt. 137. 44 Vt. 308.

29. In an action of book account, one charge was for property of the plaintiff received by the defendant to be sold and accounted for. On the hearing the defendant resisted this item solely on the ground that he had purchased and owned the property. Held, that this justified the inference of a refusal to deliver or account for it, and that the plaintiff could recover therefor. Hickok v. Stevens, 18 Vt. 111.

30. Where the plaintiff took his goods to the defendant to answer on a previous contract between them, and the defendant while receiving the goods wrongfully insisted on applying them to the account of another person, whereupon the plaintiff claimed the goods as his and demanded them or pay for them, which the defendant refused and applied the goods to such other person's credit, and afterwards sold the goods;—Held, that the plaintiff might charge and recover for the goods in an action of book account. Waterman v. Stimpson, 24 Vt. 508.

31. Article manufactured. Where one orders an article manufactured at a mechanic's shop, and it is made according to the order, it may be charged and recovered for in the action of book account, whether it is ever delivered or not. When the order is executed, so that nothing more remains to be done, the title to the thing passes to the vendee, and thereafter it remains at his risk, and he becomes debtor to the vendor for the price, and that is the proper time to make the charge on book. The law is the same where one employs another to procure an article to be manufactured for him elsewhere, or to purchase it for him; and when so procured or purchased, it may be charged on book. Paddock v. Ames, 14 Vt. 515.

32. The plaintiff made for L an organ case, and delivered it before being fully finished, and charged it to L on book. L sold it to the defendant, who agreed with L to pay the plaintiff therefor, and the defendant informed the plaintiff of the transaction, and the plaintiff thereupon erased the name of L from the charge and inserted that of the defendant. Afterwards the plaintiff delivered to the defendant the pillars, trimmings, &c., to finish the case. Held, that the price of the case was recoverable of the defendant in the action of book account. Pangborn v. Saxton, 11 Vt. 79. 15 Vt. 575.

33. Price conditional. The plaintiff sold the defendant a mare for a specified sum, but if she should prove to be with foal the defendant agreed to pay four dollars additional to a third person to whom the plaintiff had agreed to pay that amount. The mare having proved with foal, and the defendant having refused to pay the $4.00;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover that sum in an action of book account. Dwyer v. Hall, 22 Vt. 142.

34. Article lent. Where an article is lent and there is a right at the time to charge for the use of it, its value may be recovered in an action of book account where it is worn out in the use—as a wagon wheel lent—and the form of the charge, whether for the use of the article, or for the article itself, is not material. Stone v. Pulsipher, 16 Vt. 428; or for damage to the article. Gassett v. Andover, 21 Vt. 342.

35. The defendant hired of the plaintiff, for a stipulated price, a derrick to use and to be returned in as good condition as it then was, except the ordinary and natural wear. It was broken in the use, and the plaintiff got it repaired. In an action of book account;—Held, that the damage to the machine was caused by the use, and that a depreciation of its value in consequence of the use, to the extent of the repairs made, was properly adjusted in the account for the use. Woodward v. Cutler, 33 Vt. 49.

36. Some nails were borrowed of the plaintiff to be paid for in nails again. Held, that this was rather a purchase to be paid in kind, than a borrowing for use; that the nails were properly chargeable on book, and that the item was recoverable in this form of action. Case v. McDonald, 39 Vt. 65.

2. As affected by agreement and course of dealing.

37. Matters not in themselves strictly chargeable on book may, not only by express agreement, but even by agreement implied merely from the parties' course of dealing, be adjusted in the action of book account. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507. Case v. Berry, 3 Vt. 332. Hall v. Eaton, 12 Vt. 510.

38. Executions and notes may, by agreement, be charged on book, and may, in such case, be recovered for in this action. Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 136.

39. Where there are running and mutual accounts between parties, and there is an agreement or common understanding that items not properly chargeable on book—as taxes paid by one for the other—shall be adjusted and settled with their other accounts, they may be included in the account and be recovered for in this action. Noyes v. Hall, 28 Vt. 645.

40. Breaches of contract, and matters of unliquidated damages of various kinds and degrees, may be brought into the adjustment of mutual book accounts in the action of book account, if such was the previous express agreement, or the mutual expectation of the parties. Chamberlain v. Farr, 23 Vt. 265.

41. A claim of damages for a trespass or tort may become a matter of contract by the mutual agreement of the parties, and be recoverable in book account; but not without such agreement. Stone v. Black, 37 Vt. 25. Hassam v. Hassam, 22 Vt. 516. Stearns v. Dillingham, 22 Vt. 624. Winn v. Sprague, Vt. 243.

42. Where an item not properly chargeable on book was presented before the auditor, and the only objection made to it was that it had been paid, and the auditor found that it had not been paid;—Held, that objection could not be thereafter taken that the item was not a proper one to be adjusted in the action on book—consent to the adjustment being implied. Peck v. Soragan, 27 Vt. 92.

43. The defendant held, as his security for his obligation assumed for the plaintiff, a mare and colt of the plaintiff. He sold the mare for enough to satisfy such obligation and retained the colt, admitting his liability to account for them and expressing a willingness to do so when the plaintiff would settle with him all matters between them. In an action of book account;—Held, that the proceeds of the sale of the mare, and the value of the colt, were proper matters of charge and adjustment in the action. Cobleigh v. Stone, 29 Vt. 525.

44. The defendant's cattle having trespassed upon the plaintiff's land and damaged his crop of oats, through the defect of a division fence which both parties were under an equal obligation to keep in repair, the defendant, on being reminded by the plaintiff of the damage done, told the plaintiff that he would allow him what was right for the oats when they came to settle. Held, that this did not amount to a consent to a change in the form of the liability, and warrant a recovery in an action of book account. Winn v. Sprague, 35 Vt. 243.

45. Rent, or the use of land, or other matter not properly chargeable on book, may be adjusted in the action of book account by application as against charges on book agreed or understood to be so adjusted, and claimed on trial. Farrand v. Gage, 3 Vt. 326. 12 Vt. 512. Case v. Berry, 3 Vt. 332. Gunnison v. Bancroft, 11 Vt. 490. 25 Vt. 40. Chamberlain v. Farr, 23 Vt. 265.

46. If a party charges any matter upon book, and claims to recover for it in the action of book account, he cannot object to the other party's bringing into the account any other matter, though not properly chargeable and recoverable on book, upon which it was agreed that such charge should apply. Gunnison v. Bancroft. Farrand v. Gage. Fassett v. Vincent, 8 Vt. 73.

III. WHEN THE ACTION DOES NOT LIE.

47. The action of book account does not lie for a wagon, delivered on a written order containing a special contract as to the time and manner of payment. Whelpley v. Higly, Brayt. 39 (Overruled).

48. Nor where there was a single charge, for a "spinning jenny." Ames v. Fisher, Brayt. 39. (Overruled, 10 Vt. 201.)

49. Sale without delivery. An action of book account for goods sold will not lie, where the sale is not completed by actual delivery. Read v. Barlow, 1 Aik. 145. S. C., 1 Vt. 97. 8 Vt. 218. 18 Vt. 499. 36 Vt. 79.

50. Book account will not lie, in such case, except where assumpsit will, for goods sold and delivered, or bargained and sold. There must be such a completed and perfected contract as that the property has passed to the defendant. Hodges v. Foz, 36 Vt. 74. Bundy v. Ayer, 18 Vt. 497. 13 Vt. 580.

51. Special assignment. Goods assigned to be disposed of and converted into money and the proceeds applied in a particular manner, cannot be recovered for in the action of book account. Allen v. Thrall, 10 Vt. 255.

52. Special damages. This action does not lie to recover damages for the breach of a special contract. Blanchard v. Butterfield, 12 Vt. 451. Smith v. Smith, 14 Vt. 440. Pierce v. Smith, 16 Vt. 166. Bailey v. Bailey, 16 Vt. 656. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507.

53. Nor can unliquidated damages, claimed by either party, be adjusted in this action, whether arising from a tort, or the breach of a contract, special or implied. Smalley v. Soragen, 30 Vt. 2.

54. A claim resting in damages for the breach of a special guaranty—as that goods should pass the custom house under a certain tariff—cannot be recovered in the action of book account. Pierce v. Smith, 16 Vt. 166.

55. Nor does it lie upon a collateral agreement. Smith v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 54.

56. The plaintiff was employed to make shoes for the defendant by the pair, the defendant preparing the work. Held, (1), that the plaintiff could not charge and recover, in this action, for lost time on account of not being kept constantly supplied with work;—this is but damages for the defendant's neglect;—(2), that he could not, for this reason, and without notice to the defendant, charge his services by the month. Blanchard v. Butterfield, 12 Vt. 451.

57. By contract between the parties, the plaintiff was to furnish plough irons, the defendant to wood them and return half the ploughs. The defendant set aside, as the plaintiff's property, twelve ploughs thus wooded for him under the contract, six of which were afterwards attached and sold on execution as the property of the defendant. Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain an action of book account for the value of the six ploughs so sold. Tyson v. Doe, 15 Vt. 571.

58. In an action on book to recover for services of the plaintiff's minor son whom he had hired out to the defendant for a specified term, at a specified price per month;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover only for the time of actual service, whether or not the defendant wrongfully suffered the minor to leave service, or turned him off. Hennessy v. Stewart, 31 Vt. 486.

59. Intermixture. This action does not lie to recover the value of goods which the plaintiff negligently intermixed with those of the defendant, and which were used by the defendant. Pratt v. Bryant, 20 Vt. 333.

60. Usury. Goods delivered in payment of usurious interest cannot be charged and recovered for in this action. A recovery in such case can be had only in the mode pointed out by the statute. Allen v. Thrall, 10 Vt. 255.

61. Money lost. A claim for money lost by the negligence of an employé cannot be recovered of him in an action of book account, where he denies his liability and does not consent to its being so adjusted. Chase v. Spencer, 27 Vt. 412; and see Drury v. Douglas, 35 Vt. 474.

62. —due on note. A sum due upon a promissory note cannot be charged and recovered for on book. Stevens v. Damon, 29 Vt. 521.

63. —collected by attorney. Without an agreement express or implied to that effect, money collected by an attorney cannot be charged and adjusted in the action of book account. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507. Farrand v. Gage, 3 Vt. 326.

64. Rent. So, as to the use and occupation of land,—or rent. Ib. Hitchcock v. Smith, Brayt. 39. Case v. Berry, 3 Vt. 332. Nichols v. Packard, 16 Vt. 91.

65. Costs of arbitration. The costs and expenses of an arbitration, revoked before award made, cannot be recovered in an action of book account, against the party revoking. Bryant v. Clifford, 27 Vt. 664.

66. Articles lent. Tools lent not to be worn out by use and not damaged, nor a return demanded, cannot be recovered for in this action, though not returned. Scott v. Brigham, 27 Vt. 561.

67. The plaintiff borrowed the defendant's chain and broke it. Held, that the plaintiff could not, in an action of book account, recover the expense paid for mending the chain. Ib.

68. —bailed for sale. A party cannot recover in this action for items which he could not recover under the common counts in general assumpsit;—as, for articles bailed for sale which are not sold, but which the defendant merely refused to deliver on demand. Kidder v. Soules, 44 Vt. 303.

69. Tenants in common, &c. One of two tenants in common of personal property cannot recover of the other, in an action of book account, for having used more than his share of the common property. Albee v. Fairbanks, 10 Vt. 314. McCrillis v. Banks, 19 Vt. 442. 21 Vt. 560.

70. Where one joint owner or tenant in common appropriates more than his share, the excess cannot be recovered in this action, although so done by consent and under an agreement to account on final settlement. Briggs v. Brewster, 23 Vt. 100. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507. (Changed by Stat. 1852.)

71. Joint action. In a joint action of book account, the defendant cannot be allowed for items due from the plaintiffs severally. Gleason v. Vermont Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 37.

72. Waiving tort. In a matter of trespass, or tort, the plaintiff cannot waive the tort and recover therefor in book account, nor in assumpsit. Peach v. Mills, 14 Vt. 371. McCrillis v. Banks, 19 Vt. 442. Hassam v. Hassam, 22 Vt. 516. Stearns v. Dillingham, 22 Vt. 624. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507. Drury v. Douglas, 35 Vt. 474.

73. No part of account due at commencement of suit. This action cannot be sustained if no part of the plaintiff's account had become due at the commencement of the suit, although it had all become due before the audit. Wetherell v. Everts, 17 Vt. 219. 24 Vt. 42.

74. Items of account proper. The Statute of 1852 (G. S. c. 41, s. 18) does not extend to cases where the entire account is a partnership dealing, and there are no items properly chargeable on book and recoverable in the action of book account. Green v. Chapman, 27 Vt. 236. Duryea v. Whitcomb, 31 Vt. 395.

75. It is foreign from the letter and spirit of G. S. c. 41, s. 18, to allow a party whose principal matter of controversy properly belongs to the action of account, but who has few items of book account disconnected with, or rising incidentally out of, the principal subject matter, to bring in and settle in the action of book account the principal subject in controversy. Huzley v. Carman, 46 Vt. 462. Hydeville Co. v. Barnes, 37 Vt. 588.

IV. JURISDICTION.

76. Apparent debtor side of book. The debtor side of the plaintiff's book, to be determined by inspection, affords the only rule for determining the jurisdiction of a justice, in the action of book account. It is not affected by an omission to charge what might have been charged, nor by any entries of credit on the defendant's book. Stone v. Winslow, 7 Vt. 338. Beach v. Boynton, 26 Vt. 105.

77. The converse of the proposition must follow, and the county court alone has jurisdiction where the debtor side of the plaintiff's book exceeds $100 [now $200];—certainly where the charges are not either fictitious or made in bad faith. Nichols v. Packard, 18 Vt. 91.

78. The debit side of the plaintiff's claim, as presented, is regarded as his book for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the court; and the fact that such claim was not upon his book, or was not fully proved, unless it was merely fictitious, does not defeat the jurisdiction. Mason v. Potter, 26 Vt. 722.

79. If the debtor side of the plaintiff's book exceeds $100 [G. S. §200], the county court has original and exclusive jurisdiction, which is not affected by the sum ultimately found due the plaintiff. Eddy v. Horton, 27 Vt. 285;—nor by the fact that part of the items have been paid and credited, leaving a balance of a less sum. Reed v. Telford, 10 Vt. 568. Willard v. Collamer, 34 Vt. 594.

80. —as presented and claimed. A justice has jurisdiction in an action of book account where neither the ad damnum, nor the plaintiff's account, as presented and claimed, exceeds $100 [G. S. §200], although the debtor side of the plaintiff's book, in all, may exceed that sum. Fargo v. Remington, 6 Vt. 131. Stevens v. Damon, 29 Vt. 521.

81. — erroneous statement of. Where a party's account is made to exceed the limit of a justice's jurisdiction by an erroneous mode of stating the account, the jurisdiction is not lost. Temple v. Bradley, 14 Vt. 254.

82. In an action on book appealed from a justice, the debtor side of the plaintiff's book, as presented to the auditor, showed a case within the justice's jurisdiction. Held, that the jurisdiction was not defeated by the fact that the auditor adopted such a mode of stating the account as to swell the debtor side of the account beyond the jurisdiction. Mason v. Hutchins, 32 Vt. 780.

83. An article sold with the privilege of return, and returned, and both charged and credited on the plaintiff's book, should not be taken into account to bar a justice of his jurisdiction, the suit being brought in good faith. Page v. Morgan, 28 Vt. 565.

84. Fictitious entries. The plaintiff in an action of book account cannot bring his case within the jurisdiction of the county court by entering in his account a bill of goods paid for and receipted on delivery, and which was not charged in account at the time. Nelson v. Emery, 17 Vt. 579.

85. A party cannot give a court jurisdiction by making figures on paper that he concedes do not represent the amount of the claim he holds, or designs to make; nor by changing the figures of charges on an original book, correctly made, to larger figures upon a draft of account, without right. Scott v. McDonough, 39 Vt. 203.

86. Stating balances. Book account, brought to the county court.—The plaintiff's whole account was over $100; but he and the defendant had, from week to week, looked over their respective accounts, found balances and carried over the balances to the account of the next week, until they had a final settlement, and the balance then found due was less than $100. Held, that although assumpsit might lie upon an implied promise to pay the balance found due, yet this settlement was not a merger of all previous dealings, though it might be used as evidence to regulate the sum to be recovered; and that the county court had jurisdiction. Clark v. Edgell, 26 Vt. 108.

87. A balance of book accounts found due on mutual settlement may be charged over as an item in the new account, and may be recovered in the action of book account. In such case, the previous state of the accounts does not affect the question of jurisdiction. The parties are witnesses to such settlement. Gibson v. Sumner, 6 Vt. 163. Spear v. Peck, 15 Vt. 566. Warren v. Bishop, 22 Vt. 607.

88. Disputed award. Where the plaintiff's whole account exceeded $100, but it had all been awarded upon by an arbitrator, except an item of $3.20 omitted, and the validity of the award was disputed by the plaintiff;—Held, in an action on book, that the county court had jurisdiction, although the award was held valid and a bar to all the account except such item. Ennos v. Pratt, 26 Vt. 630.

89. Increase of the account. In an action on book brought in the county court, where the debtor side of the plaintiff's book at the time of commencing the suit was less than sufficient to give original jurisdiction;—Held, that jurisdiction was not conferred by a subsequent increase of the account and that the suit must be dismissed at any stage of the proceedings whenever the want of jurisdiction is discovered. Shepherd v. Beede, 24 Vt. 40.

90. Ad damnum. An action on book, returnable to the county court, was dismissed on motion, where the balance declared for and the ad damnum were both within the jurisdiction of a justice. Bates v. Downer, 4 Vt. 178.

91. A judgment of the county court in an original action of book account, where the declaration was in common form without any averment as to the amount of the debtor side of the plaintiff's book and the ad damnum was laid at $100, and where no objection was taken to the action, was held not void for want of jurisdiction, where it appeared from the account made part of the auditor's report, that the debit side of the plaintiff's account exceeded $100. Paul v. Burton, 32 Vt. 148.

92. Apparent debtor side of the account not a conclusive test. In an action of book account, the apparent "debtor side of the plaintiff's book" is not the conclusive test of jurisdiction. Thus, where it is made apparently to exceed a justice's jurisdiction by items charged, or posted, by mistake and not claimed, (Catlin v. Aiken, 5 Vt. 177. Phelps v. Wood, 9 Vt. 399); or so made by the entry of items not properly chargeable on book, or in that account, and not insisted upon, (Scott v. Sampson, 28 Vt. 569. Sheldon v. Flynn, 17 Vt. 238.)—Held, that the justice properly took jurisdiction.

93. Where the "debtor side of the plaintiff's book" was made apparently to exceed a justice's jurisdiction, by including certain items which had been settled by the giving of a note therefor which had been paid, and about this there was no dispute, nor misunderstanding;—Held, that the county court had not original jurisdiction. Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 74.

94. Plaintiff's good faith. An action of book account brought in good faith in the county court, the jurisdiction being fairly doubtful, was sustained. Stanley v. Barker, 25 Vt. 507.

95. In this action the jurisdiction is not left to the choice of the plaintiff, but depends upon the debtor side of his account as an open, subsisting, unliquidated account, irrespective of credits, payments, or offsets. Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 74.

96. Where the statute arbitrarily prescribes the criterion of jurisdiction, as in the action of book account or upon a promissory note, the plaintiff's good faith in bringing his suit in the particular court has little application to the question. Ib. Barrett, J., in Miller v. Livingstone, 37 Vt. 408-9. See Reed v. Stockwell, 34 Vt. 206.

97. Interest on the account. To the sum demanded in an action of book account, and found due, the court added interest so as to exceed the sum demanded, and rendered judgment therefor. Held correct. Dickenson v. Gould, 2 Tyl. 32.

98. In an action of book account before a justice, the addition of interest to the plaintiff's account by consent of the parties in adjusting the balances, was held not to affect the jurisdiction, although if the claim for interest had been presented as part of the debit side of the plaintiff's book, the jurisdiction would have been exceeded. Stone v. Winslow, 7 Vt. 338.

99. It is optional with the plaintiff whether to claim interest upon his account or not; and a justice suit will not be dismissed because, by adding interest, the account would exceed the justice's jurisdiction. Paige v. Morgan, 28 Vt. 565. Catlin v. Aiken, 5 Vt. 177. Stone v. Winslow.

100. The county court has original jurisdiction of an action of book account, although the debit side of the plaintiff's account, as charged, is less than $100, if the interest which was demandable, though not actually charged when the suit was commenced, would raise the claim above that sum—[now $200]. Blin v. Pierce, 20 Vt. 25.

V. JUDGMENT TO ACCOUNT.

101. After judgment to account and a report of auditors, the court refused a motion to arrest judgment, for the reason that the declaration was not according to the statute form,—the judgment to account being an admission of unsettled accounts between the parties. McKoy v. Brown, 13 Vt. 593.

102. The plaintiff has not the right to become non suit, after judgment to account and the case has gone before the auditor. Lyon v. Adams, 24 Vt. 268. 30 Vt. 218. 28 Vt. 444.

103. In the action of book account, the preliminary judgment to account is always rendered without reference to the actual dealings between the parties, or whether any have existed or not. Davis, J., in Hagar v. Stone, 20 Vt. 109. It is little more in point of conclusiveness than an ordinary order of reference. Steele, J., in Smith v. Bradley, 39 Vt. 369. Reed v. Barlow, 1 Aik. 145. Matthews v. Tower, 39 Vt. 438.

104. After a judgment to account, though by default, final judgment in chief may be rendered for the defendant on the report of the auditor. Gordon v. Potter, 17 Vt. 348.

VI. AUDITOR AND AUDIT.

105. Competency and powers. Report by two auditors of the three appointed. Upon proof to the court, that the hearing was had by the two only by consent of the parties, the report was accepted. Booth v. Tousey, 1 Tyl. 407.

106. Under sec. 54 of the judiciary act of 1797 (Slade's Stat. 73), the court could by themselves audit the accounts and ascertain the sum due in an action of book coming into court by appeal, where the defendant suffered a default. Dickenson v. Gould, 2 Tyl. 32.

107. A judge acting as a constituent part of the court cannot appoint himself auditor in a suit; nor can he act both as judge and auditor in the same cause. Campbell v. Wilson, 2 Aik. 118.

108. A person whose wife is first cousin to the wife of one of the parties to a suit is disqualified to act as auditor therein. Clapp v. Foster, 34 Vt. 580.

109. The expression of an opinion by an auditor, before his appointment, upon the facts or the merits of the case, unfavorable to one of the parties, and that unknown to him, may be sufficient cause for setting aside the report, on his motion; but not if such opinion be upon a mere point of law, since the court reviews and determines the law. Fay v. Green, 2 Aik. 386.

110. An auditor allowed a claim in a case where he was interested to disallow it. Held, that the party against whom the allowance was made could not object to the report for this cause. Lovell v. Field, 5 Vt. 218.

111. Special defenses before auditor. The court early settled the practice, that in the action of book account the defendant might omit to plead special matter, and might present it before the auditors as a defense, in whole or in part. May v. Brownell, 8 Vt. 463. 18 Vt. 335.

112. Where a declaration on book was filed in set-off to an action upon a note;—Held, that a plea to such declaration, that the items of such account were received under an agreement that their amount was to be allowed on the note, was insufficient. Blackmore v. Page, 2 Tyl. 110.

113. There is no use in craving oyer, since the party before the auditor is not confined to the oyer. Read v. Barlow, 1 Aik. 145.

114. In the action of book account, the right to plead in bar is as limited, as the right to defend before the auditor is extended. Steele, J., in Smith v. Bradley, 39 Vt. 369.

115. No defense can be specially pleaded, which depends for its effect upon the plaintiff's account, or puts in issue the plaintiff's account. All such defenses must go before the auditors. Porter v. Smith, 20 Vt. 344. Matthews v. Tower, 39 Vt. 433.

116. A plea which puts in issue facts to which the parties may testify before the auditors, is bad. Delaware v. Staunton, 8 Vt. 48. Hall v. Downs, Brayt. 168; and the law is the same since the statute allowing parties to be witnesses in general. Mattheus v. Toner.

117. The non-joinder of a party defendant is matter of defense before the auditors and cannot be pleaded in abatement. Loomis v. Barrett, 4 Vt. 450. Smith v. Watson, 14 Vt. 332. Hagar v. Stone, 20 Vt. 106. (Goddard v. Brown, 11 Vt. 278. Smith v. Bradley, 39 Vt. 369.)

118. The law is the same though the omitted co-contractor resides without the State—since process might have issued against him. Bailey v. Hodges, 19 Vt. 618.

119. A payment, accord and satisfaction, settlement or release, unless it be a release of the action, cannot be pleaded in bar, but may be used in defense before the auditors. Dela ware v. Staunton, 8 Vt. 48. Mattheus v. Toner, 39 Vt. 433.

120. Nor can it be pleaded that the defendants declared against as partners were never partners. Porter v. Smith, 20 Vt. 344.

121. Nor can the statute of limitations be pleaded in bar. Smith v. Bradley, 39 Vt. 366.

122. But in an action of book account by husband and wife, the death of the wife pending the suit cannot be objected to before the auditor. The question is one for the court upon proper motion. Perry v. Whitney, 30 Vt. 390.

123. Distinction in matter of pleading noted, between the action of account and book account. Mattheus v. Toner, 39 Vt. 433.

Note.—By Stat. 1872, No. 54, special defenses, proper for a plea in bar, may be made before the auditor in the common law action of account.

124. Set-off. A mere independent set-off, not a matter of account, cannot be brought in before the auditor, but must be pleaded in the county court. Hassam v. Hassam, 22 Vt. 516.

125. Proceedings. It need not appear of record that an auditor was sworn. This will be presumed unless the contrary appear. Putnam v. Dutton, 8 Vt. 396. Reed v. Talford, 10 Vt. 568. 11 Vt. 201.

126. In the case of three auditors, two may make report, provided the other sit at the hearing, though he may dissent from the majority. Thompson v. Arms, 5 Vt. 546. Newell v. Keith, 11 Vt. 214. 23 Vt. 465.

127. It is not necessary that auditors should convene and organize before giving notice of the time and place of hearing, but such notice may be given by one of the number, usually the one first named, without the presence of the others; nor need they all convene for the purpose of an adjournment; and where the party is once duly notified, he must take notice of the adjournment. Swinton v. Erwin, 8 Vt. 282.

128. An auditor has power, after a cause has been heard and submitted, especially before making up and publishing his report, to open the cause for further testimony. This discretion might be revised in the county court, but error cannot be predicated of it. Chase v. Spencer, 27 Vt. 412.

129. If one of two partners, defendants in an action on book, die after the accounts are submitted to an auditor, he may proceed to audit the accounts notwithstanding. Newton v. Higgins, 2 Vt. 366.

130. Accounts to be adjusted down to time of hearing. The auditor must adjust all the items of account due and payable at the time of taking the account, though not due nor accrued at the commencement of the suit, provided any part was due and payable before suit brought. Ambler v. Bradley, 6 Vt. 119;—and this, although the result be to change the balance and turn the case to the other side. Pratt v. Gallup, 7 Vt. 344.

131. It is the duty of a justice of the peace, in an action of book account, to adjust the accounts up to the time of trial; and of the auditor, in case of an appeal, to the time of the audit. Martin v. Fairbanks, 7 Vt. 97; provided, that any part of the plaintiff's account had become due at the commencement of the suit. Wetherell v. Everts, 17 Vt. 219.

132. This right of the plaintiff to have the accounts adjusted down to the time of the audit and to have his attachment stand as a security for the balance so found due him, is not defeated by an attachment subsequent to his own. Chaffee v. Malarkee, 26 Vt. 242.

133. The plaintiff drew an order on the defendant requesting him to pay C a certain sum to be accounted for to the defendant on settlement. The defendant wrote upon the order an agreement to pay C what might be due the plaintiff after settlement. An attempted settlement having failed, the plaintiff brought this action of book account before a justice and obtained a judgment from which the defendant appealed, and after the appeal paid C the full amount of the order, which exceeded the sum due the plaintiff. Held, that the defendant was entitled to a judgment for the excess. Northrop v. Sanborn, 22 Vt. 433.

134. The bringing of an action of book account is not per se a revocation of a previous authority given the defendant to pay, to a third person, certain items of the plaintiff's account. Unless otherwise revoked, the defendant will be allowed such payments made after suit commenced, though the effect be to change the balance to his side. Id. Walker v. Barrington, 28 Vt. 781.

135. Production of books. In this action a party is not bound to produce his original book of entries, unless required so to do by the auditor, or the court; and this is matter of discretion, first of the auditor, and then of the county court. Held, that it was not error in this case, to allow a disputed account without requiring the production of the original book, although this was insisted upon by the other party. (G. S. c. 41, s. 8.) Ward v. Baker, 16 Vt. 287.

136. Held, that it was not error for an auditor to receive, on the plaintiff's side, a letter written by the plaintiff to the defendant, which he claimed to be a specification of his claim and to contain all the facts upon which it was based, as a sort of original entry—there being no other original entry, and the plaintiff being himself a witness. Houghton v. Paine, 29 Vt. 57.

137. Parties as witnesses. In the action of book account both parties, being made witnesses by statute, may testify to every material fact in relation to the respective accounts proper to be considered in deciding upon the merits of the several claims. Stevens v. Richards, 2 Aik. 81. Burton v. Ferris, Brayt. 78. Fay v. Green, 2 Aik. 386. May v. Corlew, 4 Vt. 12. Hilliker v. Loop, 5 Vt. 116. Whiting v. Corwin, 5 Vt. 451. McLaughlin v. Hill, 6 Vt. 20. Blush v. Granger, 6 Vt. 340. Delaware v. Staunton, 8 Vt. 48. Fassett v. Vincent, 8 Vt. 73. Reed v. Taftford, 10 Vt. 568. Wurden v. Johnson, 11 Vt. 455. Clark v. Marsh, 20 Vt. 338. 22 Vt. 611. Carter v. Wright, 25 Vt. 656.

138. It is otherwise as to matters which occur subsequent to and are independent of the account, as such; as, for example, a tender, a new promise to take the case out of the statute of limitations, and possibly some others. Redfield, C. J., in Clark v. Marsh, 20 Vt. 341.

139. So held, as to a new promise, Paul v. Trescott, 6 Vt. 26. White v. Dow, 23 Vt. 300;—as to a tender, Pratt v. Gallup, 7 Vt. 344;—as to a new promise after a discharge in bankruptcy, Spaulding v. Vincent, 24 Vt. 501.

140. But the party may testify to a credit on account, or payment, although the effect of establishing it may be to save the account from the operation of the statute of limitations. Sargeant v. Sunderland, 21 Vt. 284. Hapgood v. Southgate, 21 Vt. 584. Noyes v. Crushman, 25 Vt. 390.

141. A note, given up to the maker to apply on his account against the payee, may as well be testified to by the party in the book account action, as any other payment. Fassett v. Vincent, 8 Vt. 117.

142. In an action of book account against two;—Held, that the plaintiff might prove by one of the defendants that the other was holden with him. Keeler v. Mathews, 17 Vt. 125.

143. Report—copies of accounts to be annexed. It is not a matter of discretion, but the duty of an auditor, although not requested, to return with his report copies of the accounts of the parties, and a statement of the items of each that he allows, or disallows. Crocker v. Goodnow, 42 Vt. 682. Macks v. Brush, 5 Vt. 70. Flower Brook Mfg. Co. v. Buck, 16 Vt. 290. Read v. Barlow, 1 Aik. 145.

144. And if requested, but not otherwise, he must also report the facts or grounds of allowing or disallowing items. Crocker v. Goodnow. Macks v. Brush. Hoyt v. Clark, 39 Vt. 87.

145. An exception to the report of an auditor, that he has not appended to the report the account of the excepting party, will not be allowed, unless it appear affirmatively, that such an account was presented at the hearing before him. Hill v. Hogaboom, 18 Vt. 141.

146. Special findings. When requested, auditors should report the facts found with the particularity of a special verdict;—upon affidavits showing their refusal so to do, their report will be set aside. McConnell v. Pike, 8 Vt. 595.

147. The report of an auditor stated simply that the account presented was disallowed. Held sufficient,—it not appearing that he had been requested to state the facts or grounds upon which he disallowed the account. Wait v. Johnson, 24 Vt. 112.

148. Report in the alternative. Auditors may submit any question of law to the court, and for that purpose they may report in the alternative. May v. Corlew, 4 Vt. 12.

149. To report facts,—not evidence. An auditor must report facts,—not evidence merely. Stoddard v. Chapin, 15 Vt. 448. 45 Vt. 346.

150. An auditor must report facts, not the evidence of those facts; but the court may make all the presumptions which necessarily follow from the facts reported. Shaw v. Shaw, 6 Vt. 69.

151. How far conclusive. An auditor should report facts, not evidence. His finding of facts is conclusive, and cannot be revised by the Supreme Court. Smith v. Woodworth, 43 Vt. 39.

152. An error in computation made by an auditor is an error of fact, and, when not passed upon in the county court, cannot be revised or corrected by the Supreme Court. Cobleigh v. Stone, 29 Vt. 525.

153. Where an auditor reports the evidence upon which he found a fact, and such evidence tended to prove it, his finding is conclusive; but if the evidence had no such tendency, his finding is erroneous and may be corrected. Hodges v. Hosford, 17 Vt. 615.

154. The finding of a fact by an auditor is usually conclusive upon the court; but if the matter found by him, as a fact, is merely his inference from other facts specially found and stated, and the proper resulting fact is one which the law would infer from the special facts stated, and the auditor makes a mistake in law in his inference, the court may disregard his ultimate finding, and render judgment according to the legal inference. Briggs v. Briggs, 46 Vt. 571.

155. Upon a report of auditors finding that a son had hired with and worked for his father some 33 years after becoming of age, and that he reasonably deserved to have a certain sum therefor; that the father had acknowledged an indebtedness to the son, but "did not find, otherwise than by inference, that the services were performed at the request of the father";—Held, that the report sufficiently showed that the services were performed at the request of the father, under the mutual expectation of a reasonable compensation therefor; and that this was sufficient to entitle the son to recover, without proof of an express promise to pay. The law implies the promise under the circumstances. Way v. Way, 27 Vt. 625.

156. Where the evidence before an auditor has a legal tendency to prove the fact in controversy, his decision upon the weight and sufficiency of the evidence is conclusive. Bagley v. Moulton, 42 Vt. 184. Wood v. Barney, 2 Vt. 369. Phelps v. Wood, 9 Vt. 399. Cottrill v. Vanduzen, 22 Vt. 511.

157. Inference. Whether an auditor comes to his result upon direct and positive testimony, or by inferring facts which might be legitimately inferred from the evidence, is immaterial. His finding is conclusive in either case. Bacon v. Vaughn, 34 Vt. 73. Kent v. Hancock, 13 Vt. 519.

158. All reasonable intendments are to be made in support of the conclusions and judgment of an auditor, and the county court. (See case, as to inferences drawn.) Brudstreet v. Bank of Royalton, 42 Vt. 128.

159. The report of an auditor should not be set aside because the auditor states his conclusion generally, where, upon either of the two grounds stated, it was justifiable upon the evidence. Cahill v. Patterson, 30 Vt. 592.

160. Finding by county court. If an auditor reports the testimony, instead of finding the facts, and a party, without exception or motion to recommit, proceeds to a hearing upon the report, he thereby submits the issue of fact to the court, and such finding cannot be revised by the Supreme Court. Bond v. Clark, 47 Vt. 565.

161. Where the county court, instead of recommitting the report of an auditor, undertakes to decide any question of fact, or to draw any inference of fact arising on the report, such decision is final. Birchard v. Palmer, 18 Vt. 203. Barber v. Britton, 26 Vt. 112.

162. The Supreme Court will only presume in aid of the judgment below, that the county court inferred such facts from the report, as on an examination it can be seen ought to have been inferred. Pratt v. Page, 32 Vt. 13. Stone v. Foster, 16 Vt. 546.

163. In regard to such inferences as may be fairly deduced from the facts stated in an auditor's report, the Supreme Court considers that, in doubtful cases, the construction of the county court is to be regarded as conclusive. Perlinau v. Phelps, 25 Vt. 478.

164. Matters of evidence. If testimony before an auditor could be held admissible in any view, or in connection with any other evidence, it cannot be held, upon exceptions, to have been inadmissible where the report is, that it was offered and admitted "among other things not objected to." Paige v. Morgan, 28 Vt. 565.

165. The admission of evidence for the purpose of proving facts altogether unimportant, which could not have prejudiced the objecting party and which was admissible for another purpose, is not sufficient reason for setting aside an auditor's report. Kendrick v. Tarbell, 27 Vt. 512.

166. An objection to the admission of testimony by an auditor must be taken by exceptions to his report, and a motion to recommit. It is not reached by exceptions to the judgment of the county court. Kidder v. Smith, 34 Vt. 294.

167. Where a witness, interested as bail for the party calling him, testified before auditors against the objection of the opposite party, who, from absence of the record, could not prove such interest;—Held, that the report in favor of the party using the witness should be set aside. McConnell v. Pike, 3 Vt. 595.

168. Affidavits, &c. The Supreme Court will not examine reports of auditors upon affidavits, counter statements, questions of fact, or matters of discretion for the county court, but only upon errors of law. Thompson v. Arms, 5 Vt. 546.

169. Recommitment. A motion to recommit the report of an auditor will not be entertained by the Supreme Court, where the case stands upon exceptions. Any cause for a new trial should be brought forward by petition. Hutchinson v. Onion, 24 Vt. 654.

170. In actions of book account, where it is apparent that all the facts are not stated in the auditor's report, the Supreme Court has, in some cases, been induced to reverse the judgment and recommit the report to the auditor to report more fully,—as in Woodbridge v. Proprietors of Addison, 6 Vt. 204. But the practice has been otherwise, of late, and the settled practice has been for the Supreme Court to deny an application to recommit. Clark v. Whipple, 12 Vt. 483.

171. Where an auditor disallows a charge, the party is entitled to have the grounds of such disallowance stated in the report, and if not so stated, when requested, the report should be recommitted for amendment; but where the objection is first raised in the Supreme Court, it will not be entertained. Goodrich v. Drew, 10 Vt. 187.

172. Where an auditor had reported evidence, but not facts sufficient to warrant the judgment below, the court, after reversing the judgment, remanded the case, on request, for a further finding and report. Walsh v. Pierce, 11 Vt. 32. Hunt v. Haynes, 45 Vt. 346.

173. Where an auditor finds a fact and allows a charge upon improper testimony, the court does not on this account reject the charge, but again refers the subject to the same or another auditor. Warden v. Johnson, 11 Vt. 455.

174. Where exceptions were filed to an auditor's report, and exceptions to the judgment thereon, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment and again referred the cause to the auditor, to make report to the Supreme Court, because the facts were not sufficiently stated to raise the questions of law litigated. Eddy v. Hine, 3 Vt. 389. 10 Vt. 140.

175. Where a report of auditors is wholly rejected, the whole case is again submitted to the same or another board of auditors, who are to hear the whole case anew; or it may be recommitted simply for amendment, or correction, in which case no further hearing will be had; or it may be recommitted to hear testimony as to a particular fact, but this must be by consent of parties. May v. Corlew, 4 Vt. 12.

176. An auditor's report was recommitted to attach copies of the accounts. This the auditor did, stating the items allowed and disallowed, and corrected an error in computation in his first report, but refused a new hearing upon the whole case;—Held correct, but, dictum, if important new testimony had been presented, not in the power of the party at the first hearing, it should have been received. Leach v. Shepard, 5 Vt. 363.

177. On a case being recommitted to an auditor he has a discretion, whether to require the parties to go over anew the whole trial, or not, subject to the direction of the county court. Mason v. Potter, 26 Vt. 722.

178. Mistake suggested. Where parties adjusted their book accounts and agreed upon a balance due, although no settlement was made upon the books, and the accounts were continued as before;—Held, that the auditor in adjusting the subsequent accounts properly refused to go back of the settlement, upon the supposition that there was some mistake in it. The error must be first discovered, and then it may be corrected; but this would not open the whole settled account for examination. Hodges v.

Hosford, 17 Vt. 615. Whiting v. Corwin, 5 Vt. 451.

VII. EFFECT OF JUDGMENT AS A BAR.

179. In the action of book account, either party may sue and insist on an adjustment of the account. If the defendant refuses to present his account, although he may have an account exceeding the plaintiff's, this is no bar to the plaintiff's recovery, unless the defendant shows an agreement, or understanding on both parts, to have the plaintiff's account apply in payment of some claim of the defendant. Scott v. Nichols, 12 Vt. 76.

180. In an action of book account before a justice, the plaintiff omitted to present part of the account on his book, claiming and supposing that it had been settled. The defendant denied the settlement, and presented and claimed an account in his favor which the plaintiff claimed was included in the supposed settlement. The justice found that there had been no settlement, and allowed the defendant's account, giving judgment for the balance between that and such of the plaintiff's account as he presented. Held, that such judgment was no bar, in a subsequent action on book, to a recovery for the items so omitted—the reason for failure to present them on the first trial being sufficient. Stevens v. Damon, 29 Vt. 521.

181. The plaintiff in an action of book account cannot divide his account, and make it the subject of several actions. A judgment in such action is a prima facie bar to all previous existing accounts; but it does not bar items of account not embraced in the judgment because not then due (McLaughlin v. Hill, 6 Vt. 20);—or because omitted by mistake, or other good cause. Warren v. Newfane, 25 Vt. 250. Stevens v. Damon.

VIII. TENDER.

182. In an action of book account brought originally to the county court, a tender made before the commencement of the suit need not be pleaded, but may be proved before the auditor; and if the money tendered be paid to the auditor and be by him sent to the court with his report, it is sufficient. Woodcock v. Clark, 18 Vt. 383.

183. In this action before a justice, a failure to produce the tender in court before the justice is a waiver of it; and to keep the tender good on appeal, it must be produced at the hearing before the auditor, and be returned into court with his report. Sargent v. Slack, 47 Vt. 674.

184. A tender under the statute, after suit brought, can be made in the book action. Peck v. Soragan, 27 Vt. 92.

185. A tender in this action first made before the auditor, though the money is left in his hands, is not effective. Wing v. Hurlburt, 15 Vt. 607. 18 Vt. 336.

186. In an action of book account, the accounts between the parties are considered as entire, and neither can single out a particular item and make a valid tender upon it, and thereby change the balance; and this is so even as to items accruing after the commencement of the suit and before the audit. Pratt v. Gallup, 7 Vt. 344. Wing v. Hurlburt, 15 Vt. 607. 22 Vt. 519.

187. Where an independent claim is pleaded in set-off in an action of book account, a replication of a tender made before the plea pleaded, though after the commencement of the suit, is sufficient. Hassam v. Hassam, 22 Vt. 516.

IX. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

188. The statute of limitations, if not insisted upon before the auditors in book account, cannot be urged as an objection to the acceptance of their report. Newell v. Keith, 11 Vt. 214.

BURIAL GROUNDS.

1. Where land was set out and sequestered for the enlargement of public burial grounds, under G. S. c. 18, s. 9;—Held, that it was not essential to the validity of the proceedings, that the damages awarded to the land owner should be paid or tendered within the ten days named in the statute. Edgecumbe v. Burlington, 46 Vt. 218.

2. The Act of 1868, No. 91, incorporating the Green Mount Cemetery Association, authorized the city of Burlington to transfer and convey to said association the public cemetery in that city known as Green Mount Cemetery, in trust, to support, embellish and manage the same, and to be thereafter under the control and management of said association for the purposes aforesaid. Subsequently, the city set out and sequestered certain of the orator's land by way of enlargement of the cemetery, under G. S. c. 18, s. 9, with the view of transferring the cemetery, thus enlarged, to said association in pursuance of the act. The transfer was afterwards so made, and upon the express trust and confidence that the association should, at their own expense, support and manage said cemetery for purposes of a public burial ground only, conformably to all the laws of the State applicable thereto, and to the provisions of the act of 1868, with a provision for surrender and reverter to the city upon breach of the trust in any respect. Held, that such enlargement did not destroy the identity of the cemetery, and that said act authorized the conveyance thereof, as so enlarged, to the association in the manner above stated; and that the needful enlargement was not rendered unlawful, or ineffective, because of the purpose to transfer the cemetery, after thus enlarged, to the association. Id.

C.

CARRIERS.

1. Common carrier—His liability. The master of a canal boat on Lake Champlain, carrying goods for hire, is a common carrier, and liable as such for all losses not occasioned by the act of God. Spencer v. Daggett, 2 Vt. 92.

2. The charter of the Champlain Transportation Co. extended to the carrying of all goods, wares and merchandise, "and all other articles and things usually transported by water," on Lake Champlain. It appearing that, at the time the company took the charter and went into operation, bank bills were usually carried by water craft upon the lake;—Held, that their powers as a corporation extended to the carrying of bank bills, but did not necessarily constitute the company common carriers of bank bills so as to compel them to assume the risk of such carriage, if they should confine their business to carrying other dissimilar commodities;

but if they assumed the business of carrying bank bills, they assumed the liability of common carriers in respect thereto. Farmers' & Merchs. Bank v. Champ. Tr. Co., 23 Vt. 186.

3. Common carriers by water are not answerable for damage to goods which is occasioned by the act of Providence; but are bound to provide safe and seaworthy vessels, suitable to the season and the difficulties of the navigation. Day v. Ridley, 16 Vt. 48.

4. In an action against a common carrier for loss of goods, evidence of a departure from the usual course of events, as the non-arrival of the goods at their place of destination (Brintnall v. Sar. & W. R. Co., 32 Vt. 665); an unusual delay in the delivery (Mann v. Birchard, 40 Vt. 826); or the landing of the goods out of course (Day v. Ridley, 16 Vt. 48), is sufficient to throw upon the carrier the burden of accounting for the loss. Id.

5. All common carriers are responsible for the loss of goods by a delivery to the wrong person; and it is no excuse, in such case, that they delivered them in the customary manner and in the usual course of business. Winslow v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co., 42 Vt. 700.

6. One Collins, whom the plaintiffs well knew as Collins, fraudulently induced them to send certain goods by the defendants' railway to the address of J. F. Roberts, Boston, Mass., Collins representing that there was such a man who had ordered the goods. There was no such person as J. F. Roberts. Upon the arrival of the goods in Boston, Collins applied to one Clough, who was in the employ of a truckman and accustomed to take freight from the defendants' depot, and, informing Clough that his name was J. F. Roberts, requested Clough to get the goods. Clough went to the depot and, upon informing the defendants' freight agents there that Roberts had directed him to get the goods, they delivered the goods to Clough, who receipted for them in his own name and took away the goods, and delivered them according to Collins's order to parties who had purchased them of Collins, representing himself to be J. F. Roberts. Collins got pay for the goods and absconded. Held, that the defendants were liable for the goods as common carriers; that here was a misdelivery, and, there being no such man as Roberts, the goods should have been held for the consignors; that the error in the direction of the goods did not mislead the defendants, and they were guilty of actual negligence in the delivery, and would be liable even on that ground. Ib.

7. Notice. A common carrier may, by general notice brought home to the owner of the things delivered for carriage, limit his responsibility for carrying certain commodities beyond the line of his general business, or he may make his responsibility dependent upon certain conditions,—as having notice of the kind and quantity of the things, and a certain reasonable rate of premium for insurance paid beyond the mere expense of carriage. Redfield, J., in Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Champlain Tr. Co., 23 Vt. 186.

8. End of transit. The responsibility of a common carrier, as such, continues after the goods have reached their destination, until the party entitled to them has had a reasonable time to call for, examine and take them. Winslow v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co., 42 Vt. 700. Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 402.

9. A wharfinger is as much a public person as the carrier himself; and where the carrier by steamboat or other vessel, in the due and common course of his business, delivers his goods or parcels into the custody of the wharfinger upon the wharf, the transit is ended, and his responsibility as carrier ceases, unless he has, either expressly or by fair implication, undertaken to do something more, Sargy v. Joslin, 20 Vt. 172;—and the question as to the time and place at which the duty of the carrier ends, is one of contract to be determined by the jury from a consideration of all that was said by either party at the time of the delivery and acceptance of the goods for carriage, the course of the business, the practice of the carrier, and all other attending circumstances, the same as in case of any other contract, in order to determine the intention of the parties. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Champlain Tr. Co., 23 Vt. 186. 35 Vt. 619. 38 Vt. 413.

10. Detention for freight. Held, that replevin can be maintained against a common carrier for goods detained by him under a claim of lien for freight and charges, after demand of the goods by the owner and a refusal, in case the damages to the goods, for which the carrier is liable, exceeds the claim for freight and charges. Dyer v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 42 Vt. 441.

11. Private carrier—Agent of necessity. The defendant, a private carrier, contracted late in the fall to transport by canal boat a cargo of oats for the plaintiff from Burlington to New York. Both parties expected that the boat would reach New York that fall, but the boat, without the fault of the defendant, got frozen in on the route, and was obliged to lie by all winter. The safety of the cargo and of the boat required that the oats should be removed and safely stored, and this was done by the defendant. On the opening of navigation, the next spring, the oats were reloaded and delivered in New York. Held, that the defendant could recover of the plaintiff the expense of handling and storing the oats. Beckwith v. Frisbie, 32 Vt. 559.

12. Party to sue. The plaintiffs were common carriers by a boat which, with the merchandise on board, was lost by the default of the defendant in towing it. Held, that as they had a possession coupled with an interest, they could recover the value of the merchandise lost, although they had not paid the owners, nor had been paid for freight of the goods. White v. Bascom, 28 Vt. 268.

13. The consignor who owns the goods and sustains the injury from the damage or loss, is the proper party to bring an action against the carrier. Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 402. See RAILROAD.

CASES CRITICISED—

APPROVED, DOUBTED, OR OVERRULED.

Adams v. Johnson, Brayt. 55, as to protection of equitable assignee, overruled by Strong v. Strong, 2 Aik. 373.

Aldrich v. Londonderry, 5 Vt. 441, criticised in Worcester v. Ballard, 38 Vt. 60.

Ames v. Fisher, Brayt. 39, overruled by Kingsland v. Adams, 10 Vt. 201.

Atkinson v. Brooks, 26 Vt. 569, overruled by Austin v. Curtis, 31 Vt. 64.

Austin v. Austin, 9 Vt. 420, commented on and explained in Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 415.

Barber v. Britton, 26 Vt. 112, as to what presumptions may be made in favor of the judgment below, questioned in Pratt v. Page, 32 Vt. 19.

Barlow v. Burr, 1 Vt. 488, as to costs on exceptions, disproved in Downing v. Roberts, 22 Vt. 457.

Barnet v. Concord, 4 Vt. 564, substantially overruled on one point, in Plymouth v. Mendon, 23 Vt. 451.

Barrett v. Copeland, 20 Vt. 244, reasons and argument overruled in Dana v. Lull, 21 Vt. 383. Bellows v. Allen, 22 Vt. 108.

Bates v. Downer, 4 Vt. 178, wrongly decided. See Paul v. Burton, 32 Vt. 148.

Beckwith v. Hayward, Brayt. 55, as to protection of equitable assignee, overruled by Strong v. Strong, 2 Aik. 373.

Bigelow v. Topliff, 25 Vt. 289. Dictum of Isham, J., as to equality of attaching creditors and purchasers, overruled in Hackett v. Callender, 32 Vt. 108. 33 Vt. 252. 35 Vt. 2. 43 Vt. 409.

Blackmer v. Blackmer, 5 Vt. 355. Decision inapplicable by change of statute. Lytle v. Bond, 39 Vt. 888.

Bloss v. Kitttridge, 5 Vt. 28, on point of pleading, is opposed to Wightman v. Carlisle, 14 Vt. 296.

Boardman v. Keeler, 2 Vt. 65. Dictum as to dormant partner being plaintiff, overruled by Hilliker v. Loop, 5 Vt. 116. Lapham v. Green, 9 Vt. 407.

Brainerd v. Burton, 5 Vt. 97, overruled on one point by Paris v. Vail, 18 Vt. 277. Smith v. Atkins, 18 Vt. 461. Baxter v. Bush, 29 Vt. 469.

Brooks v. Page, 1 D. Chip. 340, overruled on one point in Dewey v. Washburn, 12 Vt. 580.

Brown v. Turner, 1 Aik. 350. Dictum as to partition disapproved in Baldwin v. Aldrich, 34 Vt. 529.

Brundridge v. Whitcomb, 1 D. Chip. 180, as to offset, overruled in Leavenworth v. Lapham, 5 Vt. 208. Adams v. Bliss, 16 Vt. 42.

Buck v. Pickwell, 27 Vt. 157. "The opinion has not the force of authority beyond the point of judgment." Sterling v. Baldwin, 42 Vt. 309. Approved "to the extent of the matter decided." Fitch v. Burk, 38 Vt. 687.

Busk v. Squiers, 23 Vt. 498, limited and explained in Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 327.

Burlington v. Calais, 1 Vt. 385. On the question of evidence, "the case is rather an overstrained one." Underwood v. Hart, 23 Vt. 130.

Burton v. Austin, 4 Vt. 105, questioned in Beach v. Beach, 20 Vt. 83.

Chaplin v. Hill, 24 Vt. 528, qualified in Russell v. Dodds, 37 Vt. 497.

Chipman v. Sancyer, 1 Tyl. 83. 2 Tyl. 61, that an execution issued after a year and a day is void, overruled by Fletcher v. Mott, 1 Aik. 339; as to ejectment by an executor, overruled by Aldis v. Burdick, 8 Vt. 21.

Chittenden v. Barney, 1 Vt. 28, goes too far. Gates v. Adams, 24 Vt. 74.

Clafin v. Hubbard, Brayt. 88, overruled, as to costs, by Allard v. Bingham, 8 Vt. 470.

Clapp v. Beardsley, 1 Vt. 151, limited in Aldis v. Burdick, 8 Vt. 21.

Conner v. Chase, 15 Vt. 764, qualified in Hills v. Loomis, 42 Vt. 565.

Davis v. Goodnow, 27 Vt. 715, explained in Putnam v. Town, 34 Vt. 429.

Davis v. White, 27 Vt. 751, overruled in Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 346.

Dean v. Dean, 27 Vt. 746. Dictum as to presumed capacity of testator overruled by Williams v. Robinson, 42 Vt. 658.

In re Dougherty, 27 Vt. 326. See State v. Conlin, infra.

Downer v. Fox, 20 Vt. 392. Dictum, that an attaching creditor should not be made defendant in a bill of foreclosure, disapproved in Chandler v. Dyer, 37 Vt. 345.

Drake v. Collins, 1 Tyl. 79, 2 Tyl. 63, overruled by Bagley v. Winsall, Brayt. 23. Woodrow v. O'Conner, 28 Vt. 776.

Edgell v. Lowell, 4 Vt. 405, explained in Root v. Reynolds, 32 Vt. 139.

Farnham v. Ingham, 5 Vt. 514, overruled in Isaacs v. Elkins, 11 Vt. 679.

Farnsworth v. Tilton, 1 D. Chip. 297. Question of pleading—Dictum disapproved in Kinsman v. Page, 22 Vt. 631.

Farr v. Brackett, 30 Vt. 344,—dictum as to assignments disapproved in Passumpsic Bank v. Strong, 42 Vt. 301.

Fitzsimmons v. Joslin, 21 Vt. 129, approved in Field v. Stearns, 42 Vt. 111.

Flint v. Day, 9 Vt. 345, doubted in Pitkin v. Flanagan, 23 Vt. 164, and Keith v. Goodwin, 31 Vt. 276: Overruled by Adams v. Flanagan, 36 Vt. 400.

Gaffield v. Enos, Brayt. 234, overruled by Austin v. Palmer, 2 Vt. 489.

Gibson v. Davis, 22 Vt. 374. Quere raised—settled in Chandler v. Warren, 30 Vt. 510.

Goodnow v. Stafford, 27 Vt. 437, limited in Carruth v. Tighe, 32 Vt. 626.

Greensboro v. Underhill, 12 Vt. 604, questioned in Northfield v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 582.

Hackett v. Callender, 32 Vt. 97, approved in Perrin v. Reed, 35 Vt. 2. Field v. Stearns, 42 Vt. 112.

Hale v. Miller, 15 Vt. 211. Dicta as to form of action overruled by Hall v. Ray, 40 Vt. 579.

Harris v. Bullock, Brayt. 141, overruled by Putney v. Bellows, 8 Vt. 272. 10 Vt. 489.

Harris v. Holmes, 30 Vt. 352. Dicta as to receiving evidence provisionally, overruled by Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Baxter, 32 Vt. 805. 36 Vt. 88. Sterling v. Sterling, 41 Vt. 80.

Harrington v. Harrington, 10 Vt. 505, overruled in Le Barron v. Le Barron, 35 Vt. 370.

Harland v. Williamstown, 1 Aik. 241. Dictum overruled in Landgrove v. Pawlet, 20 Vt. 309.

Hathaway v. Allen, Brayt. 152, limited in Closson v. Staples, 42 Vt. 223.

Hazen v. Hazen, 19 Vt. 608, overruled in Le Barron v. Le Barron, 35 Vt. 370.

Hill v. Kendall, 25 Vt. 528, questioned in Moore v. Stevens, 33 Vt. 308.

Hill v. Pratt, 29 Vt. 126. Opinion criticised in Fenno v. Weston, 31 Vt. 352.

Hines v. Soule, 14 Vt. 99, overruled by Hayward Rubber Co. v. Dunklee, 30 Vt. 29; Downs v. Belden, 46 Vt. 674; Alger v. Andrews 47 Vt. 238.

Hodges v. Green, 28 Vt. 358, limited and explained in Ballard v. Bond, 32 Vt. 359; King v. Smith, 33 Vt. 25.

Holley v. Winooski Turnpike Co., 1 Aik. 74, explained as a decision of fact on a case stated, in Leicester v. Pittsford, 6 Vt. 247. See Sessions v. Newport, 23 Vt. 12.

Hubbard v. Dewey, 2 Aik. 312. The reasoning and dicta of Hutchinson, J., criticised in Benedict v. Heineberg, 43 Vt. 231.

Hutchins v. Hawley, 9 Vt. 295, is not now the law. Wheeler v. Winn, 38 Vt. 122.

Ingersoll v. Van Gilder, 1 D. Chip. 59, overruled in Starkweather v. Loomis, 2 Vt. 573; Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 447.

Jackman v. New Haven, 42 Vt. 591, overruled in Bucklin v. Sudbury, 43 Vt. 700.

Kirby v. Mayo, 13 Vt. 103. Dictum limited in Wait v. Richardson, 33 Vt. 192.

Knapp v. Leanway, 27 Vt. 298, qualified in Lamson v. Bradley, 42 Vt. 173.

Londonderry v. Acton, 3 Vt. 122, reconsidered and approved in Dummerston v. Neofane, 37 Vt. 9.

Lyman v. Windsor, 29 Vt. 305. Expressions in the opinion criticised in Jarvis v. Barnard, 30 Vt. 502.

Martin v. Bigelow, 2 Aik. 184, overruled by Johns v. Stevens, 3 Vt. 308; Davis v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 178. 25 Vt. 231.

Martin v. Blodget, 1 Aik. 375. Dictum as to demurrer overruled in Parlin v. Bundy, 18 Vt. 582; Wheeler v. Wheelock, 33 Vt. 144.

Martin v. Fairbanks, 7 Vt. 97, questioned or overruled in Wetherell v. Roarts, 17 Vt. 219.

Mattison v. Westcott, 13 Vt. 258, overruled, on the main point, by Latham v. Lewis, cited in Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 81.

McGray v. Wheeler, 18 Vt. 502, criticised in Joyal v. Barney, 20 Vt. 154.

Michigan State Bank v. Leavenworth, 28 Vt. 209, overruled by Austin v. Curtis, 31 Vt. 64.

Middlebury v. Hubbardton, 1 D. Chip. 205, overruled, as to form of action, in Danville v. Putney, 6 Vt. 512; Pawlet v. Sandgate, 19 Vt. 630; Castleton v. Miner, 8 Vt. 209: Criticised and in part overruled in Worcester v. Ballard, 38 Vt. 60.

Moore v. Jones, 28 Vt. 739, disregarded in Nichols v. Bellows, 22 Vt. 581.

Mott v. Mott, 5 Vt. 111, and Snow v. Conant, 8 Vt. 301, as to offsets, seem opposed to each other, and questioned in Adams v. Bliss, 16 Vt. 42.

Musney v. Noyes, 26 Vt. 472, that an assignment contrary to statute is wholly void, denied in Merrill v. Englesby, 28 Vt. 150, 158.

Munson v. Hastings, 12 Vt. 346, explained in Whitcomb v. Wolcott, 21 Vt. 368.

Nelson v. Denison, 17 Vt. 77, questioned in McKenzie v. Ransom, 22 Vt. 331. Hammond v. Wilder, 25 Vt. 347.

Newbury v. Brunswick, 2 Vt. 151, overruled on one point in Landgrove v. Pawlet, 20 Vt. 309.

Nichols v. Holgate, 2 Aik. 140. Dictum that an attaching creditor should not be made defendant in a bill of foreclosure, disapproved in Chandler v. Dyer, 37 Vt. 345.

Northfield v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 582, on the point of admitting irrelevant testimony and then charging it out, denied and overruled. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Baxter, 32 Vt. 805. Wood v. Willard, 36 Vt. 88. Stirling v. Stirling, 41 Vt. 91.

Quimit v. Henshaw, 35 Vt. 605, criticised in Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 416.

Paddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 529, limited in Aldrich v. Bonett, 33 Vt. 202.

Paddock v. Colby, 18 Vt. 485, questioned, as to statute of limitations, in Carruth v. Paige, 22 Vt. 179; cited in Burton v. Stevens, 24 Vt. 133, and Hill v. Kendall, 25 Vt. 531; impugned in Moore v. Stevens, 33 Vt. 308.

Paddock v. Strowbridge, 29 Vt. 470. The author states, on the authority of Judge Bennett, that this opinion of the Chief Justice was prepared as a dissenting opinion, and got published, erroneously, as the opinion of the court. Page v. Johnson, 1 D. Chip. 338, overruled on one point by Way v. Swift, 12 Vt. 390.

Parker v. Birby, 2 Tyl. 466, overruled in Brown v. Wright, 17 Vt. 97.

Phelps v. Parks, 4 Vt. 488, commented upon and distinguished from Perry v. Whipple, 38 Vt. 278.

Pierce v. Gilson, 9 Vt. 216. Dicta of Wil- liams, C. J., disapproved in Gleason v. Owen, 35 Vt. 595. Spencer v. Dearth, 43 Vt. 103.

Pike v. Hill, 15 Vt. 183, qualified in Paddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 536; but sanctioned in Eastman v. Waterman, 26 Vt. 500. Farr v. Ludd, 37 Vt. 160.

Pinney v. Fellows, 15 Vt. 525, criticised for its reasons on one point in Dewey v. Dewey, 35 Vt. 560.

Poor v. Woodburn, 25 Vt. 284, approved in Field v. Stearns, 42 Vt. 111.

Powell v. Brown, 1 Tyl. 285, overruled in Brown v. Wright, 17 Vt. 97.

Preble v. Bottom, 27 Vt. 249, commented upon in Chamberlin v. Scott, 33 Vt. 84.

Provost v. Harwood, 29 Vt. 219. Rule of damages explained in Whitcomb v. Gilman, 35 Vt. 299.

Putney v. Dummerston, 13 Vt. 370, questioned in Sheldon v. Fairfax, 21 Vt. 102, and contradicted by Worcester v. Ballard, 38 Vt. 60.

Rice v. Montpelier, 19 Vt. 470, limited in Cassedy v. Stockbridge, 21 Vt. 391.

Rice v. Tubnidge, 20 Vt. 378. Dicta overruled in Chandler v. Warren, 30 Vt. 512.

Riford v. Montgomery, 7 Vt. 411. Reasonableness of rule in that and kindred cases questioned in Deering v. Austin, 34 Vt. 334.

Roberts v. Grinnold, 35 Vt. 496, affirmed in Bagley v. Moulton, 42 Vt. 188.

Robinson v. Hutchinson, 26 Vt. 45. Dictum that capacity of testator is presumed, overruled by Williams v. Robinson, 42 Vt. 658.

Sanford v. Norton, 17 Vt. 285. Opinion criticised in Sylvester v. Downer, 20 Vt. 359-60.

Saunders v. Honre, 1 D. Chip. 363, overruled by Bradley v. Bentley, 8 Vt. 243. 11 Vt. 679.

Sessions v. Gilbert, Brayt. 75. Not followed. Giddings v. Munson, 4 Vt. 312.

Skiff v. Solace, 23 Vt. 279, overruled by Taylor v. Boardman, 25 Vt. 581. Jones v. Taylor, 30 Vt. 42. Cobb v. Buscull, 37 Vt. 337.

Smith v. Shumway, 2 Tyl. 74, overruled in part by Bonedish v. Peckham, 1 D. Chip. 145. Bonen v. Hall, 20 Vt. 232.

Snow v. Conant, 8 Vt. 301, and Mott v. Mott, 5 Vt. 111, as to offsets, seem opposed to each other, and questioned in Adams v. Bliss, 16 Vt. 42.

St. Albans v. Georgia, Brayt. 177, overruled by Londonderry v. Windham, 2 Vt. 149. 3 Vt. 24.

Stanley v. Robbins, 36 Vt. 422. Dicta as to assignments overruled in Pasumpsic Bank v. Strong, 42 Vt. 301.

Stanton v. Stanton, 37 Vt. 411, commented upon and distinguished from Thrall v. Mead, 40 Vt. 540.

State v. Boston, &c., R. Co., 25 Vt. 445, as to cost, qualified in State v. Bradford, 32 Vt. 54.

State v. Conlin, 27 Vt. 318. In re Dougherty, 27 Vt. 326. State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 523.

Dicta, that certain minor offenses do not come within Art. 10 of bill of rights, condemned in State v. Peterson, 41 Vt. 524.

State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 523. See State v. Conlin, supra.

State v. Johnson, 28 Vt. 512, affirmed in State v. Reed, 39 Vt. 417.

State v. J. N. B., 1 Tyl. 36, overruled by State v. Phelps, 2 Tyl. 374.

State v. Rood, 12 Vt. 396, overruled, on the point of a court's taking knowledge of the law of another State, in State v. Horn, 43 Vt. 20.

State v. Towne, 28 Vt. 771, questioned in Moore v. Stevens, 33 Vt. 308.

Stevens v. Adams, Brayt. 29, overruled by Turner v. Lowry, 2 Aik. 72.

Stevens v. Wilkins, 8 Vt. 231, overruled by Mann v. Holbrook, 20 Vt. 523.

Stephenson v. Clark, 20 Vt. 624, limited and explained, in Burrows v. Stebbins, 26 Vt. 659.

Stoddard v. Allen, N. Chip. 44, overruled by many cases since.

Strong v. Allen, Brayt. 232, overruled by Austin v. Palmer, 2 Vt. 489.

Strong v. Garfield, 10 Vt. 504. Dictum of Phelps, J., doubted in Watson v. Brainard, 33 Vt. 90.

Strong v. Strong, 2 Aik. 373, overruled on one point by Lowell v. Leland, 3 Vt. 581. Paris v. Hulett, 26 Vt. 308.

Taft v. Pike, 14 Vt. 405. Dictum as to interest against infants, overruled in Bradley v. Pratt, 23 Vt. 378.

Taylor v. Nichols, 29 Vt. 104. Dictum as to official oaths denied in Courser v. Powers, 34 Vt. 517.

Thayer v. Davis, 38 Vt. 163, is imperfectly reported. See Sterling v. Sterling, 41 Vt. 93.

Thrall v. Seward, 37 Vt. 573, explained and affirmed in Hunter v. Kittredge, 41 Vt. 359.

Town v. Wiley, 23 Vt. 355. Approval of Pitts v. Hall (9 N. H. 441), qualified in Gilson v. Spear, 38 Vt. 314.

Trask v. Donoghue, 1 Aik. 370, overruled on one point by Roberts v. Hall, 35 Vt. 28.

Tyler v. Lathrop, 5 Vt. 170, has been followed in cases precisely identical—not to be extended, &c. Spear v. Flint, 17 Vt. 498. Harriman v. Swift, 31 Vt. 385. Bradish v. Redway, 35 Vt. 426.

Vickery v. Taft, 1 D. Chip. 241, "has been regarded as a sound case only upon its peculiar facts." Gates v. Lockwood, 27 Vt. 287.

Vermont Central R. Co. v. Hills, 23 Vt. 685. Dictum questioned in Swasey v. Brooks, 34 Vt. 455.

Ward v. Sharp, 15 Vt. 115, limited in Davis v. Converse, 35 Vt. 508.

Weed v. Nutting, Brayt. 28, overruled by Clough v. Brown, 38 Vt. 179.

Wells v. Mace, 17 Vt. 503, reversed in U. S. Sup. Ct., 7 Howard 272.

Wetmore v. Blush, Brayt. 55, as to protection of equitable assignee, overruled by Strong v. Strong, 2 Aik. 373.

Wheeler v. Lewis, 11 Vt. 265, limited in Bull v. Bliss, 30 Vt. 131.

Wheeler v. Wheeler, 11 Vt. 60, commented on in Ellsworth v. Fogg, 35 Vt. 358.

White v. Comstock, 6 Vt. 405, affirmed in Burnett v. Ward, 42 Vt. 89.

Whitman v. Pownal, 19 Vt. 229. Dictum of Davis, J., disapproved in Jakeway v. Barrett, 38 Vt. 325.

Whittle v. Skinner, 23 Vt. 531, overruled as to oral assignment, &c., by Noyes v. Brown, 33 Vt. 431, and Wescott v. Potter, 40 Vt. 271.

Wilcox v. Sherwin, 1 D. Chip. 72, overruled by Blood v. Sayre, 17 Vt. 613.

Williams v. Hicks, 2 Vt. 36, criticised and limited in Clough v. Patrick, 37 Vt. 421.

Windsor v. Jacob, 1 Tyl. 241, overruled by Fairfield v. Hull, 8 Vt. 68.

Wright v. Doolittle, 5 Vt. 390, overruled by Fullam v. Ives, 37 Vt. 659.

Young v. Judd, Brayt. 151, overruled, on one point, by Stinton v. Bannister, 2 Vt. 464.

substantial justice of the case, the writ has been uniformly denied. But if the writ be granted, and error appears, the court must quash the proceedings. West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 16 Vt. 446. Royalton v. Fox, 5 Vt. 458. Myers v. Pownal, 16 Vt. 415. Rockingham v. Westminster, 24 Vt. 288. Pomfret v. Hartford, 42 Vt. 134. Chase v. Rutland, 47 Vt. 393.

6. Questions of discretion of the county court, in highway cases, cannot be revised on certiorari,—as, whether the public good required a free road, the assessment of damages for the franchise of a bridge corporation, &c. West River Bridge Co. v. Dix.

7. Upon certiorari, the Supreme Court does not retain the case for further proceedings, nor render such judgment as the county court should have rendered, as on a writ of error, but either quashes the proceedings altogether, or, after reversing some erroneous judgment, remands them for further proceedings. Sumner v. Hartland, 25 Vt. 641.

8. As the issuing of a writ of certiorari is, to a great extent, matter of discretion, the practice is to hear the merits of the case upon the petition for the writ, and practically to decide the whole case upon the granting or refusing of the writ. Walbridge v. Walbridge, 46 Vt. 617.

CERTIORARI.

1. Form of writ of certiorari and return, in case of error. Bracket v. State, 2 Tyl. 152.

2. In cases where the county court exercises its jurisdiction otherwise than according to the course of the common law, as in road cases, &c., the remedy is by certiorari, mandamus, or other proper writ, and not by writ of error, or exceptions. Beckwith v. Houghton, 11 Vt. 603. Courser v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 476. Stiles v. Windsor, 45 Vt. 520.

3. In regard to all prerogative writs, whereby the Supreme Court assumes a supervisory jurisdiction over subordinate tribunals, it exercises a discretion in withholding the remedy, even where it is obvious that some formal error has intervened;—as on petition for a certiorari, where the pecuniary interest involved is very small. Paine v. Leicester, 22 Vt. 44; and where no injustice has been done. Lyman v. Burlington, 22 Vt. 131.

4. The writ of certiorari is not demandable as a matter of strict legal right, but it rests in the discretion of the court to grant, or refuse it. The petitioner must show that substantial injustice has been done, and that this may be remedied if the writ is awarded. It is not every error in the proceedings below that will induce the court to issue the writ. Londonderry v. Peru, 45 Vt. 424. Paine v. Leicester. Lyman v. Burlington. Woodstock v. Gailup, 28 Vt. 587.

5. Where the error is not one affecting the CHANCERY.

I. JURISDICTION.

1. Ordinary jurisdiction.
2. Limitation by legal remedy.
3. Auxiliary jurisdiction.
4. Retaining jurisdiction once attached.

II. SUIT WHERE TO BE BROUGHT, — SERVICE, ETC.

III. PLEADINGS.

1. The Bill.
2. Demurrer.
3. Plea; Answer; Cross-Bill.

IV. PROCEEDINGS AFTER ISSUE.

1. The testimony.
2. Report of Master.
3. The decree.

V. PROCEEDINGS AFTER DECREE.

1. Appeal.
2. Hearing on appeal.
3. Mandate.

VI. REVISORY PROCEEDINGS.

I. JURISDICTION.

1. Ordinary jurisdiction.

1. Amount in controversy. Under a bill in equity to account, the "matter in dispute," as determining the jurisdiction of the court (G. S. c. 29, s. 3), is the difference between the respective claims of the parties. But if brought bona fide, the jurisdiction does not lapse because the master reports a balance less than $50. Washburn v. Washburn, 23 Vt. 576.

2. A motion to dismiss a suit in chancery on the ground that the matter in controversy does not exceed fifty dollars, if not made in the court of chancery, will not be considered in the Supreme Court. Washburn v. Dewey, 17 Vt. 92.

3. Marriage contract. A court of chancery, under its common equity jurisdiction, may rescind or relieve against a marriage contract, or annul a contract solemnized before a magistrate or a minister of the gospel, if obtained by force, fraud or imposition, or under a mistake as to the legal effect of such solemnization by one party, if the other knew the legal effect and also knew that the party was under such mistake, where such ceremony has not been followed by consummation, or cohabitation;—so decreed. Clark v. Field, 13 Vt. 460.

4. Sureties. The subject of equitable relief in behalf of sureties is one of original jurisdiction in a court of chancery, and, although the liability of sureties has come to be governed by the same principles at law as in equity, the jurisdiction of the court of chancery is not affected thereby; and it is not in the power of a creditor, by first commencing proceedings at law, to deprive the surety from seeking his relief in chancery, controlling the proceedings at law. Viele v. Hoag, 24 Vt. 46.

5. Tenants in common. In matters of account between tenants in common, courts of chancery have an original jurisdiction, not depending on the need of discovery; and, since the statutes giving a jurisdiction to courts of law, the jurisdiction by bill is concurrent with the jurisdiction by action of account. Leach v. Beatties, 33 Vt. 195.

6. It is a proper exercise of equity jurisdiction to apportion among parties having a common use of a water-power, and a common duty to keep up the dam by which the power is created, the burden of maintaining it. Sanborn v. Braley, 47 Vt. 170.

7. Trustees. All accounting between trustees and their cestuis is a proper head of original equity jurisdiction, and comes within ordinary chancery jurisdiction, except where jurisdiction of certain particular species of trust is given by statute to the probate court; and in such cases, if, by reason of the limited power of the probate court or its peculiar mode of proceeding, it cannot give relief, resort may be had to a court of equity. French v. Winsor, 36 Vt. 412.

8. Legacy. Courts of equity have always been regarded as the appropriate tribunals to enforce payment of legacies, on the ground that the executor was a mere trustee for the legatee; and this has been extended to almost every variety of case where the validity of a legacy or devise, or its effect, was brought in question. Holmes v. Holmes, 36 Vt. 588.

9. Forfeiture. Whenever a forfeiture is taken advantage of which works a hardship, and full compensation can be made, equity generally relieves against the forfeiture upon making such compensation. So done in this case. Hagar v. Buck, 44 Vt. 285.

10. It is altogether outside the province and functions of a court of equity to set up and enforce a forfeiture. Vt. Copper Mining Co. v. Ormsby, 47 Vt. 709.

11. In all cases of bills for relief against forfeitures, the question is upon the restoration of the old contract; not, whether the court will substitute a new one for it—as by substituting the periodical payment of a specified sum of money in lieu of services and support covenanted to be supplied. The legitimate power of a court thus to interfere with men's contracts may well be doubted. Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 415.

12. Contracts of the weak-minded. Chancery will not set aside a conveyance which is perfectly fair, and where no undue advantage has been taken, provided the grantor had sufficient understanding to know the nature and consequences of his act at the time. Day v. Seely, 17 Vt. 542.

13. That the intellectual capacity of a party is below that of the average of mankind does not alone furnish sufficient ground for setting aside his contract. Mann v. Betterly, 21 Vt. 326.

14. Inadequacy of consideration. Mere inadequacy of consideration furnishes no sufficient ground for the interference of a court of equity to set aside a deed, or contract; but inadequacy of consideration, coupled with such a degree of weakness and imbecility of intellect as would justify the inference that such weakness had been taken advantage of, would afford sufficient ground for such interference. Id.

15. An exchange of lands was set aside in equity in behalf of the heirs of a very weak-minded man, though not non compos, where there was great inequality of consideration, of capacity in the contracting parties, and of knowledge of the properties. Holden v. Cranford, 1 Aik. 390.

16. It is not uncommon for a court of chancery to refuse to lend its aid to enforce a contract by reason of inadequacy in the consideration; but it is well settled that mere inadequacy, independent of and unconnected with other circumstances, is not sufficient per se to rescind a contract, unless its grossness amount to fraud; but where such inadequacy is connected with other circumstances of suspicion, this may furnish satisfactory ground for relief. Howard v. Edgell, 17 Vt. 9.

17. To restrain proceedings at law. It is a general principle of equity jurisprudence, that a court of chancery will not entertain a bill to impeach a judgment at law for mere irregularity in the proceedings, but will leave such questions, arising in legal proceedings, to the exclusive jurisdiction of courts of law. It will not, upon the testimony of witnesses, try the truth of the return of a sworn officer made in a proceeding at law, and grant relief upon falsifying the record. Wardsboro v. Whitingham, 45 Vt. 450.

18. Equity will not postpone an earlier to a later attachment, because of a formal and technical defect in the first proceedings—as, because the first writ was made returnable to a wrong term; or because the judgment in that case, was entered and an execution issued against all the members of a firm, upon a confession of judgment by one of them; but will leave the parties to courts of laws for the assertion of mere technical rights. Shedd v. Bank of Brattleboro, 32 Vt. 709.

19. Where a purchaser of land had knowledge of an incumbrance upon it, and the matter was mutually settled between him and the vendor, and the vendor gave a deed containing a covenant against incumbrances, but with the understanding that no claim should be made on such covenant, and the grantee afterwards brought an action at law on such covenant;—Held, that this was a fraudulent use of the covenant, and that equity would enjoin him from such use of it. Suit enjoined. Taylor v. Gilman, 25 Vt. 411.

20. The plaintiff in a suit at law was restrained by injunction from the prosecution of that or any other suit for the same matter, although the defendant therein had a good defense at law to the suit brought, but where, if he succeeded, he would still be subject to other vexatious suits. Morse v. Morse, 44 Vt. 84.

21. M brought a suit at law against the town of G, upon a town order payable to him, or bearer, which he had obtained by fraud. On a bill in equity by the town to enjoin the suit at law, and that the order be delivered up to be cancelled;—Held, that in the exercise of a sound discretion, the special circumstances of the case warranted the granting of the relief sought:—these were, that the evidence left the fact of fraud in no doubt; that the negotiable character of the instrument, although overdue, might lead to embarrassment of the town, as would, also, a payment of it by the town treasurer, in case the bill was dismissed; also, that the question of jurisdiction was not raised by demurrer, but by the answer, and only brought to the attention of the court on final hearing after all the testimony had been taken and all this expense incurred. Glastenbury v. McDonald, 44 Vt. 450.

22. Instance of restraining a partition of lands at law according to the legal import of the deeds, and ordering partition in chancery, so as to protect the orator's equitable rights, Piper v. Farr, 47 Vt. 721.

23. Where the relief sought is exclusively of an equitable character, such relief is not concluded by a judgment at law; since one may have a claim against an estate which could not be resisted at law, but upon which, nevertheless, he is not in equity entitled to a dividend. West v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 403.

24. The equitable assignee of a chose in action, with notice to the debtor, brought his action at law thereon in the name of the assignor, when the defendant procured a release from the assignor, and set it up in defense and obtained judgment,—the course of decisions at that time being that, at law, that was a defense, and that the plaintiff's claim was only of equity jurisdiction. Afterwards the plaintiff brought his bill in equity to enjoin that judgment, and to enforce his original claim. Held, that the judgment at law was not conclusive as a defense, although, according to the course of later decisions, the orator's equitable right would be protected at law,—the matter being of original equity jurisdiction, and the rule at law being different then, and now. Dana v. Nelson, 1 Aik. 252. S. C., 2 Aik. 381.

25. A obtained judgment against B, under a rule "that certain sums of money specified in receipts signed by A should be deducted from said damages." B neglected or refused to produce the receipts to the clerk, and A took his execution for the full judgment, but collected only a part. About seven years afterwards, and after such receipts were lost, A brought a new suit on said judgment, refusing to apply the amount of such receipts, and obtained a second judgment for the apparent balance. On bill brought by B, an application of the amount of said receipts was decreed, and an injunction against enforcing the judgment to that amount; but no costs were allowed to either party. Lynde v. Wright, 1 Aik. 383.

26. If a judgment be rendered in pursuance of an agreement of the parties which directs a particular mode of satisfying it, equity regards this as the act of the parties, and not of the court, and will not permit it to be enforced in any way inconsistent with the agreement. Nason v. Smalley, 8 Vt. 118.

27. Arbitrators awarded that the orator should pay the defendant a certain sum, in addition to what he had already paid, and that the defendant should, at the same time, execute to the orator a deed of certain lands. The defendant duly tendered the deed which the orator refused to accept. The defendant afterwards, in an action on the award, recovered of the orator judgment for the sum so awarded to be paid, and costs. Afterwards the defendant sold and conveyed the lands to a third person for their value; and afterwards, on his claiming to enforce the judgment, the orator brought his bill for relief. The court, by decree, enjoined the defendant from enforcing the judgment, and ordered him to repay the sum paid by the orator towards the land before the arbitration, with the orator's costs after deducting the defendant's costs in the suit at law. Preston v. Whitcomb, 17 Vt. 183.

28. Chancery will not relieve against a judgment at law, for matters which constituted a defense to the action at law, where the orator was fully apprised of the facts necessary to his defense, or could have ascertained them. Briggs v. Shaw, 15 Vt. 78.

29. Resort to chancery must be seasonably made, when the ground and occasion for it are seasonably known, or relief will be refused. Thus, where a suit at law was suffered to go to final judgment, where the facts showing the necessity of a resort to chancery were seasonably known, the judgment at law was held a bar to equitable relief. St. Johnsbury v. Bagley, 48 Vt. 75.

2. Limitation by legal remedy.

30. It is not optional with a party whether he will proceed at law or in chancery. He cannot resort to chancery where his remedy at law is adequate. Currier v. Rosebrooks, 48 Vt. 34.

31. An injunction against the erecting and use of a church upon lands claimed by the orator was refused, where his title was not clear and certain, and where he had an adequate remedy at law, and the defendants were responsible, &c. White v. Booth, 7 Vt. 181.

32. A mere breach of contract is never restrained in advance, nor redressed subsequently, in a court of equity, where the remedy at law is adequate to the injury. Smith v. Pettingill, 15 Vt. 82. Washburn v. Titus, 9 Vt. 211.

33. Chancery will never interfere to prevent by injunction a mere ordinary trespass, where the injury is in no sense irreparable, and where an adequate remedy may be found in the recovery of damages at law. Injunctions against trespasses to timber, ore, monuments, ornamental trees, coals and quarries, have been granted, being cases where the recovery of damages merely would be an inadequate remedy. Smith v. Pettingill.

34. Bill brought to enjoin the prosecution of an action of ejectment:—Bill dismissed for the reason that the orator had a clear defense at law to the action. Barrett v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 365.

35. Where a statute made the officers of a corporation personally liable, in an action founded on the statute, for certain debts;—Held, that the remedy being complete at law upon the statute, the liability could not be enforced in chancery. Bassett v. St. Albans Hotel Co., 47 Vt. 313.

36. A cross-bill was dismissed with costs of defense to it, although the original bill was dismissed with costs, where the matter of the cross-bill was equally available as a defense to the original bill, and where, as to the further relief sought by the cross-bill, there was an adequate remedy at law. Sprague v. Waldo, 38 Vt. 139.

37. The bill set forth a good cause of action at law for a past diversion of water from the orator's mill; also that the parties were in controversy about their respective rights to the water, and asked to have these rights ascertained and established. Held, on demurrer, that these facts did not furnish sufficient ground for equitable interference. The bill also prayed for an injunction to restrain the defendant's use of the water except in a certain way, and alleged that the defendant claimed some of the water belonging to the orator and was using it according to such claim, and threatened to increase the use; but did not allege that such use as then made, or increased as threatened, could not be fully compensated for in damages at law; nor that any application had been made to the defendant to desist; nor that repeated and vexatious suits at law would be or were believed to be necessary, in order to maintain the rights infringed upon. Held, that the court of chancery had no jurisdiction of the case, as made by the bill. Fairhaven Marble Co. v. Adams, 46 Vt. 496; and see Prentiss v. Larnard, 11 Vt. 135. Smith v. Pettingill, 15 Vt. 82.

38. Where a party is unjustly deprived of his day in court before a justice by fraud, accident or mistake, the remedy at law under G. S. c. 38 is ample, and there is no necessity nor warrant for resorting to chancery. Sleeper v. Croker, 48 Vt. 9.

39. The statute authorizing the probate court to license an executor, &c., to sell real estate fraudulently conveyed by the testator, &c. (G. S. c. 52, s. 43 and seq.), does not provide a remedy exclusive of chancery. Therasson v. Hickok, 37 Vt. 454.

40. The orator's claims, although several, being in the nature of claims upon a particular fund upon which others had an equal claim, and to which another class of claimants might have a paramount right, and where an accounting might be involved, the case was held a proper one for chancery jurisdiction;—the remedy at law not appearing to be clear, complete and adequate. Richardson v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co., 44 Vt. 613.

3. Auxiliary jurisdiction.

41. In aid of creditor to reach equitable estate. Where a legal claim is established by judgment, and courts of law, from defect in their process or powers, are unable to afford adequate relief, the court of chancery may assist the creditor to reach property of the debtor which cannot be taken on an execution. Bigelow v. Congregational Soc'y, 11 Vt. 283. S. C., 15 Vt. 370.

42. Equity will aid a judgment creditor to reach the equitable interest of his debtor in lands, where payment of the debt cannot be obtained at law. Woods v. Scott, 14 Vt. 518.

43. It will not ordinarily do this unless the creditor has perfected his claim, so far as he can at law, by judgment and levy upon the estate. Rice v. Barnard, 20 Vt. 479.

44. Dictum. A judgment creditor must levy his execution upon a specific portion of the land, where it exceeds in value the amount of the execution, before he can resort to chancery for aid on the ground that the conveyance of his debtor was, as to him, void. Bassett v. St. Albans Hotel Co., 47 Vt. 313.

45. B gave G a bond for the conveyance of certain land upon being paid a certain price therefor. This purchase was really for the benefit of S, but this was unknown to B. S went into possession and made valuable improvements, when the orator attached the land and set off on execution against S, his interest therein being more than $400. B had actual knowledge of the attachment. Afterwards G and S sold the premises to D, surrendering to B his bond, and B gave D a new bond for a conveyance, and, as the result of the arrangement and after deducting from the sale price to D the amount of S's indebtedness to himself, B gave G his note for $400. Held, that B, with such knowledge of the attachment, could not convey to any one else than G, so as to defeat the orator's claim against S and G; and the court decreed that B should pay the $400 to the orator. Woods v. Scott, 14 Vt. 518.

46. In aid of probate court. The principal jurisdiction of the settlement of the accounts of administrators, executors and of trustees appointed by the probate court, is in the probate court; and, in such cases, the jurisdiction of the court of chancery is only in aid of the probate court. Merriam v. Hemmenway, 26 Vt. 565.

47. The executrix of a will, who was also named as trustee and had been formally appointed trustee by the probate court, died. Held, that it belonged to her administrator to settle her account as trustee, and that the trust fund could not, in chancery, be called out of the hands of her administrator by the administrator be bonis non of the testator, before the settlement in the probate court;—and that the jurisdiction belonged in the first instance to the probate court. Id.

48. The interference of a court of chancery in the settlement of estates in Vermont has been confined within the narrowest limits, and has gone upon the ground merely of aiding the jurisdiction of the probate court in those points only wherein its functions and powers are inadequate to the purposes of perfect justice;—retaining its ancillary jurisdiction to the same extent over matters in the probate courts, which it has over those in the common law courts. Adams v. Adams, 22 Vt. 50. Boyden v. Ward, 38 Vt. 628.

49. It is no ground of equity jurisdiction for the settling of estates, that there has been unreasonable delay of proceedings in the probate court; nor that an administrator on rendering his account refused to produce the books and papers of his intestate; nor that some of the parties affected by the decree of the probate court were infants and had no proper guardians appointed. Adams v. Adams.

50. Where a creditor had become barred of his claim against an estate by neglect to present it for allowance by the commissioners;—Held, that chancery would not give him a decree against the estate, on the assumed ground of the continued liability of the surety and the ultimate liability of the estate. McCollum v. Hinckley, 9 Vt. 143.

51. Where the creditors of an estate have an interest adverse to that claimed by the administrator, they may come into a court of chancery for redress while the estate is in process of settlement in the probate court. This proceeding is merely ancillary to that in the probate court, and after the rights of the parties are determined the case is remitted to the probate court for final adjustment and distribution. Morse v. Slason, 13 Vt. 296.

4. Retaining jurisdiction once attached.

52. Where a party is obliged to resort to chancery for one purpose, his case will be retained until the whole matter is finally disposed of. Dana v. Nelson, 1 Aik. 252. Beardsley v. Knight, 10 Vt. 185. 20 Vt. 278;—though it may be necessary to bring in new parties. 10 Vt. 185.

53. The general rule is, that when a bill is brought seeking both discovery and relief, and material discovery is elicited, the court will proceed to grant the proper relief, even if the relief were such as a court of law might grant. Holmes v. Holmes, 36 Vt. 525.

As to other subjects of equity jurisdiction, see particular titles: as CLOUD ON TITLE; CONDITION; FRAUD; HUSBAND AND WIFE; INJUNCTION; INTERPLEADER; MISTAKE; MORTGAGE; PARTNERSHIP; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE; TRUSTS, ETC.

II. SUIT, WHERE TO BE BROUGHT; SERVICE, ETC.

54. In what county. Bill in chancery, brought in Chittenden county to compel the conveyance of land situate in that county, was dismissed on plea that neither of the parties resided in that county. (G. S. c. 29, s. 17.) Birchard v. Cheever, 40 Vt. 94.

55. A supplemental bill, bill of revivor, bill of review, or bill to carry into effect a former decree must be brought in the same county where the original suit was brought and the proceedings are of record. Ferris v. Child, 1 D. Chip. 886. Cheever v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 39 Vt. 653.

56. Where a suit in chancery has been commenced in one county, and has proceeded to an interlocutory or administrative decree determining the rights and duties of the parties in respect to the property in question, to be exercised under the order and direction of that court, the assertion of those rights should be addressed to the court decreeing them and under whose order and direction they are to be exercised; and a bill to enforce such rights, brought to the court of chancery for another county, will not lie. Cheever v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co.

57. Service. The delivery to a defendant, without the State, of a copy of a bill in chancery and subpoena by an indifferent person not specially deputed, and where there was no order of court directing the mode of notice, was held insufficient, and that the defendant was not affected by it. Bank of Burlington v. Catlin, 11 Vt. 106.

58. Filing bill. G. S. c. 29, s. 56, enacting that "the issuing of a subpoena attached to a bill shall be deemed the filing of a bill," does not exclude other modes of filing existing independently of the statute, but rather provides a substitute for actually filing it in court. A bill may be so filed without issuing a subpoena—as, for the purposes of procuring an injunction, or where the defendant is out of the State so that a subpoena cannot be served upon him. The statute does not make the bill and subpoena one process. Howe v. Willard, 40 Vt. 654.

III. PLEADINGS.

1. The bill.

59. Form and substance. A bill may well be drawn with a double aspect, so that if the orator fail of establishing one ground of recovery, he may rely upon another, although wholly or in part inconsistent with the former. McConnell v. McConnell, 11 Vt. 290.

60. The orator must stand or fall upon his case as made by his bill; nor can the answer aid him to recover upon a case not made by the bill; nor can a special prayer for the specific relief to which he might be entitled upon the facts of the answer, be granted, where the stating part of the bill is not adapted to it. Thomas v. Warner, 15 Vt. 110.

61. The orator must stand on the allegations in his bill, and cannot make a different case by his evidence, and base upon it a claim for relief. Barrett v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 365.

62. Prayer. A general prayer for relief is sufficient to obtain all relief consistent with the general frame of the bill, Danforth v. Smith, 23 Vt. 247;—all the relief which is adapted to the case, though variant from that sought by the special prayer. Eureka Marble Co. v. Windsor Mfg. Co., 47 Vt. 430.

63. Interrogatories. A bill was held ill on demurrer, because it contained no interrogatories. Shed v. Garfield, 5 Vt. 39.

64. Orator's interest. A creditor of the estate of a deceased person cannot sustain a bill in chancery against a debtor of such estate, to secure payment to himself. There is no privity between them. The administrator is the only person who can pursue the debtors of an estate. Isaacs v. Clark, 13 Vt. 657.

65. A party in chancery taking lands upon a writ of sequestration stands as an attaching creditor at law, and, before decree and levy, has no such interest in the land as authorizes him to litigate by his bill the title against a levying creditor; and his remedy after levy is at law. French v. Winsor, 36 Vt. 412.

66. Parties—Assignment. A nominal party to a contract, who has assigned all his interest, is required to be joined in any proceeding in equity in regard to the contract only for the purpose of having the decree conclude his rights, and thus conclude all future litigation. So that, in all cases where the court can see, in the particular case, that there is no necessity for such joinder on that account, it will not be required—especially after the case has gone to a hearing. He may be a proper, but not a necessary party. Day v. Cummings, 19 Vt. 496; and see Payne v. Hathaway, 3 Vt. 212.

67. Where the assignment of a contract passes only the equitable interest therein, the assignor is properly joined as a party in a bill to enforce it. Eureka Marble Co. v. Windsor Mfg. Co., 47 Vt. 430.

68. In a bill by a general creditor in an assignment against the assignee for an account, the preferred creditors need not be made parties where the orator claims only the balance after paying them. Page v. Olcott, 28 Vt. 465.

69. Where a bill was brought against the assignee under an assignment in trust for the benefit of certain attaching creditors of the assignor, of whom the orator was one, but he not assenting to the assignment, and against the administrators of the assignor, praying to have the assignment declared void, and that the property assigned be brought into administration for the payment of the orator's debt;—Held, that the other creditors provided for in the assignment were not necessary parties. Therasson v. Hickok, 37 Vt. 454.

70. Contribution. On a bill for contribution and to settle the affairs of a "union store," certain associates, who left the State before the business of the "division" was closed and were beyond the reach of process, were properly left out of the account for contribution. Henry v. Jackson, 37 Vt. 431.

71. Parties numerous. A bill will not be dismissed because all the parties in interest are not made defendants, where their number is so great as to make it impracticable to bring them all in, or where this would be attended with great inconvenience and expense. But it must appear in all such cases, that a full and complete decree can be made as between the parties before the court, and without substantial injury to third persons. Stimson v. Lewis, 36 Vt. 91.

72. Joint sureties. Where some of the joint sureties pay the debt jointly, they may join in a bill against the other sureties for contribution; and there is no objection to a decree against the defendants severally for so much as each is liable for. Fletcher v. Jackson, 23 Vt. 581.

73. Questions of mis-joinder and non-joinder. On a petition by husband and wife to foreclose two mortgages upon the same land, one to the husband and the other to the wife, an objection for mis-joinder was disallowed on the hearing, it not having been noticed in the pleadings. Bartlett v. Boyd, 34 Vt. 256.

74. There are many cases where defendants have not a co-extensive common interest or relation, and yet are properly joined as defendants;—and so held in this case. Eureka Marble Co. v. Windsor Mfg. Co., 47 Vt. 430.

75. Where the defendant had wrongfully filled in a common private passage way, in which the orator had a right of passage as well as the defendant, and also one A;—Held, that a decree might be made that the defendant remove or grade down the filling-in, without making A a party to the bill.—That was but to make him undo what, to the orator's prejudice, he had improperly done. Walker v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 94.

76. On general demurrer a bill is sufficient in regard to parties, if the facts stated disclose one ground on which the orator is entitled to relief without additional parties. Shaw v. Chamberlin, 45 Vt. 512.

77. Waiver. As a general rule, if the want of parties to a bill is not insisted upon in the answer, it cannot be at the hearing. Page v. Olcott, 28 Vt. 465.

78. If no objection be taken to a bill for want of proper parties until the final hearing, the objection will not be regarded if a decree can be made without them; if not, the case will only stand over to bring in the necessary parties. Cannon v. Norton, 14 Vt. 178. 18 Vt. 420. Day v. Cummings, 19 Vt. 496. Page v. Olcott. Rowan v. Union Arms Co., 36 Vt. 124.

79. Where certain heirs, apparently interested in the subject matter of the orator's claim, were not made parties to the bill, but gave their depositions in which they disclaimed all interest;—Held, that such disclaimer would bar any future claim on their part, and therefore superseded the necessity of their being made parties. McConnell v. McConnell, 11 Vt. 290. 19 Vt. 499.

80. If there be a mis-joinder of a defendant, and this is apparent in the bill, and the objection is not made by demurrer, nor in the answer, it should be considered as waived, and as coming too late when raised at the hearing. Wing v. Cooper, 37 Vt. 169.

81. Where a decree can be made which will do entire justice to all parties, notwithstanding the non-joinder or mis-joinder of a party, and the objection, though known before, is not insisted upon by plea, demurrer or answer, it cannot be raised upon the hearing. Smith v. Bartholomew, 42 Vt. 356.

82. Parties misplaced. A court of chancery will not ordinarily dismiss a suit on account of any mere informality in the position of the parties, as orators or defendants, if all the parties interested are before the court. West v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 408.

83. All the parties being before the court and heard, the court rendered a decree settling their rights, though one of the defendants should have been orator, and the orator a defendant. Isham v. Higbee, 2 Vt. 354. Nason v. Smalley, 8 Vt. 118.

84. Amendment. Where a bill was brought in behalf of a corporation, as claimed, and it turned out on hearing that the complainant had no legal existence as a corporation;—Held, that it was within the power of the court of chancery, in its discretion, to allow an amendment by bringing in, as complainants, the stockholders in the company, to prosecute the same right in their own names. Whether the evidence filed before such amendment could be read on the hearing, after the amendment, would depend upon the circumstances of the case, and the issues involved. Vt. Mining Co. v. Windham Co. Bank, 44 Vt. 489.

85. Instance of amendment by bringing in new parties, after hearing on appeal. Barrett v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 365.

2. Demurrer.

86. Demurring to a bill for want of equity is submitting to the jurisdiction of the court,

An objection to jurisdiction over the defendants should be presented by plea. Bank of B. Falls v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 28 Vt. 470.

87. A demurrer to a bill upon its merits admits the facts regularly pleaded, and an order overruling the demurrer is made upon the supposition of the truth of the matters stated; and it is well enough that the record should state them as being taken as true, and so the orator is entitled to relief. Hall v. Dana, 2 Aik. 381.

88. Unless the demurrer is to that part of the bill which claims a discovery, objection cannot be taken, under it, to interrogatories whose answer might subject the defendant to a penalty. Payne v. Hathaway, 3 Vt. 212.

89. The question of a presumptive bar from lapse of time cannot be raised by demurrer to a bill. Ib.

90. A demurrer to the whole bill will be overruled, if it is ill as to part. Shed v. Garfield, 5 Vt. 39.

3. Plea; Answer; Cross bill.

91. Form and substance of answer. Where a defendant makes his defense by way of answer, he must set up in it all the various grounds of defense upon which he intends to rely; otherwise, they are not in the case. Warren v. Warren, 30 Vt. 530.

92. A defendant may answer in part, and refuse to answer further by stating sufficient ground why he should not be compelled to answer further. Hunt v. Gookin, 6 Vt. 462.

93. In order to excuse the defendant from either admitting or denying in his answer the truth of any material allegation of the bill, it is necessary that he deny all knowledge and information upon the point. If he has any information upon a material matter alleged, aside from the bill itself, he is bound to state his belief of the truth or falsity of the allegation; otherwise, the answer is subject to exception. Devereaux v. Cooper, 11 Vt. 103.

94. Exceptions to answer. Any defects in an answer must be supplied by taking exceptions and obtaining a further answer. If the defendant omits to answer, or answers evasively, this is not to be taken as an implied admission against his interest, or of the facts alleged in the bill, but he should be pushed to a distinct and explicit declaration as to how the facts are, the same as any other witness. Blaisdell v. Stevens, 16 Vt. 179. Bigelow v. Topliff, 25 Vt. 273, 288.

95. Hearing on bill and answer. Where a cause is heard upon bill and answer, the answer must be taken to be true, and the orator can take a decree only according to the allegations and qualifications of the answer. Doolittle v. Gookin, 10 Vt. 265.

96. An answer not traversed, though not responsive to the bill, must be taken as true; and where the facts so stated constitute a full defense, the bill must be dismissed. Slason v. Wright, 14 Vt. 208.

97. Where a case stands upon bill and answer not traversed, the allegations of the defendant made by way of belief come within the general rule that the answer is to be taken as true. Gates v. Adams, 24 Vt. 70.

98. Answer as evidence. But where the answer to a bill is upon information and belief only, and the defendant is not supposed to have, and does not profess to have, personal knowledge of the facts stated in the bill, such answer, being traversed, is not evidence of the truth of its denials which requires to be overcome by something more than the testimony of one witness. Loomis v. Fay, 24 Vt. 240. Wooley v. Chamberlain, Ib. 270.

99. The general rule is, that the answer of one defendant is not evidence for, or against, his co-defendant. Blodgett v. Hobart, 18 Vt. 414. Cannon v. Norton, 14 Vt. 178.

100. When responsive. An answer responsive to the allegations of a bill, or petition, is evidence for the defendant; and his right to have the answer taken as evidence is co-extensive with his obligation to answer. Blaisdell v. Bowers, 40 Vt. 126. Rich v. Austin, 40 Vt. 416. Grafton Bank v. Doe, 19 Vt. 463; and see Adams v. Adams, 22 Vt. 50.

101. What is responsive will be determined by the bill, and not by the interrogatories. These can neither limit nor extend the defendant's obligation to answer. Redfield, J., in McDonald v. McDonald, 16 Vt. 630.

102. The answer is to be considered as a plea, and so far as any fact is admitted it is evidence against the defendant; but when any new fact is alleged by way of avoidance of the matter charged in the bill and admitted in the answer, and the answer is traversed, it stands like any other plea, and must be proved. Redfield, J. Ib.

103. If the answer assert matter affirmatively in opposition to the right claimed by the orator, though it be responsive to the bill, quære, whether, upon a traverse, the answer shall be received as proof, or as mere pleading. Bennett, J., in Allen v. Mincer, 17 Vt. 67. But see Grafton Bank v. Doe, 19 Vt. 463. Blaisdell v. Bowers, 40 Vt. 126. Rich v. Austin, Ib. 416.

104. Where the answer is not responsive to the bill, or sets up affirmative allegations in opposition to or in avoidance of the orator's demand, and is replied to, the answer is of no avail, as evidence, in respect to such allegations, and the defendant is as much bound to establish the allegations so made by independent testimony, as the plaintiff is to sustain his bill. Wells v. Houston, 37 Vt. 245. Mott v. Har- ington, 12 Vt. 199. Cannon v. Norton, 14 Vt. 178. Lane v. Marshall, 15 Vt. 85. Pier-son v. Claves, Id. 93. McDonald v. McDonald, 16 Vt. 630. Allen v. Mower, 17 Vt. 61. San-born v. Kittredge, 20 Vt. 632.

105. Where a bill was brought to procure a settlement of a partnership account, and the answer, admitting the partnership, averred a settlement of the partnership accounts;—Held, that such averment was by way of defense and in the nature of a plea, and was not responsive, and so was not evidence, but must be proved by evidence aliunde. Spaulding v. Holmes, 25 Vt. 491.

106. The answer to a bill of foreclosure, even that of the original mortgagor, is never regarded as evidence to impeach the considera-tion of the mortgage security, where the answer is traversed. Wooley v. Chamberlain, 24 Vt. 270.

107. Where the plaintiff's claim as set forth in the bill rests upon a written contract, and the right of action is not barred by lapse of time, the admission of the contract in the an-swer and the allegation of payment, or of any other matter merely in discharge, are to be treated as distinct, and the answer is not evi-dence of the latter, but it must be proved other-wise; but, if the plaintiff's claim rests wholly in oral proof, and the answer of the defend-ant is invoked to make out the plaintiff's case, the defendant may admit such contract and al-lege that it was in its inception inoperative, or that it has been paid, or released, and the whole answer upon both points is to be regarded as evidence; nor need the matter of avoidance, in order to be evidence, be contained in the same sentence with the admission;—but the chancel-lor is not bound equally to believe all parts of such answer. Adams v. Adams, 22 Vt. 50.

108. Where a bill alleged that the release of a bond conditioned for the support of the orator was obtained by the defendant for a grossly inadequate consideration, and the answer de-nied the inadequacy, and set forth the previous arrangement which led to the execution of the bond, the maintenance of the orator from that time to the cancelling of the bond, and the amount paid for the release, the court was in-clined to think that the answer was responsive and was evidence. Mann v. Betterly, 21 Vt. 326.

109. And in considering the question of the sufficiency of the consideration for the discharge of the bond;—Held, that it was proper to take into consideration the amount of property con-veyed to the defendant on the occasion of giv-ing the bond, and the amount expended by the defendant in the support of the orator. Id.

110. Whatever in an answer is fairly a re-ply to the general scope of the claim set up in the bill, whether in the stating or charging part, and whether by way of denial, excuse or avoid-ance, is evidence for the defendant. Wilson, J. in Rich v. Austin, 40 Vt. 420.

111. Where the bill or petition for foreclosure of a mortgage charged that the mortgage note "is justly due and owing and has not been paid," and the answer set forth sundry pay-ments and the circumstances under which such payments were made, and an understanding for their application upon the mortgage;—Held, that the answer was responsive and was evi-dence for the defendant. Blaisdell v. Bowers, 40 Vt. 126. Grafton Bank v. Doe, 19 Vt. 463.

112. Cross-bill. A cross-bill must be based upon an equity growing out of the claim set up in the original bill, and, in our practice, is con-sidered a dependency merely upon the principal bill. It is usually brought, either to obtain a necessary discovery of facts in aid of the de-fense of the original bill, or to obtain full relief to all parties touching the matters of the origi-nal bill. Rutland v. Paige, 24 Vt. 181. Slason v. Wright, 14 Vt. 208.

113. Active relief was refused to a defen-dant in a foreclosure suit, for want of a cross-bill, although, in his defense, he established a priority and superior right. Simonds v. Brown, 18 Vt. 231.

IV. PROCEEDINGS AFTER ISSUE.

(See Rules of Chancery Practice, 11 Vt. 689.)

1. The testimony.

114. Matters in the record. A letter, not before proved, was admitted to be proved and read in evidence at the hearing,—such having been the former practice. Dana v. Nelson, 1 Aik. 252.

115. A document—as a decree in chancery—which is stated in the bill and admitted in the answer, is to be considered as proved and in evidence so far as it is stated and admitted, al-though not filed as an exhibit. Lyman v. Lit-tle, 15 Vt. 576.

116. A court of chancery having referred certain issues to a court of law for trial by jury, the jury found certain of the issues and failed to agree as to others. Held, that the case stood before the court on final hearing upon the whole record, and that not only what appeared upon the record in the court of chancery, but the in-formation collected before the jury and the tes-timony there given, as shown by the judge's report, were to be regarded. Adams v. Soule, 33 Vt. 538.

117. Mode of taking testimony. The true construction of the 16th Rule in Chancery is, that each party, before he commences taking testimony on his side, shall furnish to the other the names of his witnesses, &c. Chase v. Dix, 46 Vt. 642.

118. The practice of having questions shown to a witness in a chancery cause, and his answers prepared beforehand, and reduced to writing, and examined by counsel before coming before the master to testify, is not allowable, and receives the censure of the court. Hickok v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 35 Vt. 476; and see McDaniels v. Barnum, 5 Vt. 296-8.

119. Criticism and condemnation of the sometime practices of the bar in taking testimony in chancery—the needless diffuseness and prolixity, and sometimes impertinence and scandal. Costs refused in such case. Vermont Copper, &c., Co. v. Barnard, 40 Vt. 65.

120. Testimony of surviving party. G. S. c. 36, s. 24, excluding the surviving party as a witness in his own behalf, does not apply to the answer of a defendant in chancery to a bill or petition, so far as it is responsive. Blaindell v. Bonners, 40 Vt. 126.

121. — of a single witness against the answer. The testimony of one witness, against the direct and positive averment of the answer, is not sufficient ground for a decree. But the testimony of the one witness may be so corroborated by circumstances as to be sufficient, and the answer itself may contain such circumstances. Pierson v. Catlin, 3 Vt. 272.

122. Motion to suppress. Motions to suppress testimony for any defect which is curable should be made at the earliest opportunity, in order to enable the party relying upon the testimony to obviate the objection by obtaining an order to re-examine the witness. Where the testimony had been on file more than one term, the court refused a motion to suppress for an informality in taking it. Marcy v. Ross, 12 Vt. 484.

123. A deposition in chancery ought not to be suppressed for a failure to comply with the rules in a mere matter of form, unless such failure proceed from bad faith, rather than from accident and mistake. Partridge v. Stocker, 36 Vt. 108.

124. Where a motion has been made to suppress testimony, and the adverse party has given notice to bring it on before the hearing in chief, it should be so brought on, or should not be entertained on the hearing in chief. Id.

125. A motion to suppress testimony must be disposed of in chancery; otherwise, the question cannot be raised in the supreme court on appeal. Van Namee v. Groot, 40 Vt. 74.

126. — to inspect papers. A motion in chancery for the inspection of certain letters, &c., in the possession of the adverse party, which had been proved as exhibits, was denied, as not authorized. Clark v. Field, 10 Vt. 321. 16 Vt. 112.

2. Report of Master.

127. Form. In taking accounts in chancery, the master, and not the court, is to settle the facts, and his finding is conclusive, unless the report for good cause be set aside. Merriam v. Barton, 14 Vt. 501.

128. Exceptions to a master's report, which are addressed to the discretion of a chancellor, cannot be revised in the supreme court;—as where the accounts before a master were not verified by the oath of the party, as required by Rule 41, and the report was not recommit-
ted. Id.

129. A master appointed to take an account is not obliged to make a special report, unless by direction of the court. Nor should he report evidence, but the facts found. Mott v. Harrington, 15 Vt. 185.

130. A master in chancery before whom an accounting is had must report all the testimony given, as well as state the accounts at length, and all the facts found. Herrick v. Belknap, 27 Vt. 673. (Changed by G. S. c. 29, s. 11;—not his duty to report the testimony, unless specially required so to do by the chancellor.)

131. On a reference to a master upon an accounting ordered, the statements of the answer as to number, quantity and value, were held to be evidence merely, but not conclusive against the defendant, and yet of the strongest character. Morse v. Slason, 16 Vt. 319.

132. Effect. The court of chancery, or the supreme court, will not overrule or disregard the findings of a master to whom it has been referred to take the accounts upon a mortgage, unless for evident mistake on his part, or evident corruption. McDaniels v. Harbour, 43 Vt. 460. See Thrall v. Chittenden, 31 Vt. 186.

133. Unless the result at which the master arrives in taking an account is clearly shown to be wrong, the court will not disturb such result. Barrett, J., in Vt. & Can. R. Co. v. Vt. Central R. Co., 34 Vt. 65.

134. Where an account has been taken and returned by a master, exceptions should be filed to the report as to any items objected to. It is not the duty of the chancellor to examine items not so excepted to, nor will such items be examined on appeal. Smalley v. Corliss, 37 Vt. 486.

135. Although the report of the master is not final as to the facts, yet it is firmly settled in this State that it will be regarded as settling the facts which fall within his province to find, and which he reports as found, unless it appears affirmatively that he has found facts without evidence, or against evidence. Rowan v. State Bank, 45 Vt. 160, 191, 195.

3. The decree.

136. Must be of a term. The chancellor can make necessary orders in vacation for furthering the cause, but cannot render a final decree in the cause. According to the recent practice, the court of chancery does not adjourn, but unless when in session at the regular term, the court is not in practice regarded as open except for the purposes of such acts as a chancellor may legally do in vacation,—although, by consent of parties, a hearing may be had and final decree rendered, entitled as of the term. Sturges v. Knapp, 38 Vt. 540. (G. S. c. 29, s. 14.)

137. For want of appearance. Under the 4th and 25th Chancery Rules (1 D. Chip. 496), the orator was allowed to take a decree for want of an appearance entered by the defendant on the first day of the term, although an appearance was entered on the 4th day, and immediately on notice being proved. Miller v. Moore, 1 Aik. 216.

138. A decree dismissing a bill for want of an appearance, or prosecution, is like a nonsuit at law, and is not a bar to a subsequent bill for the same matter. Porter v. Vaughn, 26 Vt. 624.

139. Must be upon the facts stated in the bill and in issue. Facts occurring after a cause is at issue in chancery cannot be considered in deciding the case, unless brought into the issue by subsequent proceedings,—as, by the orator's withdrawing his traverse, on leave, and amending his bill, or by filing a supplemental bill; or by the defendant's filing a cross-bill, &c., so that testimony may be taken on both sides, if desired. Blaisdell v. Stevens, 16 Vt. 179.

140. A decree cannot be made upon matters happening since the bringing of the bill, unless brought into the case by some proper supplemental proceeding. Downer v. Wilson, 33 Vt. 1.

141. Where a material fact—as notice—was not alleged in the bill, but was denied in the answer which was traversed, and testimony was taken, on which the supreme court on appeal found the fact proved, yet it was held that the fact was not properly in issue; but the court, pro forma, reversed the decree of the chancellor, and remanded the cause for amendment, and further proceedings. Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410.

142. If the orator claim an account on certain obligations set forth in his bill, which are denied in the answer, but other and different obligations are admitted in the answer sufficient to entitle the orator to an account upon the basis of the answer, and the orator desires to have an account taken even upon the basis of the answer, in the event of failing to compel the account which he claims in his bill, he should obtain leave to file a supplemental bill, alleging in the alternative the facts admitted in the answer. But if, instead, the answer be traversed, and on trial he fails to support the facts relied upon in his bill, he cannot fall back and claim an account on the basis of the answer. McOrmby v. Low, 24 Vt. 436.

143. Exceptional cases. In an interpleader suit, the defendants compromised and reduced their settlement to writing after answers, and filed the writing in the cause with a statement of facts agreed. The court treated this, though irregular, as tantamount to an amended answer and as evidence of the facts stated, and rendered a decree thereon. Horton v. Baptist Church, &c., 34 Vt. 309.

144. Where the orator sets up in his bill a claim of right against the defendant, not depending entirely upon contract, the bill will not be dismissed for a variance, when he proves a right of the same nature, though of less extent, and yet broad enough to render unjustifiable the defendant's acts complained of; and he may have a decree establishing and defining his true right, in answer to a prayer therefor. Weston v. Cushing, 45 Vt. 581.

V. PROCEEDINGS AFTER DECREE.

1. Appeal.

145. The term. An appeal from chancery, actually taken at a term subsequent to the rendering of the final decree, but entered as of the former term, was held irregular, and was dismissed. Gove v. Dyke, 14 Vt. 561.

146. Mode. A party appealing from a decree in chancery is not obliged by G. S. c. 29, s. 85, to make a formal assignment of errors. Bishop v. Day, 18 Vt. 116. 19 Vt. 174.

147. Entry. An appeal from chancery cannot be entered in the supreme court upon affidavits that the appeal was duly taken, but the clerk had neglected to make the proper entries. Gove v. Dyke, 13 Vt. 308.

148. Form of decree. The supreme court refused to hear an appeal from chancery, because no decree had been drawn up in form and signed by the chancellor. Brown v. Mead, 16 Vt. 148.

149. Pro forma decree. The practice of allowing appeals in chancery upon merely formal decrees, without hearing, disapproved by Redfield, C. J., Stafford v. Ballou, 17 Vt. 329. Hyndman v. Hyndman, 19 Vt. 9. 24 Vt. 240.

150. A pro forma decree entered by agreement, and made for the sole purpose of being appealed from in order that the case may be brought to a speedy hearing, is not such a departure from the regular proceedings in a cause, as to affect the rights or liabilities of any person connected with the suit, either as principals or sureties. It does not, in such case, stay the recovering of injunction damages. Sturgis v. Knapp, 33 Vt. 486.

151. Final order or decree. Where the defendant made an appearance, but neglected to make answer to the bill agreeably to the rules of court, and the bill was taken as confessed for want of an answer, and the cause was then referred to a master to take an account, and a decree was made upon the acceptance of the master's report;—Held, that no appeal lay from the decree. Hart v. Strong, 15 Vt. 377. (G. S. c. 29, s. 83.)

152. From the order of the chancellor amending a recorded decree, upon petition, by changing it from a dismissal of the bill "upon the merits" to a simple dismissal, an appeal was allowed and sustained. Porter v. Vaughan, 22 Vt. 269.

153. An injunction bill was taken as confessed for want of an answer and a decree entered up. The chancellor, on application of the defendant, ordered that the decree be vacated and he have leave to answer. The orator appealed. Held, (1), that the chancellor had power to make such order; (2), that the application was to the discretion of the chancellor and not revisable in the supreme court; (3), that not being a final decree, no appeal lay. Hall v. Lamb, 28 Vt. 85.

154. Upon hearing on bill, demurrer thereto, and plea, the chancellor overruled the demurrer and plea and rendered a decree for the orator according to the prayer of the bill. The defendant, without asking leave to withdraw his demurrer and to answer, appealed. Held, that he had thereby elected to treat the decree as not interlocutory, but final, and that he could not claim that the decree was erroneous because made final;—but the cause, after affirmance, was remanded, with leave to apply to the chancellor to withdraw the demurrer, and to answer the bill on its merits. Shaw v. Chamberlin, 45 Vt. 512.

2. Hearing on appeal.

155. Practice. On an appeal, the appellant must furnish the copies; but such copies as are required by the rules of the court of chancery to be furnished in that court belong to the case, and should come up with it. Hilton v. Fullerton, 19 Vt. 483.

156. Where a bill is demurred to, and the cause is appealed, the case will proceed in the supreme court as if it were in the court of chancery to be heard for the first time, whichever party appeals. In such case, the party demurring will open the argument. Bishop v. Day, 13 Vt. 116.

157. On an appeal, the parties must be confined to the evidence used before the chancellor. Tarbel v. White River Bank, 24 Vt. 655.

158. Chancery appeals must be heard in the supreme court upon the same evidence precisely as was before the chancellor. The certificate of an oath attached, after the appeal, to a paper used before the chancellor, is not regularly in the case in the supreme court. Ellison v. Wilson, 36 Vt. 60.

159. Chancery appeals are invariably heard entire. The supreme court will not hear a motion, made in the court of chancery, argued as a preliminary question. Morrill v. Kittredge, 19 Vt. 528,—as, a motion to suppress testimony. Smith v. Onion, 19 Vt. 432.

160. In appeals from chancery, it is the practice to hear read all the testimony which was read in the court of chancery, although excepted to, and then to hear the parties on all questions arising on the merits, and on all formal exceptions properly taken in the court of chancery, which appear on the papers. And exceptions minuted by the master will be regarded as following the case to final hearing, unless expressly or impliedly waived below. Ainsworth v. Prentiss, 24 Vt. 646.

161. On appeals to the supreme court, the whole decree is appealed from, and all the pleadings and testimony in the case are sent up,—not, however, for the purpose of bringing it up as an original case, but to enable the supreme court to see if the chancellor committed any error in making the decree. (G. S. c. 29, s. 85.) It seems a necessary rule in such case, that an objection which a party, by his silence in the court below, may be deemed to have waived, and which, when waived, would leave the cause to rest with the merits of the decree, shall not be taken in the appellate court; and that no point or question, which, had it been raised in the court below, might have been obviated by amendment, or proof, can be raised in the court above. But the rule does not apply to objections which neither amendment nor proof could have obviated. Dunshee v. Parmelee, 19 Vt. 172. Mott v. Harrington, 15 Vt. 194. Slason v. Cannon, 19 Vt. 219.

162. Waiver of certain defects. In a foreclosure case the facts, as reported by a master, made a different case from that stated in the petition, which had been taken as confessed. Both parties proceeded to hearing upon the case made by the report, without objection, and without any motion to amend the petition. Held, that all objections for variance were thereby waived, and that the case on appeal stood upon the report. Walker v. King, 44 Vt. 601.

163. In a bill of foreclosure the mortgage was described and was admitted in the answer, and, on the hearing before the chancellor, was treated as in the case, though not produced. Held, that the defendant could not, on appeal, object to the absence of the mortgage as a ground for reversing the decree. Dunshee v. Parmelee, 19 Vt. 172.

164. The decision of the court of chancery in regard to matters depending upon the rules of that court, or in regard to the time or form of taking any particular proceeding, will be held final on appeal; and objections of that character, if not taken in that court, will be considered as waived. Morrill v. Kittredge, 19 Vt. 528.

165. Where the defendant answers the bill fully in the aspect in which it was intended to be brought, and testimony is taken on both sides with reference to the issues made upon the answer in that aspect, and a final decree has been made in the court of chancery without question raised as to the sufficiency of the bill, that question cannot be raised in the supreme court. Hills v. Loomis, 42 Vt. 562.

166. Matters of discretion in practice. There are many incidental questions, as of practice, resting in the discretion of the chancellor, which are not ordinarily revisable on appeal—as, a refusal to recommit a master's report, on the ground of surprise, or newly discovered evidence; overruling formal exceptions as to the mode of taking testimony. Lovejoy v. Churchill, 29 Vt. 151; overruling a motion to suppress testimony for a formal defect. Partidge v. Stocker, 36 Vt. 108.

167. Sending issue to jury. On an appeal from chancery, the supreme court will not send an issue of fact to the county court to be tried by a jury. Such an order is matter resting in the discretion of the chancellor, and has not been practised in this State. Briggs v. Shaw, 15 Vt. 78. Ib., 785.

Note.—In Adams v. Soule, the supreme court remanded a cause with direction to the chancellor to frame issues to be tried by a jury in the county court—which was done. 33 Vt. 538.

168. Affirmative decree for defendant. The orator's bill was dismissed in the court of chancery. He appealed, and that decree was reversed, and a decree ordered for the defendant giving the defendant affirmative relief, and costs in both courts. Davis v. Smith, 43 Vt. 269.

3. Mandate.

169. How far the chancellor is bound thereby. After the decision by the supreme court of a chancery appeal and the remanding of the cause, one defendant, at a subsequent term, asked to have the mandate so modified as to allow the filing of a cross-bill against another defendant, as to whom the bill was ordered dismissed. The court refused; but Reidfeld, C. J. entertained no doubt that the chancellor had authority to allow such motion, without its being a contempt of the mandate. Barker v. Belknap, 27 Vt. 700.

Note.—Such motion was afterwards allowed by Poland, Ch., and was approved on appeal. See 35 Vt. 451.

170. Where a chancery cause is remanded, it is the duty of the chancellor to conform his decree to the judgment of the supreme court, so far as they have adjudged; but if no direction has been given as to an incident of the decree, like the costs, it is his duty to determine it. Gale v. Butler, 35 Vt. 449.

171. The power and duty of a chancellor in a cause remanded are more than merely ministerial, to register the mandate of the supreme court. It is within his power to allow further proceedings to be had, if in his judgment justice requires; or to tax and apportion costs not determined by the mandate. Ib. Barker v. Vt. Central R. Co., 35 Vt. 451.

172. When it reaches the court of chancery. On an appeal from chancery, the mandate of the supreme court directed that interest be cast upon a certain injunction bond "from the time the case should reach the court of chancery." Held, that by this was intended the first day of the regular term of the court of chancery following the reception of the mandate by the clerk. Sturges v. Knapp, 38 Vt. 540. (Distinction taken between the chancellor and the court of chancery.)

VI. REVISORY PROCEEDINGS.

173. Bill of review. A bill of review may be brought of right; but it can only be for errors of law apparent on the decree, or for some new matters of fact discovered since the decree, as a release, &c.,—and herein it differs from a petition for a rehearing. Barnum v. McDaniels, 6 Vt. 177.

174. To entitle a party to a review of a decree on the ground of newly discovered evidence, he must show not only that it would be material and would probably change the result, substantially, but also that it was not and could not have been discovered by the use of reasonable diligence before the former trial. Brainard v. Morse, 47 Vt. 320.

175. After the hearing and decision of an appeal, the supreme court has no power to sustain or allow a bill of review, but that must be exercised by the court of chancery. Slason v. Cannon, 19 Vt. 219.

176. The discovery of new matter after decree, or after publication passed, is not a ground for a petition for rehearing, but relief must be sought by bill of review, in the first case, or by supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, in the other. Mead v. Arms, 3 Vt. 148.

177. Petition for rehearing. An application for a rehearing in chancery must be made, and notice served on the adverse party, within twenty days from the rising of the court which rendered the decree—according to Rule 17 of Supreme Court rules. (1 Aik. 404.) French v. Chittenden, 10 Vt. 127. See Rule 24 in Chancery, 11 Vt. 695.

178. In this State, on a petition for a rehearing in chancery, the whole cause is considered open to both parties. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41. See Ch. Rule 24.

179. No rehearing is allowed of a question raised by a cross-bill and answer filed after hearing upon the original cause, which was raised and controverted in the original bill, and which was thus adjudicated, and fell within the decree made. Barker v. Belknap, 39 Vt. 168.

180. —for correcting record of decree. The court of chancery may, upon petition, inquire into the accuracy of a decree recorded, and hear proofs, and amend it according to the truth. Porter v. Vaughan, 22 Vt. 269.

181. —for modifying decree. A petition to modify a decree and for further directions, though not embracing all the parties to the decree, nor filed in the original cause, but reciting the proceedings in the original cause, was held to be so identified with it, as to be treated as a petition in that cause. Sevall v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 364.

182. On a petition to modify a decree, or for further directions under it, if all are made parties whose interests may be affected by granting the prayer of the petition, it is sufficient in this respect, though not embracing all the parties to the decree. Ib.

CHIPMAN (NATHANIEL.)

Dissertations. 1. On statute adopting the common law of England. N. Chip. 117.

2. On statute of conveyances. Ib. 141.

3. On statute of offsets. Ib. 167.

4. Negotiability of notes. Ib. 181.

Forms. Ib. 231 and seq.

CITY OF BURLINGTON.

1. Ordinances. Under the charter of the city of Burlington giving the city council power to make "any by-laws or ordinances which they may deem necessary for the well being of the city, not repugnant to the constitution or laws of the State," they may pass a valid ordinance against the unnecessary occupation, obstruction or encumbering of sidewalks so as to interfere with the convenient use of the same by passengers. State v. Bacon, 40 Vt. 456.

2. A complaint for a violation of an ordinance of the city of Burlington should be entitled in the name of the State, and should conclude, like other criminal prosecutions, contrary to the statute, &c., and against the peace and dignity of the State. Ib. State v. Soragan, 40 Vt. 450.

3. In a prosecution for the violation of an ordinance of the city of Burlington by neglecting to comply with an order of the health officer, the complaint alleged that the respondent "did disobey a lawful order of the health officer of said city after the same had been duly served upon him, which order was substantially as follows," reciting it. On demurrer, Held, (1), that this general allegation of disobedience was too loose—that the particular act or neglect constituting a violation of the order should be stated; (2), that the service of the order is assumed, and not averred, as it should be; and for each of these causes the complaint was ill; (3), that the complaint was not ill by use of the word "substantially"; but that the pleader would be held to as strict proof, as if the order had been set forth in the usual form, according to its legal effect. State v. Soragan.

4. Warnings and meetings. The charter of the city of Burlington provides that all warnings for city meetings "shall be issued by the mayor and published in the manner designated in the by-laws of the city." Held, that a standing by-law providing for a newspaper publication of such warnings and the times and extent of such publication, was not controlled by G. S. c. 15, s. 12, as to the posting of warnings of town meetings, and the time of posting. Allen v. Burlington, 45 Vt. 202.

5. The only business article in the warning of a city meeting was: "To vote whether the city will authorize the city council to pledge the credit of the city to an amount not exceeding $150,000, payable in not less than 20 years, with interest at six per cent per annum, to provide a supply of water for the use of the city." The meeting having passed the vote affirmatively in the language above, then voted to authorize the city council to assess annually upon the grand list a tax of ten per cent, to be invested as a sinking fund for the extinguishment of such bonded debt. Held, that by the passage of the first vote the business named in the warning had been finished and the authority, under the warning, was exhausted; and that the second vote was void. Ib.

6. In city meeting a vote was passed authorizing the city council of Burlington to assess annually, upon the grand list of the city, a tax of ten per cent, to be invested as a sinking fund, and to be applied in extinguishment of a certain city bonded debt. Held, that such tax, assessed upon any other than the list of that year, was illegal. Ib.

7. Under the warning of a meeting of the voters of the city of Burlington, "To vote upon the question of raising money, by tax or otherwise, to meet the accruing expenses of the city government, and for school purposes, for the ensuing year";—Held, that the meeting could not legally vote a tax, or authorize the mayor to borrow money on the credit of the city, for the purpose of erecting a high-school building. Ib.

8. Assessments. A municipal corporation may be authorized by the legislature to make local or special taxes or assessments, for the building of sewers, sidewalks, drains, aqueducts, &c., and to apportion the expense in the ratio of the benefits received. The power of taxation implies apportionment. The levying of such assessments is not taking private property for public use under the right eminent domain, but is the exercise of the right of taxation inherent in the State. Non dubitatur that a local assessment may so transcend the limit of equality and reason that its exaction would cease to be a tax, or contribution to a common burden, and become extortion and confiscation. In that case, it would be the duty of the court to protect the citizens from robbery under color of a better name. Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174.

9. Under an act authorizing the city council of Burlington to establish rates of annual rents, &c., for the supply of water by means of the city water works, or for the benefits resulting therefrom, to be called water rents, and to be apportioned to the different classes of buildings, &c., in reference to their dimensions and uses for dwellings, hotels, factories, &c., and to vacant lots, as near as may be practicable, the rents were established and apportioned by an ordinance, "for buildings of one story, twelve cents per front foot; for buildings of two stories, sixteen cents per front foot; for vacant lots, eight cents per front foot." Held, that such apportionment in the ratio of frontage, as applied to the several kinds of property specified, was not so manifestly unequal and unjust, or without an equivalent, as that the court could declare it illegal. Ib.

10. Where an act for the assessment of water rents in the city of Burlington, and an act for an amendment of the city charter were both pending as bills in the legislature at the same time, and the first provided that such assessments should be collected as provided "by the amended charter of said city," and this last act was not approved until seven days after the first;—Held, that the reference in the first act was to the bill then pending as an amendment of the charter, and that the act was valid. Ib.

11. A city assessment on adjoining property for the building of a sewer without notice to the owners, under Act of 1868, No. 88, s. 2, is void; and the commissioners may proceed and lay another assessment, as if none had ever been laid. No notice of the laying of a sewer is required. Woodhouse v. City of Burlington, 47 Vt. 300.

12. City court. The city court of Burlington has no power, under the statute creating it, to grant a jury trial in criminal cases; nor to grant an appeal, except upon entering into such a recognizance as the statute provides; nor would an exception lie to the judgment in such case, though the appeal should be improperly denied. State v. Cloran, 47 Vt. 281.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

1. Where there is a cloud upon the title of one in possession of lands, by reason of an outstanding claim of title, a bill in equity lies to remove such claim and relieve the title from the cloud. Eldridge v. Smith, 34 Vt. 484. Hodges v. Griggs, 21 Vt. 280.

2. Where the purchaser of a farm, upon which there was an attachment in favor of a creditor of a former owner, gave his note for part of the purchase money, but not to be paid until the land should be freed from the attachment, and the attaching creditor obtained judgment and levied his execution upon the land attached, but for some years thereafter had omitted to bring suit against the purchaser, who had remained in undisturbed possession;—Held, that the holder of the note could sustain a bill against the maker and the attaching creditor to compel an adjustment of their respective rights to the land, by a suit between them. Hodges v. Griggs.

3. Relief, under a bill quia timet to remove a cloud from the orator's title to land, is not a matter of right, but of judicial discretion with the chancellor, to be exercised only in exceptional cases, where the remedy at law is inadequate, and delay dangerous, or to prevent fraud and injustice. Wing v. Hall, 44 Vt. 118. Rooney v. Soule, 45 Vt. 303.

4. Where a title asserted is all of record so that it can be determined at law, and there is no special equity in the case, a bill to remove a cloud from the orator's title will not be entertained. Rooney v. Soule.

5. The orator was in possession of a portion of a certain lot, claiming the whole under a void tax deed. The defendants were in possession of the other part of the lot under a license from the orator's grantor, and while so in possession procured a deed of the whole lot from one M, who claimed to own it by an independent title. This bill was to compel the defendants to convey to the orator all the right and title they acquired by the deed from M, and to remove the cloud from the orator's title. Held, that the case, under its circumstances, was not a proper one for such relief, but that the title should be tried at law. Bill dismissed without prejudice to the orator's rights in any proceedings at law. Wing v. Hall, 44 Vt. 118.

COMMISSIONS.

1. There is no such usage in regard to brokerage in this country, as that the court can declare it, as a rule of law, that no compensation is due a broker for negotiating a loan upon an agreed commission, where the principal recedes from the negotiation before its completion. Durkee v. Vt. Central R. Co., 29 Vt. 127.

2. Commissions partly earned before one's death were allowed to be collected by his administrator, deducting the expense of completing the transactions. Newell v. Humphrey, 37 Vt. 265.

See FACTOR.

COMMIXTURE.—ACCRETION.

1. Property in articles distinguishable, as cattle, is not lost by commixture. Holbrook v. Hyde, 1 Vt. 286.

2. Although the owner of goods intentionally intermixes them with those of another so that they cannot be distinguished, but does not do it fraudulently but by some mistake of the facts, the property is not lost. Pratt v. Bryant, 20 Vt. 333.

3. Accretion. Ordinary repairs upon a personal chattel, such as making new bolts, nuts, thills, and the like, to a wagon, become accretions to and merge in the principal thing, and become the property of the general owner. But in a case where new wheels, and an axle added, constituted the running part of the wagon, and they could be followed, identified, severed without detriment to the wagon, and appropriated to other use without loss;—Held, that the mechanic making such repairs could maintain a property in them, as against the general owner. Clark v. Wells, 45 Vt. 4.

4. The ownership of property carries with it the ownership of its natural increase—as the future offspring of animals. Buckmaster v. Smith, 22 Vt. 203.

COMMON LAW.

1. It was urged in favor of an indictment, bad at common law, that this form of an indictment had been in use in this State for more than thirty years, that is, almost from the commencement of the government; that there had been no decision against it; and that it ought now to be considered as the common law of Vermont by usage. The indictment was held insufficient; and by Chipman, C. J.,—"That laws affecting essential rights should, by custom, originate in our courts, independent of the constitution and laws enacted by statute and in opposition to the principles and maxims of the common law, is a thing I cannot understand. It is a doctrine which ought not to be countenanced by this court." State v. Parker, 1 D. Chip. 298.

2. The law merchant, as part of the common law, is adopted by our statute, and our courts are bound to recognize it. Nash v. Harrington, 2 Aik. 9.

3. The adoption of the common law of England by the legislature of this State was an adoption of the whole body of the law of that country (aside from their parliamentary legislation), and included those principles of law administered by the courts of chancery, and admiralty, and the ecclesiastical courts (so far as the same were applicable to our local situation and circumstances, and not repugnant to our constitution and laws), as well as that portion of their laws administered by the ordinary and common tribunals. Le Barron v. Le Barron, 35 Vt. 365.

COMPOSITION.

1. A contract in writing between a debtor and certain of his creditors, made upon sufficient consideration, agreeing to extend time of payment, and which does not profess to include all the creditors, will operate as a temporary bar to suits by such creditors as become parties by signing it. Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520.

2. If a debtor in embarrassed circumstances fraudulently conveys his property to others, and, by falsely representing his situation to his creditors, induces them to accept a composition and discharge their debts, such discharge will be set aside in equity as fraudulent, and the payment of the debts decreed. Richards v. Hunt, 6 Vt. 251. 8 Vt. 89. 29 Vt. 415.

3. Where, in a general composition agreement, there is a secret arrangement between the debtor and one of his creditors, by which such creditor, as a condition of his signing, secures an advantage over the others, this is such a fraud as to release the others from their agreement to discharge the debtor. Cobleigh v. Pierce, 32 Vt. 788.

4. Where a composition agreement between a debtor and his creditors contains a provision for the discharge of the debtor, provided all his creditors shall sign the agreement, and that the debtor shall make the stipulated payment, or give certain security within a time named, the creditor signing is not bound thereby, if either of the conditions is not complied with. Ib. Dauchy v. Goodrich, 20 Vt. 127.

5. But such a condition may be waived, and is waived if the creditor, after non-compliance with the condition and with knowledge thereof, or without fraud on the part of the debtor, accepts the offered terms and releases his debt. Ib.

6. The defendants made a general assignment for the benefit of their creditors, the plaintiff being one. Afterwards they undertook a compromise by paying 25 cents on the dollar, and drew up a paper to be signed by their creditors, certifying that for value received of S, they agreed with S that, on payment to them respectively on or before February 1, 1863, of a sum equal to 25 per cent of their respective claims against the defendants, they would sell and convey to S all their respective claims against the defendants. The plaintiff signed the paper February 15, 1863, adding to his signature "paid February 15, $222.87," this being the full amount of his claim, and so delivered the paper. In a day or two afterwards, one of the defendants, with money furnished by S, offered to pay the plaintiff the 25 per cent, which he declined to take, on the ground that the time of payment by the terms of the paper had expired. S, in making the compromise, acted as agent for the defendants, and for their exclusive benefit. Held, that the instrument operated as a release of the original debt, and not as an assignment to S;—and held, that the signing of the instrument was an adoption of it in every particular, except as to the time when the 25 per cent should be paid; that this became payable on demand, and that the plaintiff could recover the 25 per cent only. Bowen v. Holly, 38 Vt. 574.

7. A compromise agreement between a debtor and his creditors, fully executed, discharging him from his debts by payment of a percentage, is valid; and such release need not be under seal. Paddleford v. Thacher, 48 Vt. 574.

CONDITION.

What is a condition precedent, and what not—CONTRACT, II.

1. Effect of non-performance. Where a note was executed and put into the hands of a third person, but not to be delivered to the payee until certain conditions were performed;—Held, that no recovery could be had upon it until such conditions were performed, nor could it be urged that such conditions had become immaterial. Jarvis v. Rogers, 8 Vt. 336.

2. The condition upon which a note was executed was, that a certain suit should be brought in the name of the payee for the benefit of the maker. The suit was brought, but the payee discontinued it. Held, that the condition was not duly performed. Ib.

3. Tender of performance. After one has tendered performance of a condition precedent, as the payment of money, and it has been refused, it is not necessary to his remedy that he bring the money into court. Washburn v. Dewey, 17 Vt. 92.

3. Performance prevented. It will always excuse the performance of a condition precedent, that the performance was hindered by the other party. Camp v. Barker, 21 Vt. 469.

4. A contracted with B to draw for him a quantity of saw-logs, B to furnish a certain yoke of four-year-old steers handy for the purpose. B offered a pair of old oxen in place of the steers, and not so good for the work. Held, that A was not bound to accept the oxen, and was not liable for not doing the work. Bugbee v. Haynes, 43 Vt. 476.

5. Waiver of performance. The acceptance of performance of a condition precedent after the day set in the contract, and unexplained, may furnish prima facie evidence that the parties intended to revive the contract in its original terms; but this is not conclusive, and a different intent may be proved. Porter v. Stuart, 1 Vt. 44. 28 Vt. 267.

6. A mere mental determination to rest "satisfied" with the non-performance of a condition precedent, not notified to the party who was to perform it, cannot be treated as a waiver and as equivalent to performance. Manvell v. Briggs, 17 Vt. 176.

7. The plaintiff made a verbal contract with the defendants, to do all the wood work for the building of a house for a specified price; and it was further stipulated that the contract should be reduced to writing, although not required by law to be in writing; and the plaintiff informed the defendant that unless this was done he should not do the work by the job. The contract never was written out, but the plaintiff went on and completed a large part of the work in accordance with the verbal contract, as if, and in the expectation that it would be reduced to writing, the plaintiff sub-letting part of the work. Held, that his conduct operated as a waiver of his right to have the contract reduced to writing, and that he could not now repudiate the verbal contract, and charge his work by the day. Paige v. Fullerton Woolen Co., 27 Vt. 485.

8. In book account the plaintiff had charged the contract price for building a barn, which, by the contract, was to be done in a good, workmanlike manner. The auditor reported that some portion of the work was not so done, but that upon its completion the defendant "accepted the barn upon the contract." Held to mean that the contract was fulfilled to the satisfaction of the defendant, and that this was a conclusive waiver of any claim for deduction from the contract price. Seargent v. Seward, 31 Vt. 509.

9. Change of writing by parol. It is competent to show by oral evidence, as matter of defense, a parol waiver of performance of the conditions of a contract before breach, though in writing and under seal, or within the statute of frauds; nor is it necessary that such alteration should be upon any new consideration, if acted upon. Lawrence v. Dole, 11 Vt. 549. 30 Vt. 620. Sherwin v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 24 Vt. 847; and see Flanders v. Fay, 40 Vt. 816.

10. Effect as to action on the contract. The time of performance of a condition precedent in a deed cannot be enlarged by parol agreement so that an action can be maintained upon the deed. Porter v. Stewart, 2 Aik. 417. 27 Vt. 774. Sherwin v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. Joslyn v. Taylor, 33 Vt. 470. 44 Vt. 395.

11. In case of such enlargement or change by parol, if the party sues upon the contract specially, he must declare in assumpsit, treating the enlargement as having incorporated into itself the terms of the original contract, and so all as resting in parol. Sherwin v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. Barker v. Troy & Rut. R. Co., 27 Vt. 766.

12. To maintain an action upon a sealed instrument, the performance of any condition precedent must be averred according to the stipulation of the deed, and must be proved as laid; and no parol agreement to enlarge the time or change the mode of performance, and performance according to such parol agreement, can be averred or proved in such action. But where there is a covenant to perform a certain thing at a certain time, if performance of another thing, or at a different time, be accepted in lieu of the other, it is an answer to an action for the non-performance of the thing stipulated. The distinction is between pleading the matter as a defense, and making it the ground of an action. Porter v. Stewart, 2 Aik. 417. Taylor v. Gallup, 8 Vt. 349.

13. Condition in conveyance. Where a deed from father to son of one-third the farm on which they resided was upon the expressed condition, that if the grantee should pay the grantor, or his wife, $80 yearly so long as either should live, "if they or either of them shall request the same, then this deed is good and valid—otherwise void;"—Held, that it was required that each sum should be demanded by itself, and at or about the close of the year for which it was claimed; and that any sum not so demanded was waived, or relinquished; that the condition should not be so construed as to permit the sums to be consolidated and demanded together and after the lapse of several years; and that, without such yearly demand and non-payment, no valid cause of forfeiture had arisen. Buckmaster v. Needham, 22 Vt. 617.

14. Where a deed is made upon condition to become void upon failure to support the grantor and pay his debts, ejectment will lie by the grantor, upon breach of either condition. Lamb v. Clark, 29 Vt. 278.

15. Where a deed was made upon condition to become void, unless the grantee should support the grantor and pay his debts;—Held, that if the grantee was obliged to furnish such support elsewhere than at his own house—a point not decided—there was no wrongful neglect so to do, working a forfeiture of the estate, where no request had been made to furnish such support elsewhere, and no notice given that the grantor was in need of it; and that the non-payment of one of the grantor's debts did not work such forfeiture, where the grantee had never been called on for payment, and the grantor had not paid it, nor been in any way damaged by it. Id.

16. The plaintiff and defendant made an indenture, by which the defendant conveyed to the plaintiff a certain farm for the joint lives of the plaintiff and his wife, and the survivor of them, and the defendant covenanted that he would occupy and carry on the farm without sale or transfer, and from the avails and income would deliver to the plaintiff certain articles yearly, and would perform other specified services, &c., for the maintenance of the plaintiff and his wife, &c. Held, that the plaintiff acquired by the indenture an estate for life; and that the defendant, as incident to his covenants and to enable him to perform the same, had a right to the occupancy of the farm; but that on failure to perform such covenant for maintenance, the plaintiff could maintain ejectment without giving any notice to quit. Oloott v. Duncklee, 16 Vt. 478. 19 Vt. 382. 20 Vt. 415. 36 Vt. 234.

17. Where A and B entered into a written contract that A should deed to B an undivided half of his farm, and B should give back a life lease, and should "take the farm to the halves, or otherwise provide a decent and comfortable living for A and his wife during their lives, &c.," and that B should have the farm "so long as he fulfils the above agreement," and the deed and the lease were afterwards given in accordance with the agreement and to effectuate its provisions, but absolute in form, and without naming any of the terms of the written contract, or referring to it, and there was no other consideration given by B;—Held, in chancery; (1), that the written contract determined what were the rights and liabilities of the parties under the deed and lease, and the title which B acquired by the deed—viz., as conditional upon his fulfilling the stipulations on his part, contained in the written agreement; (2), on neglect of which, A had the right to re-enter upon the whole farm, and hold the same free of any right of B therein. Tracy v. Hutchins, 36 Vt. 225;—distinguished (p. 284) from Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 415.

18. The plaintiff conveyed his farm to the defendant, and took back a mortgage conditioned for the support and maintenance of the plaintiff during his natural life, &c. The condition of defeasance contained this provision: "or if I shall have an opportunity to sell said farm and shall wish to do so, I shall have the right to do so by paying or securing to said W [plaintiff] such sum and in such manner as the judge of probate for the district of Caledonia, for the time being, shall consider will be right and just, &c." In an action of ejectment for breach of the condition to support, the defense set up was a substituted security by the award of the probate judge. Held, that the contract required a concurrence of both conditions, viz: an opportunity and a desire to sell, before the judge of probate was authorized to act; and that for want of proof of the existence of these conditions, or of the former only, the award of the judge was wholly inoperative. Weeks v. Boynton, 37 Vt. 297.

19. The judge's award provided that the defendant should execute and deliver to the plaintiff, within a time named, a bond, with one or more sureties, to the acceptance and approval of the cashier of the Bank of Caledonia, conditioned, &c. Semble, that this conferred upon the cashier a trust or discretion which, by the condition of the defeasance, was vested in the judge alone, and could not be shifted or delegated to any other person. Ib.

20. The plaintiff's counsel, at the time when the award was made, said in his presence that "they were satisfied, and had come out better than they had expected." Held, that the plaintiff's silence when this remark was made could not, as matter of law, be treated as equivalent to such an acceptance of the award as would change his rights under the mortgage. Ib.

21. Limitation. In case of a deed conditioned to become void unless a certain sum be paid by a day certain, the burden is on the promissor to prove such payment by the day;—otherwise a breach of the condition occurs, which operates by way of limitation of the estate; and in such case the law reverts the estate at once without formal entry. Austin v. Downer, 25 Vt. 558.

22. Reservation. A, by deed of warranty, conveyed certain lands to S, and in the premises of the deed, immediately following the description, was this clause: "Conditioned, that no building or erection is ever to be made on said land except a dwelling house and out-buildings for the same, or such other buildings and erections as would not affect the rights, privileges and interests of said A, or his heirs or assigns, to a greater degree than a dwelling house and out-buildings as aforesaid would affect his and their rights, interests and privileges; the said A being now the owner of a house and land westerly of and near said premises; and conditioned, also, that no building is to be erected on said land, which shall extend more than twenty feet southerly of the main body of the dwelling house now owned and occupied by the said A." In all other respects said deed was in the usual form of a deed without condition. Held, that said clause did not constitute a condition, either precedent or subsequent; nor yet a covenant, merely, that the grantor would abide by the terms of the condition; but that it showed, with the rest of the description, what rights in the land passed to the grantee, and what were left remaining to the grantor; that the land, with the use thus restricted, passed to the grantee, and the right to such restriction of the use remained to the grantor; and that neither the grantee nor his assigns could make erections on the land in violation of such restrictions. Fuller v. Arms, 45 Vt. 400.

23. A deed of land with a reservation of certain stone upon it, part of the realty, and the privilege of removing the same by a day named and of leaving what stone the grantor should choose at that time, was construed to mean that, if removed by that time, the stone belonged to the grantor; but, if not removed by that time, his right to the stone was gone. Holton v. Goodrich, 35 Vt. 19.

24. Relief in equity. Where a party wholly fails to perform the condition of his contract by the time stipulated, and gives no reasonable excuse therefor, he will not be relieved in equity, nor be entitled to a specific performance by a subsequent offer to perform. White v. Yaw, 7 Vt. 357.

25. Chancery will not relieve a party from the consequences of not complying with a condition precedent, where the non-compliance arose from his own inattention or negligence. Barnet v. Passumpsic Turnpike Co., 15 Vt. 757.

26. A court of equity may grant relief from the forfeiture of an estate conditioned for the maintenance and support of the grantee,—this not as a matter of course and under all circumstances, but it rests in the sound discretion of the court, according to the circumstances. If the breach of the condition is unintentional or purely technical, and admits of compensation, relief will be granted—as in Henry v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 358. (Weeks v. Boynton, 37 Vt. 302. Austin v. Austin, 9 Vt. 420.)

27. Aliter, where the breach is wilful and wanton, or attended with suffering or serious inconvenience to the grantee, or where there is good ground to apprehend a failure in future—as in Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 415.

28. Where a mortgage was given conditioned for the support of the mortgagee, the mortgagor made a second mortgage and then abandoned the premises and the further support of the mortgagee. On a bill of foreclosure by the first mortgagee;—Held, that the breach admitted of compensation, and the second mortgagee was let in to redeem, on the terms of making compensation for the past and providing for the future support of the mortgagee. Austin v. Austin, 9 Vt. 420.

29. The orator executed, as surety for another, a promissory note to the defendant, with the understanding that it was not to be delivered, or to be understood as taking effect, until the defendant complied with certain conditions. But the defendant, having got possession of the note, refused to comply with the conditions. On bill, the defendant was perpetually enjoined from negotiating the note and from enforcing it against the orator. Chase v. Torrey, 20 Vt. 395.

CONSPIRACY.

1. In an action on the case against two or more in the nature of conspiracy, the conspiracy charged is important only as it serves to give character to the individual acts of those who were parties to it. The gist of the action is the damage sustained by the plaintiff, by reason of the fraud of the defendants. Sheple v. Page, 12 Vt. 519.

2. Where two or more combine together for the same illegal purposes, each is to be considered as the agent of the others, and the act of one, in pursuance of the object, is, in legal contemplation, the act of all. Ib. State v. Thibault, 30 Vt. 100. Windover v. Robbins, 2 Tyl. 4.

3. Their declarations stand upon the same ground. State v. Thibault. Jenne v. Joslyn, 41 Vt. 478. 43 Vt. 52.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

I. POWERS OF LEGISLATURE.

II. CONSTRUCTION.

I. POWERS OF LEGISLATURE.

1. Generally. American legislatures have the same unlimited power in legislation which resides in the British parliament, except where they are restrained by written constitutions. Thorpe v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 27 Vt. 140.

2. Rules of descent. It is competent for the legislature to provide rules of descent of real estate, and to change them from time to time, provided the law is not retrospective. No one has a vested right of inheritance, before a descent cast. Gilman v. Morrill, 8 Vt. 74.

3. Mode of conveying estates. It is competent for the legislature to prescribe the mode of conveying existing estates in property, especially real property;—as, that a wife must join in the deed of her husband in conveying his interest in her lands, in order to the validity of the conveyance. Peck v. Walton, 26 Vt. 82.

4. Police power. The police power of the State extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the State, and applies as well to chartered corporations as to natural persons, though such control might materially affect the profits of the corporation. Thorpe v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 27 Vt. 140. Under it, the legislature has power to require existing railroad corporations to maintain cattle guards at all crossings, although not provided for in the charter; and may, by general laws, impose upon railroads new conditions of like character, which are conducive to the public interest, to the extent of not destroying, or essentially modifying, the essential franchise of the corporation. Ib. Nelson v. Vt. & Canada R. Co., 26 Vt. 717.

5. — over private corporations. The legislature may control the action, prescribe the functions and duties of corporations, and impose restraints upon them to the same extent as upon natural persons, that is, in all matters coming within the range of legislative authority, subject to the limitation of not impairing the obligation of contracts, provided the essential franchise is not taken without compensation. Thorpe v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. State v. Bosworth, 13 Vt. 402.

6. Power over municipal corporations. The legislature may exercise over municipal corporations [as towns], exclusive control, and may constitutionally enlarge, restrain, and even destroy their municipal existence, as the public interests may require; and may control the disposition of their property held for municipal and corporate purposes—as by dividing it between the towns into which the old town may be divided. Montpelier v. East Montpelier, 29 Vt. 12. S. C., 27 Vt. 704.

7. This right over towns is not defeated nor affected by the fact that the town is, by its charter, made the trustee of property for other purposes than corporate and municipal use. Ib.

8. But such grants in trust for other purposes than corporate and municipal use, are no more the subject of legislative control, than are the private and vested rights of individuals. Ib. 31 Vt. 238. Poultney v. Wells, 1 Aik. 180.

9. The legislature has constitutional power to confer upon municipal corporations the right to make assessments upon the property benefited, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of making local improvements. Woodhouse v. City of Burlington, 47 Vt. 300.

10. Hunting, &c. Laws regulating hunting, fowling and fishing, are not in violation of the constitution of the State (section 40), unless clearly shown to be so prohibitory as to virtually deprive the inhabitants of the right secured. State v. Norton, 45 Vt. 258.

11. Retrospective legislation. Statutes, retrospective in their operation, are valid, with this qualification, that they do not impair the obligation—that is, the legal obligation—of contracts, or disturb absolute vested rights; or, in other words, the legislature may change and modify remedies, forms of proceedings, or the tribunal itself, as it may choose, but it shall not directly, nor indirectly, destroy or abolish all remedy whatever, by which the performance of any class of valid, legal contracts may be enforced. Poland, C. J., in Richardson v. Cook, 37 Vt. 603.

12. Taking for public use. Where the use is a public one, it rests wholly with the legislature to determine whether sufficient necessity exists to justify granting the power to take private property therefor, and courts will not interfere with the discretion of the legislature—at least, not unless the entire absence of any necessity be shown. Poland, J., in Williams v. School District, 33 Vt. 280.

13. But the legislature has not the power to so determine that a use is a public use as to make that determination conclusive, but the existence of the right in the legislature, in any class of cases, is left to be determined under the constitution by the courts. The attempt of the legislature to exercise the right of eminent domain does not, therefore, settle that it has the right. Tyler v. Beacher, 44 Vt. 648.

14. Under the statutes of Vermont, the owners and occupiers of grist-mills are required to grind well and sufficiently all grain received by them for that purpose, at certain fixed rates of toll, but they are not compellable to receive grain for grinding against their will. Their mills are their own private property, subject to their own control, except as to that regulation, and the public has no rights whatever in them, or to the use of them. Held, therefore, that the flowage acts of 1866-7-8, professing to authorize the flowing of the lands of others for the benefit of such mills, upon compensation ascertained and paid, were not justified by the constitution authorizing the taking of private property for public use. (The flowage acts of Massachusetts and the decisions of the courts of that and other States on this subject considered.) Ib.

15. Law affecting former grant. It is well settled, that where there has been a legislative grant to a private corporation to erect a bridge, turnpike, or other public convenience, which is not in its terms exclusive, there is no constitutional obligation on the legislature not to grant to a second corporation the right to erect another bridge, or turnpike, for a similar purpose, to be constructed so near the former as greatly to impair, or even to destroy its value; and this, without making compensation to the first corporation for the consequential injury. White River T. Co. v. Vt. Central R. Co., 21 Vt. 590. 27 Vt. 152.

16. Taking franchise for public use. The essential franchise of a private corporation is private property, and cannot be taken without compensation, even for public use; but may be taken for public use by making compensation—as the franchise of a turnpike corporation, or of a bridge corporation, for the use of a public highway, under G. S. c. 24, s. 79. Armington v. Barnet, 15 Vt. 745. West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 16 Vt. 446. 27 Vt. 151;—or for the use of a railroad,—which is an improved highway,—when authorized by the charter of the railroad company. White River T. Co. v. Vt. Central R. Co., 21 Vt. 590.

II. CONSTRUCTION.

17. Construction. Questions arising under the constitution, settled by a long practice, and sanctioned by a judicial decision, should be considered as at rest. State v. Bosworth, 13 Vt. 402.

18. Art. V. of the Amendments to the U. S. Constitution, which provides that “no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury,” has reference solely to proceedings in the courts of the United States. State v. Keyes, 8 Vt. 57.

19. The same is true as to Art. VII. of the amendments providing for trial by jury in suits at common law. Huntington v. Bishop, 5 Vt. 186, 193. 8 Vt. 64.

See STATUTE, II.; INTOXICATING LIQUOR, I.; JURY, III.; TAXES, I.; CITY OF BURLINGTON; GRANTS.

CONTEMPT.

1. The power to punish for contempt is inherent in the nature and constitution of a court. A justice of the peace, sitting as a court, has such power. In re Cooper, 32 Vt. 253.

2. It is a contempt of court to assail its decisions, in presence of the court, with sneers, sarcasm or irony. Ib.

3. Where a court or magistrate, having the power to punish for contempt, has jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties, the exercise of such power is not revisable in any other court. Ib. Vilas v. Burton, 27 Vt. 56.

CONTRACTS.

(Simple.)

I. NATURE, REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

1. Capacity of party; Contract implied by law; Delivery; Assent.

2. Consideration.

3. Illegality; Against public policy; Restraint of trade; Duress.

II. INTERPRETATION. — Rules; Instances; Particular terms; Usage; Law of place; Conditions precedent; Dependent and independent stipulations; Penalty, or liquidated damages; Whether joint or several.III. MODIFICATION.—RESCISSION.—POWER TO STOP PERFORMANCE.*IV. CERTAIN PARTICULAR CONTRACTS.

1. For service.

2. Of indemnity.

3. Agistment.

4. Contracts in the alternative.

V. ACTION ON SIMPLE CONTRACT.

1. Parties.

2. Action and defense as dependent on demand,—expiration of credit,—performance.

3. Action, general or special.

VI. DAMAGES.—RECOURSEMENT.I. NATURE, REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

1. Capacity of party; Contract implied by law; Delivery; Assent.

1. Competency. One may bind himself by his contract, though his intellectual capacity is below that of the average of mankind, provided he has sufficient understanding to know the nature and consequences of his act at the time. Day v. Seely, 17 Vt. 542. Mann v. Betterly, 21 Vt. 326.

2. Intoxication, to avoid a contract, must be of that degree which prevents the party from knowing the consequences of his agreement. Foot v. Teuksbury, 2 Vt. 97. Although such intoxication be voluntary, such contract may be avoided. Barrett v. Buxton, 2 Aik. 167. 16 Vt. 335. 24 Vt. 425.

3. Implied by law. There are numerous cases, where from the circumstances the law implies a legal obligation and a promise, though there was no express promise, and no intent between the parties to enter into a contract. Paddock v. Kittredge, 31 Vt. 378, 384. Ives v. Hulet, 12 Vt. 314, 327.

4. Delivery. The delivery of a written contract is no part of the contract, and is not proved by it. The delivery is an act done in reference to it and indispensable to give it efficacy, intervening between the execution of the contract and the time when it becomes operative; and the proof of the delivery rests essentially in parol, and is a question of mutual intent and purpose, both parties intending thereby to make the contract operative and binding. King v. Woodbridge, 34 Vt. 565. Holmes v. Crossett, 33 Vt. 116.

5. Where a written agreement not to sue was set up in defense of an action;—Held, that the defense could be met by parol evidence that the writing was handed to the defendant to procure other signatures, and was not to become operative unless signed by all the defendant's creditors, and that it was not so signed; that it was not delivered as an existing contract. Holmes v. Crossett; and see Harrington v. Wright, 48 Vt. 427.

6. —implies acceptance. A paper passed as a receipt and contract, but accepted as a receipt only, does not take effect as a contract. A legal delivery implies an acceptance. King v. Woodbridge, 34 Vt. 565.

7. Date. A written contract takes effect from its delivery, or time of actual execution. Its validity is not effected by its having no date, or a false date. In declaring upon it, if dated, it need not be described by its date, if sufficiently described otherwise; and where averred to have been executed on a certain day, it is no variance that it bears date of a different day; but if the date be averred, this becomes descriptive and must be proved as laid. Broughton v. Fuller, 9 Vt. 373. Clark v. Kidder, 12 Vt. 689. Woodford v. Dorwin, 3 Vt. 82.

8. Signed at different times. A written contract was signed by part of the defendants at its date, and by the others some months afterwards, but had been adopted and acted under by the other party, with the knowledge of all the defendants, from its date. Held, that the defendants last signing should be considered as having adopted the contract as of its date, and it is evidence that the contract was, in point of fact, made by all the defendants at that time. Stearns v. Haven, 16 Vt. 87.

9. Adoption without signing. The accepting and adopting of a written contract, by a party to it who has not signed it, binds him equally as if he had signed it. Patchin v. Swift, 21 Vt. 292. Troy Academy v. Nelson, 24 Vt. 189, 194. Smith v. Kellogg, 46 Vt. 560. Phelps v. Stewart, 12 Vt. 256. Brandon Mfg. Co. v. Morse, 48 Vt. 322.

10. In an action on a contract to pay interest on certain stocks of the plaintiff, &c., the declaration averred, as the consideration of the defendants' promise, a promise by the plaintiff that the defendants should have all the profits on such stocks. The contract was in writing, signed by the defendants only, and set forth their promise to pay such interest, "by having all the profits," &c. Held, that the writing did not necessarily import that the plaintiff retained the right of withholding those profits, and that the consideration, as alleged, viz: the plaintiff's promise, might be inferred from circumstances and the conduct of the parties under the contract. Phelps v. Stewart.

11. Marginal entries. Entries made upon the margin of an instrument before signing are regarded as a part of it. Patch v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 44 Vt. 481. Fletcher v. Blodgett, 16 Vt. 26.

12. Agreement to put in writing. Where parties entered into a parol agreement, but it was also agreed that their contract should be reduced to writing;—Held, that either party could refuse to enter upon the performance of the contract until so reduced to writing. Congdon v. Darcy, 46 Vt. 478. Paige v. Fullerton Woolen Co., 27 Vt. 487.

13. Assent requisite. The plaintiff brought to the defendant a quantity of salts, to be applied as payment on a contract not yet due. After the salts had been weighed and left at the defendant's ashery, the contract was brought forward, when the plaintiff finding it read for gross weight refused to have the salts applied upon it, but the defendant so applied them and refused to account for them in any other way. Held, that the defendant could not be made debtor for the salts against his will, and was not liable in an action for goods sold and delivered. Durrill v. Lawrence, 10 Vt. 517. 28 Vt. 657.

14. Where one for whom work is being done—as the building of a barn—sees the work going on from day to day before his eyes without objection, and finally accepts the thing by silent acquiescence, he must be bound by it. Austin v. Wheeler, 16 Vt. 95. 27 Vt. 232.

15. The defendant, guardian of a non compos, agreed with the plaintiff to keep the ward at $1.50 per week, but without agreement as to time. At the end of some 14 months, the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to take the ward away, and that he would not keep him longer for less than $2 per week. The defendant went to remove his ward, but the ward was unwilling to go, and the defendant left him, the plaintiff repeating his notice. The defendant made no express promise to pay more than $1.50; but,—Held, that the defendant should be treated as having acquiesced in the plaintiff's claim for the additional price and that he was liable therefor, but was not liable for extra charges beyond that sum. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 19 Vt. 437.

16. The defendant was under contract to support the town's poor for several years, at a price agreed, and engaged the plaintiff to board one of such paupers for $1.25 per week. At the end of the year, the defendant sent word to the plaintiff that if he could not keep the pauper another year at $1.00 per week, he [defendant] would come and take her away. The plaintiff returned word that he could not keep her for $1.00 a week, and to come and take her away. The defendant did not go and take away the pauper, but suffered her to remain during the whole year, and at the end of that year substantially the same thing took place between the parties, and the pauper remained another year. Held, that a request was implied that the plaintiff should keep the pauper until the defendant should come for her, and his failure to come and take her away might be regarded as an assent to the plaintiff's proposal to keep her at the proposed price of $1.25 per week, and that the plaintiff might recover that sum. Worcester v. Ballard, 38 Vt. 60—criticising Aldrich v. Londonderry, 5 Vt. 441.

17. The plaintiff, who had been keeping her child as a pauper of the defendant town under a contract as to compensation, notified the defendant's overseer of the poor, at the close of that contract, that if the child should grow worse she must have an extra compensation. The overseer allowed the child to remain in her care. Held, that the overseer's assent to this proposition should be presumed. At the end of the next year the overseer offered the plaintiff a certain price per week for keeping the child, which the plaintiff refused. The overseer then attempted to remove the child to other quarters, when the plaintiff resisted him. The overseer then told the plaintiff that if she refused to allow the child to be removed, he should pay only that price for future keeping. The plaintiff kept the child. Held, that this was an assent to the offer of the overseer. Buck v. Worcester, 46 Vt. 2.

18. The defendant consigned to the plaintiffs, commission merchants in Boston, certain cheese to be sold "to the best advantage." The plaintiffs sold and delivered the cheese on what was called "a sale for cash" on the 12th of September, and on the 20th of September sent the defendant an account of sales, stating the balance due, and that he could draw for it at sight. The defendant drew a part of that balance. In point of fact, the purchaser did not pay the plaintiffs for the cheese, but put them off from time to time, and finally became bankrupt. In an action of book account;—Held, that the plaintiff had assumed that debt as cash in hand, and could not recover what he had paid on account of it. Jackson v. Bissonette, 24 Vt. 611.

2. Consideration.

19. Moral obligation. Dictum—a moral obligation is a sufficient consideration for an express promise. Barlow v. Smith, 4 Vt. 144. Glass v. Beach, 5 Vt. 172.

20. But such obligation must be strict and undoubted. Indeed, it seems that a promise to do that which the law did not render compulsory will not give a right of action, except where there was an original consideration beneficial to the party promising, and which might have been enforced through the medium of an implied promise, had it not been for some statute provision, or some positive rule of law, which exempted the party from legal liability in the particular instance. Hawley v. Farrar, 1 Vt. 420.

21. The defendant, for his own purposes and without leave of the plaintiff, brought a suit in the plaintiff's name which proceeded to judgment for costs against the plaintiff, and execution issued. Thereupon the defendant expressly promised the plaintiff, in consideration of the premises, to save the plaintiff harmless from all liability on said execution. Held, that such promise was upon sufficient consideration to sustain an action of assumpsit thereon. Blodget v. Skinner, 15 Vt. 716.

22. Past consideration. It is not true, as a general proposition, that a moral obligation is not sufficient to give a legally binding force to an express promise, except in cases where there had once existed a legal obligation. If the consideration, even without request, moves directly from the plaintiff to the defendant and enures directly to the defendant's benefit, the promise is binding, though made on a past consideration—the subsequent promise being equivalent to a previous request. Boothe v. Fitzpatrick, 36 Vt. 681.

23. The plaintiff took up and kept an estray animal, but did not proceed under the statute in such way as to hold the animal or make the owner legally chargeable with the keeping. The owner afterwards took away the animal and then promised to pay for the past keeping. Held, that the promise was on good consideration and legally binding. Ib.

24. Legal obligation. A promise by a party to do what he is bound in law to do, is not a sufficient consideration to sustain a contract;—otherwise, as to a promise to do what the party is only morally bound to do. Cobb v. Cowdery, 40 Vt. 25.

25. Value received. The words “for value received” in a written contract furnish sufficient evidence, prima facie, at least, of a consideration. Brooks v. Page, 1 D. Chip. 345. Lapham v. Barrett, 1 Vt. 247. 19 Vt. 206.

26. Other sufficient considerations. A promise in writing to pay the amount of an execution to the attorney of the creditor, in consideration of an assignment of the execution to the promisor, was held valid, where the debtor was at once discharged from custody on the execution, at the request of the promisor, although the assignment was not in fact made until payment was afterwards demanded. Page v. Thrall, 2 Vt. 448.

27. The defendant requested the plaintiff to purchase a note which the defendant had given, and after the purchase promised to pay the contents to the plaintiff. In an action on the note;—Held, that the defendant could not set up want of consideration. Bliss v. Rollins, 6 Vt. 529.

28. The plaintiff and another contracted with the defendant and others to build a meeting house, for a certain price, and afterwards abandoned the work, when the defendant alone contracted with the plaintiff alone, that the plaintiff should resume the work and finish the house at the same price, and promised to pay what it cost more. Held, that this new obligation and duty was a good consideration for the defendant's promise. Morrison v. Heath, 11 Vt. 610.

29. The release of a doubtful right is a sufficient consideration to support a promise. Blake v. Peck, 11 Vt. 483.

30. The giving up and making over of a mail contract, though it has gone no further than the acceptance by the Post Office Department of a bid, is a sufficient consideration for any contract. Carlton v. Jackson, 21 Vt. 481.

31. Mutual and concurrent promises afford a sufficient legal consideration for the support of each other. Missisquoi Bank v. Sabin, 48 Vt. 239.

32. The orator transferred to his son certain property, in consideration that the son had bound himself to support the orator and his wife during their lives. The son died soon after. Held, that the sale was upon an executed consideration, and that chancery would not enjoin the administrator of the son from prosecuting an action at law to recover the property. Deceaur v. Cooper, 15 Vt. 88.

33. An agreement to forbear, or not to sue, may be a sufficient consideration to sustain an agreement to pay, &c., although no certain time of forbearance be stated or agreed upon. Hakes v. Hotchkiss, 23 Vt. 231.

34. The declaration in assumpsit averred that a certain suit was pending against this plaintiff in favor of one C, in which this defendant was bail for the prosecution, and that this defendant, before the return day, promised this plaintiff that if he would make no expense or preparation for the trial, and would not attend the court, he (the defendant) would procure C to discharge his action and not further prosecute it—and assigned a breach. Held, on motion in arrest, that the declaration set up a sufficient consideration for the promise. Hammond v. Cook, 25 Vt. 295.

35. The abandonment of a suit, or the discharge of a trustee, is a sufficient consideration to support a promise, although there may not have been good ground for recovery. Cross v. Richardson, 30 Vt. 641.

36. A mutual agreement to extend the time of performance of a special contract, requires no new extraneous consideration to support it. It is promise for promise, and such new or further agreement may be declared upon and a recovery had for such damages as the breach of it has occasioned, though in excess of what would have arisen under the original contract. Hill v. Smith, 34 Vt. 585.

37. A mere indebtedness to three jointly, is not a sufficient consideration to support a promise, express or implied, to one separately to pay him his portion of the debt. Vadakin v. Soper, 1 Aik. 287.

38. But if the other two creditors, or the firm, had given a written order on the debtor to pay to one of them his share of the joint debt, and this had been accepted and agreed to by the debtor, such mutual agreement of the parties would have sustained the action in favor of such one of the creditors. See Allis v. Jewell, 36 Vt. 551.

39. A general settlement, made on the faith of the withdrawal and abandonment of a disputed item, is a sufficient consideration to render such adjustment binding, and satisfies the claim. Morgan v. Adams, 37 Vt. 233.

40. Where a contract is payable in specific articles or property, the time or mode of payment may be varied by a new agreement made before the original contract has become payable; and if relied upon, the original contract is not converted into a money demand by non-payment at the time therein set, though there was no consideration for such new agreement. But in case of a debt already due and payable in money, an agreement to extend the time of payment requires a new consideration. Thrall v. Mead, 40 Vt. 540.

41. Insufficient consideration. A promise to a sheriff who had suffered an execution to run out in his hands, in consideration that he would not take out an alias execution, is void for want of consideration. Flagg v. Walker, Brayt. 24.

42. H, at the special request of F, purchased for him a quantity of tin in boxes, and delivered it to him in the same condition, unopened, and without knowledge of any defect. Afterwards, on opening the boxes, F discovered that the tin was materially damaged; on notice whereof, H promised F to make him an equitable allowance upon his note given for the tin. Held, that such promise was void for want of consideration, there being neither fraud nor warranty. Hawley v. Farrar, 1 Vt. 420.

43. A stipulation between creditor and debtor, founded upon no new consideration, that the former will receive payment, in services, of a debt then due him in money, is binding no longer than the parties continue to act under it, and the creditor may at any time put an end to it, and sue for payment. Bates v. Starr, 2 Vt. 536.

44. Parties to a controversy having submitted the same in writing to arbitrators, the defendants, not interested, promised in writing that "in consideration of the within submission," they would pay to one of the parties the sum to be awarded him. Held, that there was no sufficient consideration to sustain the promise. Barlow v. Smith, 4 Vt. 139.

45. The plaintiff, being surety for A, became uneasy and unwilling to remain longer in that position, whereupon A, in order "to keep the plaintiff easy and contented without the immediate payment of the debt, and to render the plaintiff secure," &c., procured T to sign with him a written agreement to indemnify the plaintiff. The plaintiff was afterwards obliged to pay the debt. In an action against A and T upon the agreement;—Held, that it was void for want of consideration. Riz v. Adams, 9 Vt. 233. See 23 Vt. 281.

46. Where a declaration in assumpsit counts upon a promise made upon a past consideration, it is necessary both to allege and prove that this was at the request of the defendant, or that the defendant derived benefit from the consideration. A promise to indemnify the plaintiff for having become surety for a third person, not at the request of the defendant, and without a new consideration, is void for want of consideration. Harding v. Cragie, 8 Vt. 501. Riz v. Adams.

47. A, being administrator of B and guardian of C, presented claims in their favor respectively to commissioners on the estate of D, and had them allowed. A died, and the plaintiff, his administrator, claimed payment of these debts from the defendant, the executor of D, and the defendant gave the plaintiff his note therefor. Held, that the plaintiff acquired no interest in these debts as administrator of A, and that the note was without consideration.

Sowles v. Sowles, 10 Vt. 181. S. C., 11 Vt. 146.

48. The simple promise of the debtor of A to pay that debt to B, is nudum pactum as to B, so long as the debtor remains liable to A. Phalan v. Stiles, 11 Vt. 82.

49. The promise of one already legally liable to pay a debt, that he will pay it if delay be given him, creates no new duty or legal liability. A promise to pay, or a part payment of a debt already due, is not a sufficient consideration to support an agreement to delay, but such agreement is nudum pactum. Wheeler v. Washburn, 24 Vt. 293. Mason v. Peters, 4 Vt. 101. Russell v. Buck, 11 Vt. 166. Ib. 66. Pomeroy v. Slade, 16 Vt. 220. Cole v. Shurtleff, 41 Vt. 311.

50. A, holding two promissory notes against B, and both due, promised B that if he would pay one, the time for payment of the other should be extended one year. B thereupon borrowed the money and paid the first note. Held, that such promise was without consideration, and was no bar to an action upon the other note, commenced within the year. Pomeroy v. Slade, supra. 24 Vt. 296. 41 Vt. 311.

51. The plaintiff, the defendant, and B, agreed that the defendant should employ B to build a mill, and that the defendant should pay B's earnings to the plaintiff to apply on B's then indebtedness to the plaintiff. The defendant's contract with B was, that unless the mill should be so constructed as to be of a certain power and do good business, he should have nothing. B so built the mill that it was good for nothing, but was a damage to the defendant. Held, that the defendant was not liable to the plaintiff upon the agreement to pay him B's wages, although the plaintiff was ignorant of this special stipulation with B, since the defendant received no value for his promise, and the plaintiff parted with nothing. Hurlbut v. Chittenden, 26 Vt. 52.

52. Slight consideration. If the thing be understandingly done, mere inadequacy of price will never excuse the performance of a contract. Harrington v. Wells, 12 Vt. 505.

53. P agreed with R, that if R would remain for the purpose of closing certain contracts for the sale of land, he would pay R one dollar an hour for every hour he should delay R after a certain hour. R was thus delayed ten hours beyond the hour named, and charged P therefor, on book, $10. Held, that this was a valid contract, and that the price agreed was recoverable of P in an action of book account. Paige v. Ripley, 12 Vt. 289.

3. Illegality.

54. Violation of law. If part of the consideration of a contract be merely void, the contract may be supported by the residue of the consideration, if good per se; but if any part of the consideration be illegal, it vitiates the whole. Cobb v. Conderdy, 40 Vt. 25. Woodruff v. Hinman, 11 Vt. 592. Hinesburgh v. Sumner, 9 Vt. 23. Dixon v. Olmstead, 9 Vt. 310. Bowen v. Buck, 28 Vt. 308.

55. A contract in contravention of the provisions of a statute is void, although the statute only inflicts a penalty—because the penalty implies a prohibition. Elkins v. Parkhurst, 17 Vt. 105.

56. The law of Congress having prescribed the fee of agents and attorneys for services in procuring a pension, and punishment for taking more;—Held, that no larger sum could be recovered, either upon an express contract, or upon a quantum meruit. Morgan v. Davis, 47 Vt. 610.

57. If the suppression of evidence in a criminal prosecution constitutes any part of the consideration of a contract, the contract is wholly void. Badger v. Williams, 1 D. Chip. 137.

58. A promissory note given in whole or in part for the compounding of penalties, or the suppressing of a criminal prosecution, is void, the consideration being illegal. Hinesburgh v. Sumner, 9 Vt. 23. Woodruff v. Hinman, 11 Vt. 592. Bowen v. Buck, 28 Vt. 308.

59. A receipt in full of all demands, given upon consideration of stifling a criminal prosecution, is void, and leaves the claim in force. Bailey v. Buck, 11 Vt. 252.

60. The defendant induced the plaintiff to come from New Hampshire into this State, after having procured a warrant for his arrest and surrender to the authorities of New Hampshire to answer to the charge of forgery there committed, and, on being threatened with service of the warrant, the plaintiff let the defendant have a horse by way of compromise, the defendant agreeing not to prosecute the matter further. Held, that whether the plaintiff was innocent or guilty of the charge, the contract was illegal; but that the parties were in pari delicto, and the law would not aid the plaintiff in recovering back what he had paid. Dixon v. Olmstead, 9 Vt. 310. 28 Vt. 313, 315.

61. Outlawed property. Courts of justice will not sustain actions in regard to contracts, or property, which have for their object the violation of law. Such property is, so to speak, outlawed, and is common plunder. If, instead of putting his property to honest uses, the owner converts it into an engine to injure the life, liberty, health, morals, peace or property of others, he thereby forfeits all right to the protection of the bona fide interest he had in such property before it was put to that use. And he can, I apprehend, sustain no action against any one who withholds or destroys the property, with the bona fide intention of preventing injury to himself or others. Redfield, J., in Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 9.

62. Held, that an action will not lie in favor of the publisher of a newspaper upon an agreement to indemnify him for the publication of a libel, and to indemnify him for refusing to give the name of the author. Atkins v. Johnson, 43 Vt. 78.

63. No action will lie to recover back money or property advanced upon an illegal contract. Barnard v. Crane, 1 Tyl. 457. For distinction, see Hinsdill v. White, 34 Vt. 558.

64. Against public policy.—Legislature. An agreement of a corporation, upon consideration that a party would withdraw opposition to the passing of an act of the Legislature touching its interests, was held to be against public policy and void. Pingry v. Washburn, 1 Aik. 264. 14 Vt. 387.

65. —sale of office. The sale of an office, or of any agency or influence in the procuring of one, is illegal, and any contract, made upon any such consideration, is void. Ferris v. Adams, 23 Vt. 186. Meacham v. Dow, 32 Vt. 721.

66. —hired electioneering. The plaintiff was a candidate for the office of town representative. The defendant owed him. They agreed that the defendant should use his influence and do what he could for the plaintiff's election, and if elected, that should be a satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim. Nothing was said specially about the defendant's vote, but he did vote for the plaintiff, and would not have done so, nor have favored the plaintiff's election, but for the agreement. The plaintiff was elected, but gave no discharge of the debt. In an action to recover the debt;—Held, that the agreement set up in defense, although not agreed to be kept secret, was immoral and void—(1), As a bargain of the defendant to sell his own vote; (2), to use his influence and exertions in the election against his convictions and opinions. Nichols v. Mudgett, 32 Vt. 546.

67. —lobbying. An agreement in respect to services as a lobby agent, or for the sale by an individual of his personal influence and solicitations to procure the passage of a public or private law by the Legislature, is void as being prejudicial to sound legislation, manifestly injurious to the interests of the State, and in express and unquestionable contravention of public policy. Powers v. Skinner, 34 Vt. 274.

68. Distinction taken between this, and an employment to conduct properly an application to the Legislature. Ib.

69. —affecting duty of public officers. An agreement with a deputy sheriff, about to arrest a debtor on execution, that, if he will forbear, the promisor will have the debtor forthcoming at a future time to be taken on the execution in his life, is not illegal; and the deputy may sus-tain an action thereon in his own name. Miller v. Gould, 2 Tyl. 439. See 6 Vt. 67.

70. The defendant promised the plaintiff, an officer, who had arrested a debtor on execution, that if the plaintiff would suffer the debtor to remain with the defendant and in his keeping, he would have the debtor forthcoming to be committed in the life of the execution. Held, that the promise was upon an illegal consideration, and was void in law. Stevens v. Webb, 2 Vt. 344. 18 Vt. 22.

71. The defendant being legally imprisoned for a military fine gave his note to the adjutant of the regiment, instead of money, in satisfaction of the execution, and was discharged. Held, that the note was upon sufficient consideration. Kingsbury v. Whitney, 5 Vt. 470.

72. The plaintiff, a deputy sheriff, held against the defendant an execution for collection, when the defendant promised him that if he would levy the execution upon real estate, the defendant would pay him for doing it, and would indemnify him. The plaintiff made such levy, instead of taking personal property, for which the execution creditor sued the sheriff and recovered judgment, which the defendant paid. Held, that it did not appear that the contract was understood to be for mere ease and favor, or to hire the plaintiff to violate a known official duty, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the fees for the levy. Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135.

73. A contract to indemnify a sheriff for past neglect is not illegal. Hall v. Huntoon, 17 Vt. 244.

74. —interest of towns. The consideration of a promissory note was, that the plaintiff would forbear to bid against the defendant for the support of the town paupers at a public auction. Held, that such contract tended to work injustice to the town, was against public policy, and was void. Noyes v. Day, 14 Vt. 384.

75. The plaintiff, a physician, contracted with the overseers of the poor of P, to attend upon a pauper then chargeable to P, and that if P should, by a contemplated order of removal, succeed in establishing the legal settlement of the pauper to be in S, then P should pay him a reasonable compensation for his services—otherwise, nothing. P did succeed in establishing such settlement to be in S. In a subsequent action by P against S to recover such expenses, it was adjudged that, as between the towns, such contract was so far against public policy that P could not recover. In this action against P, held, nevertheless, that the contract was valid, as between these parties, and that the plaintiff could recover. Edson v. Pawlet, 22 Vt. 291. See Pawlet v. Sandgate, 19 Vt. 621.

76. —private interests. The plaintiff was in the employ of O, temporarily, as clerk in his store. O sold out the goods to the defendant, to be appraised by one P. The plaintiff did not intend to remain during the invoicing and appraisal, but consented to do so upon the defendant's promise to pay him $25, for assisting therein. At the same time he expected to receive from O, and did receive from him, the same pay as before the sale. This the defendant understood. Held, that the promise was upon good consideration, and the contract was not void as against public policy. Shattuck v. Nellis, 44 Vt. 262.

77. Where one creditor, who had an individual claim against an embarrassed debtor, and was also member of a firm to which such debtor was indebted, consented to make his firm, with other creditors, parties to a contract with the debtor to extend the time of payment of their claims for a specified period, if he could receive security for his individual claim, and the debtor gave such security;—Held, that this fact merely, in the absence of any evidence that the existence of this claim was denied to the other signers of the contract, or that they were encouraged to expect that it would be treated as embraced in the contract, did not invalidate the contract. Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520.

78. A contract between two trustees, by which one was allowed to speculate for his advantage upon trust funds for a consideration to be paid to the other, was held illegal and void. Foote v. Emerson, 10 Vt. 338.

79. Whether an agreement to abstain from bidding at a sheriff's sale is a legal consideration to support the promise of another successful bidder, to share the benefit of the purchase—quære. Paige v. Hammond, 26 Vt. 375. But see Noyes v. Day, 14 Vt. 384, and as cited, 47 Vt. 71. 48 Vt. 246.

80. A contract to forbear purchasing certain land at private sale, and to assist the plaintiff in the purchase thereof, is not void as against public policy. Morrison v. Darling, 47 Vt. 67.

81. Where two mortgagees of land, about to be sold in bankruptcy, agreed that one or the other should bid at the sale, and that the one to whom the land should be "struck off" should hold it in trust, sell it, and apply the avails in certain agreed proportions upon the mortgages;—Held, that such contract was on good consideration, and was not void as against public policy. Missisquoi Bank v. Sabin, 48 Vt. 239.

82. The defendant, one of several heirs of an estate, appeared before the probate court, but solely on his own account, to oppose the allowance of the plaintiff's account as administrator of said estate. In consideration that the defendant would withdraw his opposition, the plaintiff executed to the defendant a release of a debt due from him to the estate. Held, that such release was upon sufficient consideration, and was a bar to a recovery for such debt. Holbrook v. Blodget, 5 Vt. 520.

83. In consideration of a promise by the defendant to pay the plaintiff, a lawyer, extra for his services beyond the fees allowed by law to administrators, the plaintiff undertook the administration of the estate of the defendant's father, which involved matters of complication and difficulty, requiring the services of a lawyer. Held, that this was a promise for compensation, beyond statutory fees, for services beyond the ordinary services of an administrator, and was a valid contract, not prohibited by statute, nor against public policy. Hubbell v. Olmstead, 36 Vt. 619.

84. Services performed in giving information to the defendant as to who were witnesses in a suit in which the defendant was interested and what could be proved by them, in pursuance of an agreement to that effect, were held to be a good consideration for a contract. Cobb v. Courdery, 40 Vt. 25. Chandler v. Mason, 2 Vt. 193.

85. —Maintenance. The plaintiff and defendant having a similar interest, dependent upon a settlement of the same question, orally agreed that the plaintiff should commence and prosecute a suit in his name, by which that question would be decided, and which, as they believed, would practically enure to the benefit of both;—that the plaintiff should make all the disbursements, and when finally ascertained and adjusted, that the defendant should pay the plaintiff the one-half. The plaintiff accordingly brought and prosecuted his suit to judgment, and, having paid all the expenses thereof, brought this action of general assumpsit for money paid, to recover the one-half. Held, that the defendant's promise was upon good consideration; that the agreement was not within the statute of frauds; that it was not against public policy, as for maintenance; and that the plaintiff could recover against a plea of the statute of limitations, the one-half of such expenses which the plaintiff paid within six years before the suit. Dorwin v. Smith, 35 Vt. 69.

86. —Restraint of trade. In a contract of copartnership for two years between A and B, physicians, it was agreed that if A sold out to B at the expiration of the term, he was not to "settle himself in practice" within 20 miles of B, and if B did not purchase of A his real estate &c., B was not to "settle in the practice of medicine and surgery" within 10 miles of A. Held, that this was a contract not forbidden by any principle of policy or law, and that an injunction lay to prevent a breach of it. Butler v. Burleson, 16 Vt. 176.

87. A contract for a limited and partial restraint of trade, if reasonable, and made on good consideration, is valid—as where the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff, a dentist, would purchase of him a quantity of mineral teeth, agreed that he would not sell such teeth to any other person in Montpelier, the place of the plaintiff's residence and business, so long as the plaintiff should keep himself supplied therewith by purchases of the defendant. Clark v. Crosby, 37 Vt. 188.

88. Duress. An officer having attached bank bills upon a suit which was afterwards settled, refused to surrender them to the debtor except upon the debtor agreeing that he might retain a part of them, as a pretended reward for finding them. Held, that such agreement was compulsory and not binding; that the debtor could recover for the amount so retained; or, upon his electing to avoid the agreement, that the officer was liable as his trustee. Lovejoy v. Lee, 35 Vt. 430.

89. A person employed by another whom he has illegally imprisoned, to render services in freeing him from such imprisonment, cannot recover therefor. Mattocks v. Owen, 5 Vt. 42.

90. Where one falsely claimed that he had purchased certain property, knowing that he had not, and maliciously and without cause sued out a writ in trover for it, for the purpose of frightening and causing the owner to sell it to him, and the owner, through fear of arrest and imprisonment, such as to lead a man of ordinary firmness to be moved and controlled by it, yielded to the claim and made the sale;—Held, that the sale was void for duress. Brownell v. Talcott, 47 Vt. 248.

91. The defendant gave the plaintiff a note for the one-half of a debt which he was not legally holden to pay, but which the plaintiff claimed and had given value for, upon the threat of the plaintiff that, unless this was done, he would collect the whole of an execution which he held against the defendant, as a surety with others, out of the defendant's property. Judgment for plaintiff on the note. Held, that from these facts there was no legal inference of fraud, duress or oppression; and this not having been found by the county court as a fact, the judgment was affirmed. Brown v. Tyler, 16 Vt. 22.

92. A payment by the plaintiff of the defendant's disputed counter claim and a settlement made according to the defendant's claim, though under protest of the plaintiff, cannot be said to be by duress, because, otherwise, the defendant would have been left largely in debt to the plaintiff. Hibbard v. Mills, 46 Vt. 243.

93. The defendants, carriers, held the plaintiff's goods, which they refused to deliver without the payment of more money than they had a right to demand. The plaintiff, for the sake of obtaining his goods, paid under protest the sum demanded, and without first making a tender of the sum actually due. Held, that the payment was by compulsion, and that the plaintiff could recover back the sum wrongfully demanded. Beckwith v. Frisbie, 32 Vt. 559.

As to Sunday contracts, see SUNDAY.

II. INTERPRETATION.

94. General rules—Right to understand. The language of a party to a contract must be construed as the other party had a right to understand it, or as the speaker expected the other party would understand it, and he cannot be permitted to give it a different operation in consequence of some mental reservation. Gunnison v. Bancroft, 11 Vt. 490. 23 Vt. 272.

95. It is a rule of law, no less than of morals, that what is expected by one party to a contract, and known to be so expected by the other, is to be deemed a part or condition of the contract. Kellogg, J., in Jordan v. Dyer, 34 Vt. 104.

96. Where the plaintiff asked of the defendant the extension of a license, and the defendant, not intending to accede to the request, yet designedly used such "indifferent language" as produced upon the mind of the plaintiff the impression that his request was acceded to, and he acted under that impression;—Held, that the defendant was bound to the same extent as if he had used express words of assent, even though the words used were susceptible of an entirely different construction. Holton v. Goodrich, 35 Vt. 19.

97. Where the defendant had an account against one of the plaintiffs and received goods of the two to apply on his account, as he understood, but not as the other plaintiff understood;—Held, that if from the conduct of all the parties he had good reason, as a prudent man, to understand that the goods were delivered and received to apply on such account, they must be so applied. Lewis v. Park, 47 Vt. 336.

98. Contemporaneous instruments. Several instruments executed at the same time, between the same parties, and upon the same subject matter, are to be treated as one instrument and to be construed together. Wing v. Cooper, 37 Vt. 178. Raymond v. Roberts, 2 Aik. 204. Strong v. Barnes, 11 Vt. 221. Reed v. Field, 15 Vt. 672. Rogers v. Bancroft, 20 Vt. 250. Tittlemore v. Vt. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 20 Vt. 546. Graham v. Stevens, 34 Vt. 166.

99. Nice grammar. The great object, and indeed the only foundation of all rules of construction of contracts [as a deed], is, to come at the intention of the parties. Any rule which leads aside from this grand object, is to be disregarded—as, a nice grammatical construction, &c. Gray v. Clark, 11 Vt. 588.

100. This last is specially true, where the words of the instrument are obviously not those of a professional scrivener, but of an inexperienced draftsman. Rood v. Johnson, 26 Vt. 64, 71.

101. Apparent error. Where it is perfectly apparent upon the face of a written instrument that a mere clerical error has been made, and it is also apparent from the face of the instrument what the correction should be to make it as intended, the court will correct such error by construction. Richmond v. Woodard, 32 Vt. 833. Wood v. Cochrane, 39 Vt. 544. Goodwin v. Perkins, 39 Vt. 598.

102. Thus, in the description of land in the levy of an execution, the word "northwest," as descriptive of a corner, was taken to mean "southwest." Barnard v. Russell, 19 Vt. 334.

103. This rule applied where the name of a person was inserted in the condition of a bond whose name did not elsewhere appear in it, and was not connected with the subject matter of it, in place of another name which apparently ought to have been inserted. Richmond v. Woodard.

104. Operative effect. In construing a contract, words are not to be taken in a frivolous or ineffectual sense, where a contrary exposition can be given them; and where the meaning of the language used is doubtful, or susceptible of two senses, that is to be adopted which will give effect to the instrument as a legal contract, rather than that which will render it inoperative. Thrall v. Newell, 19 Vt. 202.

105. —to every part. Agreements must be construed, if possible, so as to give effect to every part, and form from the parts a harmonious whole. Instance, Hydeville Co. v. Eagle R. & State Co., 44 Vt. 395.

106. General words, and specific. General words in a contract, or conveyance, will be explained and controlled by more particular and specific words in the same instrument, regarding the same subject matter. Thus a conveyance was of "a certain piece of land * * described as follows, viz: it being two hundred shares, numbers as follows—No. one to two hundred inclusive, $100 each share"—being stock in a manufacturing corporation. Held, that this was to be construed as a conveyance of stock, and not of land. Wheelock v. Moulton, 15 Vt. 519.

107. It is an ordinary rule of construction of writings, that where there is a special enumeration of particulars, and general words are also used, the general words refer to particulars of the same nature or kind as those specifically named. Brainerd v. Peck, 34 Vt. 496.

108. The words—"meaning to sell all our interest in the articles of personal property of S. & Co.," as used in a bill of sale which commenced: "Bought, &c., the following articles," and then specified the articles with the price of each—were held to be but words of reference, and not to include an article not enumerated. Hickok v. Stevens, 18 Vt. 111.

109. In a contract of sale of a patent right for a certain machine, it was provided, that "if there should be any defect in said patent whereby all its privileges can not be enforced, or if there shall be any other invention so nearly like it as to materially affect the value of the same now in the patent office, or if there should be any other defect whatever, this contract to be void." Held, that this last general clause had reference to the same class of defects as before specified,—that they embraced defects in the patent only and not in the machine. Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 266.

110. Practical construction. Where the terms of a written contract are equivocal, resort may always be had to the circumstances under which it was executed, and the contemporaneous construction given to it by the parties, as evidence by possession, or other similar acts. Gray v. Clark, 11 Vt. 583.

111. The acts of parties in the execution of a contract are admissible, to show how the parties understood their contract, and as a practical construction of it. Barker v. Troy & R. R. Co., 27 Vt. 766.

112. The rights of parties under a written contract,—how far determined by the practical construction of it by the parties, and their concessions. Ib. Thompson v. Prouty, 27 Vt. 14. Vt. & Canada R. Co. v. Vt. Central R. Co., 34 Vt. 2.

113. Instances of interpretation. The literal import of the words of a contract—"I agree to pay, &c.,"—was held to be controlled by the subject matter and the relations of the parties, and to be the contract of a firm of which the plaintiff and defendant were members, and not the individual undertaking of the defendant to the plaintiff. Hills v. Bailey, 27 Vt. 548.

114. Bill of sale given as security for a debt, —interpreted by reference to its purpose. Durkee v. Leland, 4 Vt. 612.

115. An ambiguous written contract,—doubtfully construed. Foot v. Mazhams, 9 Vt. 223.

116. A, by deed, granted to B the right of procuring marble from A's land. Held, that A had no right to the small pieces of marble broken off in reducing the blocks to size and shape for sawing. Rice v. Ferris, 2 Vt. 62.

117. Particular terms. Certain stoves, delivered upon a contract payable in "good cooking stoves at the furnace price" (the vendor not being a manufacturer), fell to pieces on putting fire in them, from some latent defect. Held, that the words did not amount to a warranty of quality, and that no warranty was implied;—that no definite quality can be intended by the term good, and that the language imports nothing but opinion. Barrett v. Hall, 1 Aik. 269.

118. On a sale of pork, with a stipulation that the seller should be "accountable for the quality and weight of the pork only;"—Held, that he was accountable if the pork was not salted according to the usual custom. Adams v. Simple, Brayt. 237.

119. Where a party binds himself "to execute and deliver a good and valid deed of lands, with the usual covenants of seisin and warranty," and he afterwards conveys the title which he had to another, he has broken his contract and the other party may sue for the breach, or may treat the contract as rescinded. Stor v. Stevens, 7 Vt. 27.

120. The words, "shall make and well execute a good, authentic deed," relate merely to the validity and sufficiency of the deed, in point of law, to convey whatever right the grantor then had in the premises, and do not refer to the title to be conveyed. Preston v. Whitcomb, 11 Vt. 47. Redfield, J., dissenting.

121. The words, "to give a good warranty deed," are descriptive of the kind of deed to be given, and not of the title, and are satisfied by the giving of such a deed, though there be an outstanding mortgage. Joslyn v. Taylor, 33 Vt. 470.

122. But a contract "to convey by a deed of conveyance a tract of land," is a contract not merely to give a deed, but to convey the land and give title. Lawrence v. Dole, 11 Vt. 549. 33 Vt. 474.

123. An attorney agreed not to charge his client for any costs, except officer's fees on uncollected demands. One demand was satisfied by a levy upon lands. Held, that this was a demand collected; and as the whole pay, including the costs, had gone to the client, he must pay such costs to the attorney. Davis v. Downer, 10 Vt. 529.

124. The defendant induced the plaintiff to take in trade a note which he represented to be "perfectly good." Held, that this was tantamount to saying that the maker was amply responsible. Weeks v. Benton, 7 Vt. 67.

125. Ch. 34 of the acts of 1824 enacted, that "the standard weight of rye and Indian corn shall be fifty-six pounds, nett, to the bushel." Held, that this defined the import of the term bushel; and that a contract for the delivery of 100 "bushels" of corn was satisfied by the delivery of 56 hundred pounds of corn, though measuring less than 100 Winchester bushels. Richardson v. Spafford, 13 Vt. 245.

126. A contract to pay "in leather" implies that it shall be of merchantable quality. If condemned and stamped by the leather sealer as "bad," this is evidence that it was not such as to satisfy the contract. Elkins v. Parkhurst, 17 Vt. 105.

127. An agreement being that a lessee should give "sufficient" security for the rent;—Held, that if the security offered was in fact adequate, it might be either personal or real security; and that it was no legal objection to the real security offered, that there was a previous mortgage upon it. Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 87.

128. In the sale of lamp oil the warranty was, that the oil should "stand the climate of Vermont without chilling." Held, that the proper construction of the warranty was, that the oil would not chill when employed in Vermont in any of the ordinary uses in which lamp oil is employed, and in the manner in which, in business, lamp oil is required to be used. Hart v. Hammett, 18 Vt. 127.

129. A contract for the delivery of "good coarse salt" is answered by the delivery of coarse salt, as good, in fact, and not in reputation merely, for all the uses to which salt is ordinarily applied, as a medium of the kinds of coarse salt then known and used in the vicinity. If inferior in kind, or not a good article of the kind, the contract is not answered. Goss v. Turner, 21 Vt. 437.

130. A note payable in "half-blooded merino wool," is not answered by the delivery of wool of which a part does not fairly and reasonably answer the quality and fineness of half-blooded merino, and of an equal amount of finer and better quality, so as to make the average equal to half-blooded merino. All the wool must be of the quality contracted to be paid. Perry v. Smith, 22 Vt. 301.

131. An order drawn for "37.89" was held to be intelligible and to express the currency of the U. S. dollars and cents. Northrop v. Sanborn, 22 Vt. 433.

132. The plaintiff contracted to do certain work, "rip-rap, at 50 cents per cubic yard." In the absence of proof of any general usage or uniform custom to determine the mode of measurement;—Held, that the measurement of the work should be of the stone as fitted and laid into the wall—the rip-rap wall—and not the excavation, or stone before being broken. Wood v. Vt. Central R. Co., 24 Vt. 608.

133. In a written contract for finishing a house, the stipulation was: "The work to be done in the best style and design of the present time, and adapted to such a house and its several parts, and in as good a style, and workmanship, and finish, as any in Burlington, Vt." Held, that this limited the expensiveness of the styles, designs, or patterns, of the finish to the style, and workmanship, and finish of the best houses in Burlington. Herrick v. Noble, 27 Vt. 1.

134. A conveyance of "all one's personal property of every name and nature," was held to convey the grantor's choses in action. Sherman v. Dodge, 28 Vt. 26.

135. The plaintiff contracted with the defendant to manufacture for him 100 straw-cutters—the defendant "to furnish the castings."

Held, that the defendant was bound to furnish the iron castings finished and fitted to the use intended, and not simply as they came from the foundry. Allen v. Thrall, 36 Vt. 711.

136. The plaintiff's son conducted the business of a small store of the plaintiff, under an agreement that the son should have a "support" for himself and family out of the business. Both took goods from the store as they wanted for family use, and no account was kept of them. While the son was thus in the store, the defendant, a physician, doctored the son's wife, under an agreement with him that the defendant would take his pay therefor out of the store, and goods were so delivered from time to time as the services were rendered. These services were necessary, and the son had no means of payment except from the store. The goods were charged on the store books, and, two or three days after the son left the store, he credited the defendant for his services, on the books. The plaintiff erased the credit and brought suit for the goods. Held, that he could not recover;—that the defendant's services fell under the denomination of support of the family, &c. Morse v. Powers, 45 Vt. 300.

137. The defendant had contracted to do a certain job of work for a third person by a certain time, to be paid for "when completed." He stated over this contract to the plaintiff, and purchased goods of him, to be paid for when the defendant should complete the job and get his pay. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to sue for the goods, whenever the time had elapsed in which the job was, by the contract, to be completed and paid for, though not then completed, nor paid for. Dana v. Mason, 4 Vt. 368.

138. The defendant's agreement to give a note, "to be approved" by the plaintiff, was held to mean a note with a surety, or some security beyond that of the defendant alone. Hale v. Jones, 48 Vt. 227.

139. Other instances. The defendant gave C a bond conditioned to support him during his natural life, and [or] to furnish him food, apparel, &c., until the sum of $1,700, received of C, and the interest accruing thereon, should be so expended. C died before the full expenditure of the $1,700. Held, by construing several instruments together, that the condition of the bond was fully performed, and that the defendant was not liable to C's administrator for the unexpended balance. Washburn v. Titus, 10 Vt. 306.

140. Sept. 30, 1839, the defendant leased to the plaintiff certain lands for the life of the defendant, with a proviso that if the defendant should sell the premises, the lease should be void from and after the first day of October next after the sale,—the plaintiff covenanting to pay $130 on the day of the date of the lease, $130 Oct. 1, 1841, and a like sum annually thereafter, and to surrender possession on the first day of October after the sale. The plaintiff, on the day of the execution of the lease, paid the $130, and afterwards, on the same day, the defendant conveyed the premises to a third person who took possession, and the plaintiff never went into possession. Held, that the $130 paid was the compensation for the first year's enjoyment, paid in advance, and that the plaintiff could recover the same, in an action for money had and received, as for a failure of consideration. Weeks v. Hunt, 13 Vt. 144.

141. Under an agreement between tenants in common of a mill, that each should occupy in severalty for certain successive periods of time, and that each should make all repairs upon the mill necessary to be made during his term of occupancy, not exceeding three dollars in amount, and that all repairs exceeding that amount should be at their joint expense, in proportion to their respective interests in the mill;—Held, that all necessary repairs made at any one time, not exceeding three dollars in amount, were to be at the sole expense of the tenant then occupying; but if the repairs made at one time exceeded three dollars, then the whole sum was to be a joint charge. Kidder v. Rixford, 16 Vt. 169.

142. In March, 1846, by written contract, the plaintiff bargained to purchase of the defendant, at a certain price per thousand feet, a quantity of timber then lying on the banks of a river, which the parties expected could be floated off to market by the rise of water of that spring—the quantity to be ascertained by the survey of certain persons agreed upon; and, as soon as surveyed, the plaintiff to furnish the defendant "a promissory note of hand," signed, &c., for the amount, &c., payable one-half by July 15, next, and one-half by Oct. 15, next—with interest after July 15, next; said notes to be payable at some bank in Boston, if the defendant desires. It was further agreed, that if the timber could not be got afloat that spring, &c., the defendant was to delay payment and interest until after it could be got afloat. After the measurement and ascertaining the price, the plaintiff offered to execute the notes therefor, embodying therein the conditions of the contract as to delay of payment and interest, but refused to execute unconditional, negotiable notes payable in Boston, as the defendant required. Held, that the plaintiff was bound by the contract to furnish notes absolute and negotiable, payable by the days named in the contract, and that for want of performance on his part he could not maintain trover against the defendant for his appropriation of the timber. Scott v. Morse, 22 Vt. 466.

143. F and H entered into a written contract, signed by both, as follows: "In consideration of 36 shares in the Vermont Central Railroad Co., to be delivered to me by F, on or before the first day of July next, I do hereby agree to sell to said F my twelve shares in the East Bethel Factory," &c. In an action by F against H for his refusal to convey the factory stock, &c.;—Held, that this was not a mere giving of a "refusal" of the factory stock, &c.; that the contract was on good consideration, and bound the plaintiff to convey the railroad stock, and the defendant the factory stock, &c. Faulkner v. Hebard, 26 Vt. 452.

144. The defendant, in consideration of $500 paid him by the plaintiff, agreed to go to California and labor there until 1851, and as much of that year as could be used and give him reasonable time to reach home by the first of December of that year, and there equally divide with the plaintiff the entire avails of the expedition. Held, that this contract did not entitle the defendant to retain from the avails the expenses of his journey home, where he prolonged his stay until after December 1st; but that the time to which he was bound to make a division of his earnings, was only such a time previous to December 1st as would afford him reasonable time thereafter to reach home by that day. Thompson v. Prouty, 27 Vt. 14.

145. The parties had entered into a written contract for the sale of a farm, with other stipulations as to the fodder, &c., which writing was left with the plaintiff, and he lost it. Upon completing the trade and deeding the farm, the parties disagreed as to the terms of the writing, when the plaintiff before delivering the land gave the defendant another writing, agreeing to produce the lost writing, or to take the defendant's recollection and construction of it. On trial of an action involving the terms of the first writing, the plaintiff could not produce it, and the parties disagreed in their testimony as to its terms. Held, that the defendant's recollection and construction should be taken, for it was so agreed. Carpenter v. French, 28 Vt. 796.

146. A contract for drawing timber and loading it upon railroad cars provided, that "the whole job shall be finished by the 15th day of March next; the timber to be loaded on the cars at such time as the said S (the defendant) shall direct after said timber shall be drawn, provided the cars shall be furnished by the railroad company." The defendant tried but failed to get cars from the railroad company until after March 15th. Held, that the true meaning of the contract was, that the drawing and carrying of the timber should be fully completed on the 15th of March, and that the plaintiff (the contractor) was not bound after that to load the timber. Chamberlin v. Scott, 33 Vt. 80.

147. In a contract for the furnishing of a monument [as by a parent for a deceased child], the directions given as to quality, inscription, &c., should, for special reasons, be literally and exactly followed. Viall v. Hubbard, 37 Vt. 114.

148. By the contract the plaintiff was to furnish for the defendant a monument of "good white marble," with the name "Octavia Jane" inscribed upon the shield. He did furnish a monument of which the material was "good white marble," but it had a discoloration or stain on it, across which a part of the inscription was wrought, which stain had gotten upon it by some accident, was temporary, and by lapse of time and exposure to the open air and frost would disappear. The name inscribed upon the shield was "Octavia J.," because there was not room to insert the full name upon the shield without putting one name above the other, and the plaintiff in good faith believed it would look better and be more satisfactory to inscribe it as he did. Held, that each of these was a substantial defect; that the contract was not complied with, and the defendant not bound to receive the monument. Ib.

149. The plaintiffs purchased of one Reynolds a canal boat, taking a bill of sale thereof, with this stipulation added: "I further agree that there is no incumbrance on said boat, except what is held by P. E. Haven, and about $25 to William Cain on her sails; and I agree to pay said Cain and clear said sails from said Cain's incumbrance as soon as practicable"; and at the same time the defendant wrote and signed upon the back of the instrument the following: "I guarantee that said Reynolds shall clear said canal boat from said William Cain's claim on said sails as he has within agreed." All parties supposed at the time that Cain's claim was but $25. It was in fact $70, and was a lien and charge as well on the boat as the sails. In an action upon the guaranty;—Held, that the words "about $25" were words of description to identify the claim and not of limitation, and that the guaranty bound the defendant to pay the whole of Cain's claim, which was a charge upon the sails, although it was at the same time a charge upon the boat. Brown v. Haven, 37 Vt. 439.

150. The plaintiff contracted to furnish lumber for the building of the defendant's house, as fast as the builders should want it. The plaintiff was dependent upon the mills in the vicinity for the supply of the lumber promised, and this was understood (i. e., expected) by both parties at the time of the contract. From a failure of the mills through a drought, the plaintiff was unable to procure the lumber from the mills as fast as wanted by the builders. Held, that as the plaintiff was not limited by the contract to the product of these mills, his contract was broken. Eddy v. Clement, 38 Vt. 486.

151. In a contract of sale by Mrs. Strong of standing timber and wood was this provision: "Said timber land is situated on the easterly part of Mrs. Strong's Bald Mountain lot, so-called; and said Davis is to cut and draw the same in and by the 31st of May, 1861, and to cut and pile the brush in a reasonable and prudent manner: said Davis to have the right of way through Mrs. Strong's said land on Bald Mountain for this purpose, and to prepare and make a road thereon." Held, that under this contract Davis, in order to perfect his title, was bound to draw the wood and timber, not merely from the particular locality on which it was cut, but to remove it entirely from the Bald Mountain lot, within the time specified; and that such timber as was removed from the place where cut down into a pasture on Mrs. Strong's Bald Mountain lot, and there left until after the expiration of the time named, was her property. Strong v. Eddy, 40 Vt. 547.

152. The defendant took a patent sugar evaporator of the plaintiff on trial;—if he "liked it" he was to pay for it; if he did not "like it" the plaintiff was to take it back. Held, that the defendant was required to bring to the trial of the article honesty of purpose and judgment according to his capacity, to ascertain his own wishes; and that this was sufficient, though falling short of the care and skill of ordinary persons in making such determination. Hartford, &c., Co. v. Brush, 43 Vt. 528.

153. The plaintiff effected a sale of real estate for the defendant, for an agreed percentage upon the price to be obtained on the sale. He sold the property for $22,000, and took in part payment certain other lots at the price of $7,325, with consent of the defendant, which lots were actually worth, as found by the auditor, but $4,220. On the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to the agreed percentage upon the whole sum of $22,000:—Held, that the percentage was to be computed upon the real, and not a fictitious, price of the property sold; but if the parties to the contract, or the plaintiff and defendant, judged the lots taken in payment to be worth the price at which they were taken, the price was not fictitious; and the mere fact that they were worth less, in the absence of any finding that the parties judged them to be worth less, could not have the effect to diminish the plaintiff's commissions. Wakefield v. Merrick, 38 Vt. 82.

154. Construction of a particular contract for the delivery of marble at a certain price per cubic foot, but variable in future years according to certain yearly price-lists of the trade. Parker v. Adams, 47 Vt. 139.

155. Usage. The usage of business in the vicinity may be received in evidence, to show where the liability of a common carrier, or wharfinger, commences, and where it ceases. Blin v. Mayo, 10 Vt. 56. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Champlain Tr. Co., 16 Vt. 52, 62. S. C., 18 Vt. 131. 23 Vt. 186.

156. The defendants, common carriers on Lake Champlain, received of the plaintiff a package of bank bills to carry from Burlington to Plattsburgh, directed to the cashier of the bank at Plattsburgh, and delivered the same to the wharfinger of the wharf at Plattsburgh (at which their boat touched), to carry to the bank. The package was stolen from the wharfinger and never reached the bank. In an action against the defendants as common carriers;—Held, that it was competent for the defendants to prove that it was the uniform usage of the defendants' business, in such cases, to deliver such packages to the wharfinger for him to carry to the bank, without their giving any notice to the consignee,—and that this usage was well known to the plaintiffs. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Champlain Tr. Co., 16 Vt. 52.

157. Held, that evidence of such usage was admissible in defense, although not known to the plaintiffs. S. C., 18 Vt. 131. Bennett, J., dissenting.

158. Under a contract for the building of railroad bridges, which was silent as to the time and place of payment;—Held, that the usage of the company, to pay monthly on the estimates, having been adopted in reference to the contractors, this usage became the rule of payment binding upon the parties by mutual consent. Boody v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. (U. S. C. C.), 24 Vt. 660.

159. The words on a merchant's bill of sale of merchandise, "six per cent off for cash," were held so equivocal, as to allow proof of how those words, as so used, were understood by usage of the trade;—as meaning a sale upon six months' credit. Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123.

160. The particular usage of the defendant to deduct, from the weight of iron he purchased, so much as, on trial, was found unsuitable for use, was held not to avail him in an action for the price, where it did not appear that the plaintiff had knowledge of such usage, and no such general usage was shown. Stevens v. Smith, 21 Vt. 90.

161. A sale "for cash" implies that there is no term of credit, and any pretence of usage or custom to call a sale on 30 days' indulgence, or other term of time, a sale for cash, or without credit, is absurd. Chapman v. Devereux, 32 Vt. 616. Bliss v. Arnold, 8 Vt. 252. Catlin v. Smith, 24 Vt. 85. Jackson v. Bissonette, 24 Vt. 611.

162. Law of place. It is a well settled rule in regard to the construction of contracts, that their validity and extension, as well as performance or release, must be determined by the law of the place of contract; while the mode of trial, by which is meant the form of pleading, the quality and degree of evidence, and the mode of redress, must always be determined by the law of the place of trial. Harrison v. Edwards, 12 Vt. 648. 26 Vt. 704.

163. — as to interest. All the incidents pertaining to the validity and construction, and especially to the discharge, performance or satisfaction of contracts, and the rule of damages for failure to perform will be governed by the lex loci contractus, which is, generally, the place of performance. This governs the rate of interest, whether stipulated, or given by way of damages. Peck v. Mayo, 14 Vt. 38.

164. — rate of exchange. Upon notes and drafts drawn in this State and payable in New York, the current rate of exchange, as customary and legal in that State, was allowed in making up the judgment. Farmers' Bank v. Burdard, 33 Vt. 346.

165. — partnership. The extent of the powers of a copartnership or of one of its members to bind the firm, and the liability of the members must be determined by the law of the place where it was formed and had its place of business, although the transaction in question was had in another State. Cutler v. Thomas, 25 Vt. 73. Hastings v. Hopkinson, 28 Vt. 108.

166. Other instances. The parties being residents of Lower Canada, the defendant conveyed to the plaintiff land there situate "in payment" of his certain notes to the plaintiff, the plaintiff agreeing in writing to re-deed upon the payment of the sum then due on the notes, with interest thereon, at the end of two years,—the plaintiff retaining the notes and the defendant remaining in possession of the land. In an action in this State upon one of the notes;—Held, that the law of Canada must govern, and that by that law the deed would be treated as an absolute conveyance in payment of the debt, with right of repurchase.—Some account given of Canadian law. Baxter v. Willey, 9 Vt. 276.

167. The defendant, resident in this State, by letter to the plaintiff, resident in Rhode Island, ordered, as a purchaser, lottery tickets to be sent him by mail for sale in this State. The sale of such tickets was lawful in Rhode Island, but was prohibited by statute of this State. The plaintiff was ignorant of such prohibition. Held, that the plaintiff could recover the price of the tickets. Cuse v. Riker, 10 Vt. 482.

168. In an action by a resident of this State against a railway company, for neglect in seasonably forwarding, from this State into Massachusetts, slaughtered calves less than four weeks old, whereby the meat became damaged;—Held to be no defense, that the sale of such articles was a violation of a sanitary statute of that State, there being no evidence or presumption that the plaintiff had knowledge of such statute;—that such fact affected only the question of damages, so far as it went to diminish the actual or salable value of the property. Mann v. Birchard, 40 Vt. 326.

169. Conditions—Full performance. The defendant agreed to share in the expenses of a pending suit, if the case should pass to and be tried in the higher court. The case did not pass to the higher court, for the reason that the judgment in the lower court was necessarily final. Held, that the condition precedent had failed, and the defendant was not liable. Penfield v. Fillmore, Brayt. 43.

170. The plaintiff contracted with the defendant to lay certain floors of a building,—the boards to be furnished by the defendant,—and worked for a time, and then abandoned the job for the reason that the defendant failed to furnish the boards when needed. Held, that the furnishing of the boards was a condition precedent to the performance on the part of the plaintiff; that, as the defendant had equal means of knowing when the boards would be needed, no special demand was necessary; and that the plaintiff could recover for the work done. Hill v. Hovey, 26 Vt. 109.

171. Although a contract is in one sense entire—that is, full performance by the promisor is the consideration of the contract—yet, if it contains neither expressly nor by strong implication, a condition of full performance precedent to any right of claim for pay, and is of a uniform nature and thus capable of just apportionment, the court will consider the promises independent and apportionable, and allow a recovery for part performance, subject to the deduction of whatever damages the party entitled to claim full performance may have sustained. The opposite rule, of forfeiture of all claim of payment for want of full performance, has not in this State been extended to any class of contracts except that of persons hired for a definite term. Redfield, J., in Booth v. Tyson, 15 Vt. 515.

172. Where from the nature of the transaction, forbearance to do a certain act, on the one part, is necessary in order to render performance of a stipulation, on the other part, of any avail, such forbearance though not expressly mentioned must be considered a condition precedent. Wier v. Church, N. Chip. 95.

173. Where the plaintiff sold the defendant property to be paid for in sawing at the defendant's mill;—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover without first affording the defendant an opportunity to perform his contract, by drawing the logs to the mill,—the defendant not having refused to perform it. Downer v. Frizzle, 10 Vt. 541.

174. Where by the contract payment was to be made in leather, such as the plaintiff should select at a tannery specified, but no definite time for such payment was stipulated;—Held, that a demand, with a designation of the kind of leather selected by the plaintiff, was an indispensable pre-requisite to a right of action. Had the contract fixed a time of payment, the case might have been different. Russell v. Ormsbee, 10 Vt. 274. See Peck v. Hubbard, 11 Vt. 612.

175. Under a contract, whose consideration was executory, that the defendant would get and deliver, during a period named and at a specified price per thousand feet, a certain amount of spruce lumber, "the lumber to be sawed into boards and such timber as said W [the plaintiff] may order, not over 20 feet [in length]";—Held, that the plaintiff, not having given notice of what kind of lumber and what quantity of each he required under the contract, could not recover for a non-delivery. By Prout, J.—If this were an obligation for the payment of a debt, as in Peck v. Hubbard, the case might be different. Welch v. Bradley, 41 Vt. 308.

176. A provision in a contract for work, that no claim shall be made or allowed for extra work, "unless the same shall have been done in pursuance of written contracts or orders signed by the engineer," and that claims therefor shall be presented for settlement within a given time, will bar a recovery for extra work, unless such provisions be complied with. Vanderwerker v. Vt. Central R. Co. 27 Vt. 130.

177. A contracted with B to furnish materials and repair a house for B, and complete the whole by a day named, and B agreed to pay a certain sum therefor "when the job is completed." A partially performed, when he was sued and B was summoned as his trustee, whereupon A abandoned the work without fault of B, and against his consent. Held, that the contract was entire, full performance by A being a condition precedent to the payment; and that as A could not recover a pro rata compensation for the work done, B was not liable as trustee. Kettle v. Harvey, 21 Vt. 301. 24 Vt. 515. 33 Vt. 39.

178. Where the plaintiff under a contract delivered to the defendant palm-leaf to be manufactured into hats of a specific description, which the plaintiff agreed to receive at a certain price per dozen;—Held, in an action on book to recover the price of the palm-leaf, and certain cash advanced, that the plaintiff was not obliged to receive a less quantity of hats than was stipulated in the contract, nor to select, out of a larger number, sufficient at the stipulated prices to pay for the cash and palm-leaf delivered. Rogers v. Miller, 15 Vt. 431.

179. The plaintiff agreed to let the defendant put 100 sheep into his pasture, for the season, at 50 cts per head, and if his pasture should prove insufficient he would arrange with his father to open his pasture to the sheep. The defendant was to have the oversight and care of the sheep. The plaintiff did every thing he agreed to do. The pastures were not sufficient to keep the sheep well, and for this reason the sheep were lessened in value more than the price stipulated. The defendant took away the sheep, for this reason, before the season of pasturing was ended. Held, that the plaintiff could recover the full contract price, having fully performed his contract. Chesley v. Matthewson, 40 Vt. 197.

180. Where the defendant contracted to deliver thirty tons of starch per year for two years;—Held, that an action lay, after the expiration of the first year, for a breach of that part of the contract which was to be performed during the first year. Mizer v. Williams, 17 Vt. 457.

181. The plaintiff voluntarily, and without cause, abandoned his contract to build a house for the defendant, and refused to finish it, but sued to recover the contract price. The cause being referred, the defendant presented in offset his claim for labor and expense in completing the job and for other damages for non-completion by the plaintiff, all which the referee allowed, and allowed to the plaintiff the balance of the whole contract price. Held correct, for that thereby the defendant received an equivalent for full performance,—although, probably, the plaintiff could not have recovered any thing had the defendant done nothing more with him about it. Austin v. Austin, 47 Vt. 311.

182. A contract to deliver 100 cords of wood at $4.75 a cord, by a day named, was held to be entire and not divisible, and that payment was not demandable for the wood as delivered from time to time, but only on full delivery. Brandon Mfg. Co. v. Morse, 48 Vt. 322.

183. —dependent, or independent. Where there are mutual and divers covenants between parties, to be performed alternately, or at different times, they are considered independent, and the plaintiff need not aver performance on his part; otherwise, if all the plaintiff's covenants were to have been performed before performance by the defendant. Gallup v. Burnell, Brayt. 191.

184. Where parties are to perform concurrent acts, and the plaintiff's act forms the basis or consideration of the defendant's act, the defendant may always excuse himself from performance by the failure of the plaintiff. Lawrence v. Dole, 11 Vt. 549. But where the defendant's act rests upon an independent consideration, he cannot excuse himself by showing a failure of the plaintiff to perform. Day v. Essex Co. Bank, 13 Vt. 97.

185. In the case of a mutual contract, where the one promise is the entire consideration of the other, and the acts to be performed are concurrent—as for a sale or exchange of property on each side—neither party is obliged to convey absolutely, if the other declines conveying on his part; but the party claiming damages for breach of the contract must show, either a readiness and offer to perform on his part, or else that he was excused therefrom by the consent or conduct of the other party; and this will be sufficient. Faulkner v. Hebard, 26 Vt. 452.

186. Courts will never construe a contract so as to make its stipulations conditions precedent, where such construction would work a hardship, unless clearly so expressed; but will rather construe such stipulations as independent agreements. Taylor v. Gallup, 8 Vt. 340.

187. Where A by his bond covenanted to pay B a certain account, the amount to be settled and adjusted by C, and to be paid in one year from the date of the bond;—Held, that it was not a condition precedent that B should procure the adjustment by C within the year, but if so adjusted after the expiration of the year, but before suit brought, an action would lie upon the bond. Id.

188. The plaintiff held and claimed to be owner of a note made by the defendant, and payable to A or bearer, and had a suit pending thereon against the defendant. The defendant held a note against A. The plaintiff promised the defendant that if he would give a new note for the one in suit he (the plaintiff) would show the defendant property of A sufficient to satisfy the note against A. Thereupon the defendant gave the plaintiff a new note for the one in suit, and the suit was dropped. In an action upon the new note;—Held, that the failure of the plaintiff to show the defendant property of A whereon to secure the note against A, was no defense; that the surrender of the former note and the settlement of the suit was a sufficient consideration for the new note; that the note and the undertaking of the plaintiff, although mutual, were independent contracts or promises, and that each party had a remedy on the promise in his favor, without performing his part of the contract. Plumb v. Niles, 34 Vt. 230.

189. The defendant contracted to convey on his boat two loads of wood for the plaintiff to Port Henry, at a specified price per cord; and it was agreed that if the defendant could not get out of the creek, where the wood lay, with a full load, the plaintiff was to complete the load at a certain wharf. Held, that the failure of the plaintiff to complete the first load at the wharf, whereby the defendant was compelled to sail to Port Henry with only two-thirds of a load, did not absolve the defendant from his obligation to go after the second load, but that he should have done all in his power to perform the full contract on his part, and if the plaintiff failed on his part, the defendant would have his remedy in damages. (1.) The plaintiff's engagement did not go to the whole consideration or matter to be done by the defendant. (2.) The plaintiff's performance in regard to each load was to be subsequent in time to that of the defendant, and hence could not be a condition precedent, to the defendant's liability. Keenan v. Broten, 21 Vt. 86.

190. Under an agreement to account for certain notes after certain costs of a suit were paid, it was held, that payment of the costs was not a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action for an account, but that the agreement only gave an authority to retain to an amount equal to such costs, or to adjust the amount in the action. Woodward v. Harlow, 28 Vt. 388.

191. An action will lie upon a note payable at a fixed time in specific articles "to be delivered at any place in L where the payee should elect," without averring or proving any election of the place of delivery. This election is not a condition precedent, but a mere privilege, which is waived by not being seasonably made, and passes the election to the maker, who in such case could elect his own place of payment [in L] and notify the payee, and a tender at such place would be good. Peck v. Hubbard, 11 Vt. 612. See Russel v. Ormsbee, 10 Vt. 274. Welch v. Bradley, 41 Vt. 309.

192. The dependence or independence of covenants depends upon the good sense and meaning of the contract, and their precedence upon the order of time in which the intent of the transaction requires their performance, rather than from the arrangement of the covenants, or the structure of the instrument. Kettle v. Harvey, 21 Vt. 301.

193. The defendant made an assignment to the plaintiff, absolute in terms, of a lease, and at the same time gave a separate writing agreeing to surrender possession by a future day named, and the plaintiff at the same time gave the defendant a writing agreeing to pay certain arrearages of rent then due to the lessor, and a further sum at a future day named. The plaintiff neglected to make the stipulated payments, and the defendant refused to surrender possession by the time fixed. Held, that the defendant was liable in ejectment;—that the lease was a contract executed, and not dependent upon the contemporaneous executory agreement as to payment. Strong v. Garfield, 10 Vt. 497.

194. The defendant had attached the plaintiff's property upon a writ against a third person, and the plaintiff had sued the attaching officer therefor. The parties then entered into mutual covenants, that the plaintiff should discontinue his suit, and, in consideration thereof, that the defendant should pay the plaintiff the full value of the property attached, to be appraised by certain persons named, by a day named. The plaintiff discontinued his suit, and the defendant then prevented the making of the appraisal. Held, that the covenants were not dependent upon the appraisal to be made; that this was but an incidental provision in the agreement, designed to facilitate its execution on the part of the defendant; and that the plaintiff could sue and recover upon the defendant's covenant to pay, and make proof in court of the value of the property. Smith v. Edmunds, 16 Vt. 687.

195. The defendant sold the plaintiff eight stoves for $200 and received payment. He delivered six of them, and gave a bill of sale stating that "six are now delivered, and the other two to be delivered at Hyde Park in two months from date, and if the eight are not sold in one year from date, I am to take back two of them and pay $50 and interest." The two stoves not having been delivered as agreed, the plaintiff sued and got judgment therefor and collected his damages, $55. At the end of the year, the plaintiff having been unable to sell three of the six stoves delivered, gave the defendant notice thereof, and that two of them were ready for him at the place named, and demanded the payment of the $50, and interest. In an action therefor;—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover that sum; that the two stipulations of the defendant were entirely distinct; and that a satisfaction paid for breach of the first was not a satisfaction of the second, which was, in effect, a contract for rescission as to two of the stoves, if unsold at the end of the year. Sawyer v. McIntyre, 18 Vt. 27.

196. The plaintiff covenanted to deliver certain quantities of coal before certain specified dates, and the defendant covenanted to pay "for the above-named coal" a certain price per hundred bushels, "to be paid the first of each month for all delivered." Held, that the defendant's covenant was not independent, but only bound him to pay monthly, on condition that the plaintiff had delivered the coal according to the contract. Lawrence v. Davey, 28 Vt. 264.

197. Penalty—Liquidated damages.

(1.) Where there is any reasonable doubt upon the face of a written contract how the parties intended a sum named therein, whether as a penalty or as liquidated damages, it will be construed as a penalty merely. (2.) It is a settled general rule, that where the sum is named as a penalty, and there is no stipulation that it shall be regarded as liquidated damages, it can only be regarded as a penalty. It would require very strong evidence to authorize the court to say that the words of the parties do not express their own intention. Held to be a penalty, where so expressed in a bond, given on the sale of property and the good will of a business, conditioned that the obligor should refrain from prosecuting the same business. Smith v. Wainwright, 24 Vt. 97. See Whitcomb v. Preston, 13 Vt. 58.

198. Whether joint, or several. Separate considerations proceeding from two covenantees, and separate interests to be received by them, do not make a covenant, in terms joint, a several covenant. Distinctive words, qualifying the covenant, such as to them respectively, or to them and each of them, are necessary to make the covenant several. Catlin v. Barnard, 1 Aik. 9. But see Sharp v. Conklin, 16 Vt. 355.

199. The several defendants executed to the plaintiff a writing, in terms, "we hereby agree to indemnify E M (the plaintiff) for all damages and costs," &c., "by reason of his having become bail," &c. To each signature there was indicated a certain sum, as, "$10.00," "$5.00," &c. Held, that, as the contract was joint in its terms and object, and the subject matter was entire, it was not made several by the sums set against the signatures, which might indicate the rate of contribution among the defendants. McCullis v. Thurston, 27 Vt. 596.

200. Several persons, not partners, were jointly indebted to K, and three of them (the defendants) gave to the others (the plaintiffs) a writing requesting them to pay K, concluding, "and we will settle with you for our share." The plaintiffs paid K, and brought their action declaring upon this as a joint promise, alleging that the defendants' share was a certain named sum. Held, on demurrer, that the promise was joint, that it was upon good consideration, and that it was not necessary to aver that any balance had been agreed upon as the defendants' share. Scott v. Keith, 32 Vt. 246.

III. MODIFICATION ;— RESCISSION ;— POWER TO STOP PERFORMANCE.

201. Modification. A contract cannot be altered except by another contract of equal force. Thus, a bond cannot be altered or superseded by, or merged in, an oral agreement merely. Patrick v. Adams, 29 Vt. 376.

202. Where a contract under seal is subsequently altered by the parties by a writing not under seal, or by a verbal agreement, the whole becomes a simple contract, and the rights, liabilities and remedies of the parties are thereafter to be determined by the rules applicable to all simple contracts. Briggs v. Vt. Central R. Co., 31 Vt. 211. 45 Vt. 433.

203. A subsisting sealed contract becomes reduced to a simple contract by a subsequent parol agreement modifying it;—as, by a subsequent written agreement engrafted upon it. In such case the remedy is assumpsit, and not covenant. Hydeville Co. v. Eagle R. & Slate Co., 44 Vt. 895. Sherwin v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 24 Vt. 847.

204. Where the plaintiff had covenanted under seal to deliver certain quantities of coal by certain specified times, and had delivered part, but not according to his covenant either as to time or quantity, and the defendant then agreed by parol that if the plaintiff would continue to deliver the coal the defendant would take no advantage of the contract, but would pay for all the coal then or thereafter to be delivered, irrespective of the contract;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover in assumpsit for all the coal then or thereafter delivered. Lawrence v. Davey, 28 Vt. 264.

205. A simple contract reduced to writing may be varied or changed, in any way, by a subsequent verbal agreement. Flanders v. Fay, 40 Vt. 316. Sherwin v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 24 Vt. 847.

206. Aliter, as to contracts under seal, which cannot be varied by a mere parol contract, whether in writing or not; since such a contract is inferior to the original. Sherwin v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co.

207. In regard to all written contracts, where alterations are made without writing, the substituted agreement all virtually rests on mere oral evidence, and an action must be predicated upon the altered contract; and if the original contract is set forth, it is merely as inducement. Id. Dana v. Hancock, 30 Vt. 616.

208. A contract under seal between the maker and payee of a promissory note, by which the maker agreed to deliver and the payee to receive certain property in satisfaction of the note, was held to be a substitute for, and to supersede and extinguish the note, and was a bar to an action thereon. Bryant v. Gale, 5 Vt. 416. 19 Vt. 551.

209. A new note, given merely in substitution for two previous notes which were in law satisfied, was held to be subject to the same defense. Hurd v. Spencer, 40 Vt. 581.

210. Whether a new contract shall supersede and take the place of a former one, is matter of probable intent. If the new contract be inconsistent with the continuance of the former one, the old contract is released by entering into the new, although of the same grade; but where not so inconsistent, and the new contract only provides a new mode of discharging the former one, it produces no effect upon the former, unless or until the new be performed;—applied to the case where an innkeeper, having a bag of gold of his guest, to keep, was requested by the guest to take it across the way to a neighbor's, for him to keep over night. McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 816.

211. The plaintiff, by engagement of the defendant, boarded a man in the defendant's service. Afterwards the defendant took in a partner in the same business, and the plaintiff continued to board such person, who continued in the employment of the partnership. Held, that mere knowledge of the fact of the partnership did not require the plaintiff to change his mode of charging, and that the defendant was liable for the whole board bill. Taggart v. Phelps, 10 Vt. 318.

212. A substitution, by parol agreement, for the place of delivery of goods, as named in a written contract, is good, being acted upon. Hunt v. Thurman, 15 Vt. 386.

213. By the contract, the plaintiff was bound to furnish a certain number of hop-poles within a certain time, and the defendant to pay therefor a certain price. The plaintiff delivered only a part within the time fixed, and afterwards the defendant sold out the contract to M, and M then agreed with the plaintiff to extend the time for delivery, and within such extended time the plaintiff made full delivery. The case showing a subsequent assent by the defendant to such modification of the agreement, and that he treated it as a still subsisting contract;—Held, that he was liable to pay for the poles. Lane v. Sprague, 36 Vt. 289.

214. It seems, that where one sets up, in defense to an action for breach of contract, the waiver of a strict performance by the substitution of something different [as a further day for the delivery of articles sold], he must show performance according to the substituted conditions, or a recovery may be had, counting upon the original contract. Hill v. Smith, 32 Vt. 435. Lawrence v. Dole, 11 Vt. 555-6.

215. Where parties under a special contract—as a building contract—deviate from the original plan agreed upon, and the terms of the original contract do not appear to be applicable to the new work, it being beyond what was originally contemplated by the parties, it is undoubtedly to be regarded and treated as work wholly extra, out of the scope of the contract, and may be recovered for as such. But it is otherwise, if the original terms are not inapplicable, and there is evidence from which it may be inferred, that it was the intention of the parties that the new work should be subject to those terms—as, times and mode of payment. Boody v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. (U. S. C. C.), 24 Vt. 660.

216. Rescission. Inadequacy of consideration may be evidence of fraud; but upon such inadequacy alone, a contract cannot be set aside or rescinded. Kidder v. Chamberlin, 41 Vt. 62. Harrington v. Wells, 12 Vt. 505.

217. A mistake or misunderstanding as to the meaning of the terms of a contract, gives neither party the right to rescind. Montgomery v. Ricker, 43 Vt. 165.

218. The parties being in partnership, the defendant sold all his interest in the partnership effects to the plaintiff. It was afterwards discovered that the inventory and estimates of the effects, which the parties had before them as their guide for mutual propositions, were erroneous, by reason of which, as the plaintiff claimed, he was induced to pay the defendant too much for his interest; but the sum paid was, in fact, less than the apparent amount of the defendant's interest, and the defendant sold his interest without any idea of future accountability. Held, that while the sale remained in force for the plaintiff's benefit, he could not maintain an action to recover back part of the consideration paid. Wood v. Johnson, 13 Vt. 191.

219. A contract to be rescinded ab initio as to part, and at the election of one party, must be wholly rescinded. Fay v. Oliver, 20 Vt. 118. 21 Vt. 528.

220. The plaintiff contracted to purchase of the defendant two parcels of land for one price, and the defendant conveyed one parcel at the time, and stipulated to convey the other on receiving payment for both, and put the plaintiff in possession of both. The defendant refused, on demand, to convey the second parcel, on the alleged ground that the full price had not been paid. In general assumpsit to recover the consideration paid for the second parcel;—Held, that although the parties, in their estimates of the values in their negotiations, referred two-thirds of the whole sum to the first parcel and one-third to the second, it was still one entire purchase; and that as the contract had been so far executed that the plaintiff had realized manifest benefit under it, and the parties could not be placed in statu quo, it was not in a state to be rescinded at all, and much less as to the second parcel only, except by mutual consent, although the full price might have been paid—and that the plaintiff could not recover. Ib.

221. The party who would rescind a contract, though procured by fraud, must be in a condition to put the other party in statu quo;—as, to restore a promissory note taken for goods procured by fraudulent representations. Poor v. Woodburn, 25 Vt. 284.

222. This does not necessarily imply a tender, or distinct offer to return the note. Where he has not parted with it, the production of it at the trial, if required, to be disposed of under the direction of the court, is sufficient. Ib. Hodgden v. Hubbard, 18 Vt. 504.

223. Where a contract has been in part executed and each party has received a partial benefit from the contract, so that the parties cannot be placed in statu quo by a rescission, one party cannot rescind for the default of the other, but must be left to his action, or cross-action. Hammond v. Buckmaster, 22 Vt. 875. 21 Vt. 204.

224. Where the consideration of a contract is the purchase of a thing non-existent, or wholly without value, or where the restoration of the consideration is in the nature of things impossible, no offer to rescind is necessary in order to a defense in an action upon the contract. Smith v. Smith, 30 Vt. 139.

225. Under certain circumstances, one of the parties to a contract may rescind it without the consent of the other; as where, by the terms of a contract, concurrent acts are to be performed—as a delivery of the property by one party and a payment of the price by the other—if either party should refuse to perform his part of the contract, the other party would be at liberty to treat this as an abandonment of the contract, and justify a rescission. Fletcher v. Cole, 23 Vt. 114.

226. A purchaser cannot rescind a contract induced by misrepresentation and fraud, after he has wholly disposed of the purchased property, by offering to restore what he has received for it, although disposed of before discovery of the fraud. He must rely upon other remedies. McCrillis v. Carlton, 37 Vt. 139.

227. The defendants secured under a contract with the plaintiff the use of a patented machine, belonging to him, for a certain yearly rent, so long as they, at their election, should continue to use it. After using the machine for some years and paying the rent, the defendants claimed to have acquired the right from another source to use the patent, and gave notice to the plaintiff that they should pay no longer; but they, or their vendees, continued to use the machine. In an action upon the contract to recover the agreed rent;—Held, that the contract estopped the defendants from denying the plaintiff's title so long as they, or their vendees, continued to use the machine, in the absence of fraud in the making of the contract, or unless the plaintiff's title had expired; and that the defendants could not terminate the contract to pay without surrendering the machine, and were liable to pay for such use until surrender. Sherman v. Champlain Transportation Co., 31 Vt. 162.

228. But held otherwise as to the right, under the same contract, to use a patent for a machine built and owned by the defendants. Ib.

229. The plaintiff sold land to the defendant, taking his notes therefor, and gave him a bond conditioned to convey upon payment of the notes, and in the meantime the defendant to have possession, but on neglect to pay, the bond to be void and the plaintiff to have the right to re-enter and enjoy. In an action upon the notes;—Held, that it was no defense, as to any of the notes, that the defendant had not paid the one first falling due, nor had taken possession;—that the bond was void only as against the plaintiff, at his election. Chandler v. Marsh, 8 Vt. 161.

230. The plaintiff had contracted to deliver to the defendant certain furnace castings, and to a certain amount, to be paid for partly in labor and the balance in cash in one year. After a delivery of part of the castings, the defendant refused to receive a load of the castings sent under the contract. Held, that the refusal was such a violation of the contract, preventing its further execution by the plaintiff, as absolved him from his obligation to deliver the balance of the castings, and to give the stipulated credit for the amount delivered, and to take payment in labor; and that an action of book account lay immediately to recover for the castings delivered. Tyson v. Doe, 15 Vt. 571. 20 Vt. 121. 21 Vt. 22.

231. The plaintiff procured and paid for some tea at the defendant's store, and shortly after returned it—"it not being good." The defendant received it, saying he should have some good tea soon, and would replace the tea returned with good tea. The defendant retained both tea and money and never delivered any other tea, nor did the plaintiff call for it. Held, that there was no contract of absolute rescinding so as to make the defendant a debtor, either for the money, or for the tea, unless called for; and that the plaintiff could not maintain an action on book therefor. West v. Cutting, 19 Vt. 536.

232. The plaintiff sold to the defendant a horse and a clock for a harness and two promissory notes of the defendant, by falsely and fraudulently warranting the horse to be kind and safe in harness, whereas the horse had such an inveterate habit of kicking as to be nearly or quite worthless. The plaintiff had not delivered the clock. The defendant, upon discovering the vicious habits of the horse, requested the plaintiff to receive back the horse and to surrender the harness and notes, which the plaintiff declined, and brought suit upon the notes. Held, that as the horse might have constituted the main inducement to the bargain, the defendant should be allowed, at his option, to treat it as entirely invalid;—and a judgment for the defendant below was affirmed. Morrill v. Aden, 19 Vt. 505.

233. A agreed to sell B a parcel of land for a price named, for which B gave his note, and took possession of the land, and received from A a written agreement to convey if the note should be paid when due. The note was not paid at maturity. Held, that A had his election to collect the note, or to rescind the contract and take back the land; but that having made his election by obtaining possession of the land by ejectment, he could not enforce payment of the note. Arbuckle v. Hawks, 20 Vt. 598.

234. So held, where the purchaser had taken a lease of the land from the vendor after the note fell due, and had occupied it as tenant;—that this was a rescission by mutual arrangement. Porter v. Vaughn, 26 Vt. 624.

235. The plaintiff conveyed a farm to F and took back a mortgage, which remained unpaid, and, in the expectation of getting back a quitclaim from F, entered into a contract to convey the same to the defendant, and took the defendant's notes therefor. The defendant did not then fully understand the state of the title, but soon after was informed of it, and then repudiated the contract and demanded back his notes. The plaintiff refused to rescind, and offered a good guaranty that the defendant should have a good deed, which the defendant declined, and abandoned the land. Afterwards the plaintiff received the quitclaim from F and rented the place for one year and occupied it another year, and then sold it. In an action upon the defendant's notes, the plaintiff claimed to recover his loss in the transaction. Held, that the facts shown amounted to a practical abandonment of the contract by the plaintiff, and operated as an acceptance of the rescission offered by the defendant, and took effect, as of that time, and thus left the notes without consideration. Henry v. Martin, 39 Vt. 42.

236. The defendant, having procured a horse of the plaintiff by exchange, within a reasonable time returned the horse to the plaintiff, complained that the horse was lame and unsound, and "requested to trade back and call it no trade"—offered "to trade back and have things as they were before the trade," and "asked to rescind the trade," which the plaintiff refused. The county court ruled that this did not constitute a rescission of the contract. Held, (by a majority), erroneous; that the evidence tended to prove a rescission, and should have been submitted to the jury to determine what the parties understood by it. Gates v. Bliss, 43 Vt. 299.

237. The plaintiff sold the defendant a yoke of oxen which were eight years old, but which the plaintiff fraudulently represented to be only seven years old. On the second day after the defendant took the oxen, one E informed him that, in his opinion, judging from their appearance, the oxen were nine years old. The defendant continued to use the oxen for five days longer, when he returned them to the plaintiff, and notified him that the oxen were not as represented; but the plaintiff refused to receive them, and brought suit for the price. Held, that the defendant had exercised his right of rescission within what, under the circumstances, was a reasonable time. Matteson v. Holt, 45 Vt. 336.

238. A purchaser, who is entitled to rescind a purchase for fraud, but who delays doing so for the purpose of affording the vendor, at his own request, an opportunity of attempting to make the thing sold of value and satisfactory to the purchaser, is not precluded by such delay from thereafter, in reasonable time, rescinding the purchase. Powell v. Woodworth, 46 Vt. 378.

239. A party having a right to rescind a contract on the ground of fraud, elects, after discovery of the fraud, to go on under the contract. This is an affirmation of the contract, and concludes him from rescinding. Downer v. Smith, 32 Vt. 1.

240. Power to stop performance. While a contract is executory, a party has the power to stop the performance on the other side by an explicit direction to that effect, thereby subjecting himself to such damages as will compensate the other party for being stopped in the performance on his part, at that point or stage in the execution of the contract. Danforth v. Walker, 37 Vt. 239. S. C. 40 257.

241. The defendant contracted with the plaintiff for 1,500 bushels of potatoes, part on hand, and the balance to be purchased by the plaintiff and to be delivered during the winter as called for by the defendant. After the delivery of a part, the defendant wrote the plaintiff not to purchase any more potatoes until the plaintiff should hear from him. The plaintiff continued purchasing and the defendant refused thereafter to receive. In an action for refusing to receive the potatoes so purchased;—Held, that this letter was not a rescission of the contract by the defendant, but only a refusal to receive under it any potatoes thereafter purchased;—that the defendant had the power to do this and to stop the further execution of the contract, subjecting himself to such damages therefor as would compensate the plaintiff for being so stopped;—that the plaintiff had no right to go on and make further purchases and incur expense, and throw the risk of the property upon the defendant, and thereby enhance the damages at his expense, without any benefit to himself;—and that the rule of damages for this breach, so far as respects the requisite quantity then still to be purchased to fill the contract, was the difference between the price stipulated to be paid, and what it would have cost the plaintiff to procure and deliver the potatoes. Id.; and see Derby v. Johnson, 21 Vt. 17. Nye v. Taggart, 40 Vt. 295.

IV. CERTAIN PARTICULAR CONTRACTS.

1. For service.

242. Entire. If a party, under a contract to labor for a specified period, leave the service before the expiration of that time without sufficient cause, he cannot recover on the contract, nor on a quantum meruit, for the service rendered. Hair v. Bell, 6 Vt. 35. Philbrook v. Belknap, 6 Vt. 388. St. Albans Steamboat Co. v. Wilkins, 8 Vt. 54. Brown v. Kimball, 12 Vt. 617. Ripley v. Chipman, 13 Vt. 268. 15 Vt. 515. Winn v. Southgate, 17 Vt. 355. Mullen v. Gilkinson, 19 Vt. 503. 24 Vt. 515. Foreyth v. Hastings, 27 Vt. 646.

243. Excuse for quitting. Where the plaintiff contracted to serve the defendant for six months, but quit the service before the end of the term;—Held, that he could not recover although, (1), he quit under the erroneous belief that according to the legal mode of computing time under such contracts, his time was up,—and although, (2), the defendant had consented to his absence during a part of the term, but he had, on his return, resumed his work under the contract—and, although, (3), the defendant had refused to take him back after he had broken his contract by leaving. Winn v. Southgate.

244. It is no sufficient excuse for abandoning a contract of service, that the party was put to other service than that specified in the contract, if he made no objection thereto. Hair v. Bell, 6 Vt. 35. Mullen v. Gilkinson, 19 Vt. 503.

245. Nor, that the employer refused, upon the employee's solicitation, to discharge another servant with whom he had difficulty. Mullen v. Gilkinson.

246. Fault finding and angry words by an employer towards his laborer [as stated in the case], were held not a sufficient excuse for leaving the service. Foreyth v. Hastings, 27 Vt. 646.

247. A girl, hired by the defendant for domestic service for an entire term at a specified price, left such service during the term, for the reason that she "took a dislike" to the defendant's father for some rudeness in his deportment towards her in respect to her chastity. Held, that this was good cause for leaving, and that she could recover for the service performed, although the father was of another separate family, but occupying the same house, and the defendant had no control over him. Patterson v. Gage, 23 Vt. 558.

248. A party contracting to labor for a definite term, at a fixed price for the term or by the month, who fails to fulfil his whole contract by reason of disabling sickness, may recover for his part performance what his services have benefitted the other party, with reference to full performance—that is, by deducting from the benefit so received any damage sustained by reason of the non-performance of the entire contract. Patrick v. Putnam, 27 Vt. 759. Fenton v. Clark, 11 Vt. 557. Seaver v. Morse, 20 Vt. 620. Hubbard v. Belden, 27 Vt. 645.

249. Nor is he barred of such recovery upon a quantum meruit by his neglect, after getting well, to return and complete the service where the employer would not be bound to receive him—as at the end of two weeks. Hubbard v. Belden. Fenton v. Clark. Seaver v. Morse.

250. Dismissal. The defendant had engaged to labor for the plaintiffs, A and B, for a definite term, at an agreed price. A discharged him from service. B soon after requested the defendant to go to work again under the contract,—which the defendant declined. Held, that the dismissal by A put an end to the contract as to both A and B, and that neither was restored to his rights under it by the request of B. Suttons v. Tyrell, 12 Vt. 79.

251. Lost time. A laborer hired for a definite period is not bound, on the expiration of the specified period, to make up for time necessarily and reasonably lost and in the loss of which his employer has acquiesced, by continuing on in the service of the employer for a length of time equal to the time so lost. Nor is the employer bound to receive labor for such length of time as compensation for the time lost; but is bound to pay only for the services actually rendered. McDonald v. Montague, 30 Vt. 357.

252. Right reserved to terminate. The plaintiff contracted to labor for the defendant at farm work for one year at $15, per month, each party having the right to terminate the contract at any time when he should become dissatisfied and desire to terminate it. The plaintiff worked from December to July, when he became dissatisfied and quit. Held, that, in leaving, he had only exercised his right under the contract; that he had fully performed it and was entitled to recover the full contract price. Whitecomb v. Gilman, 35 Vt. 297; and he might recover in such case, although his dissatisfaction was capricious and without good reason. Provost v. Harwood, 29 Vt. 219.

253. The plaintiff agreed to labor for the defendant for one year, for a certain sum to be paid when he should have finished his labor; and it was mutually agreed, that if the plaintiff should become dissatisfied and wish to leave the defendant's employ, he might do so by giving fourteen days' notice of his intention to leave; and the defendant should have the right to discharge him by giving one day's notice of the intention to discharge him. Held, that either party, upon becoming dissatisfied, was at liberty to terminate the contract by giving the specified notice, without apprising the other party of the grounds of his dissatisfaction, and although he might have no satisfactory reason for such dissatisfaction; and the plaintiff having quit the defendant's service before the end of the year, after having given the stipulated notice;—Held, that he became immediately entitled to sue for his wages, having "finished his labor." Rosnier v. Cooper, 23 Vt. 522.

254. Time of payment. In contracts of service for a term, as for so many months at so much per month, where no time is stipulated when payment is to be made, the law implies that it is to be made at the end of the term. Tebo v. Ballard, 36 Vt. 612.

255. If, in such case, the servant quit before the expiration of the term without fault of the employer, he can not demand or sue for the services rendered until after the expiration of the term, although then entitled to recover upon a quantum meruit. Ib.

256. Power to stop employment. In a contract for labor, the employer has the power to stop the completion of the work, if he choose—subjecting himself thereby to the consequences of a violation of his contract; and the workman, after notice to quit work, has no right to continue his labor and claim pay for it. Derby v. Johnson, 21 Vt. 17.

257. While the plaintiff was laboring for the defendant under an entire contract for service, the defendant, without justifiable cause, ordered him to leave his employment, which the plaintiff soon after did. Held, that he was entitled to recover for the services performed, although he continued to work a few hours after having been ordered to leave; and although, upon a subsequent day, he gave as a further reason for leaving, that the defendant was going to break down and he was afraid he should not get his pay. Green v. Hulett, 22 Vt. 188.

258. Waiver of forfeiture. Where a farm laborer is hired for (say) four months at a fixed price per month, and quits before the expiration of the four months without the consent of his employer, or wrongfully, an offer by the employer to pay for the whole service at the contract price, or a tender of a sum of money, supposed to be the amount due as thus computed, is a waiver of any forfeiture of wages which the employer might otherwise claim. Patnote v. Sanders, 41 Vt. 66. Seaver v. Morse, 20 Vt. 620. So, any acts or declarations, recognizing a continued liability, may amount to such waiver. Cahill v. Patterson, 30 Vt. 592.

259. Assent to termination. Where a contract of service is dissolved by mutual consent before the period at which wages become due, pro rata wages may be recovered without any express contract to that effect. Rogers v. Steele, 24 Vt. 513. Green v. Hulett, 22 Vt. 188. (For facts constituting such consent, see cases.)

260. The plaintiff was hired to the defendant for four months at a fixed price per month, and during his term of service left voluntarily, but with the consent of the defendant. It not appearing that the plaintiff had good cause for leaving;—Held, that he could recover only pro rata on the basis of the contract price. Pat-note v. Sanders, 41 Vt. 86.

261. The plaintiff had contracted to work for the defendant for one year, but left before the year was out, without cause. The plaintiff told the defendant he was going to leave, and the defendant made no objection, but said he could get just as good workmen as the plaintiff, and the plaintiff supposed the defendant consented to his leaving. The next day the defendant told the plaintiff to come, in a day or two, and he would settle with him. In about ten days, the plaintiff went to settle, when the defendant said his books were at the office of his attorney, and told him to go there. The defendant went and met the attorney. The defendant's books there showed a balance of $57.22 due the plaintiff. The defendant then claimed $50 damages for leaving his service, and offered to pay the difference, $7.22. The defendant had never before claimed such damage. Held, that the plaintiff was not liable for damages, and was entitled to recover, pro rata, for the time of his service. Boyle v. Parker, 46 Vt. 343; and see Rogers v. Steele, 24 Vt. 513.

262. Board. The plaintiff labored for the defendant, the defendant to board him in a particular way at a certain place. Held, that the plaintiff could not board himself elsewhere and charge the expense to the defendant, no failure on the part of the defendant being shown. Griffin v. Tyson, 17 Vt. 35.

263. Clothes. The plaintiff, an old man of feeble mind, agreed to work for the defendant for his board and clothes, no length of service being specified. He worked from the last of February to the first of August, boarding with the defendant, and then left. When he came, he was poorly clad. The defendant furnished him no new clothes, but only saw that his old clothes were mended and taken care of. In an action to recover his wages, the auditor found that his labor was worth $40, and that this sum was no more than was requisite to supply him with things that he actually stood in need of, to enable him to live comfortably through the fall and winter. Held, that the agreement to furnish clothes was not limited to the time while the plaintiff worked, but must be considered in relation to the whole year, to the season of the year in which he worked, the value of his services, the difficulty of getting work at other seasons of the year, and the clothing he then had and might reasonably require for the coming winter, and that he could recover the $40. Spencer v. Storrs, 38 Vt. 156.

264. Ministerial labor. The defendant, a religious society, hired the plaintiff as their pastor for one year at $800. At the close of the first year the plaintiff agreed to remain for such sum as could be raised upon subscription—the defendant to circulate and collect the subscriptions—and he so remained for five years. Held, (1), that the contract of hire continued through the whole time, varied from the contract of the first year only as to the amount of compensation, and perhaps incidentally as to the time of payment; (2), that the amount which the society might, with reasonable effort and due diligence, have collected upon the subscriptions made, was the measure of the plaintiff's compensation under the contract, and could be recovered in an action on book as for a price agreed. Myers v. Baptist Society, 38 Vt. 614.

2. Contract of indemnity.

265. Indemnity proper. An action does not lie on a contract of indemnity, unless and until the plaintiff has sustained the loss or damage guaranteed against. Eureka Marble Co. v. Windsor Mfg. Co., 47 Vt. 430.

266. A condition simply to indemnify and save harmless from the payment of a debt, is not broken until the obligee has been compelled to pay, or, having become liable, has actually paid or been put to expense. St. Albans v. Curtis, 1 D. Chip. 164.

267. The allowance in the probate court of a claim against the estate of a surety, is such a damnification as entitles the surety's administrator to sue the principal upon his contract of indemnity. Pond v. Warner, 2 Vt. 532.

268. A, as surety for B, executed with him a note to C, and, after the note had become due, B gave A a mortgage conditioned that he would pay said note "so as wholly to indemnify and save A harmless from his liability on said note." Held, that the mortgage was not forfeited by the mere non-payment of the note by B, it being but a common contract of indemnity; but if the mortgage had been executed before the note fell due it would probably have been otherwise. Id.

269. The general proposition, that there can be no contribution nor indemnity between wrong doers, is subject to the exception, that where one party induces another to do an act which is not legally supportable, and yet is not clearly in itself a breach of law, the party so inducing shall be answerable to the other for the consequences. But this inducement must consist of an express undertaking to indemnify against the consequences of such act, or omission to act, or the circumstances attending the transaction, as between the parties, must be such that the law will therefrom imply an undertaking, or raise an obligation on the part of the one to indemnify the other. Pierpoint, C. J., in Spaulding v. Oakes, 42 Vt. 343.

270. Spaulding had been compelled to pay a judgment recovered against him and Oakes, for injury done by a vicious ram owned by them in common, but running in the pasture of Oakes and more immediately under his charge, as reported in Oakes v. Spaulding & Oakes, 40 Vt. 347. In an action by Spaulding against Oakes for indemnity;—Held, by a majority, that the grounds of recovery in that case were not such as to raise the obligation of indemnity. Id.

271. Contract to pay. The plaintiff having executed certain notes to a third person, the defendant agreed with the plaintiff in writing, for a full consideration received, to pay said notes. Held, that this was not a contract to indemnify, but to pay, and that the statute of limitations commenced to run from the maturity of the notes. Crofoot v. Moore, 4 Vt. 204.

272. The plaintiff, at the defendant's request, executed a receipt to an officer for property attached upon a writ of A v. B, upon the defendant's promise to indemnify and relieve him by paying the debt in that suit, within a few days. The defendant did not pay the debt, nor in any other way relieve the plaintiff, but the plaintiff stood chargeable upon the receipt, although he had paid nothing. Held, that this was more than a mere contract of indemnity, and was broken by the failure of the defendant to pay as agreed; that the plaintiff then had an immediate right of action, and could recover to the extent of his liability. Hubbard v. Billings, 35 Vt. 599.

273. Special case. The defendant, claiming to own a horse in the plaintiff's possession which the plaintiff had purchased of W, promised the plaintiff, that if he would deliver the horse to him, and would bring suit against W for having fraudulently sold the horse as his own, and should fail in such suit to recover damages, he, the defendant, would indemnify and make the plaintiff good for his damage, loss and expense. The plaintiff thereupon delivered the horse to the defendant, and brought such suit against W, but gave no notice thereof to the defendant, and failed in the suit. Held, (1), that the agreement was upon sufficient consideration; (2), that the record in the suit against W was evidence to prove the fact of bringing the suit and the failure to recover, and that this entitled the plaintiff to recover under the contract; (3), that, although that judgment might be treated as inter alios, and so not conclusive against the title of the defendant, yet, as there was no proof offered in this case that the title to the horse was in any one else than the plaintiff who had the possession, the value of the horse should be included in the plaintiff's damages. Lincoln v. Blanchard, 17 Vt. 464.

3. Agistment.

274. The contract of agistment implies the duty on the agister to restrain the animals within his inclosure by lawful fences, unless there is some special understanding which relieves him. If for want of such fences the animals escape and thereby are lost or suffer damage, he is liable therefor. Sargent v. Slack, 47 Vt. 674.

275. The plaintiff took of the defendant some cattle and sheep to pasture for the season, at a fixed price per week, but there was no express stipulation as to the manner of keeping, nor as to the care the plaintiff should take of them. Part of the sheep were wethers, and part ewes. Through the plaintiff's negligence and want of care in restraining his rams from going at large between Aug. 1 and Dec. 1, as required by statute, they got with the ewes, which, in consequence, had lambs out of season, and thereby the lambs were lost. In an action of book account to recover the agreed price for keeping the cattle and sheep;—Held, that this negligence of the plaintiff was a breach of the contract implied as to the exercise of proper care in the keeping of the property; that the contract was entire; and that the defendant could recoup the damage to the ewes against the plaintiff's entire claim. Phelps v. Parish, 39 Vt. 511.

4. Contracts in the alternative.

276. Where a contract is in the alternative, to do one of two things, the right of election is in the party speaking or promising. Mayer v. Drinell, 29 Vt. 298. Patchin v. Swift, 21 Vt. 292.

277. But if the contract be to do one of two things by a day certain, and the day elapse without election by the promisor, then the right of election passes to the promisee. Patchin v. Swift; and see Russell v. Ormsbee, 10 Vt. 274.

278. I bought a horse of O and delivered him a note against a third person in part payment, and agreed to give good security for the balance by a day named, or else return the horse, and the note should be the property of O. Having failed to procure the security, L returned the horse and demanded the note. O received the horse, but refused to surrender the note. Held, that the note became the property of O. Larabee v. Orit, 4 Vt. 45.

279. Assumpsit upon the following instrument: "In consideration of four hundred dollars received of A. Knight I promise to deliver to him, bearer, two hundred barrels of crude oil at the Connecticut River Oil Well in Bothwell, C. W., reserving the right to pay him twenty-five cents per barrel, on payment of the four hundred dollars above mentioned; said oil to be delivered any time within three months." It was the custom, known to Knight (the plaintiff), for the purchaser to furnish barrels for his oil at the well. Held, to be a note for two hundred barrels of oil to be delivered at any time within three months, and to be taken in barrels to be furnished by the plaintiff, unless the defendant should choose to pay four hundred and fifty dollars in money, in lieu of the oil;—that the plaintiff was not bound to furnish barrels, without proper notice that the defendants had elected to pay in oil; and that not having given such notice, nor paid the money within the time named, the defendants were liable for the value of the oil. Knight v. Petroleum Co., 44 Vt. 472.

280. Where the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff for a job of work when completed, or give his note therefor payable in a year, at his election, and he refused to give his note;—Held, that he became immediately liable upon such refusal, and the plaintiff recovered in the action of book account. Gilman v. Hall, 11 Vt. 510.

V. ACTION ON SIMPLE CONTRACT.

1. Parties.

281. Plaintiff. In the case of joint owners of property sold by one, the purchaser not knowing that others were interested, an action on such contract may be maintained, either by the one with whom the contract was actually made, or in the names of the parties really interested. Hilliker v. Loop, 5 Vt. 116.

282. A sued B upon a contract signed by B, of the following tenor: "Received of A $150 to be paid in obligations against some good man or men, to be on interest, for L C when he comes of age, on account of said A." B set up a release by L C after he became of age. Held, that the contract was with A to pay him, and that L C could not sue upon it, nor release it. Tuttle v. Catlin, 1 D. Chip. 366.

283. As respects simple contracts, the promise, to whomsoever made, inures and is deemed a promise to him who has the beneficial interest,—that is, the person from whom the consideration moves. Warden v. Burnham, 8 Vt. 390.

284. On a contract to take certain shares in the stock of the corporation and to pay the treasurer all assessments, &c.;—Held, that an action for the assessments could not be brought in the name of the treasurer, but only in that of the corporation. Whitelaw v. Cahoon, 1 D. Chip. 295.

285. Where the consideration moves from a person principally interested in a contract, and the contract is made with him, one collaterally interested therein cannot sue thereon in his own name. Crampton v. Ballard, 10 Vt. 251. 17 Vt. 251. 18 Vt. 589. 46 Vt. 369.

286. Where a promise is made to a person from whom the consideration moved, but to be performed to another and for another's benefit,—quare, whether the latter can, in any case, maintain an action thereon. Ib. 11 Vt. 80. 30 Vt. 284. 47 Vt. 345.

287. Where the defendant received property from A to convert into money, under a promise to A to pay it to the plaintiff, a creditor of A, and the defendant did convert the property into money;—Held, that the plaintiff might sue in his own name for the money. Phelps v. Conant, 30 Vt. 277.

288. In such case, after the money is realized, it becomes absolutely the money of the plaintiff in the defendant's hands. Then the law implies a promise directly from the defendant to the plaintiff. Redfield, C. J. Ib. 284.

289. But where the contract is special, or to the extent that it is special, it can be sued only in the name of the party with whom it is made, and from whom the consideration moves. Ib.

290. Under a declaration counting upon a promise made to the plaintiff's deceased husband, upon a consideration moving from him, that the defendant would pay to her, in case of her husband's decease, a certain sum;—Held, that the suit could not be maintained in her name; but, quare, whether upon a proper declaration this might not be done. Fugure v. Mutual Socy. of St. Joseph, 46 Vt. 362.

291. In assumpsit upon a policy of life insurance by the administrator of the insured, the declaration alleged the consideration as moving from the insured and the promise to pay to the wife and children of the insured, or their legal representative. On demurrer, held, that this was not an averment of a promise to the insured, to pay, &c., but a promise to the wife, and that the declaration showed a case upon which the plaintiff could not recover. Davenport v. Mutual Life Ass'n., 47 Vt. 528.

292. In assumpsit for lumber sold, which was the property of the plaintiff and W, the plaintiff's evidence was that he sold it in his own name and on his own account; while the defendant's was, that the plaintiff acted for himself and W in making the sale. Held, that the plaintiff's right depended upon the disputed fact, which was a question for the jury; and that the court erred in ruling that the action was rightly brought. Leahy v. Allen, 47 Vt. 463.

293. The legal interest in a contract is in the person from whom the consideration passed and to whom the promise was made; and he alone can sustain an action upon it, although it was made for the benefit of a third person. Hall v. Huntoon, 17 Vt. 244. Pangborn v. Saxton, 11 Vt. 18 Vt. 589.

294. A declaration counting upon a sale by the plaintiff to the defendant and a promise thereupon to the plaintiff, is not sustained by proof of a sale by a third person of property in which the plaintiff had no interest, and a promise thereupon to such third person for the benefit of the plaintiff. Hall v. Huntoon.

295. Though A takes an absolute conveyance from B of his farm, but under an agreement to support B, and this for the purpose of enabling B fraudulently to obtain a pension as a reduced soldier, and though A afterwards denies the agreement and allows B to become chargeable to the town for his support, yet this does not entitle the town to an action, either at law or in chancery. Milton v. Story, 11 Vt. 101.

296. A suit may always be brought, either in the name of the party with whom the contract was made, or in the name of the party legally interested,—where the defendant will not be thereby embarrassed in his defense—as in case of dormant partners, factors doing business in their own name, &c.—and it is of no importance, whether or not the the defendant understood the relations of the parties, unless he has suffered loss by being misled. Maynard v. Briggs, 26 Vt. 94. 35 Vt. 502. Lapham v. Green, 9 Vt. 407. Wait v. Johnson, 24 Vt. 112.

297. In all actions upon contracts, except sealed instruments, promissory notes and bills of exchange, the action may be brought in the name of the real party in interest and from whom the consideration moved. When, however, the action is so brought, and not in the name of the nominal party, the other party may interpose any defense, which would be available against the nominal party, which accrues before the real party is disclosed to him. Cummings v. Blaisdell, 43 Vt. 382. Smith v. Foster, 36 Vt. 705. Lapham v. Green.

298. Where, at the time a contract was made, it was understood by both plaintiff and defendant that the contract was between themselves alone;—Held, that the plaintiff could maintain an action thereon in his name alone, although other parties were equally interested with him in the contract. Hibbard v. Mills, 46 Vt. 243.

299. One who becomes a party to a contract only after its performance, and without consent of the opposite party, cannot join in an action upon it. Dennison v. Boylston, 48 Vt. 439.

300. Interests severed. The president and professors of a literary institution were entitled to all the tuition money received, which by agreement was to be divided among them in specified rates; and it was agreed that all the money collected should be deposited with one of their number as depository, or treasurer, without authority to invest or use, and without being subject to charges, and that the interest of the parties in the fund deposited should be distinct and several interests, and not joint. Held, that each member was entitled to his several share, and that the depository, after proper demand by one of the professors for his share, and refusal, was liable to him therefor in an action of book account. Jackman v. Partridge, 21 Vt. 558.

301. Three persons, appointed a committee by vote of a school district to repair the school house, distributed the job among themselves, each doing a part. Held, that each could recover against the district for the part done by him. Geer v. School Dist. in Richmond, 6 Vt. 76; and see Sawyer v. Meth. Ep. Soc'y. in Royalton, 18 Vt. 405. Rogers v. Danby Universalist Soc'y, 19 Vt. 187.

302. The defendant owed a simple contract debt to A and B jointly. All parties agreed that one-half should be paid to A and one-half to B. The defendant paid B his half. Held, that this worked a severance, so that A, in his own name, could recover for his half. Ambler v. Bradley, 6 Vt. 119. See Cummings v. Blaisdell, 43 Vt. 382.

303. So held, in like case, in an action on book, where the case stood upon the common agreement simply, without payment of the other share—it not being a matter of partnership. Parker v. Bryant, 40 Vt. 291.

304. The plaintiffs agreed to take jobs of work and work together, and each to hire, as near as possible, an equal amount of help, each to be paid for his own labor, and to divide the profits on the help hired, nothing being said about the division of losses. One of the plaintiffs engaged to do a job of work for the defendant, informing him that he and the other plaintiff were in partnership, or connected in business. The work was done by the plaintiffs and their hired help under their agreement, in reference to which the contract with the defendant was made. Held, that an action therefor was properly brought in the joint names of the plaintiffs. Sawyer v. Worthington, 28 Vt. 733.

305. Defendant. Services rendered or money paid for the joint benefit of two or more, at the request of either of them, may be recovered of them jointly. Davis v. Downer, 10 Vt. 529.

306. Held, that the plaintiff's suit was properly brought against the one party with whom he contracted and on whose credit he performed the services, although there were others who, to the plaintiff's knowledge, had an equal or greater interest in the undertaking, and who had furnished the plaintiff funds in carrying it on. Stannard v. Smith, 40 Vt. 513.

307. The real purchaser of goods for his own benefit is liable therefor, although he purchased them on the credit of another, with his consent, without disclosing the fact that he was himself the real party. Coverly v. Braynard, 28 Vt. 738.

308. In order to make one liable for services performed for another, he must thereunto expressly promise, or so conduct himself in making the employment, that the party rendering the service has a right to and does understand that he will be responsible therefor. Redfield v. Dana, 47 Vt. 15.

309. G. S. c. 30, s. 78, providing that in actions upon a contract, &c., against more than one defendant, judgment may be rendered against such as are found to be liable, &c., covers all cases of defendants in such actions, whether they are described and declared against as partners, or otherwise declared against on a joint contract; and a non-suit may be allowed as to such as are not liable, or a judgment in their favor on trial. Reynolds v. Field, 41 Vt. 225. See Nash v. Skinner, 12 Vt. 219. Hurlburt v. Hendy, 27 Vt. 245. Powers v. Thayer, 30 Vt. 361.

2. Action and defense, as dependent upon demand,—expiration of credit,—performance.

310. Demand. A mutual agreement between two, that the accounts of each may be paid by the work of the other, is valid and binding as to accounts thereafter accruing, and requires a demand of payment and refusal, or unreasonable neglect to perform the services as stipulated, in order to maintain an action. If such agreement included a past account, but the parties had acted upon it, the services of the other party may be first applied to satisfy that. Davis v. Petit, 27 Vt. 216.

311. Where a party stipulates to do a certain thing in a certain specific event which may become known to him, or with which he can make himself acquainted, he is not entitled to notice unless he stipulates for it; but when it is to do a thing in an event which lies within the peculiar knowledge of the opposite party, then notice ought to be given him before suit brought. Lamphere v. Cowen, 42 Vt. 175.

312. Where a specific thing is to be done on demand, such as the delivery of property or performance of a service, the liability does not become fixed immediately on demand, but only on the party's neglect, after reasonable time, to comply; and this question is always one of fact for the jury. [Applied to the case of an action upon an officer's receipt.] Jameson v. Ware, 6 Vt. 610.

313. Where a demand was necessary in order to maintain an action;—Held, that a demand made after the issuing of the writ, but before service, affording an opportunity to comply, was sufficient. Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474.

314. Money paid by mistake, or overpaid upon a certain claim, cannot be recovered back by suit without previous notice and demand of repayment, when the mistake was not the defendant's and he did not, in any way, induce it; and until then interest is not recoverable on such money. Stoddard v. Chapin, 15 Vt. 443. 29 Vt. 157.

315. Where money was illegally taken, the detention is unlawful and it may be recovered without previous demand. Henry v. Chester, 15 Vt. 460. Babcock v. Granville, 44 Vt. 325.

316. Where one has in any way wrongfully obtained the money of another by duress or fraud, no demand, before suit to recover it back, is necessary. Hinsdill v. White, 34 Vt. 558.

317. The plaintiff sold the defendant certain property at a price stipulated, for which the defendant agreed to pay a sleigh, at a price stipulated, represented to be then at one T's and to be taken there by the plaintiff—and an order on T for the balance. The defendant had no such sleigh, and this he knew. Held, that this was such a fraud as excused the plaintiff from making any demand of T for the sleigh or for payment of the order, and enabled the plaintiff to sue and recover the stipulated price of the property sold, without any demand. Harrington v. Wells, 12 Vt. 505.

318. Where the plaintiff came to the defendant, and demanded a settlement for his labor performed under an agreement that the defendant should board and clothe the plaintiff for his work, and the defendant drove him from the premises, threatening bodily injury;—Held, that this was such a denial of liability as excused the plaintiff from making a specific demand of such articles of clothing as he needed, and was entitled to. Spencer v. Storrs, 38 Vt. 156.

319. In an action upon an account, payable in goods out of the defendant's store;—Held, that no demand was necessary before suit, when the defendant had stopped trade, and where the omission to call for the goods, before that time, was not an unreasonable delay. Brooks v. Jewell, 14 Vt. 470.

320. In an action upon a contract whose validity had been established upon a bill to set it aside;—Held, that the defendant in that and this action could not defend on the ground of an attempted repudiation by the plaintiff, the defense of the former suit being a constant tender of the defendant's readiness to perform, and a waiver of demand, if demand were necessary. Sampson v. Warner, 48 Vt. 247.

321. Where the agreement is to give time of payment upon the debtor's giving a note with surety, and such note is not furnished, the creditor may sue at once on book, or in general assumpsit. A different rule is said to prevail where the debtor is only required to give his own note. Rice v. Andrews, 32 Vt. 691. Hale v. Jones, 48 Vt. 227.

322. Where the promise is to do a collateral thing on request, the request is parcel of the contract, and no right of action arises until a request be made. So, if no time be fixed in the contract, or by other agreement of the parties either expressed or implied, for the doing of the thing, a request is essential to the cause of action. Prentiss, J. in Boody v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. (U. S. C. C.), 24 Vt. 660.

323. In the case of a mere executory contract to sell and to buy on a certain day, and where each promise is the entire consideration for the other, neither party can maintain an action without averring and proving a readiness to perform on his part, at the time and place, or an excuse by the act of the other party. Perry v. Wheeler, 24 Vt. 286.

324. Credit. On the purchase of goods, each party understood that a credit of six months was given, and that the credit of a third party was pledged for the purchase. This last supposition turning out to be a mutual error;—Held, that the seller could not, on discovering the mistake, maintain an action for the price of the goods until the expiration of the six months. Thayer v. Ballou, 32 Vt. 234.

325. No action can be sustained upon a contract within the time stipulated for its performance, though the credit was fraudulently obtained. Fisher v. Brown, 1 Tyl. 387. 14 Vt. 9. 18 Vt. 235.

326. The plaintiff sold the defendant a quantity of marble to be used by him in the construction of a walk for the U. S. government, for which he was to pay when the work should be accepted and he should receive his pay from the U. S. Held, that the plaintiff's demand became payable, not when the defendant became entitled to his pay from the U. S. by acceptance of the work, but whenever thereafter by due diligence he might have received his pay from the U. S.; and delay of payment by the U. S. having been occasioned by the act of the defendant, held, that the credit stipulated with the plaintiff had expired, and that this action, brought before the defendant had received his pay of the U. S., was not premature. Vt. Marble Co. v. Mann, 36 Vt. 697.

327. Performance by plaintiff. Where the plaintiff was to keep the defendant's cattle at a certain barn and to feed them on the hay therein (which the defendant saw and examined before making the contract), and agreed to keep them as well as he could "considering the hay and the chance";—Held, that no abatement should be made from the price of keeping on account of deterioration of the cattle in the keeping, the auditor having found that the plaintiff "used ordinary care in taking care of and feeding them—feeding them as often and as much at a time as people in general feed their cattle." Eastman v. Patterson, 38 Vt. 146.

328. Where the plaintiff had contracted to build a road, in a particularly specified manner, to be paid for "on its completion and acceptance by the agents of the town of S," and he completed it according to his contract, but such agents had wrongfully refused to accept it;—Held, that he could recover for the work done. Smith v. Smith, 45 Vt. 433.

329. A party receding from negotiations, and refusing to be bound by them, cannot recover for the performance of acts which would have constituted a part performance of an entire contract which would have resulted from the negotiations, if perfected. Congdon v. Darcy, 46 Vt. 478.

330. Commissions. The plaintiff contracted with the defendants to negotiate for them a loan of $100,000, for a commission, and did secure an agreement for such loan with one H, on condition that what the plaintiff's brother was owing H should constitute part of the sum; but as this was expected to be cashed by the plaintiff to the defendants. Held, that this was a sufficient compliance with the contract on the plaintiff's part, to entitle him to an action for refusal by the defendants to carry out the contract. Durkee v. Vt. Central R. Co., 29 Vt. 127.

331. Reward. F was employed by the relatives of a murdered man to trace out the murderer and procure his conviction. F sent out messengers for this purpose and directed one of them to request S, a deputy sheriff, to watch for and arrest the murderer. The message reached S, not directly from the messenger, but through one L. The murderer was arrested by S and was convicted. Said relatives had offered a reward for the arrest and conviction of the murderer, but F did not know of the offer when he sent out his messengers, and S did not know of it when he made the arrest, or that F was acting in the matter. Held, that S was entitled to the reward, and not F. Russell v. Stewart, 44 Vt. 170.

332. Agreement not to sue. An agreement not to sue within a particular time, or never to sue one of several joint contractors, does not operate as a release. Even the party himself, with whom the agreement is so made, cannot use it as a defense to any action in which his name is necessarily used to recover judgment, in order to collect the debt of the other debtors. Spencer v. Williams, 2 Vt. 209. Pinney v. Bugbee, 13 Vt. 623.

333. Performance by defendant. The defendant, under a contract to complete a mill in a workmanlike manner, did the work imperfectly, but claimed to have performed his contract. The plaintiff afterwards put the mill in condition, and brought his action to recover the expense of such reparation. Held, to be no defense that the defendant, after he had broken his contract and it had ceased to be executory, offered to make such repairs at his own expense, but the plaintiff refused him. Clifford v. Richardson, 18 Vt. 620.

334. Where the plaintiff sold goods to the defendant which he agreed to pay for in a certain note which he held against a third person, and he afterwards refused to deliver the note;—Held, that he could not, in an action of book account afterwards brought, offer and claim an allowance for the note. Stevens v. Smith, 21 Vt. 90.

335. Where the defendant owed the plaintiff a debt payable in certain mechanic's work, but refused to do the work at a reasonable price, demanding more;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover the amount due, as cash. Woodman v. Stearns, 23 Vt. 655.

336. The defendant in 1850 made with the plaintiff the following written agreement: "Received of Ira Cameron 50 dollars, in part for 200 bushels of corn this day sold him, of which I have delivered 20 bushels, and the balance (180 bushels) is due him on demand at my mill, at 75 cents per bushel, to be paid for on delivery." Within some three months the plaintiff received and indorsed upon the contract 94 bushels more, and paid therefor according to the contract. Nothing further passed between the parties until 1855 (5 years), when the plaintiff demanded the residue of the 200 bushels, offering to pay the 75 cents per bushel therefor. The defendant refused to deliver the corn, the same being then worth $1.33 per bushel. In an action for the non-delivery, the county court construed the contract as requiring the plaintiff to call for the corn within a reasonable time, and, finding that he had not done so, gave judgment for the defendant. The supreme court held, that the defendant was not entitled to judgment on this ground, since the defendant had never requested the plaintiff to take the residue of the corn; that the case might have been properly left to the jury upon the question whether the plaintiff had not abandoned the contract. The court, however, affirmed the judgment, by giving to the contract this interpretation,—that the contract had reference to no specific 200 bushels of corn then existing or set apart, but only entitled the plaintiff, within the limits of 200 bushels, to take at his option, more or less, and that he had exercised his option, when he took the last parcel and paid for it, not to take any more, which was acquiesced in by the defendant; and that the contract had been fully performed on both sides, according to the practical construction which both parties gave to it. Cameron v. Wells, 30 Vt. 633.

337. Where the plaintiff, a sub-contractor of the defendant for the construction of a section of a railroad, was prevented from completing his contract by reason of the further construction of the road being enjoined in chancery, without the fault or procurement of the plaintiff;—Held, that the defendant was liable as for a breach of his contract, although such injunction was procured without his fault. Doolittle v. Nash, 48 Vt. 441.

3. Action general, or special.

338. No general action, much less the book action, will lie for the breach of a special contract remaining unexecuted; but only a special action upon the contract, in which the party may recover his damages. Smith v. Smith, 14 Vt. 440.

339. No action lies to recover for articles delivered or services rendered in performance of a special contract, while the contract remains open and not rescinded. Bailey v. Bailey, 16 Vt. 656.

VI. DAMAGES.—RECOURPMENT.

340. General rule. The law, as the rule of damages for breach of a contract, requires that the defendant make the plaintiff whole; that is, he shall place him in as good a situation as he would have been in by performance. Ferris v. Barlow, 2 Aik. 106. 5 Vt. 421.

341. In an action for services, the court instructed the jury that it was the duty of the plaintiff to make the sum in damages, which he was entitled to recover, reasonably certain; that if they found a difficulty in determining this, it would not preclude a recovery, but it was their duty to see that the uncertainty did not benefit the plaintiff—that this should operate against him, and in favor of the defendant. Held correct. Matlocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 113.

342. Instances. In an action for breach of an agreement to kiln-dry, grind and pack a quantity of corn, at a stipulated price, averring an unskillful performance, whereby the plaintiff had sustained damage, where the defendant made no proof of non-payment of the price, nor set up a counter claim, the court charged that the damages should be assessed without regard to the sum stipulated to be paid for the labor. Held correct. Foote v. Catlin, 6 Vt. 44.

343. If the maker of a note procures a person to purchase it and agrees to pay therefor a certain sum, but afterwards denies such agreement and refuses to pay as agreed, such person, as indorsee, may recover the full amount of the note, though he purchased it at a larger discount than the sum named. Raymond v. Williams, 7 Vt. 230.

344. If one agrees to pay a certain sum in specific property and fails to pay, he is liable for the full sum stipulated, though the property is worth much less,—because the parties have stipulated the damages. Harrington v. Wells, 12 Vt. 505.

345. The defendant received of the plaintiff a quantity of hay and took a bill of sale of the same, describing it as about 25 tons, being all the hay in certain barns and in a certain stack, at $4 per ton, carrying out the price at $100, with a receipt of payment appended. At the same time the defendant executed a receipt to the plaintiff for the hay, to be disposed of to the best advantage and accounted for. The defendant having appropriated the hay to his own use, claiming it as his own;—Held, in assumpsit for goods sold, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the actual quantity of the hay at its true value, and was not limited by the quantity and price named in the bill of sale. Crane v. Thayer, 18 Vt. 162.

346. In an action against a professed millwright for damages sustained by his not constructing a mill in a workmanlike manner, according to his contract;—Held, that the plaintiff, prevailing, was entitled to recover his necessary expenses of putting the mill in such condition, after the defendant claimed to have completed his contract; and also what the use of the mill would have been worth to the plaintiff, more than it was, between the dates when the defendant claimed to have completed his contract, and a reasonable time for the making of such reparations. Clifford v. Richardson, 18 Vt. 620.

347. Contribution. Where one of several joint contractors pays the whole debt, he may, in a suit at law for contribution, prove the insolvency of any of the joint contractors, and recover an aliquot part of the whole debt paid, having regard only to the number of solvent contractors. Mills v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 59.

348. Other instances. In an action against the assignor of a promissory note, signed by two, upon a warranty of its validity, where one of the signers was proved to have been incompetent to contract by reason of insanity;—Held, that in estimating the damages, the value of the note as against the other signer must be considered. Thrall v. Newell, 19 Vt. 202.

349. Where a bond was conditioned that the obligor should convey certain land to the obligee upon the performance of certain services by the obligee, and the obligee tendered the services, which the obligor wrongfully refused to accept, and refused to convey;—Held, in an action for the breach, that the value of the land was not the rule of damages, but that the plaintiff was entitled to recover only what he had lost by being prevented from completing the execution of his contract. Boardman v. Keeler, 21 Vt. 77. 33 Vt. 83. 36 Vt. 720.

350. The defendant contracted with the plaintiff to carry a barge load of peas from Canada to New York, but by reason of his want of care and diligence he got them no further than Burlington, where the barge got frozen in the ice, and could not be moved for that season. The defendant refusing to forward the peas by railroad, or to deliver the peas to the plaintiff except upon payment of freight, the plaintiff replevied them, and sent them to Boston for a market, which was a judicious disposition of them. In an action for breach of the contract to carry to New York;—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the difference between the net sum realized from the sale in Boston, and the net sum he would have realized from a sale in New York, as determined by the market price there, at the time when the peas would have arrived there, if the defendant had forwarded them according to his contract. Laurent v. Vaughn, 30 Vt. 90.

351. In an action for labor in the building of a railroad, under a contract for payment of 75 per cent cash, and, on the completion of the job, 25 per cent in the stock of the corporation at par, it appeared that the excess of cash payments made above the 75 per cent was more than the value of the stock payment of 25 per cent, at the time it became payable by the contract. Held, the contract being silent on this point, that the payment of such excess in cash was voluntary and only a waiver of the right to pay so much in stock; and that the plaintiff was entitled, on refusal to convey the stock, to recover the value, at the time when payable, of the balance of the 25 per cent of nominally par stock. Jones v. Chamberlain, 30 Vt. 196.

352. In an action for the non-delivery, according to the contract, of goods sold, where payment was not made in advance, the rule of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market value at the time and place of the promised delivery. Worthen v. Wilmot, 30 Vt. 555.

353. Quære, whether the rule is different where payment is wholly made in advance. Seemle, it is not different where the advance payment is but partial. Ib.

354. Held, that this rule is not varied by the payment of the full price in advance. Hill v. Smith, 32 Vt. 433.

355. The only general damages which the purchaser of chattels can recover for non-delivery, whether the price be paid or not, is the difference between the contract price and the market value at the stipulated time and place of delivery, together with the money paid, if any, on the contract. Copper Co. v. Copper Mining Co., 33 Vt. 92.

356. A party claiming special damages from breach of contract, must so conduct the business as to sustain the least damage practicable; and cannot recover for a loss occasioned by his own imprudence or negligence. Ib.

357. Special damages cannot be recovered for breach of contract, unless they are the natural and ordinary, and therefore the known and necessary result of the breach, or were fairly within the contemplation of the parties at the time of entering into the contract. Ib.

358. The defendant rented to a tenant a house situate on the line of a road, which the plaintiff had contracted with the defendant to build and complete by a day specified—the tenant, in his hiring, relying upon the road being completed as agreed. By reason of its not being so completed the defendant was obliged to discount to the tenant one-half the agreed rent. In an action to recover for the building of the road;—Held, that the damage thus claimed to have been sustained by the defendant was too conjectural and remote (as stated) to be regarded as damages naturally and necessarily resulting from the delay in completing the road, so as to be allowed by way of recoupment. Smith v. Smith, 45 Vt. 438.

359. But where the defendant was obliged, by reason of the road not being completed as agreed, to build a winter road instead for his necessary accommodation;—Held, that the expense of building such winter road was proper damages to be allowed in recoupment. Ib.

360. Where the defendants were bound by contract to repair a drain on premises leased by them to the plaintiff;—Held, that if, on request, they refused to repair, the plaintiff should have made the repairs, and the expense would be the measure of the damages; but where the defendants, after notice to repair the drain, promised from time to time to do so, but neglected, and so kept the plaintiff from doing it,—held, that the plaintiff could recover his entire damages for the breach, although exceeding the cost of the repairs. Keyes v. Slate Co., 34 Vt. 81.

361. Where the plaintiff was prevented by the defendant from completing a contract with him for the manufacture of certain machines;—Held, that in estimating the damages for a breach of the contract, the value to the plaintiff of the unfinished machines should be reckoned,—the property not having vested in the defendant. Allen v. Thrall, 36 Vt. 711. See Boardman v. Keeler, 21 Vt. 78.

362. The defendant contracted to purchase of the plaintiff a specified number of bushels of potatoes at a specified price per bushel, and afterwards ordered the plaintiff to stop purchasing, and declined to receive any more. In an action on the contract;—Held, that the defendant was not liable to pay for potatoes thereafter purchased by the plaintiff to fill the contract, nor for any loss thereon by freezing or rot; and was liable only for the difference between what it would have cost the plaintiff to procure the potatoes, and the contract price. Danforth v. Walker, 40 Vt. 257.

363. The plaintiff and defendant were interested, in different proportions, in a promissory note in the hands of the defendant, payable in money and well secured. The defendant, without consent of the plaintiff and without necessity, took a colt in part payment, which he kept on expense until it died. Held, that the plaintiff was not obliged to share this loss, but the defendant was liable for the plaintiff's full share of the note. Childs v. Boyd, 43 Vt. 582.

364. The plaintiff had purchased four undivided fifths of certain land, but failed to obtain the other fifth because the defendant purchased it in violation of his contract with the plaintiff not to do so; whereupon the plaintiff procured partition by the probate court. In an action on the contract;—Held, that the true rule of damages was what such one-fifth was worth more than what the plaintiff would have had to pay for the same, except for the defendant's interference and breach of contract; and that it was error to include the expenses of the partition. Morrison v. Darling, 47 Vt. 67.

365. In actions upon debts due in coin, the value in currency of the amount of the debts in coin, when due, is not the true rule of damages. Townsend v. Jennison, 44 Vt. 315. See Davis v. Field, 43 Vt. 221.

366. Entire damages. Under a contract between a turnpike company and a town, by which the company agreed to support a certain highway bridge of the town for twenty years, in consideration of $25 a year to be paid by the town, the company performed the contract for eight years, when it refused to proceed further. Held, that the rule of damages for such breach of the contract was the difference between what the town had agreed to pay, and the probable expense of performing the contract, and thus assess the entire damages for the remaining twelve years. Royalton v. R. & W. Turnpike Co., 14 Vt. 311.

367. The true criterion, whether, in an action upon a continuing contract, damages can be recovered for a non-performance of the whole contract, and so for damages not sustained when the action is brought and suit tried, is, whether there has been such a breach as authorizes the plaintiff to treat it as entirely putting an end to the contract—whether the breach is entire and total, or only partial and temporary—and this may be a question of fact for the jury. Remelee v. Hall, 31 Vt. 582.

368. Accruing damages. Where there has been a breach of the condition of a bond of indemnity before suit brought, so as to sustain an action, the damages are to be assessed down to the time of trial, although accrued after suit brought. Spear v. Stacy, 26 Vt. 61; and see Lowry v. Walker, 5 Vt. 181.

369. How affected by mode of declaring. If by the fault or neglect of the defendant it is rendered impossible to estimate the compensation by the stipulations of the contract, the plaintiff may recover upon a quantum meruit. But the mere fact that a breach of the contract by the defendant, or his fault or neglect, may embarrass the plaintiff to some extent in his proof, will not necessarily give the plaintiff the right to abandon the contract and recover independent of it. Myers v. Baptist Society, 38 Vt. 614.

370. Where a party to a special contract for labor, for which an entire sum was agreed to be paid, has performed a part according to its terms, and has been prevented from performing the residue by the act or default of the other party, he may sue either on the contract to recover damages for the breach of it, or in general assumpsit for the value of what he has done. Chamberlin v. Scott, 33 Vt. 80. Derby v. Johnson, 21 Vt. 18.

371. In such case, if he sue on the contract he must set it forth specially, and then his damages for what he has done under it must be regulated by the contract price, and he will recover such a proportion of the whole contract price, as the work he has done bears to the whole work to be done under the contract; and may also recover the profit he would have made by being allowed to complete the contract, and the damages he may have incurred in providing labor and means to perform the residue. Ib.

372. If, in such case, he choose to waive the contract and sue in general assumpsit for work and labor [or in book account], then the measure of damages will be a reasonable compensation for the work actually performed. He is not then limited to recover a pro rata share of the contract price. Ib. See Preble v. Bottom, 27 Vt. 249. 21 Vt. 18.

373. The plaintiff contracted to do a job of joiner's work for the defendant, and to complete the job by the 15th of August. The defendant agreed to pay therefor $100 by the 1st of July, and the balance on the completion of the job. The defendant neglected after demand to pay the $100 by the day named, and the plaintiff abandoned the work. In an action of book account;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover for the work done a pro rata compensation according to the contract price. Preble v. Bottom.

374. Where a contract for the sale and delivery of articles by a day named has been extended as to the time of delivery, and the purchaser (plaintiff) claims anything by reason of such enlargement of the time, (as larger damages for non-delivery, by increase of the market price during such enlarged time), his declaration must be framed to cover the contract as thus enlarged and altered. If only the original contract be counted upon, the damages must be assessed as under the original contract. Hill v. Smith, 32 Vt. 433. S. C., 34 Vt. 535.

375. It is perfectly well settled in this State, that where there is an entire contract for work to be performed upon certain terms and conditions upon the lands or buildings of the promisee, and the work is performed, but not strictly according to the special stipulations, the laborer may nevertheless recover upon a quantum meruit for the labor, and upon a quantum valebant for the materials furnished, according to the price stipulated in the special contract, deducting therefrom such damages as the other party may have sustained by failure to perform the work strictly according to the contract. Merrrow v. Huntoon, 25 Vt. 9. Joslyn v. Merrrow, 25 Vt. 185.

376. Recoupment. Recoupment—a quasi off-set of counter claims not liquidated. Londonderry v. Andover, 28 Vt. 416. For further instances, see Crosby v. School District, 35 Vt. 623. Corliss v. Putnam, 37 Vt. 119. Phelps v. Paris, 39 Vt. 511, and infra.

377. Where a party has not been guilty of a voluntary abandonment or wilful departure from his contract, has acted in good faith, intending to perform the contract according to its stipulations, but has failed in a strict compliance with its provisions, and where from the nature of the contract and of the labor performed, the parties cannot rescind and stand in statu quo, but one of them must derive some benefit from the labor or money of the other—in such case, the party failing to perform his contract strictly may recover of the other, as upon a quantum meruit, such a sum only as the contract, as performed, has been of real and actual benefit to the other, estimating such benefit by reference to the contract price of the whole work. Bragg v. Bradford, 33 Vt. 35. Dyer v. Jones, 8 Vt. 205. Gilman v. Hall, 11 Vt. 510. Blood v. Enos, 12 Vt. 625. Bracket v. Morse, 23 Vt. 554. Morrison v. Cummings, 26 Vt. 486. Hubbard v. Belden, 27 Vt. 645. Barker v. Railroad, 27 Vt. 780. Swift v. Harri-man, 30 Vt. 607. Kettle v. Harvey, 21 Vt. 301. Keyes v. Slate Co., 34 Vt. 88. Eddy v. Clement, 38 Vt. 486.

378. The method of estimating this benefit is, first, to deduct from the contract price such sum as will enable the other party to get the contract completed according to its terms;—or, where that is impossible or unreasonable, such a sum as will fully compensate him for the imperfection in the work and the insufficiency of the materials, so that he shall in this respect be made as good, pecuniarily, as if the contract had been strictly performed; and, second, to deduct also from the contract price whatever additional damages the breach of the contract may have occasioned him. The remainder will be the benefit which the party sought to be charged has derived from such part performance of the contract. Ib.

379. In an action for the price of lumber furnished under a special contract;—Held, that the defendant's damages for non-delivery at the times stipulated were the subject of recoupment in the action, and no plea in set-off was necessary—the same as in case of a failure to meet the contract as to quantity and quality. Eddy v. Clement, 38 Vt. 486; and see supra.

380. It is not the subject matter of the contract that determines the applicability of this mode of recovery, but the nature of the agreement and of the breach of it. Steele, J. Ib., 491.

381. Thus, under a special contract to chop trees upon another's land, where the work was not done strictly according to the contract, but the failure was not wanton, the party was held entitled to recover under a quantum meruit, what the work was worth to the party benefited. Dyer v. Jones, 8 Vt. 205.

382. So, where the contract was to build, on another's land, $60 worth of stone wall of a given height and thickness at a given price per rod, and some portion of the wall was not of the height stipulated. Gilman v. Hall, 11 Vt. 510.

383. So, where the contract was to pasture a given number of cattle in a particular pasture, giving them the entire range, and the party suffered the fences to become so poor that other cattle broke in and consumed the feed, so that a part of the depastured cattle had to be removed by the owner. Brackett v. Morse, 23 Vt. 554.

384. The same rule applied to a contract for the construction of lime kilns, imperfectly done. Morrison v. Cummings, 26 Vt. 486.

385. So, to a contract to run a saw mill for a year in a good workmanlike manner, the party being dismissed for imperfect work. Swift v. Harriman, 30 Vt. 607.

386. So, to a contract for the building of a bridge and highway. Kelly v. Bradford, 33 Vt. 85.

387. Also, to a contract for railroad construction. Merrow v. Huntoon, 25 Vt. 9.

388. The plaintiff agreed to furnish the defendant lumber necessary for the building of a mill, "as it should be wanted." He did furnish the whole amount of lumber, but not so fast as needed, and the completion of the mill was delayed thereby to the defendant's damage. But, it appearing from the auditor's report that the case was such as required notice to the plaintiff of the size and quantity of lumber wanted from time to time—Held, that in order to the allowance of such damage against the plaintiff's claim, it should be found affirmatively that the plaintiff neglected to furnish the lumber within a reasonable time after he was furnished with the necessary description of the lumber required. Field v. Black, 42 Vt. 517.

389. May defeat action. Where the plaintiff recommended himself as a competent workman and undertook to work as a master-builder, and through his neglect or unskillfulness his employer suffered loss to a greater amount than the sum due for services at the stipulated rate;—Held, that this defeated his action for services. Goslin v. Hodson, 24 Vt. 140.

390. The plaintiff took the defendant's sheep to pasture and to supply sufficient feed to fatten them for market. The sheep getting poor for want of sufficient pasturage, the defendant took them away before the end of the season, and the loss to the defendant was more than the contract price of keeping. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover on the contract, for he had not performed it; nor on a quantum meruit, for the loss to the defendant by the breach of the contract was more than the benefit from the keeping of the sheep. Corliss v. Putnam, 87 Vt. 119.

391. Acquiescence. The mere use of coal kilns erected upon the defendant's land, which were defectively constructed, but the defects not apparent and only to be discovered by use, or by tests, and part payment for the work, were held not to amount to an acquiescence, or waiver of a claim for deduction from the contract price, except to the extent of the payment. Morrison v. Cummings, 26 Vt. 486.

392. In an action to recover for labor performed under a contract special as to price per day, the defendant, to reduce the recovery, may prove that the plaintiff was unfaithful and indolent, and did not earn the wages stipulated, unless the defendant has acquiesced in the manner of performing the work. To the extent that the defendant, in such case, had paid for the labor, held, that he was bound, and could not recover it back. Morris v. Redfield, 23 Vt. 295.

393. C had contracted to work for the defendant for an entire term, and while so at work gave the plaintiff a written order, which the defendant accepted, as follows: "I accept this order, so far as I am owing said C, or shall be owing him the first of October next." Soon after, C abandoned his contract and absconded, whereby the defendant sustained more damage than the labor of C was worth. Held, that the acceptance by its terms bound the defendant to pay to the extent that he owed C at the date of the acceptance, although C could not have recovered under his contract. Bellows v. Bingham, 28 Vt. 243.

394. Where the plaintiff's claim results from an attempt on his part to perform a special contract, the defendant, by accepting what is done under it from time to time, is not precluded from showing, in defense, that he has received less than enough to compensate him for the damages sustained by the plaintiff's failure to perform the special contract. Myrick v. Slason, 19 Vt. 121. Allen v. Hooker, 25 Vt. 187. Smith v. Foster, 36 Vt. 705. Andrews v. Eastman, 41 Vt. 184.

395. The plaintiff agreed, for a gross price, to furnish the defendant with wood for her fires for one year, such wood to be good dry wood, and not wood from last-blocks—which was green wood and not fit for burning. The plaintiff furnished wood according to the contract through the winter, but in the summer commenced furnishing such last-block wood, which the defendant used until the fall at an inconvenience, and finally, the plaintiff not furnishing any other kind of wood, the defendant supplied herself elsewhere. The plaintiff did not ask her if she would accept the last-wood upon the contract, nor did she refuse to accept it, nor make any complaint that the plaintiff was not furnishing such wood as he had contracted to furnish. Held, that as the plaintiff had stipulated both as to the kind of wood he should furnish and as to the kind he should not furnish, these facts did not constitute such an acceptance of the wood upon the contract as entitled the plaintiff to recover the contract price for good dry wood; and that he was entitled to compensation only to the extent of the benefit actually received by the defendant; and that the defendant had the right to have deducted from the contract price the damages sustained by the non-performance of the entire contract by the plaintiff. Andrews v. Eastman, 41 Vt. 184.

396. The plaintiff contracted with the defendant, under seal, to build a road in the town of S, and complete it by a specified time. He failed to complete it by the time specified. The defendant did not agree to enlarge the time of performance, but suffered the plaintiff to proceed with the work after the expiration of such time; urged him to under-let a part, which the plaintiff might have done; remonstrated against his delays, and notified him that he should claim damages therefor; was present on different occasions when the selectmen of S accepted portions of the road which were built after the expiration of such time, and made no objections thereto. In an action of general assumpsit for work done;—Held, that the defendant had thereby waived his objection to the plaintiff's right of recovery, at all, because he did not complete the whole road by the time specified, but that this did not bar the defendant of his right to insist on a deduction from the contract on account of damage by delay. Smith v. Smith, 45 Vt. 433.

397. Independent stipulation. Semble, that in assumpsit the defendant cannot, under the general issue, show in reduction of damages the breach by the plaintiff of stipulations independent of those on which the plaintiff sues, although contained in the same instrument. Keyes v. Western Vt. Slate Co., 84 Vt. 81.

398. Warranty. In an action for goods sold, or services performed at an agreed price, where there is a warranty accompanying and part of the contract, a breach of such warranty may be given in evidence under the general issue, or in an action on book for the price, in reduction of the damages. Allen v. Hooker, 25 187. Keyes v. Western Vt., Slate Co. Walker v. Hoisington, 43 Vt. 608.

399. An offer to perform after a breach of the contract is unavailing to cure the breach. Clifford v. Richardson, 18 Vt. 620. Stevens v. Smith, 21 Vt. 90. Winn v. Southgate, 17 Vt. 355. Suttons v. Tyrell, 12 Vt. 79.

400. Promise of marriage. In assessing damages for breach of promise of marriage, it is not a legitimate subject for the jury to consider, that the plaintiff might have been worse off by her marriage, by reason of the defendant's want of affection for her. Piper v. Kingsbury, 48 Vt. 480.

CORPORATION.

I. CORPORATE EXISTENCE, AND PROOF THEREOF.

II. STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS.

III. MEETINGS AND RECORDS.

IV. OFFICERS AND AGENTS.

V. CORPORATE POWERS.

VI. CORPORATE LIABILITIES.

VII. REMEDIES FOR AND AGAINST CORPORATION.

VIII. FORFEITURE AND DISSOLUTION.

I. CORPORATE EXISTENCE, AND PROOF THEREOF.

1. Public grant. In case of a public grant emanating from the same power that can create a corporation, the very grant or charter creates and gives the competency to take,—and, as a corporation, if necessary to that end. Lord v. Bigelow, 8 Vt. 445.

2. In esse from date of charter. A corporation may be regarded as in esse from the date of its charter and before any subscriptions to its stock, for the purpose of contracting and being contracted with in matters relating to its organization, where certain persons named and their successors who shall become subscribers are incorporated, or where only such as shall become subscribers are incorporated, and such subscriptions are afterwards made, although, by the charter, such subscriptions are required in order to an organization of the corporation. Hall v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co., 28 Vt. 401. Vt. Central R. Co. v. Clages, 21 Vt. 30.

3. A corporation may have such an existence by force of the act of the Legislature enacting it,—as where the act incorporates certain persons by name, their associates and successors,—as to be enabled to take a grant of land, vesting in it the title, before it has such an organization as to enable it to enter upon the transaction of its general business. Vt. Mining Co. v. Windham Co. Bank, 44 Vt. 489.

4. De facto. Where a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation is made directly to the corporation after it is organized, although informally, and while it exists as a corporation de facto, and is acting in its corporate capacity and under its corporate name, the subscriber cannot, in a suit upon such subscription, deny the legal organization of the corporation. Montpelier, &c., R. Co. v. Langdon, 46 Vt. 284.

5. Proof of. The certificate of commissioners under an act creating a railroad corporation, certifying, as required by the act, the amount of stock subscriptions, &c., was held, in an action by the corporation, conclusive as to the facts certified, so far at least as concerned the legal organization of the corporation. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Bailey, 24 Vt. 465.

6. In a suit by a corporation against a stranger, it is sufficient proof of the plaintiff's corporate existence, to show a legal origin by their charter, and an existence de facto by their acts. The production of their records is not necessary. Searsburgh Turnpike Co. v. Cutler, 6 Vt. 315. 11 Vt. 306. 28 Vt. 425.

7. An act passed in 1832 incorporated, as a bank, such persons as should become subscribers to its capital stock, and provided that the corporation "should take no benefit by the act, and that the same should be wholly void, unless the bank should commence and be in operation within one year after the passage of the same." In an action brought by the bank in 1838 upon a note given to it in 1837, the defendant pleaded nul tiel corporation, and issue was joined. Held, that the production of the charter, and proof that the plaintiffs were doing business as a bank under the charter, and were exercising corporate powers, was at least prima facie evidence that the requirements of the charter had been complied with. Bank of Manchester v. Allen, 11 Vt. 302 (contra, Wood v. Jefferson Co. Bank, 9 Cowen R., 194).

8. Where the act incorporating a bank required notice of the organization to be given by a certain day, and the bank was afterwards found in operation under the act;—Held, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the bank must be presumed to have been organized and competent to act as a corporate body as early as the time prescribed. Bank of U. S. v. Lyman (U. S. C. C.), 20 Vt. 686.

9. Pleading. In a suit by a corporation standing upon the general issue, the plaintiff is not required to make proof of its corporate existence. Such defense must be made by plea in abatement, or in bar. Boston Type Foundry v. Spooner, 5 Vt. 93. Lord v. Bigelow, 8 Vt. 445. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Wires, 28 Vt. 98.

10. Estoppel. An execution debtor is estopped from denying, on habeas corpus, the legal existence and corporate capacity of the plaintiff—a corporation—in whose name the judgment against him was recovered. Sargeant, ex parte, 17 Vt. 425.

II. STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS.

11. Subscription and assessments. Where one subscribed to stock in a corporation in the name of others without authority, himself making the prescribed payment, and afterwards assumed such shares, and the stock was set to him and the advance payments put to his credit, he was held to occupy the position of an original subscriber. State ex rel. Page v. Smith, 48 Vt. 266.

12. The charter of a railroad company required that 10,000 shares of stock should be subscribed for, before the making of any assessment. That number was subscribed for, but the subscriptions had a condition that interest should be allowed and paid by the company on all sums assessed and paid from the time of payment until the railroad should be put in operation. In an action for assessments;—Held, that this provision was not an agreement to reduce or pay back a part of the capital stock; that no time being fixed for the payment of such interest, it might be paid out of earnings after the road went into operation; and that the subscription was not avoided thereby. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536.

13. The issuing of preferred stock of a railroad corporation with guaranteed interest, is only a mode of raising money by pledging the original capital, and will not avoid a subscription to the original stock. Id.

14. The charter of a railroad company provided that the directors might require payment of the subscriptions to the capital stock, at such times and in such proportions as they should deem best. One condition of the subscription was, that no assessment should exceed ten dollars on a share. By one single vote of the directors sixteen assessments of five dollars each were laid, payable at different times. Held, that this was within the charter and the terms of the subscription. Id.

15. After the defendant's subscription to the capital stock of a railroad corporation and after the organization of the corporation, an act of the Legislature, accepted by the corporation but without the defendant's consent, authorized an extension of the road beyond the original charter limits. Upon the application of another stockholder, the corporation had been enjoined in chancery from proceeding under the new act, and nothing was done under it thereafter.—Held, that the obligation of the defendant's subscription was not affected thereby. Ib.

16. Remedy for assessments. The charter of a railroad corporation authorized the directors to require the payment of assessments upon the subscriptions to the capital stock, "under the penalty of forfeiture of all previous payments thereon," and there was no other legislation upon the subject. Sundry assessments having been laid, some of which had been paid and some not, the directors, Aug. 15, voted that all stock on which the assessments shall remain unpaid on the 20th Sept. next "shall be and hereby is forfeited to the use of this corporation;" and the treasurer was directed to give immediate notice of the vote to all delinquents; and that all stock forfeited, by virtue of the foregoing resolution, should be sold. Held, (1), that the vote was a final declaration of forfeiture, with notice when the right to redeem would be cut off; (2), that the declaration of forfeiture was reasonable as to time; (3), that no sale was necessary in order to make the forfeiture complete; (4), that the company could not declare the stock forfeited, and after that sue the stockholder for past assessments; (5), that the remedy by forfeiture was cumulative, and might be held in reserve until after the remedy by suit had been exhausted; (6), that it was essential to a forfeiture that reasonable actual notice in advance should be given. Ib.

17. Assumpsit lies in favor of a corporation to recover legal assessments upon stock subscriptions, where no other remedy is provided by statute, the charter or by-laws, although the subscription contains no express promise to pay. Essex Bridge Co. v. Tuttle, 2 Vt. 393. 24 Vt. 473.

18. But where the charter provides a remedy, as a forfeiture of the stock for non-payment, and there is no express promise to pay, that is the only remedy. Ib. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Bailey, 24 Vt. 465.

19. But where the charter provides other remedies than by action, and there is an express promise to pay assessments, such remedies are not exclusive, and an action of assumpsit lies upon such promise. Ib.

20. Before a suit can be maintained for assessments upon a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation, actual notice, or notice pursuant to the charter or by-laws, must be given. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. v. Thrall, 85 Vt. 536. Essex Bridge Co. v. Tuttle, 2 Vt. 398.

21. Certain persons, including the defendant, associated and formed a joint stock company, and, by their articles, agreed to pay assessments on their shares, and the articles, provided for obtaining an act of incorporation and transferring the property of the association to the corporation. An act of incorporation was obtained, not incorporating those who had signed the articles nor adopting the articles but creating a new company, without mentioning any association already formed. This act was accepted at a meeting of the association, the corporation organized, and the property of the association transferred to the corporation, but the defendant took no part in such meeting, or acceptance of the charter. Held, that an action did not lie against the defendant to recover for assessments laid either before or after the organization of the corporation. Wallingford Mfg. Co. v. Fox, 12 Vt. 304.

22. The act incorporating the Vt. Central R. Co. made certain persons commissioners for receiving subscriptions to the capital stock, and provided that "every person at the time of subscribing shall pay to the commissioners five dollars on each share for which he may subscribe, and each subscriber shall be a member of said company;" and that when one thousand shares should be subscribed, the commissioners might call a meeting of the stockholders to elect directors, and should deliver to the directors, when elected, the books of subscription and the sums of money deposited on all the shares subscribed. The defendant, after certain other shares, but less than one thousand, had been subscribed for, subscribed for fifty shares, and, instead of the $5 per share in money, gave the commissioners his promissory note for $250, payable to "The commissioners of the Vermont Central Railroad Company," on demand for value received. The commissioners accepted the note and delivered it to the corporation upon its organization. In an action upon the note in the name of the corporation;—Held, (1), that the note was upon good consideration, for that by its acceptance by the corporation the defendant became entitled to the rights and privileges of a stockholder; (2), that the corporation came in esse before its organization, as subscriptions were made, and each subscriber upon subscribing became a corporator. (28 Vt. 407.); (3), that the action lay in the name of the corporation. Vt. Central R. Co. v. Clages, 21 Vt. 80. 24 Vt. 33.

23. Individual liability. A stockholder made liable for the debts of a corporation, cannot avoid such liability by a transfer of his stock, made for that purpose. Dauchy v. Brown, 24 Vt. 197.

24. An act of Nov. 7, 1814, incorporating the Pawlet Manufacturing Company, provided: "That the persons and property of said corporation shall be holden to pay their debts, and when any execution shall issue against said corporation, the same may be levied on the persons or property of any individual thereof." Held, that the act created the liability of the stockholder, and the remedy to enforce it was only such as the act gave, viz., by first obtaining judgment against the corporation, the party primarily liable. Ib.

25. The charter of a corporation prohibited the contracting of debts exceeding three-fourths the amount of its capital paid in; and provided "if such indebtedness shall exceed the amount aforesaid, the directors and stockholders shall be personally holden to the creditors of said company." Held, that this provision applied to those directors and stockholders, and those only, who were such when this provision was violated. Held, also—no special remedy being provided in the charter—that such directors and stockholders were jointly liable in a common law action. Windham Prov. Inst. v. Sprague, 43 Vt. 502.

26. To prevent a failure of justice, chancery may compel the individual members of an incorporated society, in a proper case, to pay the debts of the society.—It was so done in the case of a society incorporated under the statute for the support of the gospel, where they permitted the fund to be wasted which was chargeable with the support of the minister, and there was no property of the corporation from which his judgment at law could be collected. Bigelow v. Congregational Society, 11 Vt. 288. S. C., 15 Vt. 370.

27. Dictum. If the officers of an insolvent corporation should neglect to call in subscriptions from solvent stockholders, the court of chancery—such stockholders being parties to the bill—would decree payment to a judgment creditor of the corporation, to at least the extent of such collectable unpaid subscriptions. Bassett v. St. Albans Hotel Co., 47 Vt. 313.

28. Undivided earnings. A sale or gift of stock in a corporation conveys all undivided earnings and right to future dividends, whether earned before or not. King v. Follett, 3 Vt. 385.

29. A corporation dealing in its own stock. Held, that a bank may take by purchase the stock of a stockholder. Farmers' & Mechs.' Bank v. Champlain Tr. Co., 18 Vt. 131.

30. Whether the purchase by a corporation of its own capital stock operates as a merger, depends upon the intent of the parties, and especially of the corporation, and its option. To produce that result, it seems, some manifestation of such intent should be proved. While the corporation so owns its own stock, the right of voting upon it is suspended. State ex rel. Page v. Smith, 48 Vt. 206.

31. If a sale of its stock by a corporation is otherwise valid, it is not vitiated by the fact that the motive of the directors joining in the sale, and of the purchaser, was to enable the purchaser to vote for such directors at an approaching election; and the purchaser may vote upon it notwithstanding. Ib.

32. Where new stock in a corporation is issued that is to share in profits with existing stock, the share owners have the right to take and share, proportionately, in the new stock. But this does not apply to the sale by the corporation of original stock, bought in by the corporation and held as assets, where its identity has been preserved, and it is sold for the payment of liabilities, or for general benefit. Ib.

33. Acquiescence in the sale of the stock of a corporation by its directors, where the proceeds went to the use of the corporation, was held to follow, as to the stockholders, from want of seasonable and proper proceedings to set the sale aside. Ib.

34. Treasurer liable to stockholder. The plaintiff was the owner of certain shares in a corporation on which a dividend had been declared, and the money was in the hands of the treasurer to be paid out. The treasurer refused to pay on demand, claiming that he owned the shares. Held, that he was personally liable therefor to the plaintiff in assumpsit for money had and received. Williams v. Fullerton, 20 Vt. 346.

35. Stockholders acquiring preference. It is not a constructive fraud, for the stockholders of a corporation to avail themselves of their superior advantages to obtain security for debts of the corporation due to themselves, to the exclusion of other creditors; and they will not be postponed for this cause merely. Whitwell v. Warner, 20 Vt. 425.

36. Transfer by certificate. The transfer of a certificate of stock in a corporation, with an assignment indorsed of the stock thereby represented, and a power to the transferee to effect a transfer of the stock on the books of the corporation, is a valid transfer of the stock, as between the parties, and vests the title in the transferee; and the tender of such certificate, assignment, and power, answers a contract to "furnish" such stock. Noyes v. Spaulding, 27 Vt. 420.

37. Contract to "furnish." The plaintiff sold the defendant certain shares of railroad stock, and the defendant agreed at a future day to "furnish" the plaintiff the same number of shares of the stock of the same corporation. Held, that the contract did not require the return of the same identical shares. Ib.

38. Sale on execution. The stock of a railroad company was sold on execution against the corporation, and bid in by A, and the execution thereby satisfied in part. Held, that under G. S. c. 86, s. 10, the same stock could be re-sold upon an alias execution upon the same judgment. Chandler v. Henry, 30 Vt. 330.

III. MEETINGS AND RECORDS.

39. Pledgee. The pledgee of stock in a private corporation is not, for purpose of meetings of stockholders, to be regarded as the owner of the stock. McDaniels v. Flower Brook Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274.

40. Notice of meeting and vote. A corporation, and every member thereof, is bound by a vote of the majority present at a meeting warned agreeably to the laws of the corporation, and not otherwise. If no provision is made for such warning, every member must have personal notice. Stevens v. Eden Society, 12 Vt. 688.

41. One article in the warning of a fire district meeting was, "to see if the district will vote to purchase a fire engine, hooks, and ladders, and buckets, or any portion thereof for protection against fire, and to raise money to defray the expense of the same, or for any other purpose." The meeting called voted, among other things, "to choose an agent to purchase whatever of fire apparatus the district may vote to buy," and chose an agent. Held, that the warning was sufficient to support the vote, and the appointment of the agent. Hunneman v. Fire District, 37 Vt. 40.

42. Adjourned meeting. All corporations, municipal or private, may transact any business at an adjourned meeting, which they could have done at the original meeting. This is but a continuation of the same meeting. Warner v. Mower, 11 Vt. 385. Schoff v. Bloomfield, 8 Vt. 472.

43. Where only a minority of the directors of a corporation assemble at a called meeting, they cannot lawfully adjourn the meeting to a distant place,—in this case fifty miles. State ex rel. Page v. Smith, 48 Vt. 266.

44. Special and stated meetings. Every member of a corporation is entitled to notice of special meetings, unless the by-laws excuse it. But where the time and place and object of the meeting are each fixed by corporate statute, or where it is stated and general, as the annual meeting, no notice is required. Warner v. Mower, 11 Vt. 385.

45. Annual meeting. At the annual meeting, fixed by the by-laws of a corporation, any and all business pertaining to the interest and powers of the corporation may, without previous notice thereof, be transacted, unless restricted by the by-laws;—as the making of an assignment of its property for the benefit of its creditors. Id.

46. Place of meeting. Where the by-laws of a corporation required the meetings to be held at the counting room of the corporation, and from the record it appeared that the meeting in question was held at the dwelling house of the general agent and clerk, without stating that this was the counting room of the corporation, and there was no evidence about it;—Held, that it should be presumed that this was their counting room for the time being—the presumption being in favor of the regularity of the proceedings. McDaniels v. Flower Brook Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274.

47. Record and proof. Where a corporation was required to keep records;—Held, that its meetings and doings could not be proved by parol, although no records were kept. Stevens v. Eden Society, 12 Vt. 688.

48. A vote required to be recorded—as of a village or town meeting—may be proved by parol if not recorded, or if the record is lost or destroyed; but if recorded, it cannot be added to or varied by parol. Hutchinson v. Pratt, 11 Vt. 402. Sluck v. Norwich, 32 Vt. 818.

49. In an action against a fire district (a corporation), the defendant offered to prove by parol, as against the record produced, that the meeting in question voted to adjourn "without day," and that thereupon the voters dispersed and afterwards a few re-assembled and transacted the business recorded. Held, that the evidence was not admissible, because this would be to add to and alter the record; and because (in this case) it was immaterial. Hunneman v. Fire District, 37 Vt. 40.

IV. OFFICERS AND AGENTS.

50. Directors—Assembly. The directors of a corporation, in the absence of restriction in the charter or by-laws, have all the authority of the corporation itself in the conduct of its ordinary business. It is not important that authority to its agents to contract in its behalf, either under seal or otherwise, should be conferred at an assembly of the directors, unless that is the usual mode of their doing such acts. If they adopt the practice of giving a separate assent to the execution of contracts by their agents, assent so given is of the same force as if done at a regular meeting of the board. Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland & Washington R. Co., 30 Vt. 159; and see Stark Bank v. U. S. Pottery Co., 34 Vt. 144. State ex rel. Page v. Smith, 48 Vt. 266.

51. Where the statute was, "that the government and direction of the affairs of every such corporation shall be vested in a board of not less than five * * * and a majority of the directors shall form a board, and shall be competent to transact the business of the company";—Held, that such majority when assembled, though without notice to the others, possess all the powers of the entire board,—as, in this case, to authorize a sale of the stock of the corporation. State ex rel Page v. Smith.

52. Corporations are bound by the acts of servants and agents in their employment, and within their ordinary line of duty, without any formal vote conferring such authority; and the action of directors, though acting separately, if in the usual sphere of directors, binds the corporation. Foot v. Rut. & W. R. Co., 32 Vt. 633.

53. The directors of a business corporation, having by the by-laws authority to appoint a treasurer, may do so without any formal meeting; and, in the absence of any prohibition in the charter or by-laws, may agree with him as to his compensation. Waite v. Mining Co., 37 Vt. 608. S. C., 36 Vt. 18.

54. Compensation. As a general rule, directors of corporations are not entitled to compensation for their personal services as such, unless rendered under some express contract, or vote of the corporation to that effect. Hall v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co., 28 Vt. 401.

55. Subordinate agent. The agent of a corporation, performing the daily routine of its business, but under the supervision and control of a board of directors, has no authority, as agent, to create a lien upon the entire property of the corporation to secure advances to the corporation. Whitwell v. Warner, 20 Vt. 425.

56. Authority to give notes. It is not within the ordinary powers of the treasurer of a corporation, acting as the financial agent, to give the note of the corporation for the debt of a third person; nor within the ordinary powers of the directors, unless there is an urgent necessity to do so to subserve the interests of the corporation, although there may be a sufficient consideration, technically, to sustain the notes. In an action on such note;—Held, that the question of authority was one of fact for the jury, and, where some of the assenting directors were interested in the assumption of the debt by the corporation, that it was a question for the jury whether they acted in good faith. Stark Bank v. U. S. Pottery Co., 34 Vt. 144.

57. — to indorse notes. Where a corporation, or joint stock company, intrusts their treasurer to take notes, his indorsement of them will bind the company; and this authority is implied from his being treasurer and being intrusted with the securities, and that they are made payable to the treasurer, or to him as treasurer. Perkins v. Bradley, 24 Vt. 66.

58. Form of indorsement. The indorsement of a promissory note made payable to a corporation was signed S B, "agent." Held, that this was sufficient, in form, as an indorsement by the corporation. Lyman v. Sherwood, 20 Vt. 42; citing Proctor v. Webber, 1 D. Chip. 371.

59. Authority to assign. It seems, that an officer of a corporation who is intrusted with the collection of its debts, may bind the corporation by an assignment of its dues, without recourse, upon receiving the amount. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Wires, 28 Vt. 93.

60. — to make affidavit. Under the statute requiring the affidavit of the plaintiff to be filed, stating, &c., in order to warrant process against the body of a debtor;—Held, that in case of process in favor of a corporation, the affidavit of the head of the corporation—as, the president of a bank—was sufficient. Sargeant ex parte, 17 Vt. 435.

61. — to receive notice. Notice to the president of a bank, or to the cashier, by a stockholder, that the stock standing in his name he holds as trustee of another, is notice to the bank. Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410.

62. — to make admission. The admissions of a member of a corporation established for a public purpose and not for private profit, where there is no joint interest, but a mere community of interest, at most, do not bind the corporation—as, to take a debt out of the statute of limitations. Lyman v. Norwich University, 28 Vt. 560.

63. — to contract between themselves. As to the authority of agents to pledge to each other, individually, the responsibility of the corporation—see Geer v. School District, 6 Vt. 76. Sawyer v. Meth. Ep. Soc., 18 Vt. 405. Rogers v. Danby Universalist Soc., 19 Vt. 187.

64. Interests adverse. The allowance of an account against a corporation by a committee appointed under the by-laws to audit it, but interested to make the allowance, and the acceptance of it by a vote of the directors which requires the votes of the same committee, as directors, to carry the vote of acceptance, are wholly inoperative to bind the corporation. If all the proceedings had been regular, they would not be conclusive, but might be impeached by showing misconduct, fraud, or mistake. Waite v. Mining Co, 36 Vt. 18. S. C., 37 Vt. 608.

V. CORPORATE POWERS.

65. Power to take grant of lands. A corporation has capacity to take a grant of lands in fee, unless in a case where it purchases and undertakes to hold real property for purposes wholly outside and foreign to the object of its creation, or unless restricted by its charter or by statute. Prout. J., in Page v. Heineberg, 40 Vt. 85.

66. — of foreign corporation. The plaintiffs were a corporation, created such by a New Hampshire charter giving them the right to construct and maintain a bridge across Connecticut River, and to take tolls, and they had constructed and were maintaining the bridge, taking tolls of passengers. One Jarvis, owning the lands on the Vermont side up and down the river from the bridge, conveyed to them "the right to control all passage over said land for the purpose of avoiding paying toll to said bridge proprietors, and the right to obstruct any travel over said land for said purpose, with full power to said proprietors to decide in the premises," &c. Held, that such a right and interest are the subject of grant and conveyance by deed, as an interest in land, which the plaintiffs, though incorporated in another State, could take. Prop's. of Claremont Bridge Co. v. Royce, 42 Vt. 730.

67. The plaintiffs put up bar-ways upon said land, to prevent passage across the river elsewhere than by said bridge. The defendant, undertaking to cross said lands in order to avoid the toll, was forbidden by the plaintiffs, but he crossed nevertheless, tearing down the bars. In an action on the case for passing over the land to avoid paying toll, &c.; Held, that the plaintiffs could recover. Ib.

68. — without words of perpetuity. A legislative grant, or a deed, of lands to an aggregate corporation having perpetual succession, requires no words of perpetuity, and is as absolute, and of the same effect, as a grant to a man and his heirs and assigns. Grammar School v. Burt, 11 Vt. 632. Cong. Soc. of Halifax v. Stark, 34 Vt. 243.

69. Power to add other business. Where a corporation is created for manufacturing purposes—as for manufacturing cotton or wool—there is no impropriety in connecting with its ordinary business the business of a retail store, as a convenience or necessity. Dauchy v. Brown, 24 Vt. 197.

70. Municipal corporation—Legislative control. So far as a municipal corporation is endowed by law with the capacity of contracting, and of acquiring, holding and disposing of property, it stands on the same ground of exemption from legislative control and interference as a private corporation. Atkins v. Randolph, 31 Vt. 226. Poultney v. Wells, 1 Aik. 180. Montpelier v. E. Montpelier, 29 Vt. 19.

71. Newbury Seminary. Held, that the trustees of Newbury Seminary, a corporation located at Newbury, had no authority to sell and dispose of the property of that institution to the Vermont Conference Seminary, a corporation located at Montpelier. Stevens v. Wilard, 43 Vt. 692. Wilson, J., dissenting.

72. University of Vermont. The Act of Nov. 9, 1865 (Sess. Laws 1865, No. 83), authorizing the union of the University of Vermont and the Vermont Agricultural College, two distinct corporations, and to become a new corporation by the name of the University of Vermont and State Agricultural College, transferred to the new corporation all the property of the former University, and, by force of such transfer, substituted the new for the old corporation as to all contract claims, and gave a right of action in the name of the new corporation upon such claims. But in declaring upon such contract it is necessary to aver the organization of the plaintiffs, as well as a vote of the former University to accept the act and surrender its property to the plaintiffs. University of Vermont & State Agricultural College v. Baxter, 42 Vt. 99. Also a like vote of the Agricultural College. S. C., 43 Vt. 645.

73. Deed of corporation. A corporation may adopt any seal they choose, for the time, the same as a natural person—as a private seal, instead of the corporate seal, to a replevin bond. Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland & Washington R. Co., 30 Vt. 159.

74. The sealing of the deed of a corporation with the corporate seal does not import, nor include, a signing by the corporation. Isham v. Bennington Iron Co., 19 Vt. 230.

75. A deed of the lands of a private corporation, signed by its president, as such, and sealed with his private seal, in which was recited the vote authorizing it, was held good to convey the lands, under the statute of 1815 (Slade's Stat. 160). Warner v. Mower, 11 Vt. 385.

76. The conveyance of its lands by a corporation can be only by a deed executed in the manner prescribed by the statute in such case. Wheelock v. Moulton, 15 Vt. 519. Isham v. Bennington Iron Co., 19 Vt. 230. 23 Vt. 611. Pope v. Henry, 24 Vt. 560. Miller v. Rutland & Washington R. Co. 36 Vt. 452.

77. The corporators or shareholders of a corporation cannot, as such, convey the real estate of the corporation, though they all join in the deed; and although the same deed conveys all the shares of stock in the corporation, it does not convey the real estate. Wheelock v. Moulton. Isham v. Bennington Iron Co.

78. The statute of Nov. 3, 1815, which provided and specified the mode in which private corporations might convey their real estate, superseded the statute of March 6, 1797, as respects such conveyances, and, while it was in force, was the uniform and only mode of conveying lands by corporations. Isham v. Bennington Iron Co. Davis, J., dissenting.

79. Under the statute authorizing a corporation to convey lands "by an agent appointed by vote for that purpose" (R. S. c. 60, s. 3; G. S. c. 65, s. 3), it is not essential to the validity of such deed that the vote should be recited in it. McDaniels v. Flower Brook Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274.

80. Under this statute, William Wallace, the agent so appointed, made the deed in this form: "The Flower Brook Manufacturing Co., by William Wallace their agent, a corporation," &c., "in consideration," &c., "do give, grant," &c. All the covenants were in the name of the corporation. The testimonium clause was: "In witness whereof we have set our hand and seal," &c., and the deed was signed "William Wallace, Agent for Flower Brook Manufacturing Co.," and sealed—the corporation having no corporate seal. The deed did not recite the vote of the corporation. The acknowledgment was: "Personally appeared William Wallace, Agent of the Flower Brook Manufacturing Company, signer and sealer of the above written instrument, and acknowledged the same to be his free act and deed," &c. Held, that the deed and acknowledgment were sufficient in form as the deed and acknowledgment of the corporation. Id.

81. The president of a railroad company having authority by vote of the corporation to execute a mortgage of the road and its franchise, made a mortgage deed, wherein, reciting the vote, he conveyed in his own name, as—"I, M C, as I am President, as well as by the power and authority vested in me by the vote aforesaid," &c. The covenants were in his individual name,—"I, the said M C," &c.—"In witness whereof I have hereto set my hand and seal," &c., Signed "M C," with his private seal attached,—Acknowledged "to be his free act and deed, and the free act and deed of said corporation." Held, that this was not the deed of the corporation, and that the recording of it was not constructive notice of its existence and contents. Miller v. Rut. & Washington R. Co., 38 Vt. 452.

82. Contract to convey. A contract to convey land by a corporation is not required to be executed or ratified with the same formality as the actual conveyance. Conant v. B. Falls Canal Co., 29 Vt. 263. Isham v. Bennington Iron Co., 19 Vt. 245. Miller v. Rutland & Washington R. Co.

VI. CORPORATE LIABILITIES.

83. Public use. There is no implied contract by the State, in the charter of a turnpike or other private corporation, that their property, or even their franchise itself, shall be exempt from the common liability of the property of individuals to be taken for public use. White River T. Co. v. Vt. Central R. Co., 31 Vt. 590. 27 Vt. 379.

84. Liability for torts. A corporation—as a railroad corporation—is liable for torts even, when committed by its agents within the apparent scope of their authority, or in pursuit of the general purpose of the charter; in other words, where the departure from the charter powers is not such as to be notice to all that the agent is departing from the proper work of the corporation, it is liable for such acts of its agent. Jones v. West. Vt. R. Co., 27 Vt. 399. Lyman v. White River Bridge Co., 2 Aik. 255. Sabin v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 363.

85. Unauthorized act ratified. Although the contract of a corporation may be strictly ultra vires, yet if not interfered with by the stockholders or the State, and it is not of a class of contracts expressly prohibited, and there is reasonable ground to suppose that the agents of the corporation may have acted in good faith, courts will not listen to the objection when raised by the corporation itself, or by one having no interest in the question, except for the purposes of unjust advantage. Noyes v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 27 Vt. 110. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. v. Proctor, 29 Vt. 93. Sturges v. Knapp, 31 Vt. 62; and see post 90.

86. Where the agent of a corporation, without authority, procured of the orators, upon the credit of the corporation, funds which came to the use of the corporation;—Held, either, (1), that the corporation by accepting and appropriating the avails of the agent's contract, after becoming aware of all the facts, had thereby ratified the act of the agent in borrowing and using the money in their business, in its entirety and with all its conditions; or (2), that, if not a ratification, then the application of the orators' funds by the agent to the business of the corporation was an unauthorized act, and, as such, a misapplication of the orators' funds, and so the orators could reclaim them, into whosoever hands they had come, and in whatever form they might exist, and however changed from the original. Under the circumstances of this case, the latter view was taken. Whitwell v. Warner, 20 Vt. 425.

87. An agent of a corporation, but not authorized to lease its lands, did execute to the orator a contract to lease its land and a water privilege for a certain rent, upon the faith of which the orator took possession and made permanent erections, of which the corporation was cognizant, and for several years received the agreed rent. Held, that the corporation had thereby ratified the contract, and the execution of a lease was decreed. Conant v. Bellows Falls Canal Co., 29 Vt. 263.

88. If a corporation, or its principal agents and officers, are cognizant of some party being on their land making permanent erections under a claim of title, and make no objections, this is held a ratification of a sale or contract to convey, made by their agent. Conant v. B. Falls Canal Co. Pope v. Henry, 24 Vt. 560.

89. Where a corporation has a right to pass a particular vote, and the objection to it is only to the formality of the proceeding, the defect may be cured by subsequent ratification;—as by subsequent action under it, or vote to pay in accordance with it. Richardson v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co. 44 Vt. 618.

99. Who may question validity of corporate acts. If a contract by a corporation is not in violation of some public law, or contrary to public policy, it seems that only the immediate parties to it, as the corporation itself, or the stockholders, who are parties by representation, hold such a legal position in relation to the contract, as to entitle them to raise the question of its validity on account of the alleged want of capacity to make it; but if the contract be in violation of some public law, or against public policy, in such sense as to make it void and of no effect to any intent, any person standing in a relation of interest to the subject matter of the contract and to be affected by its operation, might undoubtedly set up and insist on such fatal vice in it, for the purpose of clearing himself from the consequences of its being carried into effect. Barrett, J., in Vt. & Can. R. Co. v. Vt. Cent. R. Co., 34 Vt. 2.

VII. REMEDIES FOR AND AGAINST CORPORATIONS.

91. Generally. Where a corporation—as a town—has sustained special damage in its corporate capacity, it has the same right of redress as an individual in like circumstances;—applied to the case where the defendant town neglected to remove its pauper from the plaintiff town, as it was its duty to do. Sheldon v. Fairfax, 21 Vt. 102;—and to the case where the plaintiff town suffered damage to its highway, by the discharge of the water of a stream upon it by the defendants. Shrewsbury v. Brown, 25 Vt. 197.

92. Procedure. Where corporate rights and interests are affected in any way injuriously, generally speaking and unless some special ground be shown, they must be asserted and defended, both at law and in equity, in the corporate name, and not in the name of stockholders, creditors, &c. Bradley v. Richardson (U.S. C. C.), 23 Vt. 720.

93. A corporation may maintain the action of book account. Insurance Co. v. Cummings, 11 Vt. 503.

94. In an action of book account against the defendant as a corporation, the question of its corporate existence cannot be raised by the defendant before the auditor, but only by plea before judgment to account. Hunneman v. Fire District, 37 Vt. 40.

95. Assumpsit lies against a corporation—as a town—upon an implied, as well as on an express promise. Poultney v. Wells, 1 Aik. 180. Gassett v. Andover, 21 Vt. 342.

96. A corporator named in a charter was allowed to recover against the corporation, afterwards organized, for his necessary services in procuring subscriptions to its stock required by its charter before an organization could be perfected, as upon an implied promise of payment. Hall v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co. 28 Vt. 401.

97. Charges against a railroad company for services in procuring their act of incorporation, disallowed—there having been no subsequent promise to pay; and no previous promise could be implied, since the defendants, then having no legal existence, were incapable of employing the plaintiff, or of making an express contract. Id.

98. The corporators, named in an act, voted to pay “all reasonable expenses” to be incurred by a committee of their number in procuring stock subscriptions. Held, that this was not limited to cash expenditures, but included also personal services. Id.

99. Trespass, or other proper action, may be maintained against corporations for torts authorized or commanded by them. Lyman v. White River Bridge Co., 3 Aik. 255. 27 Vt. 107. Sabin v. Vermont Central R. Co. 25 Vt. 363. 22 Vt. 372.

100. Indictment. An indictment lies against a corporation,—as, a railroad corporation—for the erection and maintenance of a common nuisance, by its officers and agents. State v. Vt. Central R. Co. 27 Vt. 103.

101. An indictment against a party named, described the defendants as “a corporation duly chartered and incorporated by the legislature of this State,” but, there was no averment that the company had ever accepted the charter, or organized under it. Held, that there was no sufficient averment that the corporation was in esse. But held, that a description of the party as “a corporation existing under and by force of the laws of this State, duly organized and doing business,” was sufficient, and that a statement of time and place, when and where the defendants became a corporation, was unnecessary. State v. Vt. Central R. Co., 28 Vt. 583.

102. Pleading. As to political corporations, as towns, created by public statutes, it is not necessary in pleading to aver their corporate existence, nor to make proof thereof. Briggs v. Whipple, 7 Vt. 15.

103. Foreign corporation. A private corporation of another State is subject to suit in the courts of this State, where jurisdiction has been acquired. Day v. Essex Co. Bank, 13 Vt. 97. 46 Vt. 707.

104. G. S. c. 33, s. 24, prescribing the mode of service of process upon a corporation, has reference exclusively to corporations within this State. Hall v. Vt. & Mass. R. Co., 28 Vt. 401.

105. The statute of limitations does not commence running against a foreign corporation, until it has attachable property within this State. (G. S. c. 63, s. 15.) Ib.

VIII. FORFEITURE AND DISSOLUTION.

106. It is not every irregularity, or want of conformity with the directions of the charter, that annihilates a corporation; and a charter may even be forfeited, and still the corporate capacity remain. Phelps, J., in Searsburg T. Co. v. Cutler, 6 Vt. 323-4.

107. The power of the court to vacate a charter upon information, is to be exercised in discretion. It was refused where the violation was not fraudulent, and no existing danger to the community seemed to require it. State v. Essex Bank, 8 Vt. 489. 24 Vt. 238.

108. It is the generally received doctrine in this State, that a legal surrender of the franchise to be a corporation, may be presumed where there has been an entire non-user of corporate franchises, and a neglect to choose corporate officers, for a sufficient length of time, but that time not decided (Penfield v. Skinner, 11 Vt. 296); yet—Held, in an action by a corporation once organized, that such presumption did not arise from the fact of its having, some ten years before, disposed of its personal property, and thereafter neglected to choose corporate officers and ceased to do business. Brandon Iron Co. v. Gleason, 24 Vt. 228.

109. Under a provision of an act of incorporation that the charter shall become void, unless, &c., the question of forfeiture cannot be put in issue collaterally, as in an action for assessments, but only by direct proceedings brought by the State to vacate the charter. This is a matter exclusively between the corporation and the State, which may waive the forfeiture; and, until judgment of ouster, the legal existence of the corporation continues. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Bailey, 24 Vt. 465.

As to particular Corporations, see appropriate titles—as ASSOCIATIONS; BANKS; RAILROAD COMPANY; SCHOOLS, II.; TOWNS; TURNPIKE COMPANY; VILLAGE.

COSTS.

I. AT LAW.

1. In the county court and inferior tribunals.

2. In the Supreme Court.

II. IN CHANCERY.

I. AT LAW.

1. In the county court and inferior tribunals.

1. By force of statute. It is only by force of our statutes, that costs are ever taxed and allowed. Tyler v. Frost, 48 Vt. 486.

2. Suits by the State. Costs can in no case be taxed against the State. State v. Harrington, 2 Tyl. 44.

3. In an action by the State Treasurer, costs for his travel are not taxable. Swan, Tr., v. Colfax, 2 Tyl. 258.

4. Want of jurisdiction. Where an action is dismissed for want of jurisdiction, no costs are taxable. Barlow v. Burr, 1 Vt. 488 (changed by G. S. c. 30, s. 42).

5. The authority given by the Statute of Nov. 5, 1830, to tax costs and issue execution therefor, where a suit is dismissed for want of jurisdiction, is consistent with the taking of a recognizance for costs and pursuing the recognizor therefor. Colony v. Maack, 8 Vt. 114.

6. Under G. S. c. 30, s. 42, allowing a defendant "reasonable costs" where a suit is dismissed for want of jurisdiction, the court allowed him only his costs in the supreme court, where he omitted to raise the question of jurisdiction until after a verdict against him. Chadwick v. Batchelder, 46 Vt. 724.

7. No such person. Where a writ was granted on the plea that there was no such person in existence as the plaintiff, a judgment entered up for the defendant's costs, and execution thereon, were held to be void. Gray v. Parker, 16 Vt. 652.

8. Discontinuance. The "reasonable costs," named in G. S. c. 30, s. 42, will not be allowed to a party, where, after service of a process upon him, and before the return day, and before any costs have accrued to him, the plaintiff gives him a written notice of discontinuance, or that he shall not enter the suit. Mead v. Arms, 2 Vt. 180.

9. Any costs, in their nature taxable, made before service of the notice should be paid or tendered with the service of the notice. Hutchinson, J., Ib.

10. The same is true of a verbal notice of discontinuance, given under such circumstances as to afford a reasonable protection to the defendant, and where the claim for costs is in the judgment of the court unreasonable—and this rests wholly in the discretion of the court. Fullam v. Ives, 37 Vt. 659. See Hill v. Dunlap, 15 Vt. 645. Clark v. Seefeld, 16 Vt. 699. (Semble, Wright v. Doolittle, 5 Vt. 390 contra,—overruled.)

11. Nor will costs be allowed a defendant, where, after service of the writ, and before and without entry of the suit in court, the defendant by his own act has extinguished the cause of action, as by becoming a bankrupt on his own petition—although no notice of discontinuance was given. Clark v. Scofield, 16 Vt. 699.

12. A sued out a justice writ against B and had it served, but did not procure the writ to be returned and entered. B appeared, but the justice was not present. Held, that A was not liable to B for his costs and expenses, in an action. Stevens v. Wilkins, 8 Vt. 231. Overruled by Mann v. Holbrook, 20 Vt. 523.

13. Where A had sued out a writ against B, returnable before a justice, and had caused it to be served, and, after B had incurred costs and expenses in preparing for his defense, gave B notice of the discontinuance of the suit;—Held, that A was liable to B, in an action on the case, to the extent, at least, of such taxable costs. Griffin v. Farwell, 20 Vt. 151.

14. So also, where the party, after service of his writ, omitted to appear and proceed with his suit in any mode, and the justice did not appear, whereby the other party suffered loss, he was held liable in an action on the case. Mann v. Holbrook, 20 Vt. 523—overruling Stevens v. Wilkins, 8 Vt. 231.

15. Where the term of office of a justice expired during the trial of a cause before him;—Held, that the defendant therein could not recover, in an action against the plaintiff therein, the costs of his defense. Johnson v. Kingsbury, 28 Vt. 486.

16. During the pendency of an action upon a penal statute, and after one judgment for the plaintiff and a review, the statute was repealed without any saving clause, and the suit was thereafter dismissed on the defendant's motion. Held, that the defendant was entitled to costs only after filing his motion. Sumner v. Cummings, 23 Vt. 427.

17. The general rule is, that where the plaintiff has a good cause of action when he commences his suit, and something transpires pending the action which extinguishes it, the plaintiff may discontinue his action, neither party recovering costs, or, in some cases, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for nominal damages and costs up to that time. Peck, J., in Wheeler v. Fuller, 39 Vt. 312.

18. As depending on recovery of damages. A plaintiff cannot have a judgment to recover costs, unless there be a recovery for damages, at least nominal. Stevens v. Briggs, 14 Vt. 44.

19. Payment pending suit. Payment of a debt, after suit brought and costs incurred, will not prevent a judgment for nominal damages and costs, unless the claim for costs has been released or waived. Belknap v. Godfrey, 22 Vt. 288.

20. Several suits. A party having several securities for one demand may pursue them all to judgment, and, although he can have but one satisfaction for his debt or damages, he is, unless restricted by statute, entitled to the costs of each suit. Stillman v. Barney, 4 Vt. 331.

21. Where three suits were brought by the same party in interest, but in the names of different nominal plaintiffs, against the same defendant and for the same matter, and so brought in order to save the party's rights in case of some exigency in regard to testimony or ruling of law possible to occur, and a trial and recovery were had in one, and the others were abandoned and judgment therein for defendant;—Held, that full costs should be taxed for the plaintiff in the case tried, and, in the other cases, only such costs for the defendant as applied exclusively to those cases. Barker v. Troy & R. R. Co. 27 Vt. 766.

22. Several issues. Though the court does not adopt the English practice of taxing costs both ways where some of the issues are so found, yet where the defendant, before impanneling the jury, offered the plaintiff a judgment on one count, which was declined, and the other issues were found for the defendant, the plaintiff was allowed his costs as of a judgment, but no costs for the trial by jury. Clark v. Rice, 6 Vt. 33. Now regulated by G. S. c., 33, s. 17.

23. The statute which provides that each party shall recover costs upon the issues or claims on which he shall prevail (G. S. c. 33, s. 17) applies only in cases where the issues are several and distinct, and not to the constituent parts of a single general issue or claim;—it applies to issues and claims made by the pleadings, and not to those arising on the testimony on the trial. Brainerd v. Casey, 37 Vt. 479.

24. Discretion. The county court may, in their discretion, disallow costs to the plaintiff upon a claim which he fails to establish, although he prevails in the suit. Sanborn v. Chittenden, 27 Vt. 171. 35 Vt. 34.

25. How far the taxing of costs is discretionary. Sumner v. Cummings, 23 Vt. p. 434.

26. Book account. The statute of Nov. 16, 1819 (Slade's Stat. 138), regulating costs in mutual actions of book account, applied only to cases where the second action was commenced after a recovery in the first. Gale v. Cooper, 11 Vt. 597. See G. S. c. 125, s. 23.

27. Where the then defendant in an action on book, who had "personal notice of the suit," though the writ was not personally served upon him, appeared and defended that suit, but omitted to present his account, and judgment passed against him, from which he appealed, but, before entry, paid that judgment;—Held, that on a subsequent recovery of judgment by him, in an action on book, for the matters of account so omitted in the former suit, he was not, under G. S. c. 125, s. 33, entitled to costs. Scott v. Niles, 40 Vt. 573.

28. In book account, the county court, without G. S. c. 83, s. 17, has a discretionary power to deny full costs to the plaintiff, where he fails to sustain his full claim. Watts v. Kavanagh, 35 Vt. 84; and see Sanborn v. Chittenden, 27 Vt. 175. Briggs v. Brewster, 28 Vt. 100. Gilbert v. Earl, 47 Vt. 9.

29. Costs may be properly apportioned in this action. Briggs v. Brewster.

30. Restriction as to amount. The restriction as to the amount of costs recoverable by the plaintiff, does not apply to a case referred with all demands. If the action only were referred, it might be otherwise. Baker v. Blodget, 1 Vt. 141.

31. Under the statutes limiting the plaintiff's costs to the amount of his debt or damages, "except costs that may accrue from continuances at the request of the defendant," &c., the rule of taxation is, to add to the amount of costs equalling the damages, the costs of the term in which the defendant obtains the continuance, but not the costs of any subsequent term. Davis v. Tarble, 2 Aik. 259.

32. In actions of trespass on the freehold, in order to deprive the plaintiff of full costs in case of a recovery for less than seven dollars damages (G. S. c. 125, s. 22) the defendant must make no question in regard to the plaintiff's right, either of title, or possession. If he put the plaintiff upon proof of his title or possession, or attempt to show a counter title, or right of possession in himself, full costs will be allowed. Powers v. Leach, 22 Vt. 226. 24 Vt. 546.

33. Whether the attempt to show a license brings the "right of title or possession * * in question," would seem to depend upon the nature of the act complained of. The right of possession, in such case, is brought in question, where the act is an unequivocal act of possession,—as where the defendant makes permanent erections, as, a stone wall enclosing the plaintiff's land, cuts trees, &c. Id.

34. In trespass on the freehold, brought in the county court, the main question was one of boundary between the lands of the parties. The jury found the line to be as the defendant claimed, but that he had cut beyond that line, upon the plaintiff's land, trees to the value of $3.50, and gave verdict for the plaintiff for that sum. The defendant did not claim "right of title or possession" beyond that line, but only denied the fact of committing any act of trespass beyond the line. Held, that under G. S. c. 125, s. 22, the plaintiff could recover no more costs than damages. Brainerd v. Casey, 37 Vt. 479.

35. Where the plaintiff recovers only nominal damages, the court may, under G. S. c. 33, s. 18, restrict the plaintiff's costs in their discretion, although the case is one where the title of real estate comes in question, as in G. S. c. 125, s. 22. Clary v. McGlynn, 46 Vt. 347.

36. Cases of set-off. Under the declaration on book in offset, neither party recovers costs, unless he recovers both before the auditor and in the original suit;—and then not the costs of two actions, but only, in addition to his costs in the original suit, his costs before the auditor, and an attorney fee on the judgment to account, and on the acceptance of the report, and the court and clerk fees paid. Martin v. Trobridge, 3 Vt. 9.

37. The restriction of the plaintiff's costs to the amount of the debt or damages recovered, in actions before a justice, or appealed by the plaintiff, applies to the sum finally recovered, though this be a balance upon a plea, or declaration on book in offset, and continuances may have been occasioned thereby. Ellenwood v. Parker, 3 Vt. 65.

38. The plaintiff sued on book account. The defendant duly pleaded a contract in set-off. The plaintiff had judgment on the report of the auditor; and afterwards the defendant recovered a larger sum on his set-off, and a judgment for the balance. The defendant was allowed to tax a term fee and travel at each term, and an attorney fee when he prevailed in a trial, but no costs before the auditor, and no attorney fee on the judgment to account, or on the acceptance of the report. Anon, 27 Vt. 786.

39. Set-off of costs. Set-off of costs in counter suits and judgments in the same court, rendered at different terms, was made on motion. Sellick v. Munson, 2 Vt. 13.

40. Case of several defendants. It is a general rule, that travel and attendance be separately taxed for all the defendants in ejectment. Boynston v. King, 1 Tyl. 30.

41. In actions ex contractu, the defendants are entitled to tax only one travel, term, and attorney fee, though they plead separately, where the trial is joined and upon the general issue. In actions ex delicto, the defendants may always tax separate travel, and, if they plead separately, they may tax separate term fees. But it has not been usual to allow separate attorney fees, unless the trials, or, at least, the judgments are separate. North Bank v. Wood, 11 Vt. 194. Shrewsbury v. Strong, 10 Vt. 591.

42. In an audita querela by a town to vacate a judgment or process in favor of several persons, growing out of a petition by them for the laying of a road, the town became non-suit. Held, that the defendants were entitled to costs only as for a single defendant. Shrewsbury v. Strong.

43. In actions of tort against several defendants, separate travel and attendance before a justice, and separate travel and term fees in the county court, are taxable for each defendant, unless, by joining in a plea in bar, or in some other way, their interests are so identified, that the success of the defense, as to each, depends upon the success as to all. The general issue in such action is regarded as several, although in form joint. No more attorney fees are taxable than there are distinct trials. Downer v. Flint, 28 Vt. 527. Hale v. Merrill, 27 Vt. 788.

44. Costs on appeal and review. Construction of statutes regulating costs in cases appealed or reviewed. Parsons v. Young, 2 Vt. 484. Robinson v. Whitcher, 2 Vt. 568. Plumley v. Marsh, 15 Vt. 306.

45. Both parties appealed from the judgment of a justice. The defendant, without tendering payment of the judgment, or a confession, entered his appeal in the county court, and the case was there litigated to judgment for the plaintiff. Held, that the plaintiff's costs should be taxed the same as if he had not appealed. Hill v. Powers, 16 Vt. 516.

46. In an action for assault and battery, the plaintiff at Sept. term, 1840, recovered judgment for $15, damages. The defendant reviewed, and at the next term the plaintiff recovered judgment for $6.50 damages. Held, that the plaintiff's costs were limited to the amount of damages last recovered. Plumley v. Marsh, 15 Vt. 306.

47. Appeal from probate court. Where an administrator appealed from an allowance against him on settlement of his account in the probate court, and succeeded in reducing that balance, the court refused costs to each party. Phelps v. Slade, 10 Vt. 192.

48. The allowance of costs being discretionary on appeals from the probate court, none were allowed to either party on an appeal from the allowance of an administrator's account, where he successfully resisted a large claim made by the appellants, but was made chargeable with about twenty five dollars more than was found in his hands by the probate court. Reynolds v. McGregor, 16 Vt. 191.

49. The general rule that the party prevailing recovers taxable costs, was held to apply to the case of an appeal, by an executor, from a decree of the probate court disallowing a will, which was established in the county court, and that judgment affirmed in the supreme court. Brigham v. Executors, 15 Vt. 788.

50. Liability of executors and administrators for costs. See O'Hear v. Skeeles, 22 Vt. 152.

51. In appeals from commissioners of claims, costs should abide the event of the suit and be taxed as in other civil suits, unless there are some peculiar circumstances in the case. Sargeant v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 330.

52. Special proceedings. On scire facias to obtain a new execution under G. S. c. 47, s. 48, and seq. where the levy of the former execution had not noticed an existing mortgage, the defendant made defense and all the questions litigated were decided against him. Held, that he was not entitled to costs, although the plaintiff turned out the property to the levying officer. Pratt v. Jones, 25 Vt. 308.

53. On the dismissal of a petition to set aside a justice's judgment, rendered by default without notice (G. S. c. 38, s. 7), the court in its discretion refused costs—the statute being silent as to costs. Held correct. Tyler v. Frost, 48 Vt. 486.

54. Costs of witnesses before commissioners, appointed on petition that a railroad company be required to establish a depot, were allowed to the company, which prevailed,—distinguishing this from cases for the laying out of highways. Bliss v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 47 Vt. 715.

55. In order for the court to pass upon a disputed question of costs before auditors, referees or commissioners, the costs should be taxed by them, and their report should state the facts involved, material to a proper decision Id.

56. What is taxable. The act of 1807, allowing as costs a fee of two dollars for each term of court, applies to cases pending, and relates back to terms of court before the act was passed. Pearl v. Harrington, Brayt. 47.

57. An attorney fee is not taxable upon a hearing before referees. Baker v. Blodget, 1 Vt. 141.

58. Whenever an action is tried, though not decided,—as, where the jury do not agree, or the case in the supreme court is heard and continued for judgment, or for further argument,—a jury fee is taxable in the former case, and a full judgment fee in the latter; and a full attorney fee in each. Walker v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 352. Pollard v. Wheelock, 20 Vt. 370.

59. No party in any court in this State is to tax for travel beyond the limits of the State. Mattoon v. Mattoon, 22 Vt. 450. (1850.)

60. A party testifying cannot tax fees as a witness, either for himself, or for another party joined with him. Hale v. Merrill, 27 Vt. 788.

61. The statute requiring witness certificates to be signed and sworn to does not take away the power of the court to hear evidence, viva voce, concerning costs, and to allow the travel and attendance of witnesses without any certificate. Higgins v. Hayward, 5 Vt. 73.

62. Costs are not allowed for witnesses not testifying, unless it is shown affirmatively that they were summoned in good faith, and for such cause and occasion as would justify their attendance at the expense of the other party. Bliss v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 47 Vt. 715.

2. In the supreme court.

63. Petitions. Where a new trial was granted on the defendant's petition and he finally recovered, costs were allowed to be taxed in his favor from the commencement of the original action. Shaw v. Johnson, Brayt. 47.—But where a new trial was granted for no fault of the plaintiff, costs were allowed only from the commencement of the new trial. Hogg v. Wolcott, 1 Tyl. 141.

64. Mode of taxing costs on a petition for a new trial. Burr v. Palmer, 23 Vt. 244.

65. On the granting or refusing of writs of certiorari, mandamus, or other like writs resting in the discretion of the court, no costs will follow, unless specially allowed by the court. Myers v. Pownal, 16 Vt. 426. Sumner v. Hartland, 25 Vt. 641.

66. Discretion. The supreme court cannot exercise a discretion as to allowing costs, upon trials had in the county court, on appeals from probate, or commissioners. Allen v. Rice, 24 Vt. 647.

67. Where costs depend upon the discretion of the court trying the cause, and that court omits to exercise its discretion in the matter, the supreme court will not exercise its discretion as to the costs. Batchelder v. Tenney, 27 Vt. 784.

68. Revision of taxation below. The supreme court will not reverse a judgment of the county court as to costs, and then tax the costs below; but the party excepting to the disallowance of costs must set forth in his exceptions the items of costs incurred and claimed. Redfield, C.J., in Sumner v. Hartland, 25 Vt. 641.

69. Costs ought to be taxed when the judgment is rendered in the county court, so that any question in respect thereto may be heard with the exceptions in the supreme court. Ellenwood v. Parker, 8 Vt. 65.

70. The supreme court is unable, on petition or appeal from the clerk, to correct errors in taxing costs which are not apparent upon the face of the taxation, unless such errors are disclosed either by proof, or by a report of the facts from the clerk. It is the better practice to require an appellant from the clerk's taxation, to procure a report from the clerk of his finding upon all questions of fact material to be understood in passing upon the alleged error, so that the court may be relieved from hearing testimony upon these minor matters. Steele, J., in Carver v. Adams, 40 Vt. 552.

71. On writ of error. The plaintiff, having succeeded on his writ of error and having recovered final judgment in the action, was held entitled to his full costs on the writ of error, irrespective of the amount of damages recovered. Baker v. Blodget, 1 Vt. 141. 22 Vt. 456.

72. Distinction taken as to allowance of costs in the supreme court, between exceptions and writ of error. Barlow v. Burr, 1 Vt. 488. (Denied in Downing v. Roberts, 22 Vt. 457.)

73. Where judgment is affirmed on writ of error not operating as a superadeas, execution issues for the costs only. Herring v. Selding, 2 Aik. 12.

74. On exceptions. Where a party prevails in the supreme court upon the exceptions taken, he recovers his costs in that court. The court does not allow him an execution immediately therefor, but they are to be adjusted in the final taxation in the cause, by adding them to his other costs, if he prevails ultimately, or by deducting them from the costs of the other side, if his adversary ultimately prevails. Stevens v. Hollister, 19 Vt. 605.

75. A case in the supreme court on exceptions is considered as a distinct matter, beginning and ending in itself, so that the party prevailing there on the exceptions is entitled to his costs there, the same as if a writ of error had been brought, and this without reference to the amount of damages recovered, or to the final event, and although a balance may be found against him. Pollard v. Wheelock, 20 Vt. 370. Baker v. Blodget, 1 Vt. 141. Downer v. Frizzle, 10 Vt. 541. Stewart v. Martin, 16 Vt. 397. Bardwell v. Perry, 19 Vt. 292. McCrillis v. Banks, 19 Vt. 442. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507. Downing v. Roberts, 22 Vt. 455.

76. Where both parties except, and neither party prevails on his exceptions, costs in the supreme court will be allowed to neither. Mills v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 59. Green v. Shurtliff, 19 Vt. 592.

77. Security for costs. The supreme court will not order security for costs to be given in a case standing in that court on exceptions. Livermore v. Bond, 19 Vt. 607.

II. IN CHANCERY.

78. In general. In chancery, costs must be expressly awarded, or they are lost; and if the final decree is silent as to costs, they cannot be granted on a subsequent application, unless there is a rehearing on the merits. Conable v. Bucklin, 2 Aik. 221.

79. To entitle a party to costs in chancery, costs must be awarded by the decree; and on an appeal (semble) the supreme court can make no order as to the costs in the court of chancery. Gladding v. Warner, 36 Vt. 54.

80. The general rule in chancery is, that there can be no appeal or rehearing for costs only; and the supreme court will rarely, if ever, reverse a decree on the question of costs alone. Mott v. Harrington, 15 Vt. 185. Lyman v. Little, 15 Vt. 576. Sumner v. Hartland, 25 Vt. 641. Sanders v. Wilson, 34 Vt. 318.

81. No instance is found, in which the supreme court has disturbed a decree of the court of chancery on the question of costs alone. Hall, J., in Hastings v. Perry, 20 Vt. 272. Sanborn v. Kittredge, 20 Vt. 682.

82. Where the orator's bill in the court of chancery was dismissed, and on appeal that decree was reversed and an affirmative decree was ordered for the defendant, costs were allowed to the defendant in both courts. Davis v. Smith, 43 Vt. 269.

83. Bill to redeem. On a bill to redeem, which was also for discovery and relief, where the orator prevailed, the court refused costs to the defendant. Had there been a seasonable and proper tender, and a refusal, the orator would have been entitled to costs. Smith v. Bailey, 10 Vt. 163.

84. On a bill to redeem, the court refused costs to the defendant where he contested the right to redeem; and refused costs to the orator, because he had not actually tendered the amount due in equity. Smith v. Blaisdell, 17 Vt. 199. 31 Vt. 187.

85. On a bill to redeem, where the orator had made an insufficient tender, the defendant was allowed his costs, and also the costs of a proceeding by the defendant to get possession of the premises, including the costs of a writ of possession, and for executing it. Cree v. Lord, 25 Vt. 498.

86. Although the subject of costs in chancery is within the discretion of the court, yet there are certain principles and rules upon the subject which confer rights that the court are bound to recognize and secure to parties. Thus, unless some reason be disclosed to the contrary, the prevailing party is entitled to recover his costs. Thrall v. Chittenden, 31 Vt. 183.

87. Thus, on a bill to redeem against a mortgagee in possession, the mortgagee shall have his costs, unless some reason be shown to the contrary,—even though the prayer of the bill be granted and it be found, on accounting, that the mortgage debt has been more than satisfied out of the rents and profits. To decide otherwise would be error. Id.

88. On a bill to redeem, where the right to redeem was denied, and that was the question litigated;—Held, that the ordinary rule of putting the costs upon the orator in a bill to redeem did not apply, and the orator was allowed his costs. Hills v. Loomis, 42 Vt. 562.

89. —to foreclose. Where the defendant in a bill to foreclose a mortgage proved payment, except the sum of $5.57;—Held, that as he had so nearly established a defense, either no costs should be allowed the orator, or a very small proportion, not exceeding the amount of the debt—he having put the defendant to the proof of payment. Killam v. Jenkins, 25 Vt. 643.

90. After the time of redemption had expired upon a decree of foreclosure rendered pro confesso, the court refused a decree that the defendant pay the costs. Binney v. Wetherbee, 10 Vt. 322.

91. Unnecessary costs. One-third the orator's costs of taking testimony was disallowed, for unnecessary prolixity. Sanborn v. Bruley, 47 Vt. 170.

92. Master's fees. The fees of masters in chancery, fixed in the schedule of fees, were designed only for the ordinary service of standing masters, and not as the fixed rate of compensation to masters specially appointed for extraordinary service, or to standing masters to whom a matter is specially referred requiring extraordinary service. In case of such extraordinary services, the master is to be allowed a reasonable compensation, irrespective of the schedule of fees, and such sum is to be treated as taxable costs,—the amount of compensation being subject to the revision of the court. Claflin v. Celley, 48 Vt. 3.

93. Illustrative instances of taxation. Cases illustrating the discretionary action of the court of chancery in allowing, denying, and apportioning costs. Lynde v. Wright, 1 Aik. 383. Mover v. Hutchinson, 9 Vt. 242. Smith v. Bailey, 10 Vt. 163. Beardsley v. Hatch, 11 Vt. 151. McConnell v. McConnell, 11 Vt. 290. Keeler v. Eastman, 11 Vt. 293. Waterman v. Cochran, 12 Vt. 699. Ward v. Sharp, 15 Vt. 115. Mott v. Harrington, 15 Vt. 185. Pinnock v. Clough, 16 Vt. 500. Barrett v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 365. Blodgett v. Hobart, 18 Vt. 414. Washburn v. Bank of Bellows Falls, 19 Vt. 278. Day v. Cummings, 19 Vt. 496. Hopkins v. Adams, 20 Vt. 407. Stearns v. Wrisley, 30 Vt. 661. Soule v. Albee, 31 Vt. 142. Sanders v. Wilson, 34 Vt. 318. Therasson v. Hickok, 37 Vt. 454. Weston v. Cushing, 45 Vt. 581.

COUNTY COURT.

I. ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

II. APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

I. ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

1. Suit in favor of the county. Under the statute authorizing the county court, or a justice, to take cognizance of any suit in favor of or against the county (G. S. c. 11, s. 15);—Held, that a qui tam action brought by a common informer, where half the penalty went to the county, was triable by the court and jury of the county, though they were liable as county tax-payers. Colgate v. Hill, 20 Vt. 56.

2. Original jurisdiction, as determined by the "matter in demand." An action was brought to the county court for the recovery of a certain number of fixed penalties exceeding, in the whole, a justice's jurisdiction, but evidence was given tending to prove only so many as would bring the case within the jurisdiction of a justice. Held, that the county court should have dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction. Putney v. Bellows, 8 Vt. 272.

3. In cases where the jurisdiction depends upon "the matter in demand," although on the face of the writ the county court has jurisdiction, yet if, upon the plaintiff's own evidence, it appears that his claim is not, as to amount, within the jurisdiction, the suit will be dismissed—as where, in debt or assumpsit, acknowledged payments before suit brought have reduced the demand below the court's jurisdiction. Southwick v. Merrill, 3 Vt. 320. Miller v. Livingston, 37 Vt. 467; and see Stevens v. Howe, 6 Vt. 572. Bank of Rutland v. Crampton, 28 Vt. 330. Scott v. McDonough, 39 Vt. 203.

4. Joining several demands. Notwithstanding the statute taking away the concurrent jurisdiction of justices of the peace and the county court, the county court has jurisdiction of an action embracing several demands, although one, or each of them, is within the jurisdiction of a justice, if all combined exceed his jurisdiction. Keyes v. Weed, 1 D. Chip. 379. McFarland v. McLaughlin, 2 D. Chip. 90. 8 Vt. 274. Cook v. Porter, 1 Tyl. 450.

5. Action on note. The jurisdiction of a justice upon a note is governed by what appears to be due by the whole note itself, and as the clerk would make up the sum upon default. The county court is not ousted of jurisdiction by payments not indorsed. Bank of Middlebury v. Tucker, 7 Vt. 144.

6. Increase by interest. The interest which is incident to a debt, whether it be a note or an account, and recoverable when the suit is commenced, has the same effect in giving jurisdiction, as so much principal;—as, where it is an item on the debtor side of the plaintiff's book, in the action of book account. Nichols v. Packard, 16 Vt. 91.

7. In an action against an officer for not keeping property attached so that it could be levied upon, where the damages demanded and actually recovered, including interest on the execution, exceeded $100;—Held, that the county court had jurisdiction, although the original judgment was less than $100. McOrmsby v. Morris, 28 Vt. 711.

8. In assumpsit for use and occupation, brought in good faith, the county court has original jurisdiction, if apparent in the writ, although the largest sum due and which the plaintiff could hope to recover, at the date of the writ, was less than $100, but where at the time of trial, by accumulation of interest, the demand exceeds $100. Hall v. Wadsworth, 28 Vt. 410.

9. Severance of defendants. In an action brought in the county court by a surety against his principal and a co-surety jointly, to recover for money paid by reason of his suretyship, the case was, that his claim against the principal exceeded in amount a justice's jurisdiction, whereas his claim against the co-surety for contribution was within a justice's jurisdiction. The court, under the statute, discharged the principal and rendered judgment against the co-surety for less than $100. Held, that the judgment was regular—that as the plaintiff was entitled to recover of the principal more than $100, this gave the county court original jurisdiction of the case; and this was not lost by discharging him, rather than the other defendant. Powers v. Thayer, 30 Vt. 361.

10. Uncertain damages—Plaintiff's good faith. In an action sounding in damages merely, and where the ad damnum brings the case within the jurisdiction of the county court, although the evidence may not, it is always a matter of discretion whether the court will dismiss the action; and they should not do this after a reference and report; and should never do it in a case admitting of doubt, even in the mind of the plaintiff. Learned v. Bellows, 8 Vt. 79. Ladd v. Hill, 4 Vt. 164.

11. Where the question whether the jurisdiction belongs to the county court or to a justice is doubtful, the case will not be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Hefflin v. Bell, 30 Vt. 134.

12. In an action, as on a contract or trespass de bonis, the value of the property furnishes no absolute rule of decision as to the original jurisdiction of the county court. In order to justify a dismissal for want of jurisdiction, other facts are required to be blended with the question of value, showing, at least, the probable consciousness of the plaintiff that he was not entitled to an amount of damages beyond the power of a single magistrate to award him. Where the exceptions were silent as to every consideration except the value of the property, and the decision dismissing the suit appeared to have proceeded upon that ground alone, the judgment was reversed. Spafford v. Richardson, 13 Vt. 224. Joyal v. Barney, 20 Vt. 154.

13. The jurisdiction of the county court will be sustained, in a case of open damages, although the amount recovered is less than the limit of a justice's jurisdiction, where the plaintiff when he commenced his suit had reasonable expectation of recovering more, and brought his suit in the county court in good faith. Clark v. Crosby, 37 Vt. 188. Gale v. Bonyea, 1 D. Chip. 208. Ladd v. Hill, 4 Vt. 164. Kittridge v. Rolins, 12 Vt. 541. Spafford v. Richardson, 13 Vt. 224. Cooley v. Aiken, 15 Vt. 322. Waters v. Langdon, 16 Vt. 570. Manwell v. Briggs, 17 Vt. 176. Henry v. Tilson, Id. 479. Brainard v. Austin, Id. 650. Joyal v. Barney, 20

Vt. 154. Sanborn v. Chittenden, 27 Vt. 171. Powers v. Thayer, 30 Vt. 361. Scott v. Moore, 41 Vt. 205. Hall v. Wadsworth, 28 Vt. 410.

14. It will make no difference on this question, whether the plaintiff's misapprehension of his rights was in a mistaken valuation of property, or in a mistaken notion of the law determining his claim. Brainerd v. Austin.

15. In such case, if any portion of the plaintiff's evidence tends to show damages beyond the jurisdiction of a justice, this should be regarded as conclusive as to the jurisdiction of the county court, irrespective of the defendant's evidence. A liberal rule should be adopted to sustain the jurisdiction. Joyal v. Barney, 20 Vt. 154. Waters v. Langdon, 16 Vt. 570. Ladd v. Hill, 4 Vt. 164.

16. Where upon the writ the county court has jurisdiction, but the case is one of open damages, or depends upon an estimate, or appraisal, or valuation of property, a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction is addressed to the discretion of the county court; and the decision of that court upon that question cannot be reviewed in the supreme court. Clark v. Crosby, 37 Vt. 188. Ladd v. Hill, 4 Vt. 164. Morrison v. Moore, Id. 264.

17. The decision of the county court sustaining the jurisdiction was held conclusive, although none of the plaintiff's evidence set the damage as above a justice's jurisdiction. McGray v. Wheeler, 18 Vt. 502.

18. In a like case, the county court dismissed the action, and the decision was held conclusive. Kittridge v. Rollins, 12 Vt. 541. Collamer, J., dissenting. (In Cooley v. Aiken, 15 Vt. 323, Williams, C. J., says he was opposed to this decision.)

19. In an action of assumpsit in the common counts only, brought returnable to the county court, the plaintiff's specification was, "To balance of money paid out and services buying butter [for defendant], $225." After the plaintiff had put in his evidence and rested and the defendant had commenced putting in his evidence, the defendant discovered an error in one of the bills of butter, which had been in his own possession, by which said balance was reduced to $125. This error was unknown to both parties until then, and the suit was brought in good faith to the county court, the plaintiff supposing that more than $200 was due him, and his original book, put in the case, showing a balance of about $300. On the defendant's motion to dismiss the action for want of jurisdiction, the county court refused. Held correct. By Prout, J.: The matter in demand and in controversy was the amount of the plaintiff's claim, as unaffected by unintentional errors not known or discovered when the action was commenced. Scott v. Moore, 41 Vt. 205.

20. Trespass on freehold. In trespass on the freehold, setting the ad damnum at $20 is conclusive as to the original jurisdiction of the county court. Doubleday v. Martin, 27 Vt. 488.

21. The question in the supreme court. It seems, that where the county court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter, the case will not be dismissed by the supreme court, because the amount of the plaintiff's claim was less than that prescribed for the original jurisdiction of the county court, unless it appear by the exceptions that such objection was there taken. Powers v. Thayer, 30 Vt. 361.

II. APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

22. If a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of the cause, the county court on appeal has none, and whenever, at any stage of the proceedings, the defect is discovered, the suit must be dismissed. Richardson v. Denison, 1 Aik. 210.

23. A new declaration, filed in the county court on appeal, is but an amplification of the one before the justice. It cannot give a jurisdiction which did not before exist; nor should it be construed to take away one which before did exist. Perkins v. Rich, 12 Vt. 595. Thompson v. Colony, 6 Vt. 91.

See JURISDICTION.

COVENANTS.

I. ACTION IN GENERAL.

II. COVENANTS FOR TITLE.

1. Of seisin.
2. For quiet enjoyment
3. Against incumbrances.
4. To warrant and defend.

III. COVENANTS IN LEASES.

I. ACTION IN GENERAL.

1. Kind of contract. In an indenture, each covenant is to be considered as only the covenant of the party who is to perform it, and as his language, and not that of the other party. The signature of the other party only indicates his acceptance of the covenant in the terms in which it is made. Olcott v. Dunklee, 16 Vt. 478.

2. An action of covenant will not lie upon an agreement by a lessee to pay rent, contained in a lease by deed poll not signed and sealed by the lessee, although the lessee accepted the lease and held and occupied under it. Johnson v. Muzzy, 45 Vt. 419. Peck, J., dissenting.

3. Where the time for the performance of a sealed contract is extended by parol, an action of covenant will not lie upon it, as extended, but the action must be assumpsit, treating the enlargement as having incorporated into itself the original terms of the contract, and so all as resting in parol. Sherrin v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 24 Vt. 347. Barker v. Troy & Rut. R. Co., 27 Vt. 766.

4. In an action of covenant by one of the covenantees in a deed inter partes, where the covenant was in form to the covenantees jointly, he was allowed to recover for an injury to his several interest, upon that covenant which referred specially to that interest;—the court adopting the rule, that where the interest in the subject matter secured by the covenant is several, although the terms of the covenant may more naturally bear a joint interpretation, yet if they do not exclude the inference of being intended to be several, they shall be so taken,—shall have a several construction put upon them. Sharp v. Conklin, 16 Vt. 355. See Catlin v. Barnard, 1 Aik. 9.

5. Pleadings. In covenant, the general issue is non est factum. Non infregit conventionem is always to be pleaded in bar. Phelps v. Sawyer, 1 Aik. 150.

6. Under a plea of non est factum to a declaration in covenant for rent, the defendant cannot give in evidence that a third party was in adverse possession of the premises when the lease was executed and when it was assigned to the defendant, since the lease and assignment were operative to pass the term as between the parties and their legal privies. University of Vt. v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52.

II. COVENANTS FOR TITLE.

1. Of seisin.

7. Nature of this covenant. A covenant in a deed of lands that the grantor is well seized of the premises in fee simple, is a covenant of title, and, if broken at all, is broken when made, and becomes a chose in action not assignable. Williams v. Wetherbee, 1 Aik. 233. Garfield v. Williams, 2 Vt. 327. Catlin v. Hurlburt, 3 Vt. 403. Richardson v. Dorr, 5 Vt. 9. Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98. Clark v. Conroe, 38 Vt. 469. Suasey v. Brooks, 30 Vt. 692.

8. The covenant of seisin is an assurance to the grantee that the grantor has the very estate, in quantity and quality, which he purports to convey. Clark v. Conroe; and a seisin in fact merely, with claim of title, does not satisfy the covenant. Richardson v. Dorr, 5 Vt. 9. 22 Vt. 106.

9. Breach. A life estate in the granted premises, outstanding at the time of the execution of the deed, constitutes a breach of the covenant of seisin, without eviction. Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98.

10. To satisfy the words of a covenant of seisin in fee, it must appear that the covenantor had not only an estate in fee, but that he was seized of the lands and had a right to the possession. Showing an estate less than a fee, or a title less than the whole, or a tortious possession, would be showing a breach of the covenant. Richardson v. Dorr, 5 Vt. 9. Mills v. Catlin. Downer v. Smith, 38 Vt. 464.

11. An outstanding right to draw off the water of a natural spring of water, situate upon lands conveyed, is a breach of the covenant of seisin in the deed conveying the premises by metes and bounds, and describing them as a parcel of land. Clark v. Conroe, 38 Vt. 469.

12. Where the defendant conveyed lands by warranty deed, containing the usual covenant of seisin, and had title to only an undivided half;—Held, that he was liable for a breach of the covenant as to the one-half, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover one-half the consideration paid for the land with interest. Downer v. Smith, 38 Vt. 464.

13. Declaration. In an action on the covenant of seisin, the declaration must set forth a deed which is legally sufficient. Crane v. Col-lard, Brayt. 49.

14. Trial. In an action upon the covenant of seisin and right to convey, it is no defense that the same deed contained a covenant of warranty upon which the defendant remains contingently liable to the plaintiff's assignee by deed of warranty, but the court may make a rule for the defendant's protection. Catlin v. Hurlburt, 3 Vt. 403.

15. In such case, execution should be ordered stayed, until the plaintiff shall have caused the defendant to be released from any covenants in his deed which run with the land conveyed. Ib. Blake v. Burnham, 29 Vt. 437.

16. Damages. In an action for breach of the covenant of seisin, the general rule of damages is the consideration paid with interest thereon. Garfield v. Williams, 2 Vt. 327. Catlin v. Hurlburt, 3 Vt. 403. Richardson v. Dorr, 5 Vt. 9. Blake v. Burnham. Downer v. Smith, 38 Vt. 464. Flint v. Steadman, 36 Vt. 210.

17. But where the plaintiff has occupied the lands and is saved from liability to account for the rents and profits, these may be allowed as against the interest. Flint v. Steadman.

18. Damages, beyond the price agreed and simple interest thereon, will not be given because the covenantee has paid annual interest on his notes given for the price, or has paid taxes on the land. Blake v. Burnham, 29 Vt. 437.

19. In an action upon the covenant of seisin, it does not go in mitigation of damages that the plaintiff had used the land,—as by cutting timber upon it,—for he is liable for this to the right owner. Catlin v. Hurlburt. 3 Vt. 403.

20. In such action, where the grantee's title had become perfect by 15 years' possession before trial;—Held, that nominal damages only were recoverable. Garfield v. Williams, 2 Vt. 327.

2. For quiet enjoyment.

21. Construction. A covenant in a deed of lands: "That said grantee shall hold the premises, so that neither I, my heirs or assigns, or any person claiming under me or them, or under New Hampshire, shall ever have any right, title, interest or demand thereto, but shall by this deed be forever barred and excluded," was held to be not precisely a covenant of warranty, nor a covenant of seisin; but was a covenant for quiet enjoyment as against the claims specified, and was not broken by any dormant right, title or claim, not put in exercise to the prejudice of the grantee's claim. Everts v. Brown, 1 D. Chip. 96.

22. A covenant for quiet enjoyment was held to be implied from the language of a perpetual lease in the habendum: "To have and to hold, use, occupy, possess and enjoy, &c., as the lessee might choose or see proper, without interruption, &c., and to his heirs, executors, &c." Knapp v. Marlboro, 29 Vt. 282.

23. Breach. Where, at the time of a conveyance with warranty, the grantee finds the premises in the possession of one claiming under a paramount title, this amounts in law to an eviction, to the extent of the adverse right claimed, without any other act on the part of the grantee, or the claimant, and is a breach both of the covenant for quiet enjoyment and of warranty. Russ v. Steele, 40 Vt. 310. Clark v. Conroe, 38 Vt. 469.

24. The covenant for quiet enjoyment applies merely to the acts of those claiming by title, and to rights existing at the time it was entered into. Knapp v. Marlboro, 34 Vt. 285.

25. A covenant for quiet enjoyment, in a lease, relates to the lessor's title and right to grant the premises leased and the possession of them during the term, and not to the possession and enjoyment of them, in fact, by the lessee as against those who have no right to disturb him. It is a covenant that the lessee shall not be rightfully disturbed in his possession and enjoyment during the term, and not that he shall not be disturbed at all. Underwood v. Birchard, 47 Vt. 305.

26. The defendants, as trustees, leased trust property to the plaintiff, then in the possession of third parties under an agreement with the defendant's predecessor in the trust. Said parties refused to surrender to the plaintiff, and continued in possession during his term. It did not appear that they were entitled, under said agreement, to hold as against the plaintiff, nor that they had any other title by which they could rightfully keep him out. Held, that the plaintiff was not kept out by title elder and better than his own, so as to constitute a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment in the lease. Id.

3. Against incumbrances.

27. What is an incumbrance. A deed of land containing a stipulation that the grantee shall build and maintain the partition fence, creates an incumbrance which runs with the land. Kellogg v. Robinson, 6 Vt. 276.

28. A covenant against incumbrances is not broken by the fact that there appears upon the town records a pre-existing mortgage of the lands, not discharged, if the mortgage had, in fact, been paid and satisfied before the making of the covenant. Judevine v. Pennock, 15 Vt. 688.

29. The existence of a highway is an incumbrance upon land conveyed, and is embraced in a covenant against "incumbrances" although the highway is open and notorious; and parol evidence is not admissible that it was not so intended. Butler v. Gale, 27 Vt. 789. (Changed by G. S. c. 24, s. 81.)

30. The fact that real estate was put in the grand list to its then owner on the 1st of April preceding its conveyance, and that taxes were voted and assessed upon it against him after the conveyance, does not constitute a breach of the covenant in the deed against incumbrances, until such taxes have become legally fixed upon the land so as to become a definite burden upon it which the grantee may properly remove by payment; and the taxes do not so become fixed upon the land, until the preliminary remedies against the goods, chattels or body of the person against whom the taxes were assessed have been exhausted; but when so fixed, the burden may be referred to and date from the date of the list. Until then the lien rests upon a contingency and cannot be regarded as a present incumbrance. Hutchins v. Moody, 30 Vt. 655. 31 Vt. 719.

31. A lien for taxes becomes a fixed incumbrance upon land, within the covenant against incumbrances, where the collector, by some official act, proceeds so far as to indicate or manifest his intention to pursue the land for the purpose of enforcing the collection of the taxes, agreeably to the statute. Hutchins v. Moody, 34 Vt. 433.

32. A covenant against incumbrances except a mortgage of an amount stated, was held broken where the mortgage debt exceeded that amount. Potter v. Taylor, 6 Vt. 676.

33. Date of breach. In an action of covenant broken upon a covenant against incumbrances, the defendant pleaded that he had kept and performed his covenant,—and issue joined. The plaintiff proved that there was a mortgage existing upon the premises, when the defendant's deed, containing the covenant, was given. The defendant proved that, before the commencement of the suit, he had paid up the mortgage. Held, that this was not pertinent to the issue joined; that the covenant was broken when made, and that a subsequent payment of the mortgage did not tend to prove that there had been no breach of the covenant. Judevine v. Pennock, 14 Vt. 438. Richardson v. Dorr, 5 Vt. 9.

34. The covenants of seisin, and against incumbrances, if broken at all, are broken as soon as made, and so the right of action then accrues, and is not assignable, and does not run with the land to a subsequent grantee. Swasey v. Brooks, 30 Vt. 692.

35. Whether assignable. Covenants not running with the land are assignable in equity, so as to pass to the assignee the right to enforce them by action in the name of the covenantee; or, in equity, in his own name, in a case proper to be proceeded with in a court of equity. Hagar v. Buck, 44 Vt. 285.

36. Declaration. A breach of the covenant against incumbrances must be specially assigned, setting forth the incumbrance complained of; whereas, a general assignment of breaches of the covenant of seisin and of good right to bargain and sell, is sufficient. Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98.

37. A declaration on a covenant against incumbrances, created by an ancient deed, must connect the defendant's title with such deed, or it is ill on demurrer. Kellogg v. Robinson, 6 Vt. 276.

38. Damages. In an action on the covenant against incumbrances, the plaintiff can recover nominal damages only on account of the incumbrance of a mortgage, unless he has made payments thereon; but he may recover damages to the extent of such payments, though made after the commencement of his suit. Potter v. Taylor, 6 Vt. 676. Richardson v. Dorr, 5 Vt. 9.

39. The warrantee in a deed, who paid off an incumbrance, was allowed to recover on the warranty the sum paid, although he took an assignment to himself of the demands constituting the incumbrance. Alden v. Parkhill, 18 Vt. 206.

40. A claimed an easement in the plaintiff's land to have and repair a drain, which land had been conveyed by the defendant to the plaintiff, with covenants against incumbrances. A entered upon the land to clear the drain, when the plaintiff informed the defendant of A's claim, and the defendant told him A had no such right and told him to sue A. The plaintiff did not sue A, but interfered with A's use of the drain, for which A sued him and recovered judgment. The plaintiff gave the defendant notice of the suit and asked him to defend it, but he neglected. In an action upon the covenant;—Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to sue A, but was at liberty to interfere with A's operations and test his right in that way;—Held, further, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the damage he had sustained in consequence of the breach of the covenant, and all such costs and expenses as he had fairly and in good faith incurred in attempting to maintain and defend his title in the suit with A. Smith v. Sprague, 40 Vt. 43. See Park v. Bates, 12 381. Pitkin v. Leavitt, 13 Vt. 379. Turner v. Goodrich, 26 Vt. 707.

4. To warrant and defend.

41. Nature and extent of this covenant. A covenant to warrant and defend against all lawful claims is something more than one for quiet enjoyment. It is a covenant to defend, not the possession merely, but the land and the estate in it. Williams v. Wetherbee, 1 Aik. 233. Russ v. Steele, 40 Vt. 310.

42. It extends to all lawful adverse claims, however limited, which necessarily affect the full and complete possession and enjoyment of the premises to which it relates—as, a right of way in an adjoining proprietor, to be used as occasion might require, Russ v. Steele;—or, an outstanding right to a spring of water. Clark v. Conroe, 38 Vt. 469.

43. In a contract to convey lands by a warranty deed, the usual covenants of seisin and against incumbrances would be intended as to be included. Bowen v. Thrall, 28 Vt. 382.

44. A covenant in a conveyance against all lawful claims of all persons, was held to extend to a claim of the University of Vermont for rent chargeable upon the land. Keith v. Day, 15 Vt. 660.

45. A covenant in a conveyance that the grantor will warrant and defend against all persons claiming the premises from or under D, or the grantor, extends only to valid claims, and not pretenses of claims without legal foundation and right. Gleason v. Smith, 41 Vt. 298.

46. A covenant of warranty in a deed is a security to the grantee for such an interest only as the deed, in its premises, purports to convey. Bowen v. Thrall, 28 Vt. 386. Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 104.

47. A grant of land, simply as "lot No. 19," does not by force of the description, ex vi termini, as in case of the grant of a mill site, carry with it any appurtenances; but the appurtenances, if any, which pass with the land, must be ascertained aliunde the deed; and the extent of a covenant of warranty, in such case,

"to warrant and defend the above granted and bargained premises," is limited to the subject matter of the grant. Swasey v. Brooks, 30 Vt. 692.

48. Where one having no title to land conveys it with covenants of warranty, and subsequently acquires title thereto, his title enures to his grantee by operation of law, in discharge of his covenants. Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336. Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 39. Carbee v. Hopkins, 41 Vt. 250. Cross v. Martin, 46 Vt. 14.

49. Breach—Eviction. To support an action on the covenant of warranty, there must have been an eviction, or some disturbance or hindrance in the enjoyment, tantamount. Rich v. Wait, N. Chip. 68.

50. To constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty, an eviction of the grantee, or his assignee, by a lawful title in the evictor, existing before or at the time of the grant, is indispensably necessary. Swasey v. Brooks, 34 Vt. 451. Pitkin v. Leavitt, 13 Vt. 384.

51. Final judgment in ejectment against the grantee in a deed constitutes a breach of the covenant of warranty, although he continues in possession, but under a title afterwards purchased in. Drury v. Shumway, 1 D. Chip. 110.

52. An adverse possession in a stranger at the date of the deed is not, of itself, a breach of the covenant to warrant and defend; but if it has then ripened into a title, it is an eviction, and constitutes a breach of the covenant. Phelps v. Sawyer, 1 Aik. 150.

53. In an action on the covenant of warranty, it is a sufficient breach to show that the covenant has been prevented by elder and better title from entering and enjoying the premises. This is equivalent to an eviction. Park v. Bates, 12 Vt. 381. Brown v. Taylor, 13 Vt. 631. Turner v. Goodrich, 26 Vt. 707.

54. It is a sufficient breach of this covenant to show that, by reason of an older and better title, the plaintiff has been kept out of possession, or that he has been compelled to buy in an older and better title, or to pay a mortgage to protect his title. Peck, J., in Boyd v. Bartlett, 36 Vt. 14.

55. A paramount outstanding title, with actual possession under it, is a constructive eviction of the grantee in a deed, and is, of itself, a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, or of warranty contained in the deed. Clark v. Conroe, 38 Vt. 469.

56. A title outstanding at the time of entering into a covenant of warranty, which is elder and better than that of the covenantor, and which is asserted by bringing suit against the covenantee in possession of the land, and which he is compelled to buy in to prevent being dispossessed of the land, amounts in law to a breach of the covenant. Turner v. Goodrich, 26 Vt. 707.

57. A final recovery in ejectment against the grantee, by virtue of an older and paramount title, is a sufficient breach of the covenant of warranty to entitle him to maintain an action, without being actually put out of possession. Williams v. Wetherbee, 1 Aik. 233. S. C., 2 Aik. 329.

58. So, also, is a decision of the supreme court, on an appeal from chancery, adjudging a mortgage to be a valid incumbrance older than and paramount to the plaintiff's title under his deed, with a mandate to the court of chancery directing that decision to be carried out by a decree—although the amount due on the mortgage was not then definitely ascertained. Boyd v. Bartlett, 36 Vt. 9.

59. A deed of land described it simply as lot No. 19 in a certain town, habendum, &c., "with the appurtenances thereof;" and contained a covenant to warrant and defend "the above granted and bargained premises." In an action on this covenant by a subsequent grantee against the grantor, he claimed to recover upon the ground, that a recovery had been had against him for flowing back water upon land situate above No. 19, by means of a mill-dam upon lot 19 which was upon that lot at the date of the defendant's deed, and had remained of the same height ever after. It not appearing that the dam, before the date of the defendant's deed, did in fact set back the water upon the land above No. 19, nor that the defendant exercised or claimed the right so to flow the land;—Held, that no breach of the covenant was shown. Swasey v. Brooks, 30 Vt. 692.

60. Runs with the land—Right of assignee to sue. The covenant of warranty runs with the land, and is intended for the benefit of the ultimate grantee in whose time it is broken. The right of the first covenantee is not extinguished upon his becoming himself a grantor and covenantor, but to some purposes still subsists; yet, the cause of action for breach of the original covenant primarily attaches in the last grantee, as being the person for whose sake the covenant was created, and the only person directly injured by its breach. But in case an intermediate grantor has made satisfaction for such breach to his own grantee, then the right of suing upon the prior covenant is in him alone. Williams v. Wetherbee, 1 Aik. 233. 26 Vt. 294. Russ v. Steele, 40 Vt. 310.

61. Where an assignable estate in lands is conveyed by deed, as a fee simple, and covenants running with the land, as a covenant of warranty, are given to fortify the title, such covenant may be sued by any one in the estate, at the time of the breach, although the covenant is general—as, "to warrant and defend the premises," without naming heirs, or assigns—or, where it is in the name of the grantee only. Smith v. Perry, 26 Vt. 279.

62. As a general rule, the right of the grantee in a deed, or of any intermediate assignee, to sue for the breach of a covenant running with the land—as a covenant of warranty—after parting with the estate, depends upon his having made satisfaction to the party evicted. But where a judgment had been recovered against the plaintiff (an intermediate assignee), by his grantee who had been evicted, although such judgment had not been satisfied, and the plaintiff's suit was brought with the privity and for the benefit of the party evicted;—Held, that the action could be maintained; and, such action being against the estate of the original warrantor, which was in the course of settlement, the plaintiff was allowed to take judgment for full damages, under a rule, that if any other sum should be allowed against the estate for breach of the same covenant, it should be deducted from the damages recovered in this action. Ib.

63. An intermediate grantee who has conveyed the estate, without warranty, cannot sue for breach of a covenant running with the land, which accrued after his conveyance. Keith v. Day, 15 Vt. 660. 26 Vt. 294.

64. Where one sues, as assignee, for breach of a covenant running with the land, he must prove a legal assignment to himself going back to the covenantee. Beardsley v. Knight, 4 Vt. 471.

65. A quit-claim deed is sufficient to pass such previous covenants as go with the land. Beardsley v. Knight, 10 Vt. 185.

66. Collateral warranty. The common law as to collateral warranties is not adopted in this State. The plaintiff inherited land from his father, which was set out to his mother as her dower. The mother, by deed of warranty, conveyed the land as in fee to a stranger. Held, that such collateral warranty did not bar the plaintiff from recovering the land after the death of his mother. Lyman v. Hollister, 12 Vt. 407.

67. Declaration. In declaring for breach of the covenant of warranty, it is not indispensable to aver that the recovery constituting a breach was by elder and better title, but it is sufficient if averred that it was elder and independent, and has prevailed. Williams v. Wetherbee, 1 Aik. 233.

68. But on trial it must be proved that such recovery was by elder and better title, or else that the covenantor was vouched in to defend. S. C., 2 Aik. 329; but see 13 Vt. 384.

69. In an action upon covenants passing to an assignee, there is a distinction between declaring by an assignee, and against him. In the latter case, it is enough to say generally that the estate has come to the defendant by assignment; whereas in the former, the plaintiff, being privy to the same conveyances, must set them forth sufficiently to show title in himself. But in such case, it is a sufficient setting forth of the assignment of the covenant, to state that the several grantors successively conveyed the premises by deed in fee simple, giving the dates of the deeds, omitting the operative parts and the formalities of their execution;—for the assignment of the covenant is but the legal consequence of its union with the land. Williams v. Wetherbee, 1 Aik. 233.

70. Damages. In an action for breach of covenant of warranty of title, the rule of damages, in this State, is the value of the land at the time of the eviction, or decision made against the title, without regard to the consideration of the deed. Park v. Bates, 12 Vt. 381. Devey v. Shumway, 1 D. Chip. 110;—to which is to be added interest, and actual cost of a former suit where the decision was against the title. Williams v. Wetherbee, 2 Aik. 329;—legal costs and necessary expenses of the action of ejectment. Pitkin v. Leavitt, 13 Vt. 379. 40 Vt. 46.

71. If the covenantor be obliged to purchase in the outstanding title, all necessary expenses, including costs of suit while pending, and counsel fees, are recoverable as damages. Turner v. Goodrich, 26 Vt. 707. 26 Vt. 752–3.

72. In an action on the covenant of warranty, after eviction by suit, the rule of damages is the value of the land at the time of the eviction, the costs and damages which the plaintiff has been obliged to pay to the adverse party, with interest, his own costs in the suit, with interest, and necessary expenses, which include counsel fees. Keeler v. Wood, 30 Vt. 242; and see Smith v. Sprague, 40 Vt. 43.

73. In an action upon the covenant of warranty, after an eviction by judgment in ejectment, the amount recovered for betterments in the ejectment suit was held properly taken into account in assessing the damages. Drury v. Shumway, 1 D. Chip. 110.

74. Where the defendant in his deed to the plaintiff covenanted against all lawful claims of all persons, and the land was subject to an outstanding charge of a perpetual annual rent, which the defendant failed to keep down and suffered to run behind, by reason whereof the plaintiff was evicted in ejectment;—Held, in an action on such covenant, that the measure of damages was not the rents and costs recovered in such action of ejectment, but, as in ordinary cases, the value of the land at the time of the eviction. Keith v. Day, 15 Vt. 660.

75. Warrantor vouched in. Where one gives a covenant of warranty or indemnity, he is not bound by a judgment against the covenantee in a suit of which he had not notice—this being strictly inter alios; but the covenantee may, but at his peril, pay a claim even without suit, and yet recover of his warrantor by proof that it was a claim that could not be resisted. Castleton v. Miner, 8 Vt. 209.

76. Under a deed with warranty, if the covenantee finds some one in possession of the land, he may bring his action for possession, and, if he fail to recover, this is prima facie a breach of the covenant, without notice to his warrantor to defend the title; and, with such notice, the judgment is conclusive against the warrantor and his representatives. Redfield, C. J., in Turner v. Goodrich, 26 Vt. 708. Park v. Bates, 12 Vt. 881. Brown v. Taylor, 13 Vt. 631. 30 Vt. 87. Pitkin v. Leavitt, 13 Vt. 379.

77. A warrantor or covenantor, not vouched in to defend, has no control over, and is not bound by, the proceedings in the suit. Knapp v. Marlboro, 31 Vt. 674.

78. Defense to action for price of land sold. In an action to recover the price of land sold, where the plaintiff, claiming the land by a title which was spread upon the town record, conveyed it with the usual covenants of warranty, and the defendant had not been disturbed by any adverse claim;—Held, that defect of title, arising from the form of a previous conveyance to the plaintiff, was not a defense, but that the defendant's remedy was upon the covenants. Dix v. School District, 22 Vt. 309.

III. COVENANTS IN LEASES.

79. Expulsion of tenant. To an action of covenant upon a lease for rent, the defendant pleaded an expulsion from the premises by a third person under adverse claim of title. A replication, with a special traverse, that the defendant was not expelled "from the entire premises," was held sufficient,—for the rent is apportionable, and the plea purporting to be an answer to the entire cause of action, was not so in fact. University of Vt. v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52.

80. To an action of covenant upon a lease for rent, a plea is insufficient which avers that, before the execution of the lease, a third person, named, entered upon the premises and expelled the plaintiff and continued in possession to the day of the demise, and on that day occupied and held the same, claiming the same by adverse title, and that such disseisor has so continued in adverse possession until the time of pleading, excluding as well the plaintiff as the defendant from the demised premises, where the plea does not connect the defendant with the disseisor's title, and does not aver that his title was paramount to the plaintiff's. Bennett, J. Ib.; and see Undervood v. Birchard, 47 Vt. 305.

81. The plaintiff, tenant of leased premises, had paid part of the rent for the year, when the defendant, his landlord, ejected him, taking the crops, &c. In an action on the covenant for quiet enjoyment;—Held, that the true rule of damages was the difference between the two conditions of continuing under the lease to the end of the year, and of being ejected as he was; and that this required the deduction from his gross loss of all the unpaid rent, although the defendant could not have recovered it by action. Merritt v. Closson, 36 Vt. 172.

82. Covenant to repair, &c. A lessee covenanting to carry on the leased premises in a good husbandlike manner, and maintain the buildings, &c., is bound at all times to perform these covenants; and, for a breach, the lessor may maintain an action before the termination of the lease, and recover his actual damages. Buck v. Pike, 27 Vt. 529.

83. Assignments. The covenant arising out of the words "yielding and paying" is an implied, as distinguished from an express, covenant, and the lessee is not made liable thereby for rents accrued after an assignment of his term. Kimpton v. Walker, 9 Vt. 191.

84. In an action of covenant by the assignee of the reversion against the lessee, upon his express covenant to pay the rent to the lessor, or his assigns;—Held, that it was no defense that the lessee had assigned the term to another, and that the plaintiff had accepted him as tenant and had received from him one year's rent. Shaw v. Partridge, 17 Vt. 626.

85. In an action of covenant for rent by the lessor against the assignee of the term, it is not necessary in the declaration to allege, nor on trial to prove, an entry and possession by the assignee. If the title and possessory right passed, the assignee became possessed in law of the term, and an actual possession is not material. University of Vt. v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52. Pingry v. Watkins, 15 Vt. 488. S. C., 17 Vt. 379.

86. The landlord may declare against an assignee of his lessee for a share of the rent reserved in the lease, proportioned to the relative value of that part which the defendant holds by the assignment. Pingry v. Watkins.

87. Quere—Whether, upon an allegation that all the estate, interest, &c., of the lessee in the premises came to the defendant by assignment, proof that part only of the premises leased was assigned makes a variance.—"I should incline to the contrary opinion." Royce, J. Ib.

88. But without an assignment of the lessee's whole estate and interest in the premises assigned, there can be no legal assignment; the conveyance of a less interest is at most an underlease, or a conveyance in the nature of one. Ib.

89. In an action of covenant for rent against the assignee of the lessee, the declaration averred that all the estate, &c., of the lessee came to and vested in the defendant by assignment, and that the defendant entered into possession under the assignment and retained the possession until the rent became due. Under a plea denying the assignment and the defendant's possession—and issue joined;—Held, that the fact of the assignment was the only material part of the issue, and that proof of that entitled the plaintiff to a verdict. Pingry v. Watkins, 17 Vt. 379.

90. A lessor by perpetual lease, reserving rent, has an assignable interest in the estate which he can transfer with such covenants as run with the land, or to his assigns. Shaw v. Partridge, 17 Vt. 626.

91. In a lease, a covenant to convey to the lessee upon certain conditions during the term, runs with the land, and passes to the assignee at law, although not named. Hagar v. Buck, 44 Vt. 285.

CRIMES.

I. IN GENERAL.

II. OFFENSES AGAINST LIFE AND PERSON, G. S. CH. 112.

1. Homicide and murderous assaults.
2. Rape and assault with intent.

III. OFFENSES AGAINST PROPERTY,—G. S. CH. 113.

1. Arson.
2. Burglary.
3. Larceny.
4. False pretenses.
5. Wounding, &c., of cattle, &c.
6. Wilful mischief.

IV. FORGERY AND COUNTERFEITING,—G. S. CH. 114.

V. OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC JUSTICE. G. S. CH. 115.

1. Perjury.
2. Suppressing evidence.
3. Impeding an officer.

VI. OFFENSES AGAINST THE PUBLIC PEACE G. S. CH. 116.

VII. OFFENSES AGAINST CHASTITY, MORALITY AND DECENCY, G. S. CH. 117. Adultery; Bigamy; Incest; Keeping house of ill fame; &c.

VIII. OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY. G. S. CH. 119.

IX. CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

1. Proceedings before justice.
2. Indictment and information.
3. Proceedings after indictment

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Age of capacity. Capacity for crime in persons above the age of seven years, is, in the last analysis, always a question of fact. As the result of observation and experience, the law assumes, prima facie, that persons above fourteen years of age are capable of crime, but subjects that assumption to the effect of proof as to the real fact. The intermediate period is called by Blackstone "the dubious stage of discretion." In reference to capacity during this period the law makes no presumption, but leaves it to be determined by the jury upon the evidence. Barrett, J., in State v. Learnard, 41, Vt. 589.

2. Under an indictment charging the respondent, as principal, in a burglary and larceny the evidence was that the acts were done by his children, a boy above and a girl below the age of fourteen years, by his command and coercion, he remaining at home, a mile distant from the place of the burglary. Held, that the court could not charge, as matter of law, that the duress of the girl should be referred to the presence and influence of the boy, and not to the duress of the respondent; that the question of duress of the girl, and of her capacity for crime, were questions of fact for the jury upon the whole evidence, and not for the court upon any selected part of the evidence, nor upon the whole evidence. Id., and see State v. Potter, 42 Vt. 495.

3. Felony. Felony, as existing at common law, is not known to the laws of this State, as crimes do not work a forfeiture of the estate. (See post 187–8, 195.) But offenses are distinguishable into what may be termed crimes and misdemeanors; the former punishable capitally, or by confinement in the State prison, and the latter by fine, or imprisonment in the county jail; and, as there is no difference in the mode of trial which can operate against the right of the accused, no reason exists in this State, why one indicted for what would be a felony at common law, may not be convicted of a misdemeanor. Isham, J., in State v. Scott, 24 Vt. 130. See State v. McLeran, 1 Aik. 311.

4. Thus, under an indictment for an assault with intent to commit murder, there may be an acquittal of the specific offense charged, and a conviction for a common assault. State v. Coy, 2 Aik. 181.

5. So, under an indictment for manslaughter, in one count, there may be a conviction for an assault and battery. State v. Scott, 24 Vt. 127.

6. Party forcibly brought within jurisdiction. In a prosecution for a crime committed in this State, the respondent cannot object that he was forcibly and against his will taken in Canada and brought into this State, and without the consent of the authorities of Canada. State v. Brewster, 7 Vt. 118.

7. Change of venue. The supreme court has no power to order a change of venue in a criminal case; nor has the county court authority to try such case in any other county than that in which the offense was committed. State

v. Howard, 31 Vt. 414. (Changed by Stat. 1865, No. 1.)

II. OFFENSES AGAINST LIFE AND PERSON. G. S. CH. 112.

1. Homicide and murderous assaults.

8. Distinction between murder and manslaughter. If one inflict a mortal wound with a deadly weapon upon a vital part, it is a presumption of fact that he designed the natural consequences of his act, and it is murder, unless he shows that the result was not designed, or that it was done in heat of blood upon legal provocation, or was justifiable. State v. McDonnell, 32 Vt. 491.

9. In case of a homicide not justifiable, if the design to kill be formed deliberately, for ever so short a time before the giving of the mortal wound, or if formed without such provocation as the law regards as sufficient justification for anger and heat of blood, the offense is murder. Ib.

10. If in a mutual combat, without previous malice, and after mutual blows given, one party draws his knife and, in the heat and fury of the fight, deals the other a mortal wound, this is but manslaughter, although the blow was given with the purpose to kill. Ib.

11. The doctrine that malice is presumed, prima facie, from the mere fact of killing, questioned. Ib. 538; and see State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 314.

12. Favorable construction. In trials for murder, it is the duty of the court, upon common principles of humanity and justice, first, to pronounce the prisoner innocent until he is proved guilty; and, secondly, after he is shown to have committed a homicide, to look for every excuse which may reduce the guilt to the lowest point consistent with the facts proved. Redfield, C. J., in State v. McDonnell, 32 Vt. 538.

13. A charge was held erroneous, and a new trial granted after conviction for murder, because, there being testimony tending to prove a case of manslaughter only, and this being the respondent's theory, the court omitted to call the jury's attention to it in that light, and only called their attention to the distinction between murder and manslaughter by the announcement of abstract propositions and definitions, without any application of them to the evidence which tended to prove the case to be one of manslaughter. Ib. 491.

14. Manslaughter. Held, that if a man, in order to effect sexual connection with a female, not his wife, uses artificial means—as an instrument to perforate the hymen—and is guilty of such carelessness or negligence as to endanger the life or personal safety of the girl, and her death is caused thereby, he is guilty of manslaughter, although she consented to the connection and the operation. State v. Center, 35 Vt. 878.

15. On a trial for manslaughter, the circumstances of the killing were shown by the prosecution, and exculpatory evidence was given by the defense. The court charged the jury that "if they were convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the death of the deceased was occasioned by the shot fired by the respondent, then the prosecution had made out the killing in the manner charged * * * that all killing is presumed to be unlawful; and where the fact of killing is established, it devolves on the party who committed the act to excuse that killing—to show that it was justified—in order to escape the legal consequences which attach to the commission of the act." Held erroneous—and that the jury should have been instructed, in substance, that upon all the evidence they must find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the crime charged in the indictment was committed by the respondent, in order to warrant his being found guilty. State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308.

16. Carrying weapon. The prisoner having the right to use reasonable force to expel the deceased from his premises;—Held, that he had the right to go prepared with a loaded pistol, to defend himself against any assault the deceased might make upon him while in the exercise of that right; and that if he only intended to use the pistol in such an emergency in defending his own life, or against the infliction of great bodily harm, the carrying it for such a purpose would be lawful; nor could the carrying of the pistol for such lawful purpose, be treated as in itself carelessness. State v. Carlton, 48 Vt. 636.

17. Murderous assaults. There is a well recognized distinction between an assault with intent to murder, and an assault with intent to kill. In the former case, the proof must be such as shows that, if death had been caused by the assault, the assailant would have been guilty of murder; and, in the latter case, the proof need only be such as that, had death ensued, the crime would have been manslaughter. State v. Reed, 40 Vt. 603.

18. The offense named in G. S. c. 112, s. 23, viz.: an assault, being armed with a dangerous weapon, with intent to kill, &c., is a different offense from that named in s. 18, which is for an assault "with intent to kill," simply. Ib.

19. Under a statute punishing an assault "with intent to kill or murder," (G. S. c. 112, s. 23);—Held, that the statute embraces two offenses in the alternative; that each offense might be charged by separate counts in the same indictment, or, as in this case, both may be charged in the conjunctive in the same count—"with intent to kill and murder"—since the intent to murder includes the intent to kill and, if proved, merges the latter, and, if not proved, but the intent to kill is proved, there may be a conviction of the lower offense; as, on an indictment for murder, there may be a conviction for manslaughter. Ib.

20. Under an indictment for an assault with intent to kill, the intent, like the assault, must be proved beyond reasonable, not possible, doubt. State v. Daley, 41 Vt. 564.

21. Torture. An indictment lies for torturing one accused of crime, to extort a confession from him,—this being contrary to the common law and the constitution of Vermont. State v. Hobbs, 2 Tyl. 380.

22. Evidence of intent. In a prosecution for assault and battery the respondent offered to prove that the person assaulted was a quarrelsome and fractious man, but without offering to prove that the respondent had knowledge of such fact. Held, that the offer was properly rejected. State v. Mender, 47 Vt. 78.

23. Where one is charged with an assault, the intent with which the party assaulted came to be connected with the assault, especially if he be a witness, may be important for the defense; and such intent may be shown by the acts of the assaulted party, and his declarations connected with his acts—as, previous affrays, threats, &c. State v. Goodrich, 19 Vt. 116.

2. Rape and Assault with intent.

24. In a trial for rape, the court charged that if the respondent commenced and entered upon the sexual intercourse with the girl's consent, but she then withdrew her consent, and the respondent forcibly continued the intercourse after he had knowledge of her dissent, it would be rape. Held, as applied to the facts of the case, no error;—the girl being only 12 years old and of small stature, the daughter of the respondent's wife, and of his family, &c. State v. Niles, 47 Vt. 82.

25. Upon a trial for rape, where the woman alleged to have been forced is examined as a witness for the prosecution, she may be asked on cross-examination, whether at a specified time and place she had not illicit intercourse with a person named. State v. Johnson, 28 Vt. 512. Bennett, J., dissenting. Affirmed, State v. Reed, 39 Vt. 417.

26. In a prosecution for rape, evidence that the prosecutrix afterwards complained of the act is only admissible as confirmatory of the evidence given by her. Mere lapse of time before such complaint is not the test of the admissibility of such evidence;—this only affects its weight with the jury. State v. Niles, 47 Vt. 82.

27. The particulars of such complaint cannot be given in evidence. The rule is, that it is competent to prove that the prosecutrix made complaint, and that an individual, without naming him, was charged. Ib.

28. If one lay hold of a woman and use force upon her with the intention and for the purpose of having sexual intercourse with her by force and against her will, he may be convicted of an assault with intent to commit a rape, although, after resisting for awhile, she finally yielded, and sexual connection was then had with her, with her consent. State v. Hartigan, 32 Vt. 607.

29. Under an information for an assault with intent to commit a rape, a conviction may be had, though the proof be that a rape was actually committed; and such conviction would be a bar to a prosecution for the rape, on the ground that the less offense is a necessary element in, and constitutes an essential part of, the greater, and both are in fact one transaction. State v. Smith, 43 Vt. 324. (See Stat. 1870, No. 5, s. 9.)

III. OFFENSES AGAINST PROPERTY—G. S. CH. 113.

1. Arson.

30. In an indictment for burning a public building, it is not necessary to allege that it was of, or belonged to, any one. State v. Roe, 12 Vt. 93.

31. Under C. S. c. 104, s. 4, which provides, "If any person shall willfully and maliciously set fire, with intent to burn, to any dwelling house, &c.;"—Held, that the offense defined is an attempt at arson by the application of fire directly to, or in immediate contact with, the building, and that it is not necessary, to a conviction under this statute, that there should be an actual burning of some portion of the building. State v. Dennin, 32 Vt. 158.

2. Burglary.

32. Inn. Held, that a guest at an inn may commit burglary by leaving his own room and breaking into the room of another guest, or into other parts of the house where he has no right to be. State v. Clark, 42 Vt. 629.

33. Noctanter. The respondent was discovered within an inn in the commission of a burglary at half-past three in the morning of August 3d, and the testimony of the witness was, that "it was then dark—day-light was approaching, but that he could not see to distinguish a man's face in the hall where he was without a light, and that none of his guests were up." The court charged the jury that, if they believed this testimony, the offense was committed "in the night time." Held, not erroneous. Id.

34. Indictment for burglary committed "between the hours of twelve at night and nine of the evening succeeding";—Held ill on demurrer, because uncertain whether the act charged was committed by night, or by day. State v. Mather, N. Chip. 82.

35. Indictment—Intent. An indictment for burglary alleged the breaking and entering of the dwelling house of A, with the intent to steal the goods of A in said dwelling house then being, and having so entered, stole the goods of B found in said house. Held, good. State v. Brady, 14 Vt. 353.

36. In an indictment for burglary, the intent may be set forth as an intent to steal "the goods and chattels in said dwelling house then and there being," without stating the ownership of the goods. State v. Clark, 42 Vt. 629.

8. Larceny.

37. What is. Under an indictment for stealing sheep, the court say:—If the respondent took the sheep and changed their local position, however little, and did this with the felonious intent charged, it was enough to constitute the offense. State v. Carr, 18 Vt. 571.

38. A bailee of goods who has a qualified possession—as a servant—is guilty of larceny, if he privately eloids and converts them. State v. White, 2 Tyl. 352.

39. If the finder of goods lost neglects to advertise them, but conceals or privily converts them, he is justly chargeable with larceny. State v. Jenkins, 2 Tyl. 377.

40. Where one hired a horse under the pretense that he wanted the horse to drive to A and would return soon, but intended wholly to deprive the owner of the property and to convert it to his own use, and he drove the horse beyond A, when he was arrested;—Held, that this was larceny, although he had not sold or disposed of the horse; and it seems, that the getting possession of the horse under such false pretense and with such intent, would be larceny. State v. Humphrey, 32 Vt. 569.

41. Original taking in another jurisdiction. One who feloniously steals property in another State of the Union, or in Canada, and brings it into this State, is guilty of larceny in this State, and may be here tried and convicted. State v. Bartlett, 11 Vt. 650. State v. Mockridge, Id. 654.

42. Indictment. An indictment for stealing "two five dollar bank bills or notes of the value," &c., was held ill on demurrer, because not averring that the bills contained a promise to pay money, &c. State v. Emery, Brayt. 131. (Altered by Stat. 1870, No. 5.)

43. In an information for stealing a horse, the horse was described as "of a bay or brown color." Held, that this was not cause for arresting judgment. State v. Gilbert, 13 Vt. 647.

44. In an indictment for larceny, the property was described as "one feather bed." Held, sufficient. State v. Parker, 47 Vt. 19.

45. Since the Revised Statutes, which made horse-stealing larceny simply, there is no objection to joining, in the same count of an indictment, the stealing of a horse, saddle and bridle, &c. State v. Nutting, 16 Vt. 261.

46. An indictment charging in one count the stealing, at one time, of one horse, one buggy and one harness, the property of W. Held not objectionable for duplicity. Horse stealing is by statute larceny, and nothing more; differing from ordinary larceny only in the extent of fine to be imposed. The indictment charges but one offense. State v. Cameron, 40 Vt. 555.

47. So, an indictment charging in one count the stealing of different articles belonging to different persons, but at the same time and place, is not bad for duplicity. It charges but one larceny. State v. Newton, 42 Vt. 537.

48. Intent is for the jury. On trial for stealing, whatever the circumstances of the taking, it must be left to the jury to determine whether the taking was with felonious intent. State v. Smith, 2 Tyl. 272.

49. Evidence. Where goods are stolen, and the whole or part of them are found concealed on a person, this is prima facie evidence that he stole them; and unless he can show that he came by them honestly, must conclude him guilty. State v. Jenkins, 2 Tyl. 377.

50. The prisoner was indicted for larceny. The stolen goods were found concealed some 100 rods from his house, he showing where they were. Held, that it was properly left to the jury to find, under the circumstances stated, whether the goods were found in the prisoner's possession, as if found upon his person or in his house; and that, if so, no explanation being given, they would be warranted in finding him guilty. State v. Brewster, 7 Vt. 118.

51. On a trial for larceny, the evidence for the prosecution tended to prove that the respondent, Sept. 9, 1866, hired a horse and wagon at Rutland for a short ride, but absconded and never returned them; that the owner next day began a search, and continued it until Oct. 17, 1866, when the team was found at Mechanicsville, N. Y., the witness not stating in whose possession, or under what circumstances, it was found. Held, that this made out a prima facie case for the prosecution. State v. Cameron, 40 Vt. 555.

52. On a trial for stealing a horse and wagon, the respondent put in testimony that his brother purchased the property of a stranger. Held, that the prosecutor might show, as tending to contradict this, that this brother was then on the jail limits, had failed in business, and had no visible means to pay his debts. Ib.

53. Question of value. Where the jurisdiction of the county court, in case of larceny, depends upon the value of the property stolen, and the property is of uncertain value, it would be apparently impracticable to raise or settle the question of jurisdiction except by a traversable plea on that ground. Collamer J., in State v. Carr, 18 Vt. 571. 16 Vt. 265.

54. But where the jury by their verdict find that the value of the property stolen is less than the value which gives the jurisdiction, the case must be dismissed. State v. Nutting, 16 Vt. 261.

55. Receiving. An indictment lies against the receiver of goods stolen, though the thief has not been convicted. State v. S. L., 2 Tyl. 2 249. (The information joined a count for stealing with a count for receiving. This is now authorized by Stat. 1870, No. 5).

56. An indictment charged the respondent with receiving and aiding to conceal goods stolen. The copy furnished the respondent omitted the charge of aiding to conceal. After conviction the respondent moved for a new trial for this cause, which motion was overruled. On exceptions, held not to be error. State v. Fuller, 39 Vt. 74.

4. False Pretenses.

57. Indictment—Sufficiency. An information charging that the respondent was a common cheat, and did by divers false pretenses and false tokens cheat and defraud the good people of this State, was held ill on demurrer, because no particular acts constituting the fraud were set forth. State v. Johnson, 1 D. Chip. 129.

58. Slade's Stat. c. 31, s. 30, providing that "if any person shall by false tokens, messages, letters, or by other fraudulent, swindling or deceitful practices, obtain or procure from any other person any money," &c., was held not to embrace the case of false declarations or pretenses merely. State v. Sumner, 10 Vt. 587.

59. In an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses, it is necessary to allege distinctly and positively, as in case of larceny, that the goods were the property of some person named, or else some excuse must be stated for not naming him,—as that they belonged to some person to the jurors unknown. State v. Lathrop, 15 Vt. 279.

60. Also, the time and place of procuring the goods must be set forth. For defect herein judgment was arrested. State v. Bacon, 7 Vt. 219.

61. Conspiracy to cheat, &c. An indictment for a conspiracy must aver, either the criminal purpose of the conspiracy, or else the unlawful means by which it was intended to accomplish a purpose not of itself criminal; and a defect herein will not be aided by averments of overt acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy. Kellogg. J. in State v. Keach, 40 Vt. 113.

62. Thus, an indictment charging the conspiracy to have been to obtain divers goods of certain persons "by divers false pretenses and subtle means and devices," and "to cheat and defraud them thereof," was held ill, in that the charge to cheat and defraud does not necessarily import a criminal offense; and that the description of the means employed is too vague and general, not specifying or describing those acts, but only their quality, which are styled "false pretenses" and "devices." Ib. See State v. Noyes, 25 Vt. 415.

5. Wounding, &c., of Cattle, &c.

63. Offense at common law. The wounding and torturing of a living animal, with wicked and malicious motives, was held indictable at common law as a misdemeanor. State v. Briggs, 1 Aik. 226. (Since made punishable by statute. G. S. c., 113. ss. 25, 26.

64. Under an indictment charging that the respondent confined certain colts in his barnyard in B, and then drove them upon scythes fixed in a bar-way of the yard leading into the inclosure of D, the proof was that the bar-way led into the meadow of the respondent. Held, not material, and no variance. Ib.

65. A mere invasion of private property, without a disturbance of the peace, is but a private trespass and is not indictable at common law. Thus, upon an indictment for that "with force and arms the defendant feloniously and willfully, mischievously and wickedly" did kill a certain steer, the property of another, the judgment was arrested after verdict. State v. Wheeler, 3 Vt. 344.

66. Statute. Under a statute against the wounding of "cattle or other beasts," an indictment for the wounding of a certain "red, three year old steer" was held sufficient. State v. Abbott, 20 Vt. 537.

6. Willful Mischief.

67. In an indictment under G. S. c., 113, s. 49 for cutting, &c., a pipe "used as an aqueduct for the conveyance of water," it is not necessary to allege the quantity or value of the pipe, nor its location, whether above or under ground. State v. Jones, 33 Vt. 443.

IV. FORGERY AND COUNTERFEITING. G. S. CH. 114.

68. Forgery—what is. It is an indispensable element in the crime of forgery, that the forged paper must be such that, if genuine, it might injure another; and the paper must be so set forth in the indictment that it shall appear to be of that character, or the indictment is bad. State v. Briggs, 34 Vt. 501.

69. An indictment for the forging of a "bond" under G. S. c. 114, s. 1, was held ill, which described the instrument as "a certain writing purporting to be a bond, with condition thereto annexed, signed, sealed and executed by A, and dated Jan'y 8, 1853, with intent to injure and defraud the said A, &c." without stating that it was executed to any person, or what the condition was—although it was alleged that the instrument could not be more particularly described, because it was in the possession of the respondent. Ib.

70. A letter signed and directed to a person asking for a loan of money, adding: "I send this line by my daughter. Please send the money the same way" is, it seems, the subject of forgery under the name of an "order drawn on any person." State v. Nevins, 23 Vt. 519.

71. The severing from a promissory note an indorsement of payment, leaving the note entire, is not a forgery within the statute, but a misdemeanor,—a cheat, an offense at common law, punishable by fine and imprisonment. State v. McLeran, 1 Aik. 311. 27 Vt. 314.

72. An indictment charging such offense as forgery under the statute, may be sustained as an indictment for a misdemeanor at common law, treating the words, contra formam statuti, as surplusage. In such case neither a demurrer, nor motion in arrest, can be sustained. State v. McLeran. State v. Phelps, 11 Vt. 116. Brackett v. State, 2 Tyl. 167.

73. Indictment. In an indictment for forgery, the instrument must be set forth in words and figures, unless in certain excepted cases,—as where the instrument is in the possession of the person charged,—in which case that fact must be alleged. State v. Parker, 1 D. Chip. 298.

74. Where an indictment for forgery improperly describes the import of the obligation of the contract forged, this defect is not cured by reciting the instrument in haec verba. State v. Bean, 19 Vt. 530.

75. An indictment for forgery alleging the alteration of the word birch to batch, by erasing the letters ir and inserting at, was held supported by evidence only of the erasing of the letters ir and inserting at, without regard to the letter c. State v. Rowley, Brayt. 76.

76. An indictment for forgery alleged the forging of "a certain paper writing, purporting to be an order for money, together with a certain false and forged acceptance written thereon, drawn upon the President, Directors and Company of the Bank of Vergennes, a banking corporation duly organized," &c.,

setting out the paper in haec verba: (Date.) "Bank of Vergennes, pay to self or bearer, twenty-nine hundred dollars, $2,900. John Gill." (Indorsed) "Good for twenty-nine hundred dollars. H. C. Horton, Teller." Held, after verdict, that the indorsement was properly charged as an acceptance; that the indictment was sufficient without alleging the authority of the teller to accept, the respondent being bound by the representation made by his forgery; and that as the instrument was set out in haec verba, the question of variance between it and the corporate name of the bank did not arise; that the paper was properly named as an order for money; and might have been described as a bill of exchange. State v. Morton, 27 Vt. 310.

77. There is no duplicity in an indictment, in alleging that the respondent forged and caused to be forged and aided and assisted in forging;—these being only the same offense, under the statute, and in legal contemplation the same act. Ib.

78. Evidence. Upon an indictment against several for forgery of a bank check, evidence of an agreement between the defendants to procure money from banks by means of forged paper, is admissible, although such agreement does not have reference to any or the particular bank. Ib.

79. Witness. The person whose name is forged is a competent witness for the State in a prosecution for the forgery. State v. Phelps, 11 Vt. 116.

80. A new trial refused, where the respondent's wife confessed that she committed the forgery for which he had been convicted. State v. J. W., 1 Tyl. 417.

81. Counterfeiting—Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the U. S. courts under the acts of Congress, and that of the courts of this State, under the statutes of the State, over the crime of counterfeiting, are concurrent within the State. State v. Randall, 2 Aik. 89.

82. Indictment. The statute against "uttering, passing or giving in payment" any counterfeited bank bill, &c. (G. S. c. 114, s. 4), makes these acts distinct and independent, and either one constitutes an offense, provided the party had knowledge that the bill, &c., was counterfeit. An indictment for uttering, passing and giving in payment, &c., was held good on demurrer, without alleging that the counterfeit was passed as and for a true bill. These words are not in the statute, and quære, whether, if the indictment had been for giving in payment only, these words would have been necessary. State v. Wilkins, 17 Vt. 151.

83. Under this statute against the uttering, &c., of any counterfeit "bank bill or promissory note";—held, that an indictment naming such counterfeit as a "bank note" was sufficient—these three words being synonymous. Ib.

84. The allegation in an indictment for uttering a counterfeit bank bill, that the bill uttered "was made in imitation of, and did then and there purport to be a bank note for the sum of five dollars issued by," &c., was held to be merely an allegation that the bill was a fiction and pretense, and was not an attempt to set forth the forged bill according to its legal purport, so as to allow the question of variance to be raised between such allegation and the tenor of the bill, as set forth in words and figures. Ib.

85. In an indictment for passing a counterfeit bank bill, the bill was set forth as "purporting to have been issued by the Andover Bank, a banking company incorporated by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, made payable to E F or bearer." Held, on the authority of State v. Wilkins, 17 Vt. 151, and of a long used form, that these words in italics should be construed not as an allegation of the purport of the bill, but of the essential fact of the actual existence or incorporation of such bank. State v. Wheeler, 35 Vt. 261.

86. In an indictment for passing a counterfeit bank bill, it is not necessary to set forth words or figures upon the margin of the bill, which do not add to or qualify it, as set forth—such as "Capital stock $100,000, secured by pledge of $100,000 Pennsylvania 6 per cent. bonds." Ib.

87. Evidence. On trial for counterfeiting, &c., bank bills, it is not necessary to produce the charter of the bank, but it is sufficient to prove that such bank was in operation, issued bills such as were attempted to be imitated, &c.,—and, in case of an indictment for counterfeiting the bills of the Bank of the United States, the case was held well left to rest upon the general knowledge which the jurors, in common with the other citizens of the United States, possessed, as to the existence of the bank. State v. Randall, 2 Aik. 89.

88. That the signatures to a bank bill are counterfeit, may be proved by one who has become acquainted with the handwriting of the president and cashier in course of business, though without having seen them write. State v. Lawrence, Brayt. 78. State v. Ravelin, 1 D. Chip. 295.

89. Description of the thing counterfeited. An averment in an indictment that the coins intended to be counterfeited were "current silver coin of this State and of the United States, called half-dollars," is not equivalent to the words of the statute, "made current by the laws of this or the United States";—Held ill on demurrer. State v. Bowman, 6 Vt. 594.

90. Under the statute against counterfeiting "coin in the similitude of any gold or silver coin current by law or usage in this State" (G. S. c. 114, s. 10), it was held sufficient to allege that the counterfeit coin was in the similitude of the current money and silver coin of the United States, called half dollars, without averring that they were current by law or usage in this State. The court will take judicial notice of this. State v. Griffin, 18 Vt. 198.

91. Under an indictment for coining, it is not necessary to aver of what materials the counterfeit coin was made. If this be averred it need not be proved. Ib.

92. An allegation in an indictment that the respondent "ten pieces of false, forged and counterfeit coin, &c., did forge, make and counterfeit, &c.," was held sufficient notwithstanding the ambiguous use of the word counterfeit. Ib.

93. The word counterfeited construed as counterfeit, in State v. Randall, 2 Aik. 89.

94. Instruments for counterfeiting. Under the statute making it a crime to have in possession "any die, stamp or other instrument or tool for the purpose of forging or counterfeiting," &c.;—Held, that a crucible, for the purpose of melting, mixing, &c., metals for the purpose of counterfeiting, did not fall within the statute. State v. Bowman, 6 Vt. 594.

95. The statute against having in possession any mould, &c., or other tool or instrument adapted and designed for making any counterfeit coin, &c. (G. S. c. 114, s. 10), was held to reach every part of the apparatus for coining—as the half of a mould, or mould for but one side of the coin. State v. Griffin, 18 Vt. 198.

V. OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC JUSTICE. G. S. CH. 115.

1. Perjury.

96. Judicial proceeding. In an indictment for perjury it is material that it should appear that the oath was taken in a judicial proceeding. This is matter of substance. State v. Chamberlin, 30 Vt. 559.

97. In an indictment for perjury in an answer in chancery, it was alleged that A B "exhibited his certain bill of complaint in the court of chancery against" the respondent, &c., setting forth the material substance of the bill and prayer, and concluding, "as in and by said bill remaining filed of record in said court of chancery will more fully appear," and then set forth the false swearing—the indictment being according to the form in 2 Ch. Cr. Law, 886. Held, on motion in arrest, that this sufficiently set forth that the answer was sworn to in a judicial proceeding. Ib.

98. So, where the indictment alleged that C D "brought a petition of divorce addressed to the supreme court," &c., "stating in her petition," &c., and then stated the substance of the petition and prayer, and proceeded—

"whereupon it became necessary to take the testimony of witnesses in the premises," and then stated that the respondent appeared, &c., and "made his deposition as to facts in the premises," &c., and then set forth the false swearing;—Held, on demurrer, that the pendency of a judicial proceeding sufficiently appeared, and that the perjury was committed therein—that the words, "facts in the premises," refer to the petition and are equivalent to facts stated in the petition. State v. Sleeper, 37 Vt. 122.

99. So, where the allegation was that C D "petitioned the supreme court," &c. State v. Magoon. Ib.

100. The statute requiring that the complaint in a bastardy prosecution should be in writing;—Held, that an indictment for suborning a woman to commit perjury in making and swearing to a complaint in such case, not alleging that such complaint was in writing, did not show that the false swearing was in a proper judicial proceeding, and was held ill on motion in arrest. State v. Simons, 30 Vt. 620.

101. Perjury cannot be predicated of testimony given by way of disclosure as a trustee, where that part of the testimony alleged to be false was not reduced to writing and signed by the trustee, as required by G. S. c. 34, s. 14. State v. Trask, 42 Vt. 152.

102. Perjury may be committed in the swearing to a false affidavit made in support of a petition for a new trial. State v. Chandler, 42 Vt. 446.

103. Material to the issue. Where perjury is assigned on written documents, from the recital of which it appears that the perjury is material, the express allegation of its materiality may be omitted. State v. Chamberlin, 30 Vt. 550.

104. In an indictment for perjury, it should plainly appear on the face of the indictment that the false evidence was material to the issue in a judicial proceeding; or else it should be expressly alleged that it was material. If so expressly alleged, it is not necessary to show, by a statement of the issues or otherwise, how it was material. State v. Sleeper, and State v. Magoon, 37 Vt. 122. State v. Chandler, 42 Vt. 446.

105. False. To warrant a conviction for perjury, that part of the respondent's testimony which the indictment alleges to have been material, must be found to have been false. State v. Trask, 42 Vt. 152.

106. The indictment alleged, in substance, that it was a material question, &c., whether the respondent had paid for certain sheep, and that he falsely and maliciously testified that he had paid for the sheep at a certain time and place [named], whereas in fact he had not at the time and place named, nor any where else, paid for said sheep, but at the time he so testified he was still indebted for said sheep. Held, that it was error to charge that if the respondent did so testify, and this was false and the respondent knew it to be false, it was perjury; for however material in fact were the time and place of payment, they were not alleged to be material, and the trial was bound to proceed upon the basis that they were not. Ib.

107. Form of averment. In an indictment for perjury, false swearing in relation to several separate and distinct facts may be charged in one count. State v. Bishop, 1 D. Chip. 120.

108. An allegation that the respondent "falsely, willfully and corruptly" swore, is sufficient without the word "knowingly." State v. Sleeper, and Magoon, 37 Vt. 122.

109. Evidence. On trial for perjury in a deposition, the prisoner is not estopped from proving its truth by the fact that he afterwards, in the same cause, swore in open court that a material matter stated as a fact in his deposition was not true. State v. J. B., 1 Tyl. 269.

110. On trial for perjury committed in a trial before a justice, on a day named in the indictment under a vide licet, the justice's record may be read, though it appear from it that such trial was upon a day other than the one named in the indictment. State v. Clark, 2 Tyl. 277.

111. An answer in chancery appeared, from the jurat upon it, to have been sworn in C county. On a trial for perjury in the answer;—Held, that it was competent for the prosecution to allege in the indictment and prove, that the answer was in fact sworn to in O county. State v. Chamberlin, 30 Vt. 559.

112. Prima facie case. On a trial for perjury, the government, by proving the falsity of the oath, makes a prima facie case of corrupt swearing to what was false. If occasioned by surprise, inadvertency, or by mistake, the proof thereof should come from the respondent. Ib.

113. Arrest of judgment. In an indictment for subornation of perjury, the verb expressing that the witness testified was omitted. Held, that this omission, although by manifest mistake, could not be supplied by intendment, and was not cured by verdict. State v. Leach, 27 Vt. 317.

2. Suppressing evidence.

114. Attempt. The attempt, whether successful or not, to prevent another from appearing as a witness in a criminal prosecution, whether bound so to appear or not, is indictable and punishable as a misdemeanor at common law; and this, without reference to the guilt or innocence of the original party, or the sufficiency of the proceedings against him.

State v. Keyes, 8 Vt. 57. State v. Carpenter, 20 Vt. 9. Badger v. Williams, 1 D. Chip. 137.

115. An indictment, according to Chitty's form, for an attempt to prevent one from attending as a witness in a criminal prosecution, was held sufficient after verdict, where the respondent's knowledge of the existence of such prosecution, or of the obligation of the witness so to attend, was not directly averred, but only implied to a certain extent in the description of the offense. State v. Keyes.

8. Impeding an officer.

116. What is. Evidence that the respondent, being present, advised a person against whom a deputy sheriff had a precept for his arrest, to draw a line on the ground and to forbid the officer to pass it, and that if the officer should pass the line he could lawfully knock down or kill the officer, was held to sustain an indictment for impeding and hindering an officer in the execution of his office, where the party acted according to such advice, and committed personal violence upon the officer. State v. Caldwell, 2 Tyl. 212.

117. To constitute the statute offense of impeding or hindering an officer in the execution of his office, the impediment or hindrance must be while the officer is in the actual discharge of the duties of his office; and it is not enough that the act may, in its remote consequences only, have the effect of preventing the officer from discharging his official duty. Thus, where a writ had been served upon the respondent and returned to the justice, and the evening before the day set for trial the respondent, under some pretense, obtained the writ from the justice and carried it away, and on the day of trial refused to deliver it up and denied that he had received it, whereby the suit failed;—Held, that this was not an offense against the statute. State v. Lovett, 3 Vt. 110.

118. Authorized person. Impeding, in the service of a writ, a person specially authorized by a justice to serve it, is not impeding "an officer in the execution of his office," within the meaning of G. S. c. 115, s. 13. State v. McOmber, 6 Vt. 215.

119. Extent of right to impede officer. An officer, or other person specially authorized, in good faith attaching personal property as the property of the defendant in the process, although such defendant may have no attachable interest therein, cannot be forcibly resisted in making the attachment, nor can the property be forcibly recaptured, even by the real owner of the property. State v. Downer, 8 Vt. 424. State v. Buchanan, 17 Vt. 573.

120. It is no defense to an indictment for forcibly resisting an officer in the execution of his office in the making of an attachment, or for an assault and battery, that the property which he was about to attach was not the property of the defendant in the process, but was the property of the respondent. Ib.

121. The owner of personal property may assert his claim thereto, where it is about to be attached as the property of another, and may make use of any peaceable means to prevent its attachment, or to keep or regain possession of it, when this can be done without using any force or violence against the officer—without violence to his person, or threats of personal violence. Under these circumstances, the defendant's ownership is a defense to an indictment for impeding the officer in the execution of the process. State v. Miller, 12 Vt. 437;—and to an action of trespass for carrying away the property. Merritt v. Miller, 13 Vt. 416.

122. A sheriff, for the purpose of arresting the defendant in his own dwelling house upon civil process, broke open the outer door, and, having entered, attempted to arrest him, when the defendant forcibly resisted him. Held, the breaking being unlawful, that the attempt to arrest was unlawful, and that resistance by the defendant was lawful; and that an indictment did not lie against the defendant therefor. State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 658. 19 Vt. 154.

123. Indictment. An indictment under the statute for impeding an officer in the execution of his office (G. S. c. 115, s. 13), charging resistance to the service of process, must set forth the process, the mode in which it was attempted to be executed, the particular mode of the resistance, and the respondent's knowledge of the character in which the officer claimed to act. State v. Downer, 8 Vt. 424. State v. Burt, 25 Vt. 373.

124. An indictment for such offense was held ill under the statute, but good for an assault at common law. Ib.

125. Conspiracy to impede. The offense of a conspiracy to impede an officer in the execution of his office is not merged in the offense of impeding him. The two offenses are distinct and independent, and of the same grade. State v. Noyes, 25 Vt. 415.

126. In an indictment for such conspiracy, it is not necessary to set forth the process, nor the means to be used to effect the conspiracy. Ib. See State v. Keach, 40 Vt. 113.

127. The unlawful agreement is the gist of the offense of conspiracy. In an indictment therefor, it is not necessary to charge the execution of the unlawful agreement, nor to prove it on trial, if charged. Ib.

VI. OFFENSES AGAINST THE PUBLIC PEACE. G. S. CH. 116.

128. Challenge. An indictment for sending a written challenge to fight a duel does not lie upon Sec. 20 of Slade's Stat. 270, against inferior crimes, viz: breach of the peace, "by threatening, quarrelling, challenging," &c. State v. S. S., 1 Tyl. 180.

129. Threats. Threats, in order to violate that sense of security which is the public peace, and so constitute a breach of the peace under the statute, must be of some grievous bodily harm, and be put forth in a desperate and reckless manner, accompanied by acts showing a formed intention to execute them,—must be intended to put the person threatened in fear of bodily harm and must produce that effect, and be of a character calculated to produce that effect upon a person of ordinary firmness. State v. Benedict, 11 Vt. 236.

130. Annoyance. A grand juror's complaint charged that the respondents did break and disturb the public peace, by ringing and causing to be rung and tolled a certain church bell and, well knowing that one P was then living, did report and aver that said P was dead and was to be buried on the next succeeding day, and did ring the said bell with intent to have it believed that said P was then dead, and with intent to annoy, harass and vex said P and his family and friends. Held, that this did not charge a breach of the peace under the statute (G. S. c. 116, s. 1); and judgment was arrested. State v. Riggs, 22 Vt. 321.

131. Complaint for breach of the peace. The complaint, under G. S. c. 116, s. 1, charged that M, at, &c., on, &c., "in and upon one W did make an assault, and him the said W did then and there with fists, clubs, sticks, and iron instruments, strike, beat, bruise and wound, to the great injury of the said W, and thereby and by his tumultuous and offensive carriage, and by threatening and challenging the said W, the said M did disturb and break the public peace, contrary," &c. Held, that the complaint charged but one offense, viz: a breach of the peace, and was not objectionable for duplicity. State v. Matthews, 42 Vt. 542.

132. The statute enumerates several modes of disturbing and breaking the public peace, but the offense is one. Id.

133. The words "tumultuous and offensive carriage, threatening, quarrelling and challenging," alone, would be insufficient, as not constituting such a statement of facts as import with sufficient certainty a breach of the peace; but the facts which constitute such offensive and tumultuous carriage, &c., should be alleged. But the assaulting, beating and striking, in this case, import a breach of the peace, and these other words may be treated as descriptive of the circumstances accompanying the assault, and are harmless, and might be stricken out. Id.

134. A complaint alleging that the respondent "did disturb and break the the public peace by tumultuous and offensive carriage, * * * by threatening, quarrelling with, challenging, assaulting, beating and striking" L, sufficiently shows the means by which the offense was committed. Such complaint was held good. State v. Hanley, 47 Vt. 290.

135. Swearing the peace. Quære—Whether the common law remedy of swearing the peace against one who threatens an offense, exists in this State. Redfield, J., in State v. Benedict, 11 Vt. 239. (See G. S. c. 31, s. 12.)

VII. OFFENSES AGAINST CHASTITY, MORALITY AND DECENCY. G. S. CH. 117.

136. Adultery—Proof of the act. To warrant a conviction upon an indictment for adultery, it is not sufficient to prove that the parties were found in bed together under circumstances warranting the presumption of an illicit intent between them, since this constitutes a distinct offense under another section of the same statute; and a presumption of guilt should not be drawn from the opportunity to commit a crime, when the corpus delicti is not proved. State v. Way, 6 Vt. 311.

137. —not a felony. Adultery was not a felony at common law, nor a crime punishable in the common law courts; nor is it made a felony by the statute which declares it a crime to be punished by imprisonment in the state prison. State v. Cooper, 16 Vt. 551.

138. Under the statute making it burglary in the night time to break and enter any dwelling house, &c., with intent to commit the crime of "murder, rape, robbery, larceny, or any other felony" (G. S. c. 118, s. 7), the respondent was indicted for so breaking and entering with intent to commit adultery. After verdict, judgment was arrested;—for that adultery was not a felony. Id.

139. Particeps as a witness. On trial for adultery, the particeps was not allowed to testify to the fact. State v. Annice, N. Chip. 9.

140. Proof of marriage. On such trial it is necessary to prove a marriage in fact. Reputation and cohabitation alone are not sufficient; otherwise, by Chipman, C. J. in an action for crim. con. Id.

141. Blanket act. The law is the same in a prosecution under the "blanket act." (G. S. c. 117, s. 3.) State v. Rood, 12 Vt. 396.

142. An indictment under the "blanket act" must charge the illicit intent to be between them,—that both parties had the illicit intent. State v. Chillis, Brayt. 181.

143. Bigamy—Indictment. An indictment for polygamy under the statute (G. S. c. 117, s. 5), alleging both marriages to have been had in other States, and charging that the respondent feloniously cohabited with the second wife in this State, was held bad, on motion in arrest, for not alleging that such second marriage was unlawful in the State where it was had. State v. Palmer, 18 Vt. 570.

144. An indictment for bigamy was held ill on demurrer, because the time and place of the first marriage were left blank. State v. LaBore, 26 Vt. 765 (Changed by G. S. c. 117, s. 8.)

145. Evidence of marriage. Upon a trial for bigamy;—Held, that evidence that the person by whom a marriage ceremony was performed in another State was, in the one case, reputed to be and that he acted as a justice of the peace, and, in the other case, as a minister of the gospel, was prima facie proof of such person's official or ministerial character. State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 60.

146. Incest. An indictment in one count for incest, charging the offense as committed on a day named, "and on divers other days and times between that day and" a certain later day named, was held ill on motion in arrest. State v. Temple, 38 Vt. 87.

147. In a trial for incest, under an indictment in one count, the court admitted evidence of distinct offenses on different occasions at remote periods of time, after the respondent's counsel had insisted that the State should be confined in the proof to a single occasion. Held erroneous. Ib.

148. Indecent exposure of person. Where a man indecently and purposely exposed his private parts to a woman, and solicited her to have sexual intercourse with him, although no third person was present;—Held, that he was indictable, under G. S. c. 117, s. 11, for "open and gross lewdness and lascivious behavior." State v. Millard, 18 Vt. 574.

149. Procuring miscarriage. It is not essential to constitute the offense of attempting to procure "the miscarriage of a woman pregnant with a child," under G. S. c. 117, s. 10, that the fœtus should then be alive. State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380.

150. House of ill-fame. The offense of keeping a house of ill-fame is local, and must be described as committed in a particular town; and the prosecutor is confined in his proof to the town, and cannot, as in other cases, prove an offense within the county; but a more particular description of the house is not required. State v. Nixon, 18 Vt. 70.

151. This offense does not depend upon the motive of the person keeping the house. Although alleged in the indictment that it was kept for filthy lucre and gain, such purpose need not be proved, nor what was the actuating motive of the offender. Ib.

152. Obscene publication. An indictment for selling an obscene publication should ordinarily set it forth in haec verba, as in indictments for libel or forgery; but this may be excused, where the publication is of so gross a character that spreading it upon the record would be an offense against decency, and, so alleging it, it may be described in general terms. State v. Brown, 27 Vt. 619.

153. Disturbing remains of the dead. The statute offense of disturbing "the remains of any dead person" was set forth in an indictment as disturbing "the dead body of Benjamin P. Calfe, then lately before laid in a coffin and interred," &c. Held sufficient. State v. Little, 1 Vt. 381.

VIII. OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY. G. S. CH. 119.

154. Play actors. Under a statute providing that "if any company of players or persons whatever shall exhibit any tragedies, comedies, &c., each person so exhibiting shall forfeit and pay," &c. (G. S. c. 119, s. 16.)—Held, that an information was ill which charged that the defendant exhibited tragedies, &c., without alleging that he was one of a "company of players or persons," &c. State v. Fox, 15 Vt. 22.

155. Military enlistment. Under G. S. c. 119, s. 29, prohibiting the enlisting of "any person in this State for military service without this State," &c., an indictment was held good on demurrer, which charged that the defendant at Fairfax, in the county of Franklin, enlisted one E O, &c.,—omitting the averment that E O was in this State at the time of the enlistment—since the enlistment could not have been at Fairfax, as alleged, unless E O was at that time in this State. State v. Cook, 38 Vt. 437.

156. Killing deer. A complaint for violation of the statute against killing deer (Act 1865, No. 184), which prohibited such killing for ten years, alleged the offense to have been committed on a certain day named—which date was in fact within said period of ten years. Held sufficient, without a distinct averment that the offense was committed within such period. State v. Norton, 45 Vt. 258.

IX. CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

1. Proceedings before justice.

157. Complaint—by town grand juror. From 1797 to 1801, town grand jurors were not general informing officers, and could not prefer a complaint for theft. Brackett v. State, 2 Tyl. 152. 11 Vt. 344. (Since changed.)

158. — by private prosecutor. A warrant, upon the complaint of a private informer, cannot legally issue without oath of the complainant; and this must appear by the magistrate's certificate. State v. J H, 1 Tyl. 444.

159. Any person may make complaint to a justice of the peace for a crime or misdemeanor, for the purpose of having an examination and commitment, taking the oath required by the constitution and giving the security required by the statute. After binding over or commitment for trial, the prosecution then becomes public and must be conducted by the officer appointed for that purpose, unless it be for some offense where the complainant has an interest in the prosecution and conviction of the offender. State Treasurer v. Rice, 11 Vt. 339. 28 Vt. 315. (See G. S. c. 124, s. 8, and seq.)

160. In case of a prosecution for a high crime or misdemeanor commenced by a private prosecutor, where he had no pecuniary interest in the conviction, a recognizance taken as well to the prosecutor as the treasurer of the State for the appearance of the respondent, was held void. It should have been to the treasurer alone. Ib.

161. —by State's attorney. State's attorneys have authority, by information, to bring persons accused of offenses before justices, and to cause them to be bound up;—that they are only to aid town grand jurors in such prosecutions, is unreasonable and absurd. Treasurer v. Brooks, 23 Vt. 698.

162. Where some officer other than the State's attorney is authorized to commence suits in behalf of the State, the defendant cannot claim, as a matter of right, that the suit should be dismissed because not prosecuted by the State's attorney. State v. Bradish, 34 Vt. 419.

163. Complaint must show authority of prosecutor. It is indispensable that a complaint in a criminal prosecution should show, on its face, that it is presented by one having the proper authority. State v. Sorogan, 40 Vt. 450.

164. Thus, a complaint for a violation of an ordinance of the city of Burlington was presented by "Leverett B. Englesby, city attorney, within and for the county of Chittenden." Held, that the words "city attorney," applying as well to another city as to the city of Burlington, were too indefinite to show the necessary authority, and there being no such county officer, the complaint was held ill on demurrer. Ib.

165. —and of magistrate. A complaint for violation of an ordinance of the city of Burlington was directed "To David Read, Esq., recorder of the city of Burlington, within and for the county of Chittenden." Upon demurrer, it was objected that there was no such officer as recorder of the county. Held, that these last words of misdescription could be rejected, and, leaving the previous true description to stand, the complaint was sufficient. Ib.

166. Memorandum of names of witnesses. G. S. c. 15, s. 87, requiring a memorandum of the names of the witnesses in support of the prosecution to be subjoined to a grand juror's complaint, has always been held to be directory, and the omission to be no cause for quashing the proceedings. Bennett, J., in Downer v. Baxter, 30 Vt. 474.

167. The objection to an omission of such memorandum must be taken at the earliest opportunity, or it is waived. It is not reached by a demurrer. State v. Norton, 45 Vt. 258.

168. It is not ground for abatement of a grand juror's complaint, that the names of the witnesses to support it are not subjoined to it. State v. Hanley, 47 Vt. 290.

169. Minute of presentment. Under the statute which provides that every complaint, &c., in a criminal prosecution "shall be void," unless the magistrate shall make a minute of the true day, &c., when presented;—Held, that a recognizance taken by a justice for appearance to the county court, where no such minute was made, was void. State v. Cook, 6 Vt. 382.

170. But a judgment rendered upon such complaint, or process, is valid, until set aside or reversed. Allen v. Huntington, 2 Aik. 249. 25 Vt. 350. 32 Vt. 628.

171. Venue—Waiver. Where a party was prosecuted before a justice for an offense committed in a town other than the place of trial, or where the respondent resided, and this appeared in the complaint, and he raised no objection thereto until after the close of the opening argument for the prosecution;—Held, that the objection was waived, and that the justice acted properly in proceeding with the trial to judgment. (G. S. c. 31, s. 2.) State v. Meader, 47 Vt. 78.

172. Misjoinder. A complaint before a justice for several offenses of the same character, was held sufficient on demurrer in the county court, where, as to one count, the justice had no jurisdiction to try, but only to inquire and bind over, or discharge, and as to the others he had jurisdiction to try, and did try and convict, making no order as to the first count. This is not a misjoinder. He might bind over or discharge on the first count, and convict on the others. State v. Peck, 32 Vt. 172.

173. Warrant. The warrant attached to a criminal complaint is process issued merely to bring the respondent into court; and, when in court, the proceedings against him on the complaint may be had, whatever the warrant or service which brought him may have been. A plea in abatement for defective service of the warrant should be either rejected, or overruled. State v. Clark, 44 Vt. 636.

174. Record. The justice's record in a criminal case must show the place where his court was held, that it may be seen to have been within his commission. Brackett v. State, 2 Tyl. 152.

175. An appealing party in a criminal case went to trial on a complaint as recited in the justice's record, a copy of the original complaint not being sent up;—Held sufficient, on motion in arrest, the record sufficiently showing what the complaint was, and it being sufficient as recited. State v. Kelly, 47 Vt. 294.

176. Appeal. Held, that in a criminal prosecution before a justice, the respondent is not deprived of his appeal by pleading guilty before the justice. State v. Little, 42 Vt. 430. (G. S. c. 31, s. 63.)

177. The duty of a justice to receive payment of a fine and cost, where the respondent appeals, is suspended when the time prescribed by the statute, within which the respondent had a right to pay, has expired,—that is, 12 days before the session of the court to which the case is appealed—and can be revived only in the event that neither party enters the appeal during that term. State v. Wooley, 44 Vt. 363.

178. The act of procuring the affirmance of the judgment of a justice in a criminal case appealed, is in the nature of a motion to the county court, and need not be done personally by the officer to whose duties it most properly pertains. Where such judgment was affirmed on application of the prosecuting town grand juror;—Held, that it was competent for the county court to decide whether the State was properly represented, and that there was no error herein. Ib.

2. Indictment and information.

179. Constitution. Article V. of the amendments to the U. S. Constitution, providing that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except," &c., has reference only to proceedings in the tribunals of the United States. State v. Keyes, 8 Vt. 57.

180. Grand jury. It is no cause for quashing an indictment against a town, that one of the grand jury who returned the bill was a rated inhabitant of the town. The objection is one which it is not competent for the town to make, since the interest of the juror was to shield the town from indictment. State v. Newfane, 12 Vt. 422.

181. Caption. In an information or complaint by a State's attorney, or town grand juror, it is not necessary to aver that it is made upon his oath of office. State v. Sickle, Brayt. 132. State v. Comstock, 27 Vt. 553.

182. An indictment commenced thus:—"The grand jurors within and the body of the county," &c. Held, on motion in arrest, that the omission of the word for, after the word "and," did not vitiate the indictment. State v. Brady, 14 Vt. 353.

183. The commencement of an indictment, as follows—"The grand jurors for the people of the State of Vermont, upon their oath present," &c.—was considered proper, and was held sufficient on motion in arrest. State v. Nizon, 18 Vt. 70.

184. On motion in arrest, defects in the caption of an indictment, or even the omission of the caption, cannot be noticed. Ib. State v. Thibeau, 30 Vt. 100. State v. Gilbert, 13 Vt. 647.

185. Conclusion. The conclusion of an indictment, "contrary to the statute," &c., is good. State v. Newton, 42 Vt. 537.

186. Indorsement. "True Bill," instead of "A True Bill," is a sufficient indorsement of an indictment. State v. Davidson, 12 Vt. 300.

187. The foreman of a grand jury signed his name to the indorsement, "a true bill," upon an indictment found, but without appending to his name the word "foreman." A motion to quash for this cause was overruled. Held correct. State v. Brown, 31 Vt. 602. (G. S. c. 37, s. 14.)

188. Minute of presentment. The clerk's minute upon an indictment was as follows: "Orleans County Court, Dec. T., 1838, received and filed this 29th, 1838." Held a sufficient minute of "the true day, month and year," where, by reference to the records of the term, it appeared that it could only signify the 29th day of the month of December. State v. Bartlett, 11 Vt. 650.

189. An objection to an indictment that a minute of the true day, &c., when the same was exhibited was not entered upon it, as required by statute (G. S. c. 62, ss. 8, 10), must be made before pleading the general issue, or it will be treated as waived. State v. Butler, 17 Vt. 145.

190. Form and substance—English language. The statute requiring judicial proceedings to be in the English language does not preclude, in either civil or criminal pleadings, the use of the Arabic numeral figures in universal use to express numbers,—as dates, sums, amounts, &c. State v. Hodgeden, 3 Vt. 481. Hyde v. Moffat, 16 Vt. 271. Clark v. Stoughton, 18 Vt. 50. State v. Paddock, 24 Vt. 315.

191. The words Anno Domini, or, by contraction, A. D., have become English by adoption, and are sufficient in an indictment, as equivalent to the year of our Lord—or, they might be omitted altogether as the prefix to a date, as being superfluous. State v. Hodgeden. State v. Gilbert, 13 Vt. 647. 22 Vt. 436. State v. Clark, 44 Vt. 636.

192. Vi et armis. The omission of vi et armis is not fatal where the averments show that the criminal act was committed with force and violence, State v. Hanley, 47 Vt. 290;—

or when these words may be fairly implied from the other words used—as, from the word feloniously in larceny. Brackett v. State, 2 Tyl. 152.

193. Statutable offense. It is not, in general, necessary in an indictment for a statutable offense to follow the exact wording of the statute. It is sufficient if the offense be set forth with substantial accuracy and certainty to a reasonable intendment. State v. Little, 1 Vt. 331. 6 Vt. 598.

194. If a statute enumerates offenses disjunctively, the indictment should charge them conjunctively, in cases where there is no repugnancy in the offenses, or in the penalty. State v. Woodward, 25 Vt. 616.

195. General rules. Distinction between felonies and misdemeanors, as to indictment and proceedings in trials. State v. Wheeler, 3 Vt. 344-347.

196. Where the act complained of becomes a crime only from its peculiar relations or circumstances, and without them would not be unlawful, those relations or circumstances must be set forth in the indictment. State v. Day, 3 Vt. 188.

197. In an indictment, every fact and circumstance which is a necessary ingredient to constitute the offense should be stated, and an omission to set forth such facts is fatal. If all the facts stated may be true, and still the person indicted not guilty of the offense charged, the indictment is insufficient, and no sentence can be pronounced thereon. State v. Northfield, 13 Vt. 565.

198. An indictment set forth a term of the county court as held and a certain cause astried before the chief judge,—naming him. Held ill on demurrer;—that it was not necessary to name any of the judges, but, being named, the averment could not be rejected as surplusage; and if either was named, enough should have been named to constitute a quorum, or it should have been averred that the others were disqualified. State v. Freeman, 15 Vt. 722.

199. Time and place. Where a single and distinct offense is charged to have been committed on a day certain—as liquor selling—the indictment is not rendered ill by the addition, “and at divers other times,” &c. This last may be rejected as surplusage. State v. Munger, 15 Vt. 290. (1843.)

200. An indictment for liquor selling charged that the respondent on, &c., at, &c., “sell and dispose of,” &c. Held, after verdict, that the auxiliary, did, to the word “sell” would be supplied by intendment. State v. Whitney, 15 Vt. 298. 31 Vt. 321. See State v. Leach, 27 Vt. 317.

201. In an indictment, every traversable fact must be directly alleged, with time and place. State v. LaBore, 26 Vt. 765. State v. Litch, 33 Vt. 67.

202. An indictment alleged the offense to have been committed at a day in the future. After verdict, the judgment was, for this cause, arrested on motion. State v. Litch.

203. It is a fundamental rule of criminal pleading, that the material facts must be averred with certainty as to time and place. The year, month and day must be particularly stated, though not necessary so to be proved; and a defect herein is not cured by verdict. Steele, J., in State v. O'Keefe, 41 Vt. 694.

204. Judgment arrested after verdict, where, in an indictment for larceny, the offense was charged as committed on “the second day of March Anno Domini one thousand eight.” State v. G. S., 1 Tyl. 295.

205. So, in an indictment for obtaining goods by false tokens, &c., where both the time and place of obtaining the goods were wholly omitted. State v. Bacon, 7 Vt. 219.

206. So, under a complaint for liquor selling charging the offense as committed “on or about the 2nd day of January, A. D. 1867.” State v. O'Keefe, 41 Vt. 691.

207. So, a complaint for liquor selling, charging the sale as made on a certain day of the month, but omitting the year, and alleging a former conviction in 1863, but omitting the month and day, was held ill, on demurrer, in both respects. State v. Kennedy, 36 Vt. 563.

208. Words of statute. Where a statute punishes a common law offense by its legal or common law designation, without enumerating the acts which constitute it, it is necessary in an indictment to use the terms which technically charge the offense named at common law. But this is not necessary in an indictment upon a statute, where the statute is of itself complete, and embraces and enumerates all the elements constituting the crime the legislature had in view; and where the statute so describes the offense, or creates it, it is sufficient that the indictment lay the offense in the words of the statute. State v. Daley, 41 Vt. 564. State v. Cook, 38 Vt. 487. State v. Jones, 33 Vt. 443. State v. Clark, 44 Vt. 636.

209. Negating exception. Where a statute created an offense,—as by the words “give away,”—and a subsequent statute qualified the words,—as by enacting that these words should not be construed to apply to giving away under certain circumstances;—Held, that the qualification need not be negated in an indictment. By Redfield, C. J.—This rule never extends beyond a qualification in the same section. State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 523.

210. An indictment against one as an accessory after the fact, under a statute enacting that “every person not standing in the relation of husband and wife,” &c., “to an offender, who shall harbor and conceal,” &c., “such offender,” &c., “shall be deemed an accessory after the fact," &c., was held bad, on motion in arrest, for not alleging that the defendant did not stand in the relation of husband, &c. State v. Butler, 17 Vt. 145. (G. S. c. 120, s. 16.)

211. By Redfield, J. The quality required in the person to commit the offense, must be stated. Where the exception is in a separate section of the statute, or in a proviso, or exception distinct from the enacting clause, this is matter of defense and need not be alleged; but if the exception is contained in the body of the enacting clause, it is in the nature of a condition precedent and must be alleged. Ib., 149. 45 Vt. 261.

212. So, an indictment on the statute prohibiting "any secular labor," &c., on the Sabbath, "except such only as works of necessity and charity" (G. S. c. 93, s. 1.), was held bad, for not alleging that the act charged was not a work of necessity, or charity. State v. Barker, 18 Vt. 195.

213. Bennett, J. Where the exception is in the body of the statute which enacts the offense, and enters into it as a part of its description, it is necessary to state all the facts which constitute the offence; and to do this, the exception must be negatived. If the exception is distinct from the enacting clause, it then becomes matter of defense and need not be negatived. Ib., 197. 45 Vt. 261.

214. An indictment for polygamy under the statute (G. S. c. 117, ss. 5-6), providing (s. 5.), "If any person who has a former husband or wife living shall marry another person," &c., "he or she shall, except in the cases mentioned in the following section, be deemed guilty of the crime of polygamy," &c. Sec. 6. then provides, "The provisions of the preceding section shall not extend to any person divorced," &c., &c. Held, that it was not necessary to allege that the defendant was not within any of the specified exceptions. State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 60.

215. By Isham, J. The question is, whether the exception is so incorporated with and becomes a part of the enactment, as to constitute a part of the definition or description of the offense; for it is immaterial whether the exception or proviso be contained in the enacting clause or section, or be introduced in a different manner. It is the nature of the exception, and not its location, which determines the question. Nor does the question depend upon any distinction between the words "provided" or "except," as they may be used in the statute. The exception should be negatived only when it is descriptive of the offense, or defines it; where it affords matter of excuse merely, it is to be relied upon in defense. The question is one not only of pleading but of evidence, and where the exception must be negatived in the indictment, the allegation must be proved by the prosecutor, though it involve the proof of a negative. Ib., 66-7. See Wilson, J., in State v. Hodgdon, 41 Vt. 142-3. State v. Palmer, 18 Vt. 570, starts a quære, not decided.

216. An indictment for being a peddler without license under G. S. c. 81, s. 2.—That section defines who shall "be deemed a peddler"—provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not be construed to extend to articles of provisions or produce," &c., &c. Held, that the exceptions were not descriptive of the offense nor defined it, and need not be negatived in the indictment. State v. Hodgdon, 41 Vt. 139; and see State v. Norton, 45 Vt. 258.

217. Supreme court. After the supreme court has adjudged an indictment to be sufficient on demurrer, it is matter in their discretion to allow, or not, the prisoner to plead anew and to remand the case to the county court for trial. State v. Wilkins, 17 Vt. 151.

218. Statute of limitations. An indictment was quashed on motion where it appeared, on its face, that the prosecution was barred by the statute of limitations. State v. J. P., 1 Tyl. 283.

219. Note. By Stat. 1870, No. 5, objections for formal defects apparent on the face of an indictment, &c., must be taken by demurrer, or motion to quash; and the indictment may be amended in these particulars.

3. Proceedings after indictment.

220. Appearance—Misdemeanor. One indicted for a misdemeanor had appeared and given bonds for his appearance from term to term. Held, that he might thereafter appear and plead by attorney. State v. Dean, Brayt. 26.

221. In trials for inferior misdemeanors, a verdict may be rendered in the absence of the respondent. If he do not appear after verdict, he and his bail may be called; or, the court may issue a warrant to apprehend and bring him before the court to receive sentence, or both. These principles apply as well to trials before justices, as elsewhere. The warrant, in such case, should be made returnable forthwith, and not to some future day by adjournment. Sawyer v. Joiner, 16 Vt. 497.

222. In that class of offenses where the ordinary judgment does not extend to the infliction of imprisonment by way of punishment primarily, the accused may appear by counsel, and, having made appearance, the trial may proceed without regard to the continued presence of either the accused, or his counsel. Tracy ex parte, 25 Vt. 93. See State v. Wheeler, 3 Vt. 344.

223. Nolle prosequi. While a criminal cause is on trial to the jury, the State's attorney cannot enter a nolle prosequi without leave of the court. Such leave was refused, where the defense appeared to be ample. State v. I. S.S., 1 Tyl. 178.

224. The right of the government attorney to enter a nolle prosequi is suspended when trial commences to the jury. After that, the power is to be exercised only by permission of the court. State v. Roe, 12 Vt. 93.

225. Trial—Evidence. The doctrine of prima facie proof obtains as much in criminal as in civil actions. Forbes v. Davison, 11 Vt. 660.

226. Corpus delicti. Where the corpus delicti is attempted to be shown by circumstantial evidence, it must be so established as to positively exclude all uncertainty or doubt, and all the circumstances combined must produce the same degree of certainty as positive proof. State v. Davidson, 30 Vt. 377.

227. Where the evidence of the corpus delicti was wholly circumstantial, and certain evidence tended to identify the party charged as connected with the transaction, but not to prove the corpus delicti;—Held erroneous, that the court declined on request to instruct the jury as to a separation and proper application of the evidence. Ib.

228. It is said in some of the books, that the accused should not be convicted upon his confessions, without other proof of the corpus delicti. Whether this is an absolute rule of law, or merely a precautionary rule to be observed by the jury in weighing the evidence—quære. If it is a rule of law applicable to felonies and high crimes, there is no such absolute rule of law applicable to the lower grades of crime and misdemeanors—as, for selling liquor against the statute. State v. Gilbert, 36 Vt. 145.

229. Confession. A confession made under any threat, promise, or encouragement of favor, must never be received in a criminal prosecution. State v. Phelps, 11 Vt. 116. State v. Walker, 84 Vt. 296. See State v. Carr, 37 Vt. 191. State v. Jenkins, 2 Tyl. 377.

230. The owner of a factory, which the respondent, together with one Brierly, was charged with burning, visited the respondent in jail at his request, and said to him: "That he wanted him to tell the truth just as it was; that they had got Brierly and probably they would both be tried that day, and that it would be better to tell the truth just as it was, for if Brierly should get the start of you, it may go hard with you. You are a young man, and it would be better for you to tell it just as it is"—and thereupon the respondent confessed, &c. Held, that the confession made was not admissible. State v. Walker.

231. The prisoner, under the influence of improper inducements, made a confession to the officer making the arrest and his assistant.

Five hours later, the State's attorney told the prisoner if he wanted to make a confession he could do so, but must not expect any favor; that he was not obliged to make a confession unless he chose to, nor to tell anything to criminate himself; that if he was going to tell anything, to tell the truth—to tell it just as it was. The prisoner then made a confession. Held, that this communication of the State's attorney was sufficient to remove any reliance which the prisoner might have placed upon the previous inducements, and that the second confession was admissible. State v. Carr, 37 Vt. 191.

232. In a criminal prosecution, where the statement or admission of the respondent is put in evidence against him, the whole must be put in, and the whole is evidence. Such parts as are in his favor should be taken as true, unless disproved by the other circumstances or testimony in the case, or by their own innate improbability, or inconsistency, or absurdity. State v. McDonnell, 32 Vt. 491. State v. Mahon, 32 Vt. 241.

233. Where the confession of a respondent is put in evidence, his co-respondent cannot require that such part of it as implicates him shall be excluded, but the whole confession must be received as it was made; leaving the court to charge properly as to its effect, as to such co-respondent. State v. Fuller, 39 Vt. 74.

234. Fabricated defense. The introduction of false or fabricated evidence in defense is always regarded as an inferential admission of guilt, although not of a conclusive character;—as, a false and fictitious deposition obtained by the respondent personating the apparent deponent. State v. Williams, 27 Vt. 724.

235. Alibi. In a criminal prosecution one defense was an alibi. The court declined to charge that the jury must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the respondent was not at the place of the alibi at the time in question; but did charge that if they found the alibi proved, they must acquit him, and that the prosecution, in order to warrant a conviction, must establish the whole case beyond a reasonable doubt. Held sufficient; and that the charge given embraced more than an answer to the specific request refused. State v. Cameron, 40 Vt. 555.

236. Identification. In a criminal trial, the State's witnesses had testified to the presence of the prisoner at the scene of the crime, and to his identity, and had further testified, without objection, that they immediately informed of him, and within an hour caused his arrest. The prisoner put in evidence that these witnesses, at the preliminary examination, did not testify so positively as now to his identity. The court charged that the fact that these witnesses so acted upon their belief and knowledge that the person they saw was the prisoner, and that they so caused his arrest, tended to corroborate their testimony as to identifying him. Held correct. State v. Dennin, 32 Vt. 158.

237. Testimony of an accomplice. On trial of an indictment against two for a joint offense, the main testimony was that of an accomplice, which was corroborated as to the guilt of one of the respondents only. The court charged, in substance, that the jury might convict both prisoners on the testimony of the accomplice, if it was corroborated in important particulars as to one and commended itself to their credit as true, beyond a reasonable doubt, as to both; and declined to instruct, and did not advise nor caution the jury, not to convict the one as to whom such testimony was not corroborated. Held not erroneous—that the better practice is to advise the jury to convict no prisoner, unless there is some proof, other than the testimony of an accomplice, tending to show that prisoner to have had a guilty connection with the commission of the crime; but this is only a rule of practice, and not a rule of law. State v. Potter, 42 Vt. 495. See State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380.

238. Former acquittal. A respondent acquitted in the county court on all the counts of an indictment except one, appealed to the supreme court, and on arraignment pleaded, generally, “not guilty.” Held, nevertheless, that he was not compelled to go to trial on those counts on which he had been acquitted. State v. Kittle, 2 Tyl. 471.

239. Former conviction. The respondent wounded two persons in the same affray, at the same instant and by the same stroke. He was legally convicted of a breach of the peace by assaulting and wounding one of them. Held, that this was a bar to an indictment for assaulting and wounding the other—there being but one offense. State v. Damon, 2 Tyl. 887.

240. The theory that in criminal cases the jury are judges of the law as well as of the facts, does not require the submitting to them of the record of a former conviction, which affects the sentence only. This is purely a question of law bearing upon the duty of the court—no question of fact, such as the identity of parties, being raised. State v. Haynes, et al., 36 Vt. 667.

241. Irregular conduct of trial. In a criminal prosecution the prosecuting attorney persisted, against the court's ruling, in arguing to the jury that the fact that the respondent did not take the stand as a witness and explain certain transactions involved in the case, was evidence of his guilt. Because the court did not actively interfere and prevent this by an enforcement of its own order;—Held, that it was such an irregularity suffered, and error, that the conviction should be set aside on exceptions. State v. Cameron, 40 Vt. 555,

242. In a criminal trial, the respondent requested a charge that the fact that he had not testified in his own behalf was not to be even thought of, or taken into consideration by the jury to his prejudice. The judge refused this, saying he could not prevent the jury's thoughts, but charged that such fact should not be taken against the respondent. Held, that although such remark of the judge as to the thoughts of the jury was unfortunate, the charge was correct, and he did right in refusing to charge as requested. Ib.

243. Where the court in a criminal case sent to the jury, while deliberating upon the case, a copy of the State statutes for their information as touching the case in hand;—Held, that this was error. State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308.

244. It is not the duty of the court, in a criminal case, to instruct the jury that they must not hold the law to be more unfavorable to the respondent than the court charged it to be. State v. Clark, 37 Vt. 471.

245. One judge of the county court may take a verdict in a criminal case, when the other judges are only temporarily absent, and subject to call. State v. Bryant, 21 Vt. 479.

246. A new trial will not be granted, after a verdict of guilty on an information for a misdemeanor, for the reason that a witness for the prosecution testified to material facts without being sworn, where it is not alleged in the petition that the respondent and his counsel were ignorant of that fact until after the verdict, and where it is not shown that the testimony given was not true, nor that the respondent had sustained some injury. State v. Camp, 23 Vt. 551.

247. Jurors in a capital case may not separate after being sworn. State v. Godfrey, Brayt. 170.

248. A verdict of guilty on a trial for perjury was set aside, because one of the jurors had separated from his fellows, unattended by an officer, after he was sworn and before verdict. State v. Shippy, Brayt. 169.

249. Where the jury, on inquiry by the court, disclosed their verdict in a criminal case before the verdict was actually taken;—Held, that this was no cause for setting it aside. State v. Bryant, 21 Vt. 479.

250. Judgment on general verdict, one or more of the counts being bad. Where an indictment apparently charged the respondent, in the same count, as an accessory both before and after the fact, and the count was insufficient as to the latter charge, the court treated that part as surplusage, and refused to arrest judgment after a general verdict of guilty. State v. Butler, 17 Vt. 145.

251. After a general verdict of guilty, judgment will not be arrested for the insufficiency of the indictment, if it contains one good count. State v. Davidson, 12 Vt. 300. State v. Bean, 19 Vt. 580.

252. After a general verdict in a criminal cause, if one or more of the counts is sufficient, and others bad, the court will pronounce a judgment upon such as are good, and those only; if all are good, then judgment will be rendered upon the count charging the highest offense. State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 668.

253. Under an indictment of four counts, the court instructed the jury that there was no evidence to support either the second or fourth count, and that the respondent could not be convicted on either of them; but the jury rendered a general verdict of guilty. Held to be no sufficient ground for a new trial, for that the conviction and sentence would be only upon the other counts. State v. Wheeler, 35 Vt. 261.

254. Where a respondent was charged with distinct offenses in two different counts of the indictment, and the evidence did not tend to sustain one of the counts, the county court erroneously charged the jury that they might find the respondent guilty on one or both of the counts, and the jury rendered a general verdict of guilty. On exceptions, the supreme court refused a new trial for the error, but rendered sentence upon the count to which the evidence applied. State v. Bugbee, 23 Vt. 82.

255. All the counts of an indictment should in some way be legally disposed of. Where the subject matter of two counts of an indictment was the same, and, through some inadvertence, a verdict was entered only upon one, the supreme court on exceptions allowed the prosecutor to enter a nolle prosequi on the other count. State v. Roe, 12 Vt. 93. 35 Vt. 266.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; STATUTE, II.; JURY; EVIDENCE.

CUSTOM.

1. Where goods are consigned to a commission merchant to be sold "for cash," he is liable therefor if he sells and delivers the goods upon a promise to pay therefor in future. A "custom" of the trade to treat a sale upon an actual credit of a few weeks, days, or other time, as a cash sale, is inconsistent with the terms of the contract ["for cash"], and is void. Biss v. Arnold, 8 Vt. 252. Catlin v. Smith, 24 Vt. 85. 32 Vt. 622.

2. A custom of merchants in New York to consign consigned goods to others to sell, and then for each house to charge a commission of two and a half per cent—the usual commission—for selling, was held void, as against common reason and common justice. Spear v. Newell, 23 Vt. 159.

3. Custom, or usage, can never be given in evidence to vary or control an express contract. Its office is strictly one of exposition, being a means of arriving at the intention of the parties, and of ascertaining what the true contract was, and its nature and extent, which otherwise might be indeterminate and uncertain, arising from implications, presumptions, and acts more or less equivocal. Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123.

4. Such custom, or usage, in order to its being admissible as an item in the testimony tending to show the true contract of parties, which is otherwise equivocal, must be the general usage of the whole trade or business, and so well established and uniformly acquiesced in, and for such length of time, that the jury may be fairly justified in inferring that it was known to the contracting parties, and that it entered into their minds, and made, by implication, a part of their contract. Held, that anything short of this—as, "the course of dealing in that branch of trade"—should be laid wholly out of the case. Id.

5. Where a contract is upon its face of doubtful construction, a custom may be proved in order to determine the construction, provided it be uniform and known, so as to be fairly presumed to have been in the mind of the parties while making the contract. Copper Co. v. Copper Mining Co., 33 Vt. 92.

D.

DAMAGES.

1. Right to damages. As matter of strict right, whatever is the subject of exclusive legal ownership, and is lawfully possessed and claimed by any one as property, should be deemed to possess value sufficient, at least, to support a legal vindication of the party's right. Fullam v. Cummings, 16 Vt. 697.

2. De minimis, &c. The invasion of a legal right always imports some damage, though no pecuniary loss results therefrom. The maxim de minimis, &c., does not apply in such case. Cole v. Drew, 44 Vt. 49. Fullam v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 443.

3. Where, in an action, an invasion of a right is established, though no actual damage be shown, the law gives nominal damages. This applies to cases where the unlawful act might have an effect upon the right of the party, and be evidence in favor of the wrong-doer, if the right should ever come in question. So, too, nominal damages will be given, where one wantonly invades another's rights for the purpose of injury, though no actual damage be done. But no damages will be given where no unlawful intent, nor disturbance of a right, or possession, is shown, and where it is shown that no damage has been sustained. Paul v. Slason, 22 Vt. 231. Graves v. Severens, 40 Vt. 640. Fairbanks v. Kittredge, 24 Vt. 9.

4. This doctrine was applied where an officer, attaching hay, took and used the debtor's pitchfork in removing the hay, but returned it where it was found, so that the debtor had it again, and it was not damaged. In an action of trespass by the debtor therefor;—Held, that he could not recover, and that the maxim, de minimis non curat lex, well applied. Paul v. Slason.

5. In levying upon and removing certain machinery from a mill, the officer, in order to disengage it from the bands by which it was connected with the shafting, cut the thongs by which the bands were laced together, instead of untying them and taking them out without cutting, which could easily have been done. These bands did not belong to the owner of the machinery, but of the mill. The testimony was, that these thongs "were considerably worn and of small value." In trespass by the owner of the bands against the officer, the court charged that if the jury found that the thongs were "old, worn out and nearly worthless," the defendant would not be liable for cutting them, unless he did so wantonly; and further told the jury, that as the suit appeared to be brought to try the defendant's right to enter the mill and take the machinery, the court would not advise them to turn the case on some trifling damage in this particular, provided the defendant acted in good faith. Held erroneous, and that the rule de minimis does not apply in such case, which was an invasion of a legal right, and where also the damage could be estimated. Fullam v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 443. 44 Vt. 53.

6. General—Special. General damages, or such as is the common and ordinary consequence of the act complained of, need not be set forth specifically; and if some portion is enumerated, this will not preclude the party from proving other general damage; whereas special damage, required to be specially stated, is something unusual and extraordinary, and not the common consequence of the wrong complained of. Hutchinson v. Granger, 18 Vt. 386. 36 Vt. 592.

7. Where the primary cause of damage is occasioned by the fault of the defendant, the plaintiff may recover the full amount of his ultimate damage, unless increased by his own negligence, or misconduct. Bardwell v. Jamaica, 15 Vt. 438.

8. In trespass q. c. f., it was objected that the plaintiff could not recover for damage done by breaking down any fences, because none was declared for. The court charged, that so far as the breaking and entry declared for were effected by the act or means of breaking down the fence belonging to the close, the damages thereby done to the fence might properly be taken into consideration as a part of the damages occasioned by the breaking and entry. Held correct,—such damages being the natural and necessary consequence of the act charged. Clark v. Boardman, 42 Vt. 667.

9. Loss of time. The loss of time, in actions for personal injuries, is a proper element in computing actual damage; and the value of the plaintiff's time to him for the earning of wages in his trade, or profession, may be shown. Nones v. Northouse, 46 Vt. 587.

10. Physician's bill. In an action to recover for a personal injury, the declaration averred that the plaintiff "was thereby put to great loss, trouble, damage and expense in the needful employment of physicians, nurses, &c." Held, that this was a sufficient averment of special damages to allow a recovery for the physician's bills;—and, "in the case of a severe bodily injury, we regard the services of a physician as being so essentially necessary, that they may be recovered for as part of the general damages directly resulting from the injury." Folsom v. Underhill, 36 Vt. 580.

11. Expenses of suit. The expenses of a suit, beyond the taxable costs, cannot be recovered as damages in the same suit. Park v. McDaniels, 37 Vt. 594. Rut. & Wash. R. Co. v. Bank of Middlebury, 32 Vt. 651. Harris v. Eldred, 42 Vt. 42. Post 31.

12. The only remedy for recovering of the other party the expenses, beyond taxable costs, of defending a suit, is by an action for malicious prosecution. Sampson v. Warner, 48 Vt. 247.

13. The plaintiff's oxen had been stolen and taken to the defendant in the State of New York. The defendant having refused to surrender the oxen on demand, the plaintiff resorted to legal proceedings in New York to regain the possession and succeeded, but incurred expenses therein. In an action of trover afterwards brought, alleging such expense as special damage;—Held, that they were not recoverable. Harris v. Eldred, 42 Vt. 39.

14. —where there is an obligation to indemnify. Where judgment had been recovered against a town for the insufficiency of a highway occasioned by the acts of a railroad company, and the company were notified of the suit but declined interfering;—Held, in an action against the company for indemnity, that the town was entitled to recover the amount of that judgment and their costs and expenses of that suit. Duxbury v. Vt. Central R. Co., 26 Vt. 751.

15. Interest. Whether interest, eo nomine, is recoverable in an action of tort or not, the jury may take time into consideration in fixing upon reasonable damages. Lindsey v. Danville, 46 Vt. 144.

16. Conversion of choses in action. In trover to recover for notes, or other choses in action, executed by persons other than the defendant, and wrongfully detained, the rule of damages is the value of the property. This, prima facie, is the amount due on the instrument, but subject to proof of actual value. But where the notes were executed by the defendant himself, the rule is the amount due, without reference to the ability of the defendant to pay. Robbins v. Packard, 31 Vt. 570.

17. Where the plaintiff gave a promissory note to the defendant payable to the defendant's order, but solely for the accommodation of the defendant, which note the defendant got discounted for himself and afterwards paid, and then claimed that the plaintiff owed the note, and refused to deliver it to the plaintiff on demand, insisting upon the plaintiff's indebtedness thereon;—Held, that by reason of the defendant's claim to the note as a valid instrument, the plaintiff had a right to it, and could maintain trover for a conversion of it, as a piece of property; but was entitled in such action to recover only its value as property, being nominal damages. Park v. McDaniel, 37 Vt. 594.

18. But, under a special count in case, additional damages might be given, and were so given upon the report of a referee—the action admitting of an amendment of the declaration to conform to the report. Id.

19. Ordinary consequences. In an action by purchaser against seller for the false warranty of sheep as sound, and averring that they were affected with an infectious disease, and alleging as special damages that they communicated such disease to other sheep of the plaintiff;—Held, that the placing of these sheep with others was such a natural and ordinary act and mode of using them, that it was not necessary, in order to recover such damages, to aver or prove that the defendant knew or was informed of such intended use. Packard v. Slack, 32 Vt. 9. (Mullett v. Mason, 1 Law Rep. C. P., 559.)

20. Question for jury. Where the plaintiff's horse escaped upon the defendant's land, through a defect in that part of the division fence which the defendant was bound to maintain, and was there gored by the defendant's bull;—Held, that the liability for such damage could not be declared as matter of law; that the defendant was liable for such damage, if it was the natural consequence of his neglect under the particular facts of the case which were known to him, and such a consequence as he might reasonably have anticipated, and that this was a question for the jury. Saxton v. Bacon, 31 Vt. 540. See Holden v. Rutland & Burlington R. Co., 30 Vt. 297.

21.. Part of main trespass. An injury done by the defendant's calf upon the plaintiff's land after a trespass by breaking in, though not such as cattle by nature are wont to commit—as breaking down a tree—and not of itself alone a trespass of the defendant, was held to be an aggravation of the trespass committed by the entry, and that such damage could be recovered with the damage done by the trespass of which it was a part. Keenan v. Cavanaugh, 44 Vt. 268.

22. To what time computed. The right of action being established, damages are to be computed to the time of trial, although accruing after the commencement of the action. Loury v. Walker, 5 Vt. 181. Spear v. Stacy, 26 Vt. 61.

23. Prospective. Since a party injured can have but one action to recover the damage therefor, he is allowed in that action to recover not only the damages already accrued, but such as the jury find will accrue to him in future from the same cause. Fulsome v. Concord, 46 Vt. 135. Whitney v. Clarendon, 18 Vt. 252.

24. In an action for a personal injury, the court charged the jury, in respect to prospective damages, that they should reduce such losses to their present worth, or to such a sum as, being put at interest, would amount to the sum they found the plaintiff would lose in the future by the injury. Held, that as the effect of this suggestion, if it had any effect, would be to lessen the damages, the defendant could not complain, and it was not legal error. Fulsome v. Concord.

25. Exemplary. In actions of trespass, or case for a tort, damages beyond the amount of compensation for the actual loss suffered, whether called exemplary, punitive or vindictive damages, or smart-money, may be allowed, dependent on the evil motive of the defendant, as well as the circumstances of insult and indignity to the plaintiff. Devine v. Rand, 38 Vt. 621. Ellsworth v. Potter, 41 Vt. 685. Edwards v. Leavitt, 46 Vt. 126.

26. This doctrine applied to the case of a wilful cheat in the weighing of butter purchased. Nye v. Merriam, 35 Vt. 438.

27. It has long been settled in this State, and correctly settled upon sound reasons, that in actions of this character—assault and battery—the jury may give exemplary damages. It is not an innovation of the common law; it is the common law. Edwards v. Leavitt, 46 Vt. 126.

28. Exemplary damages are given in enhancement, merely, of the ordinary damages, on account of the bad spirit and wrong intention, malice, or wantonness of the defendant manifested by the act, and are recoverable, with the ordinary damages, under the common allegation of damage to the plaintiff. Hoadley v. Watson, 45 Vt. 289. Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275. It would probably be error to charge that the plaintiff is entitled to exemplary damages. This is not matter of legal right. Jerome v. Smith, 48 Vt. 280. Boardman v. Goldsmith, 48 Vt. 408.

29. An administrator, in an action for injuries to his intestate, may recover exemplary damages in a case where his intestate might. Earl v. Tupper.

30. It is no bar to the recovery of exemplary damages in an action for an assault and battery, that a criminal prosecution is pending against the defendant for the same assault; nor (Peck, J.,) would it be, if there had been a trial, conviction, sentence and judgment in the State prosecution. Edwards v. Leavitt, 46 Vt. 126; —nor is liability to the imposition of a fine in a criminal prosecution, a bar to any portion of the defendant's liability to exemplary damages in a civil suit for the same cause. Hoadley v. Watson, 45 Vt. 289.

31. In awarding exemplary damages, the jury are to be governed wholly by the malice or wantonness of the defendant, as shown by the conduct they find him liable for in the action. The plaintiff's expenses of the suit for counsel fees and trouble, not taxable as costs, are not to be considered as an element in such damages, and cannot be allowed. Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275. Hoadley v. Watson.

32. In actions for a tort where exemplary damages are allowable, the intent being material, evidence of acts and words before or after the principal transaction, not too remote in point of time but about the time, and which tend to show the defendant's intention and disposition in the principal act, is admissible. Devine v. Rand, 38 Vt. 621.

33. In case by husband and wife for injury to the wife by being bitten by the defendant's dog, the defendant was not allowed to show, as a reason why the suit was brought and as bearing on the question of exemplary damages, that a short time before the day of the injury the plaintiff set his dog and the defendant's dog to fighting, and that the defendant parted them and reproved the plaintiff. Bates v. Cilley, 47 Vt. 1.

34. Mitigation. In an action for assault and battery, the defendant offered to show, in mitigation of damages, a seisin in himself of the land and property in the crops thereon, about which the dispute which caused the assault arose. Held not admissible. Wright v. Page, 2 Tyl. 80.

35. Cases of conversion. Where A drew logs to B's saw-mill to be sawed at the halves, or the sawing to be otherwise paid for by A at his election, and B sold all the boards sawed and received the pay; —Held, that he was liable to A in trover; but in assessing the damages the jury were allowed to deduct the price of the sawing. Vickery v. Taft, 1 D. Chp. 241. 21 Vt. 211. 27 Vt. 287.

36. In trover, the fact that the property, subsequent to the conversion, has gone back into the possession and control of the plaintiff and to his use, does not bar the action, but goes in mitigation of damages. Yale v. Saunders, 16 Vt. 248.

37. Where one's property was wrongfully taken and sold, and he procured it to be bid in for himself at the auction sale, and then appropriated it to himself; —Held, that the rule of damages was not the value of the property, but the price at which it was sold—there being no evidence of further damage. Hurlburt v. Green, 41 Vt. 490.

38. In trover for assisting the plaintiff's wife, who had separated from him, in removing the plaintiff's furniture; —Held, that the fact that the articles went to the use of the wife after such separation did not so go to the plaintiff's benefit, as to reduce the damages below the value of the property. Crumb v. Oaks, 38 Vt. 566.

39. Where the property wrongfully taken by the defendants was afterwards taken from their possession on an attachment against the plaintiff, and the same was sold on the attachment and the avails applied on the execution; —Held, that the defendants were liable for damages only to the time of the attachment, irrespective of whether or not the officer proceeded legally with the property after the attachment. Montgomery v. Wilson, 48 Vt. 616.

40. In actions against constables, &c. The defendant, a constable, took property out of his precinct, on meane process and brought it within his precinct, when he was sued in trespass therefor by the plaintiff, who claimed the property by virtue of a purchase from the debtor which was fraudulent as to his creditors. After the commencement of the trespass suit, the defendant, as constable, made a second return of attachment of the same property, within his precinct, upon the same process. At the time of the trial of the trespass suit, the suit in which the attachment was made was still pending. Held, that such second attachment went in mitigation of damages, and the plaintiff was allowed nominal damages only. Stewart v. Martin, 16 Vt. 397.

41. In an action of trespass against an officer and an attaching creditor who had taken the property of the plaintiff upon a writ against another person, the defendants offered to prove in mitigation of damages, that a third person had received the property to the officer, and that the plaintiff had afterwards, and after the commencement of this suit, assigned all his interest in the property and claim to such receptor, and that the receptor had the property in his possession; but, inasmuch as it appeared that the officer had demanded the property of the receptor on the execution issued, and still held the receipt, and that the defendants had not relinquished their claim to the property;—Held (by a majority), that the evidence was not admissible. Ellis v. Howard, 17 Vt. 330.

42. A writ against the body, issued upon affidavit filed, was committed to a constable for service. The constable erroneously thinking he was not, under the circumstances, bound to serve the writ without indemnity, returned it to the creditor, stating his reasons for not serving it. In an action by the creditor against the town for such default;—Held, that it was proper to be taken into account, in mitigation of damages, that for several months after such return of the writ, the debtor continued publicly to reside in the same place without any change in his circumstances, and so that his body could have been arrested upon a new writ. Blodgett v. Brattleboro, 30 Vt. 579. Woolcott v. Gray, Brayt. 91.

43. In an action against a constable, or the town, for his neglect to keep the attached property so as to be taken in execution, it cannot be shown, in mitigation of damages, that the creditor might, by a new process or new execution, obtain satisfaction of his debt. He has a right to proceed against the specific property attached. Bowman v. Barnard, 24 Vt. 855.

44. Orim. con. In an action for criminal conversation, the defendant may, in mitigation of damages, prove the plaintiff's criminal connection with other women at any time after his marriage and before trial. Shattuck v. Hammond, 46 Vt. 466.

45. General rule—Goods converted or lost. The rule of damages, in an action for a conversion, is the value of the property at the time of the conversion, and interest thereafter; and not an increased value which the property may thereafter have acquired,—as by the growth of a calf. Thrall v. Lathrop. 30 Vt. 307.

46. Where goods forwarded from New York to St. Albans by a common carrier were lost at St. Albans;—Held, in an action for the loss, that the rule of damages was the value of the goods at St. Albans at the time of the loss, deducting the freight unpaid, and adding interest; but there being no evidence of value except the prices stated in the bill of purchase, the jury should have been limited to such prices as the value. Blumenthal v. Brainard, 38 Vt. 402.

47. Assessment. In an action on the case, the declaration averred that the defendant had conveyed certain lands to the plaintiff by deed of warranty, and received the deed from the plaintiff under a promise to procure it to be recorded in the proper office, but that he fraudulently neglected to get the deed recorded, but kept it and refused to deliver it to the plaintiff, whereby he "had deprived the plaintiff of any title to the land and all benefit from the deed." After judgment for the plaintiff on demurrer;—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the damages assessed at the full value of the land, by reason of the admission implied by the demurrer that he had been deprived of all title to the land, &c. Hyde v. Moffat, 16 Vt. 271. Redfield, J., dissenting.

48. In cases of judgment on demurrer, by default, or nil dicit, the plaintiff is entitled to only nominal damages, except where the assessment is mere matter of computation,—as in case of a bond, bill, note, or other contract. In all open actions, if the plaintiff claims damages beyond nominal, they must be ascertained on inquiry; as, by the court, or by some person appointed, or by a jury. Webb v. Webb, 16 Vt. 636. 37 Vt. 154.

49. In debt upon bond conditioned to indemnify the plaintiff against certain debts, the declaration assigned as breaches, in general terms and round numbers, that the plaintiff had been compelled to pay said debts and that the defendant had not indemnified him. The defendant pleaded in bar an accord and satisfaction, and a set-off, but introduced no evidence in support of his plea in bar. Held, that without proof of damages the plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages only;—that the case stood as on a judgment by default, nil dicit, or on demurrer. Id.

50. On the assessment of damages after a default, in an action of trover;—Held, that matter which might have been given in evidence, under the general issue, to defeat the action altogether, may be received in mitigation of the damages to a nominal sum. Collins v. Smith, 16 Vt. 9.

51. Where a suit is brought upon an instrument which, as a contract, shows both the cause of action and the measure of the plaintiff's right specifically, the production of the instrument entitles the plaintiff to damages according to that measure, and they are to be ascertained by mere computation; and the defendant cannot, in such case, on the assessment of damages after judgment by default, nil dicit, or demurrer, or on setting his case down as "not for the jury," prove matters affecting the validity of the contract, nor show a superven-ing matter of defense. Sweet v. McDaniels, 39 Vt. 272. Bradley v. Chamberlain, 31 Vt. 468. See Webb v. Webb, 16 Vt. 636. Redfield, J., in Hyde v. Moffat, 16 Vt. 284.

52. Whenever the cause of action must be proved precisely as alleged, and, when proved, furnishes of itself a rule of damages, the plaintiff after judgment is entitled to the amount of damages indicated by that rule, in the absence of all proof to vary it; and the form of action can make no difference in this respect. Bradley v. Chamberlain.

53. In an action of trespass against some of several co-trespassers, on the assessment of damages after a preliminary judgment without trial;—Held, that payments made by others of such co-trespassers are applicable pro tanto towards the damages, and may be proved although not pleaded in the action. By Steele, J.: “We do not understand, that upon the assessment of damages after a judgment passed without trial after a failure to procure a continuance, the court look into the pleadings to determine what evidence shall be received.” By Peck, J.: “It seems to me, that the partial payment should have been pleaded.” Chamberlain v. Murphy, 41 Vt. 119, 120. 48 Vt. 155.

54. Treble damages under statute. A count in trover cannot, under G. S. c. 33, s. 14, be joined to a count in trespass declaring upon a statute, and for treble damages, for the cutting down of a tree, &c. Keyes v. Prescott, 32 Vt. 86.

55. G. S. c. 113, s. 51, which gives treble damages in certain cases of trespass on land, does not create the right of action, but only gives cumulative damages for what was, and still is actionable at common law. Montgomery v. Edwards, 45 Vt. 75.

56. The right to recover treble damages is “by action founded on this statute,” and hence the declaration must count upon the statute. Where the only reference to the statute was, in the conclusion,—“contrary to the form and force of the statute in such case made and provided;”—Held, that the declaration was insufficient for the recovery of any thing beyond single damages. Ib.

57. Stipulated damages. Where parties submitted to arbitration and agreed in the submission, each to perform the award or pay to the other $500, and the award was to pay a less sum in money;—Held, that the $500 could not be considered as stipulated damages, and that the sum awarded was the measure of damages. Whitcomb v. Preston, 13 Vt. 53.

For damages in particular actions and transactions, see ASSUMPSIT; COVENANT; TRESPASS, &c.;—CONTRACT; FRAUD; SALE, &c.

DEDICATION.

1. What constitutes—and evidence of dedication. The enjoyment of a public highway, square, common, or any other common privilege or immunity, though for a period short of fifteen years, may afford conclusive evidence of a right so to enjoy. The dedication need not be by deed, but it is sufficient if the owner of the soil by some unequivocal act manifests his intention to dedicate the land to public use, and, in consequence thereof, individuals have embarked in any undertakings, or invested property which will be materially affected, if such intention should be altered or changed. In such case, the donor cannot reclaim the dedication, but he retains the fee subject to the public use. Abbott v. Mills, 3 Vt. 521. State v. Wilkinson, 2 Vt. 480.

2. Where a piece of land is thrown or left open by the owner for public use as a common thoroughfare, without any intent manifested to resume possession, and the land is so used by the public without restriction, it may become a public square or highway by dedication, without deed or other act of the owner; and if so suffered to continue, until individuals have become interested by purchases under the expectation that it would not be reclaimed by the owner, the dedication becomes irrevocable, though it may not have existed fifteen years. State v. Catlin, 3 Vt. 530.

3. The declarations of the owner are admissible evidence to prove the dedication of lands to public use, particularly in connection with his acts. Ib.

4. Where the proprietors of a town passed a vote setting apart a piece of undivided land as a public square, the vote, though irregular and not originally binding, was held to have become so as a dedication, where the proprietors had derived a benefit from it, and had recognized it by allotting their lands and village lots as bordering upon the square, and individuals had bought and built accordingly, without objection. Abbott v. Mills, 3 Vt. 521.

5. A right by dedication may be established by a possession by the public for less than fifteen years, when accompanied by such acts and circumstances as show an intent on the part of a donor to make the dedication. Morse v. Ranno, 32 Vt. 600. Prouty v. Bell, 44 Vt. 73.

6. A deed conveying lands to a town in fee will not be construed as a dedication of the land to public use, although expressed to be “for the use of the town as a meeting house green,” “or common”;—the words not amounting to a condition, or a limitation. State v. Woodward, 23 Vt. 92. Beach v. Haynes, 12 Vt. 15.

7. But where the town, in such case, after purchasing and taking a title in fee to the land, suffered the public to use it as a public common, and afterwards made a survey of the land, and placed it upon record, describing the land as the "town common," and thereafter, for more than 15 years, it was used by the public as a public common;—Held, that the land had thereby become irrevocably dedicated to the use of the public, so that a party to whom the town sold and conveyed a part of the land was indictable for a nuisance by inclosing it. State v. Woodard.

8. Extent of use. Where the public rely upon usage as evidence of their right, the right cannot be more extensive than the usage; and evidence of private occupancy may qualify or disprove the usage claimed. State v. Trask, 6 355.

9. Acceptance. A dedication of land to public use, whether by deed or otherwise, requires, in order to be binding, an acceptance by the public, and this may be of the whole or of a part only; if appropriated by the public only in part, and the rest has for many years been occupied by the owner for private uses, this is evidence that the public claim has been waived or relinquished. Id.

10. To render a dedication of land to public use binding, there must be not only some act of dedication on the part of the owner, but there must be something equivalent to an acceptance on the part of the public. Id. Morse v. Ranno, 32 Vt. 600. Dodge v. Stacy, 39 Vt. 558.

11. Where land has been dedicated by the proprietor to public use—as for a common—and the dedication has been accepted—as by use for such purpose—the public has acquired an easement therein, and the town, or its authorities, have no power to convey a right inconsistent therewith;—as, a right to an exclusive occupation. Pomeroy v. Mills, 8 Vt. 279. S. C., 8 Vt. 410.

12. Indictment. Though the fee of land be vested in a town, or be private property, even, yet if the use and occupancy be in the public as a highway, public square or common,—common to all the people for passing and re-passing,—any obstruction thereof, or nuisance erected thereon, may be prosecuted for by indictment, and may be described in the indictment as a public highway. State v. Atkinson, 24 Vt. 448. State v. Wilkinson, 2 Vt. 480. State v. Catlin, 3 Vt. 580.

13. Owner of the fee. The owner of the fee of land, dedicated to the public as a common or highway, may maintain trespass, or ejectment, for a private occupation thereof; but he could hold only in a way consistent with the rights of the public. Pomeroy v. Mills, 8 Vt. 410.

14. Public square, &c., as distinguished from a highway. Public squares, or commons, are not strictly highways. They are public dedications for ornament and for use, and not for traveling with horses or teams. They are like highways in some particulars, but it by no means follows that they may not be inclosed with a fence, or that trees may not be set out thereon. They frequently require to be so enclosed for the convenience of people on foot, and to exclude horses, carriages and teams. Hutchinson v. Pratt, 11 Vt. 402.

HIGHWAYS, I., 1.

DEED OF LANDS.

I. THE INSTRUMENT AND ITS REQUISITES.

1. Consideration.
2. Statute system.
3. Signing.
4. Sealing.
5. Witnessing.
6. Delivery and acceptance.
7. Acknowledgment and proof.
8. Recording and notice.

II. WHAT PASSES.

1. Quit-claim deed.
2. Warranty deed.
3. Freehold in futuro.
4. Appurtenances.

III. CONSTRUCTION.

1. Office of habendum.
2. Rules of interpretation.
3. Instances—as to description, boundaries, &c.

I. THE INSTRUMENT AND ITS REQUISITES.

1. Consideration.

1. A consideration is necessary to sustain a deed of bargain and sale, or other conveyance of land; but it is not essential that the consideration should be expressed in the deed. It may be proved otherwise—as by parol, and from circumstances. Stevens v. Griffith, 8 Vt. 448. Wood v. Beach, 7 Vt. 522. 19 Vt. 216.

2. The fact that the true consideration of a deed is different from that expressed in it,—as where it was for love and affection, but expressed to be for a money consideration,—does not avoid the deed, though it may be evidence of fraud as to third persons. Brackett v. Wait, 6 Vt. 411.

3. The purpose, as expressed in a conveyance of land to a town, of having a school house built thereon and a school taught for the benefit of the youth of the town, imports a sufficient consideration to support the deed, although not expressed in the deed as the consideration. Castleton v. Langdon, 19 Vt. 210.

2. Statute System.

4. Our statute system of conveyancing was designed to be entire in itself; and the common law modes of conveyancing have not been regarded as in force here,—as, a fine, common recovery, &c. Redfield, J., in Gorham v. Daniels, 23 Vt. 600.

3. Signing.

5. Under the statute requiring a deed of land to be signed and sealed by the grantor, the name of the grantor must be subscribed to the deed. A deed, purporting to be the deed of a private corporation named therein as “The Bennington Iron Company,” was signed “Charles H. Hammond, chairman Bennington Iron Co.”—Held, that it was not signed by the corporation so as to become its deed. Isham v. Bennington Iron Co., 19 Vt. 230. 23 Vt. 285. [The authority of Hammond was not recited, nor appeared.] Miller v. Rut. & Wash. R. Co., 36 Vt. 452.

4. Sealing.

6. A signed writing, not sealed nor acknowledged, is inoperative at law as a conveyance of land, though so intended. Arms v. Burt, 1 Vt. 303.

7. An interest in land created by a perpetual lease can be conveyed or surrendered only by a deed properly executed;—the instrument must be sealed. Stevens v. Denning, 2 Vt. 411.

8. Scroll. A scroll or circle made with a pen, and the word “seal” written within it, was held not to be a seal when attached to an instrument conveying land, nor to constitute it a deed. A seal, in such case, must be of wax or wafer, something which may be impressed with an instrument used as and for a seal. Beardsley v. Knight, 4 Vt. 471.

5. Witnessing.

9. Under our statutes, two subscribing witnesses are necessary to the validity of a deed of lands, or of any estate or interest therein. Day v. Adams, 43 Vt. 510.

10. Where a deed has but a single subscribing witness, the recording of it is not constructive notice to subsequent purchasers. Peck, J., Id. 515.

11. Nor can such deed be treated as valid, on the ground that it is good in equity and would be enforced in a court of chancery; for though such a deed is treated as evidence of an agreement to execute a valid deed, it is not conclusive, and it cannot be assumed that a court of equity would enforce it on application for that purpose. Id.

12. A defective deed—as where it has but one attesting witness—is evidence of an agreement to execute a valid deed, which may be enforced in equity; and notice of such deed—as by seeing the record of it in the town clerk’s office—is notice to an attaching creditor of the grantee’s right, and such creditor will stand in no better condition in respect to title than the grantor. Vt. Mining Co. v. Windham Co. Bank, 44 Vt. 489.

6. Delivery and acceptance.

13. Delivery. The delivery of a deed, either as an escrow or absolutely, is an act including intent, and is always a question of fact resting in pais, and to be found by the jury. Lindsay v. Lindsay, 11 Vt. 621.

14. —in trust. Where a deed is delivered to one in trust for the grantee, to take effect at the grantor’s death unless he shall otherwise direct in his lifetime, and he dies without giving any further direction, the deed takes effect at the death of the grantor as his deed from the first delivery; and held, that by such deed of a person insolvent, creditors might be preferred. Morse v. Slason, 13 Vt. 296.

15. Where one member of a firm was trustee and had sole control of the estate of a third person, and he loaned the trust funds to his firm, and received their note and mortgage therefor running to the cestui que trust, and caused the mortgage to be recorded, and retained the papers in his possession, though without any knowledge of the transaction by the cestui que trust;—Held, that here was a sufficient legal delivery to give validity to the note and mortgage. Tucker v. Bradley, 33 Vt. 324.

16. —to agent of grantee. The delivery of a deed to the agent of a grantee is, in legal effect, a delivery to the grantee; and is effective to pass the title, although delivered upon a condition not performed. Pratt v. Holman, 16 Vt. 530. 32 Vt. 350.

17. —in escrow. Where a deed, or other writing, is deposited with a third person to be delivered to the grantee only upon the performance of certain conditions precedent, and he delivers it without the performance of such conditions, this is no delivery in law, and the instrument takes no effect, though executed, acknowledged and recorded. Stiles v. Brown, 16 Vt. 563.

18. To defeat the operation of a deed in the hands of the grantee named, it may be shown that it was delivered to a third person, as an escrow, and was by him wrongfully delivered to the grantee. Nichols v. Nichols, 28 Vt. 228.

19. A deed deposited by the grantor with a third person, to be held by him and not to be delivered until some other thing is done, is an escrow, and has no validity without the performance of such condition, even though the depository fraudulently delivers it to the grantee, who takes it in good faith and without knowledge of the condition, and advances a valuable consideration for it; and even if the grantor, for the purpose of expediting the business, consents to the recording of the deed and it is so recorded, but with the express understanding that the depository shall retain the deed thereafter until the performance of the condition, there is no effectual delivery without performance of the condition. Smith v. S. Royalton Bank, 32 Vt. 341. Distinguished from Pratt v. Holman, 16 Vt. 530.

20. To constitute the delivery of a deed of lands, the grantor must part with the custody and control of the instrument, permanently, with the intention of having it take effect as a transfer of the title, and must part with his right to the instrument, as well as with the possession of it. So long as he retains the control of the deed, he retains the title. Elmore v. Marks, 39 Vt. 538.

21. Acceptance. D being indebted to M Bank, without their knowledge made to them a mortgage, May 27th, and sent it by a messenger to the town clerk's office for record, intending thereby to part with all control over it and that it should take immediate effect, and sent another messenger to inform the bank of the facts. This messenger gave such information on the 29th to the cashier, who replied that he was glad of it. Held, that this was a good delivery and acceptance, and that the mortgage, being recorded, took precedence of another mortgage of the same estate afterwards, on the 29th, executed and delivered by D directly to F bank and recorded, although the first mortgage was not received by M Bank from the town clerk until after the recording of the second mortgage. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Drury, 38 Vt. 426.

22. Date not controlling. An attachment was held to prevail over a deed of earlier date and recorded, but not then accepted by the grantee. Denton v. Perry, 5 Vt. 382.

23. A executed to B a deed of land, and soon after executed to him another deed of the same land, for the same consideration and of the same tenor, but bearing, by antedating it, an earlier date than the first, and, before either deed was recorded or any further conveyance was made or lien created, A came in possession of the deed last executed, but of earliest date, and destroyed it. Held, that if B gave up that deed to A to be cancelled, the other deed was inoperative without some new agreement to give it effect—something tantamount to a new delivery; but if A took away and destroyed that deed without the consent of B, then the other deed would take effect, and might be recorded. Corliss v. Corliss, 8 Vt. 373.

24. The orator conveyed to H land with warranty, and at the same time took back a mortgage to secure the purchase money, but the mortgage bore an earlier date. Both instruments were recorded. Afterwards H quit-claimed generally to G. On a bill against H and G to foreclose;—Held, that the deed and mortgage took effect from the delivery, respectively, and that the date was unimportant; that as mere assignee of the equity of redemption, G stood on no higher ground than H; and that to entitle G to the superior equity, it must appear that he was a bona fide purchaser, deceived by the record, and that he paid a valuable consideration. Fish v. Gordon, 10 Vt. 288.

7. Acknowledgment and proof.

25. Acknowledgment. The deed of a feme covert of land held in her own right must be executed and acknowledged conformably to the law of the place where the land lies. Harmon v. Taft, 1 Tyl. 6.

26. As to a deed of lands situate in this State, which was executed in New York, April 10, 1773, and there proved according to the laws of that province;—Held, that it was not entitled to registry, because not acknowledged according to the laws of New Hampshire, which maintained jurisdiction de facto, though the government de jure may have been in New York. Townsend v. Downer, 27 Vt. 119. S.C. 32 Vt. 183.

27. A judge of the supreme court being ex officio a justice of the peace throughout the State, his certifying the acknowledgment of a deed before him, as such judge, satisfies the statute requiring the acknowledgment to be before a justice of the peace. Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336.

28. A recorded deed is not defeated by an omission of date in the acknowledgement. Galusha v. Sinclair, 3 Vt. 394.

29. It is not indispensable, that the place of taking the acknowledgment of a deed should fully appear from the certificate of acknowledgment itself, provided it can be discovered with sufficient certainty by inspection of the whole instrument. Brooks v. Chaplin, 3 Vt. 281. Ives v. Allyn, 12 Vt. 589.

30. In the body of a deed, one of the grantors was described as Richard G. Bailey, and the deed was signed R. G. Bailey. The certificate of acknowledgment was, that "Oliver Hale and Daniel Brown, Richard G. personally appeared and acknowledged this instrument, by them sealed and subscribed," &c. Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the deed was acknowledged by Richard G. Bailey, the grantor. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 368.

31. Where the name of the grantee, instead of that of the grantor, in a deed, appeared in the certificate of acknowledgment, and there was nothing apparent on the face of the certificate, or of the deed, to determine whether an error was committed in writing the name of the man who acknowledged, or in taking the acknowledgment of the wrong man, by mistake;—Held, that no correction could be made by construction, and that this was of no effect as an acknowledgment. Wood v. Cochrane, 39 Vt. 544.

32. A deed of lands must show upon its face, as spread upon the record, a compliance with the requirements of the statute, in order to take effect as constructive notice; and parol evidence cannot be brought in aid of any defect. Thus, where there appeared upon the deed, as recorded, no proper acknowledgment;—Held, that the record was no notice to a subsequent purchaser. Ib.

33. All that is essential to the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed executed by an agent, is, that it be intelligible, and clearly appear to be intended to be the deed of or on behalf of the constituent. McDaniels v. Flower Brook Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274.

34. Proof instead of acknowledgment. A deed not acknowledged, executed before any statute requiring acknowledgment, may be proved like other writings not acknowledged. Stevens v. Griffith, 8 Vt. 448.

35. The cases where, by statute, proof of the execution of a deed may be taken instead of an acknowledgment, being special and exceptional, in order that such proof may be omitted, it must appear, in the certificate or document of proof, to be a case within some of the exceptions. Pearl v. Howard, 1 D. Chip. 178. 3 Vt. 37.

36. Where the execution of a deed is proved before a justice by the subscribing witnesses, under s. 7 of the conveyance act of 1797 (G. S. c. 65, ss. 11 and seq.), it need not appear from the certificate that the grantor refused to acknowledge the deed. Catlin v. Washburn, 3 Vt. 25.

37. In every case of a joint deed, the reasonable presumption is that the interest of the grantors was joined. If so, it would seem that each owner was interested in the entirety, and so not competent to make the statute proof of the execution of the deed by his co-grantors, any more than by himself. Redfield, C. J., in Townsend v. Downer, 27 Vt. 119.

8. Recording and notice.

38. Recording. To entitle a deed to registration, it must be executed according to the statute requisites by which the registry of deeds is established. This statute mode of conveyance is exclusive of all modes of conveyance at common law, and of all previous statute modes, so far as the later statute provides a new mode of conveyance. Isham v. Bennington Iron Co., 19 Vt. 230. 23 Vt. 611.

39. A deed not executed according to the statute requirements is not entitled to registry, and consequently the record of it is not constructive notice to any one. Ib. Pope v. Henry, 24 Vt. 560.

40. The record of a deed can have no further effect, as implied notice of its existence and contents, than the statute attaches to it. The recording of an unacknowledged deed has therefore no other effect, as notice, than the temporary effect given to it by the statute. (G. S. c. 65, s. 16.) Hoisington v. Hoisington, 2 Aik. 235.

41. The copy of a deed is not entitled to record, and a record of such copy is not in law a record of the original, and does not operate as notice to subsequent purchasers or creditors, but is a nullity. Stevens v. Brown, 3 Vt. 420.

42. Previous to the Act of 1797, there was no law in this State authorizing the record of a deed of lands in this State, which was executed out of the State before 1787, and was acknowledged or proved only according to the laws of the State or country where executed. Townsend v. Downer, 27 Vt. 119. S. C., 32 Vt. 188. And the Act of 1797 did not legalize a record made before its passage. Ib.

43. The registry of a deed in Cheshire county, New Hampshire, in 1781, of lands situate in Vermont was held ineffectual, inasmuch as this State was fully organized in 1777, and as early as 1779 two counties were fully organized, viz: Cumberland and Bennington, with clerks and books of registry;—in the first of which counties the land lay. Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 435.

44. Whether the registry of a deed at Exeter, New Hampshire, conveying lands within what is now the State of Vermont, executed and recorded before the organization of this State, is a sufficient registry—quære. Ib.

45. A deed of machinery in a mill would be void as against the creditors of the grantor, without an actual change of possession, before the passage of the Act of Nov. 5, 1838, authorizing the record of such conveyances, and making the record equivalent to such possession. Quære, whether such deed, recorded before the Act, is not brought within its protection prospectively, from and after the passage of the Act. Waltham v. Readsboro, 24 Vt. 252. 9 Vt. 351.

46. A deed of land to be admitted as evidence, even in a suit between the parties, if proved only by the acknowledgment of the grantor, must be first recorded. But when the clerk of the proper office has duly certified upon the deed that it has been properly recorded, the effect of the evidence cannot be defeated by showing a mistake in the record,—certainly not where such mistake does not affect the interest of the person against whom the deed is offered. Manwell v. Manwell, 14 Vt. 14.

47. Effect of record by relation. A deed, required to be acknowledged and recorded, may be read in evidence if acknowledged and recorded at any time before trial,—such acknowledgment and record, though subsequent to the date of the deed, taking effect, by relation, from such date, as against all persons except subsequent bona fide purchasers, or attaching creditors without notice. Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165. Douglass v. Spooner, N. Chip. 74. Harrington v. Gage, 6 Vt. 532. Pitkin v. Leavitt, 13 Vt. 379.

48. Filing for record. It has been often decided that where a deed is left with the town clerk in the usual way for record, but is not spread upon the record until some time afterwards, yet when recorded the record has relation back to the time when it was filed for record; and, in such case, it will have priority over a deed of later date though earlier spread upon the record. Jarvis v. Aikens, 25 Vt. 635.

49. Deeds take precedence, not according to priority of time in the fact of recording, but according to priority of filing and deposit for record in the proper office. But if the grantee withdraws the deed, after being so filed and deposited, and carries it away before it is in fact copied upon the book of records, its operation as a recorded instrument is postponed until it is returned, and takes effect from its return, and from that time only. Johnson v. Burden, 40 Vt. 567. Williams, C. J., in Sawyer v. Adams, 8 Vt. 175-6, citing Brush v. Cook, decided in 1824.

50. Where a record is made essential in working a transmission of title, or in creating or defeating a right, nothing is effectually accomplished until the necessary records are completed. But where the object of the record is notice merely, as where the title is passed or the right acquired by act of the parties, as in case of the conveyance of real estate by deed, the lodging of the instrument in the proper office for immediate record, and the reception of it by the recording officer for the same purpose, are held to operate, like the record itself, as notice to third persons. In other words, the deed or instrument, thus deposited and received, is deemed to be of record, or recorded. Ferris v. Smith, 24 Vt. 27, 32. Bigelow v. Topliff, 25 Vt. 273. Morton v. Edwin, 19 Vt. 77.

51. Index. A deed left for record in the town clerk's office and copied by him into the proper book, in the proper place, and duly certified as recorded, is recorded, and takes effect as a recorded deed, although not entered upon the index or alphabet—which constitutes no part of the record. Curtis v. Lyman, 24 Vt. 338. 29 Vt. 324.

52. Misplaced record. Where a town clerk copied a deed left with him for record on the back leaf, not paged, of a volume of the records which had not been used for the recording of deeds for more than twelve years, and the names of the parties were not entered in the alphabet, and this was done for the purpose of concealment, and fraudulently, on the part of the town clerk, though the grantee in the deed was innocent thereof;—Held, that such deed was not recorded within the meaning of the statute, and was not notice to a subsequent attaching creditor, or purchaser. Sawyer v. Adams, 8 Vt. 172. Phelps and Royce, J. J., dissenting. 24 Vt. 342.

[Note.—In Spear, assignee of Alexander, in bankruptcy, v. Birchard et al., in U. S. District Court for Vt., at February term, 1875, before N. Shipman, District Judge, it was held, that successive mortgages so fraudulently transcribed out of place and not entered on the alphabet, took effect as recorded deeds, both as to the assignee and the several mortgagees, from the respective dates that they were left for record and were indorsed as received for record, according to G. S. c. 15. s. 44, enacted since Sawyer v. Adams; and that from the reasoning and language of the court in Bigelow v. Topliff, 25 Vt. 284, and Jarvis v. Aikens, Id. 637, it appeared that the doctrine of Sawyer v. Adams, was not the settled law of Vermont.]

53. Recording power of attorney. Where lands are conveyed under a power of attorney, the power must be recorded and accompany the grant upon the records, in order to connect the grant with the grantor; without such record it is not "admissible in evidence." G. S. c. 65, s. 24. Oatman v. Fowler, 43 Vt. 462.

54. Where land is in two or more towns. A power of attorney for the conveyance of all the principal's land in a certain county was recorded in one town of that county, in which town the principal owned lands. A copy of that record was recorded in another town of that county. Held, that the record of such copy was of no avail as to lands in the last named town. Id.

55. Where the same deed conveys lands situate in two different towns, the recording of it in one town only is not constructive notice of the conveyance of the land situate in the other town. Perrin v. Reed, 35 Vt. 2. Danby Bank v. Lapham. Id. 8.

56. Where a deed conveyed lands situate in two towns and was recorded in but one;—Held, that although the record was not constructive notice as to the lands in the other town, yet that a party who examined such record, and had such knowledge of the lands as to know from the description given that the deed, as recorded, conveyed the land in such other town, was chargeable with actual notice. Id.

57. Notice of unrecorded deed. A later deed, though first recorded, must yield to an earlier deed, though not recorded, of which the grantee in the later deed has knowledge when he takes it. Stewart v. Thompson, 8 Vt. 255. Ludlow v. Gill, 1 D. Chip. 49. N. Chip. 63. Corliss v. Corliss, 8 Vt. 373.

58. Judgment in ejectment against the grantee in an unrecorded deed. A third person afterwards, without knowledge of such deed, purchased and took conveyance of the land from the grantor in that first deed. Held, that his rights were not concluded by that judgment. Barlow v. Boene, Brayt. 185.

59. To give effect to a deed of prior date, unrecorded, against a deed of later date, recorded, the second grantee, at the time of taking his deed, must have had notice of the execution, contents and existence of the prior deed. Brckett v. Wait, 6 Vt. 411.

60. The recording of a deed operates as notice only to those who take conveyance of the same land, or make claim thereto by act subsequent to such recording, and does not affect those who already have title. Leach v. Beatties, 33 Vt. 195. Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 532.

61. Simultaneous records. Where two separate deeds of the same parcel of land were executed and delivered by the same party, at the same time, one to each of two several grantees, neither grantee knowing that the land was conveyed to the other, and both deeds were left for record at the same time;—Held, that each grantee, as against the other, took a moiety of the land. Ferris v. Mosher, 27 Vt. 218.

62. Who is not affected by notice. A purchaser in good faith, without knowledge of a previous unregistered deed, is not affected by notice thereof to his grantor. Morrison v. Shattuck, 1 D. Chip. 42. S. C., N. Chip. 34.

63. Although the grantee of lands is affected by notice, at the time of his purchase, of an outstanding unrecorded deed, his grantee will not be affected by such notice, unless he knew that his grantor had such notice, but may rely upon the record title; and a subsequent grantee may, in such case, stand upon the title of the second. Day v. Clark, 25 Vt. 397.

64. Purchase according to the record. A deed of the east half of a lot was, by mistake of the town clerk, recorded as a deed of the west half. Held, that a later deed to a subsequent purchaser of the east half, who had no notice of the first deed except what was contained in the record, should prevail over the first deed. Sanger v. Craigue, 10 Vt. 555.

65. Want of record as evidence of fraud. The fact that a deed remained unrecorded for two months and that possession of the land remained in the tenant of the grantor under an unexpired lease, was held to afford no presumption of fraud in the grant, or of a reconveyance. Brckett v. Wait, 6 Vt. 411.

66. Remedy against grantor. The grantee of land who neglected to record his deed, by reason of which a creditor of the grantor took the land by levy of execution, was held entitled, on bill against his grantor, to recover the amount of the debt thus paid by the levy. Anon. Addison Co., 20 Vt. 392.

II. WHAT PASSES.

67. Deed alone is not title. A deed on record, though ancient, shows no title, of itself, in the grantee. To make it proof of ownership, it must be accompanied either with proof of possession corresponding to the deed, or of title in the grantor. Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 414. Potter v. Washburn, 13 Vt. 558.

68. Quit-claim deed. A deed of release and quit-claim, in common form, of all the grantor's "right, title, interest, property, estate and demand in and to" certain lands, &c., passes every estate and interest which the grantor had in the lands described,—as, both a reversionary estate in fee, and a particular estate for life, or years. Pingrey v. Watkins, 15 Vt. 479. S. C., 17 Vt. 379.

69. A quit-claim deed conveys only the title which the grantor then has, and does not prevent him from subsequently acquiring by purchase or descent, and holding, an outstanding title. Henry v. Bell, 5 Vt. 393.

70. The habendum of a quit-claim deed in common form was: "To have and to hold the premises so that neither the said A (the grantor) nor any one claiming under him should thereafter have claim, or right to the premises aforesaid." Held, that the word premises did not mean the land, but referred to such title and interest as the grantor then had in the land, and did not exclude him from subsequently acquiring and holding a superior right and title from some other source. Smith v. Pollard, 19 Vt. 272.

71. Warranty deed. Where one conveys land with covenants of warranty of title, all title subsequently acquired by the grantor will enure for the benefit of the grantee, and in discharge of the grantor's covenants. Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336. Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 39. See Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 435. Jarvis v. Atkins, 25 Vt. 635. Carbee v. Hopkins, 41 Vt. 250. ESTOPPEL, II.

72. Freehold in futuro. Under the statutes of conveyancing in Vermont, there is no objection whatever to the creating of a freehold estate, in terms, to take effect in future. Gerham v. Daniels, 23 Vt. 600.

73. Where, in the conveyance of land, it was expressed that the grantee was not to come into possession of it until after the death of the grantor and his wife—"meaning to convey the whole of the above described land after the death of myself and wife"—this was held to be a reservation of an estate during the life of the grantor and his wife: and—the grantor dying before his wife,—held, that he died seized of an estate in which the widow was entitled to dower. Ib. And see Adams v. Dunklee, 19 Vt. 382. Sherman v. Dodge, 28 Vt. 26.

74. Appurtenances. The manure of animals, made upon a farm, whether scattered upon the land, spread about the barn-yard, lying in piles at the stable windows, or lying in the stables where it has been suffered to accumulate, passes by a deed of the freehold, as appurtenant to it. Stone v. Proctor, 2 D. Chip. 108. Wetherbee v. Ellison, 19 Vt. 379. 43 Vt. 93.

75. Fencing materials, as posts and rails, where it is evident from the manner of their distribution upon the land, and other appearances, that they are designed for immediate use in fencing the land, will, like fences already built, pass with a deed of the land. Where the question was whether certain posts and rails were embraced in a written contract for the sale and conveyance of "a farm;"—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to prove the situation of the posts and rails in these respects. Ripley v. Paige, 12 Vt. 353.

76. A stone split out, raised and propped up a little from the ground, and intended to be removed from the farm and used elsewhere, does not necessarily pass with a deed of the farm; and it is competent to show by parol that the purchaser of the farm, at the time the deed was executed, was informed of the facts, thus showing that the stone did not pass with the deed. This is not properly an exception of what would otherwise pass by the deed. Noble v. Sylvester, 42 Vt. 146.

77. A conveyed to B a house and lot by deed in common form. There was at the time an aqueduct laid from a spring upon other lands of A to the house conveyed, in which the water was then running to the house. Held, that, although the deed made no allusion to the spring or aqueduct, it conveyed the water as it "was then running, with a right to the spring and aqueduct sufficient for its continuance, as an appurtenance to the house and land. A, having afterwards cut off the aqueduct upon his own land and stopped the flow of the water, was held liable to B in an action. Cookidge v. Hager, 43 Vt. 9.

78. The fee of one parcel of land—as, a highway—does not pass as appurtenant to the grant of another parcel,—as, of the land adjoining. Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484. Cole v. Haynes, 22 Vt. 588.

79. The defendant, owning a grist-mill and the lands around it, sold the mill with the appurtenances, and conveyed the mill with the land on which it stood, and land north of it to the highway, and as far west as the west side of the mill. There was an open space on the north and on the west of the mill, which for more than 60 years had remained uninclosed, and persons going to the mill passed over this open space, in any direction they pleased, to and from the mill door. The defendant afterwards inclosed and occupied the space west of the mill. In an action by the grantee for an obstruction to his right of way to the mill, claiming that by reason of such obstruction the passage to and from the mill was rendered less convenient than before;—Held, 1st, that the use by the defendant of his own land in connection with the mill did not necessarily make it an appurtenance to the mill; 2nd, that as the right claimed was one of convenience only and not of necessity, the conveyance must be construed as limiting the grant to the boundaries specified in it. Plimpton v. Converse, 42 Vt. 712.

80. The word appurtenances in the habendum of a deed, is confined to existing rights legally appurtenant to the land in the hands of the grantor, and does not carry an easement in the land of another which, by reason of not having ripened into a legal right, has not become legally attached to the premises conveyed. Sutcasey v. Brooks, 34 Vt. 451, questioning dictum in Vt. Central R. Co. v. Hills, 23 Vt. 681,

III. CONSTRUCTION.

1. Office of the habendum.

81. The office of the habendum in a conveyance is to define the estate conveyed; but in an assignment merely of a leasehold estate, which is limited and defined by the original deed, no such definition is required, and the habendum is not necessary. Strong v. Garfield, 10 Vt. 497.

82. Selectmen by one instrument leased certain lots, habendum "as long as wood grows and water runs, or as we the selectmen have a right to lease the same." As selectmen they had a right to lease some of these lots perpetually, and some for only five years. Held, that this alternative in the habendum had reference to the statute limitation as to this last class of lands, and that the lease was valid. Lemington v. Stevens, 48 Vt. 38.

83. No one can take an immediate or present estate under a deed, who is not named as a grantee in the premises, provided any one is named therein; if no one is therein named, the grantee may be ascertained from other parts of the deed. Adams v. Dunklee, 19 Vt. 382.

84. Where the grantee is named in the premises and the quantity of the estate granted is stated, he takes the entire estate described; and any limitation in the habendum designed to abridge or lessen such estate of the immediate grantee, in favor of a party not named in the premises, is repugnant and inoperative. Ib.

85. Thus, where the grant was "to T O, for and during his natural life and the life of H O, his wife, &c.,"—"to have and to hold, &c., to him the said T O and H O, for and during their and each of their natural life, to their use and benefit during said term";—Held, that T O took the entire estate for both lives, and no remainder vested in the wife on the death of H O, but passed to the administrator of H O. Ib.

86. Where the habendum in a deed is contradictory to the premises, it is void, and the words in the premises stand. But where it only limits, explains or qualifies the words there used, it performs its proper office. It may lessen, enlarge, limit and qualify the use of the land so long as it does not defeat the estate granted. Cong. Soc. Halifax v. Stark, 34 Vt. 243.

87. Thus, where the grant was to a corporation, by its name simply, of land by its name and boundaries, without other description in the premises of the estate or interest conveyed;—Held, that the use which the grantee was to have of the land, and the extent and duration of the estate, were properly explained and limited in the habendum. Ib.

88. Where the purpose of the grant is clearly ascertained from the premises of a deed, and the premises contain proper words of limitation, an habendum which is repugnant to the grant yields to the manifest intent and terms of the grant; if clearly repugnant to the grant, it is treated as of no validity or effect. Ib. Flagg v. Eames, 40 Vt. 16. Adams v. Dunklee, 19 Vt. 882.

2. Rules of interpretation.

89. Office of court. Where there is no question as to the facts, it is a mere question of law as to what land was intended to be conveyed by a deed. Stevens v. Hollister, 18 Vt. 294.

90. It is error to leave to a jury the construction of a deed as to the boundaries intended, where there is no latent ambiguity in the description. But a new trial will not be granted for such error, if the jury gave the right construction. Morse v. Weymouth, 28 Vt. 824.

91. —of jury. Whether or not particular premises are included in the description in a deed, where this cannot be determined from an inspection of the deed, is a question for the jury; but the construction of deeds, and their legal effect, are always questions of law. Lippett

v. Kelley, 46 Vt. 516. Mitchell v. Stevens, 1 Aik. 16. Hodges v. Strong, 10 Vt. 247.

92. Intent. It is a cardinal principle in the interpretation of deeds that the intention of the grantor, where it is plainly and clearly expressed, or can be collected or ascertained from the deed, is to be observed and carried into effect, unless it is in conflict with some rule of law; and that whatever is repugnant to the general intention of the deed, or the obvious particular intention of the grantor, is to be rejected, if such intention is consistent with the rules of law. Kellogg, J., in Flagg v. Eames, 40 Vt. 22.

93. The intent when apparent and not repugnant to any rule of law, will control technical terms; for the intent, and not the words, is the essence of every agreement. In the exposition of deeds, the construction must be upon the view and comparison of the whole instrument, and with a view to give every part of it meaning and effect.—Applied in Collins v. Lovelle, 44 Vt. 230. Colby v. Colby, 28 Vt. 10. Flagg v. Eames, 40 Vt. 16.

94. As to rules of interpretation of deeds and other contracts, and how far technical rules and terms yield to the intent as manifested by a view and comparison of the whole instrument—See State v. Trask, 6 Vt. 355. Wheelock v. Moulton, 15 Vt. 519. Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98. Blake v. Stone, 27 Vt. 475. Noyes v. Nichols, 28 Vt. 159. Smith v. Hastings, 29 Vt. 240. Flagg v. Eames, Collins v. Lovelle.

95. Construction of a deed containing repugnant provisions, and claimed as limiting a use upon a use;—Held to create contingent or alternative uses;—also, the intent being clear, that the repugnancy will be rejected, and the deed take effect according to the intent. State v. Trask, Supra. 40 Vt. 22.

96. Different instruments. Two deeds between the same parties about the same subject matter and bearing the same date, the one containing an implied and the other an express grant;—Held, to be taken as contemporaneous, nothing appearing to the contrary, and to be construed together. Instance of such construction and qualification of one by the other, in relation to an aqueduct and spring of water. Coolidge v. Hager, 43 Vt. 9.

97. Repugnancy. In determining what parts of a repugnant description in a deed shall be rejected, the prevailing intention of the grantor, as manifested on the face of the deed, must be followed. Instance, Gates v. Lewis, 7 Vt. 511.

98. Covenants. Although the covenants in a deed do not enlarge the estate granted in the premises, yet where it becomes a question of construction as to what is granted, they may well be resorted to, to help out the construction,—and this, upon the principle that reference is to be had to the whole deed, and that every part is to have an operation, if possible. Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98.

99. Equivocation. The rule that the construction of a grant shall be most favorable for a grantee, is not properly applicable to any case but one of strict equivocation, where the words used will bear either one of two or more interpretations, equally well. Redfield, J., Adams v. Warner, 23 Vt. 395, 411; and see Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98, 105.

100. The rule that a deed shall be construed most strongly against the grantor and favorably to the grantee, in respect to the thing granted and the estate conveyed, is the last which courts apply, and is never resorted to so long as a satisfactory result can be reached by other rules of analysis and construction. Kellogg, J., in Flagg v. Eames, 40 Vt. 24.

101. Where the terms of a deed are equivocal, the subsequent conduct of the parties, or their grantees, may be considered for fixing the signification; but where the terms used are explicit and unequivocal, no such ground of construction can ever be resorted to, at least in a court of law. Redfield, J., in Keith v. Day, 15 Vt. 660.

102. Indefiniteness. A devise, or grant, is never declared void for uncertainty, upon the mere ground of the indefiniteness of the description of the subject matter of the devise, or grant; but only where, after the resort to oral proof, it still remains mere matter of conjecture what was intended by the instrument. Townsend v. Downer, 23 Vt. 225. [The devise was by a resident of Long Island, N. Y., made in 1792, of "a certain right of land which I purchased, lying on the main, supposed to be in the State of Vermont." Held, that the subject of the devise could be determined by evidence extra.]

103. It is not necessary to the validity of a grant, that every part of the description of the subject matter should be literally true. Day v. Adams, 42 Vt. 510.

104. Void exception. It is only where an exception is wholly inconsistent with a grant, and where, if the exception be allowed, the grant would become inoperative, that the exception is held void,—and this as a matter of strict necessity. Adams v. Warner, 23 Vt. 395.

3. Instances—as to description, boundaries, &c.

105. Severalty. Where the owner of a lot conveys a certain number of acres of it, though by an imperfect description, but the parcel can be ascertained, the grantee takes in severalty, and not as tenant in common with the grantor in the whole lot. Clapp v. Beardsley, 1 Vt. 151. 24 Vt. 589.

106. Mill-dam. Construction of a grant to erect a dam of a certain height above low water mark, where the precise location was not designated, but was along an inclined plane of rocks, descending with the stream. Rogers v. Judd, 6 Vt. 191.

107. Spring. The orator conveyed certain premises on which was a spring of water, which was carried by an aqueduct to a tub on the premises, and, in his deed, reserved "the right of taking all the waste water as it now runs into the tub on said premises by aqueduct to my Prescott lot, with the right and privilege of digging up and repairing the same, at any time, by paying all damage which it may be to the premises." Immediately after the execution of the deed, the orator laid down a lead aqueduct from said tub to his Prescott lot. On a bill brought to enjoin the grantees from molesting the orator in the exercise of his right of taking and using such waste water;—Held, (1), that this reservation was of an interest and right in the spring itself to the extent named; that "all the waste water as it now runs, &c.," means all the water carried or that would run from the spring to the tub by the aqueduct then existing, or a like one, except such portion passing into the tub, as might be necessary for the use of the grantee to be taken from said tub, as it was then situated;—Held, (2), that the grantee had no right to remove the tub to the prejudice of the orator, nor to tap the spring, aqueduct, or tub, so as to diminish the quantity of water;—Held, (3), that the orator, on the grantee's neglect, might enter upon the premises conveyed, and repair or lay a new aqueduct from the spring to the tub, whenever, for want of repairs or want of a new aqueduct, the water did not run from the spring to the tub, or did not run in the quantity contemplated by the reservation,—and this, without payment of damages. Decree for orator for damages sustained for an obstruction to the orator's rights as above declared, and an injunction granted against further molestation. Hill v. Shorey, 42 Vt. 614.

108. A reservation, in a deed of lands, of a spring and the right of relaying and repairing at all times the logs or pipes conveying the water from such spring, does not authorize the relaying of the logs or pipes at a different place, though in the same general direction. Woodcock v. Entry, 48 Vt. 515.

109. Where a spring of water had been set out and separated from other lands by the owner, so as to extend three rods each way from the centre of the spring;—Held, that under the conveyance of "the spring," by that name, the whole land so set out passed. Ib. See Mixer v. Reed, 25 Vt. 254.

110. Other instances—What conveyed. The thing granted in a deed was described as follows: "The following described land in Colchester; all the land which I own by virtue of a deed dated January 18, 1848, from Asa S. Mills, recorded," &c.,—"being all my right and title to the land comprising 50 acres off of the east end of lot No. 75 in said town"—habendum, "the above granted and bargained premises," &c. The covenants were, that the grantor was seized of the "premises" in fee simple; had good right to bargain and sell the same; that they were free of all incumbrances, and that he would warrant and defend, &c. Held, that the thing granted was the land itself, and not such quantity of interest, less than a fee simple, which the grantor might happen to have. Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98.

111. The owner of the land upon both the north and south sides of a stream, conveyed to D R a parcel on the north side, described as including "the blacksmith shop and works," and also the right to draw water from a flume above to carry the works; "also the privilege to remove said blacksmith shop works to the opposite bank of the river below the grist-mill, when he thinks proper." Afterwards the shop was removed to the south side of the stream, and after such removal, and while it was standing and occupied, the same grantor conveyed to the defendant's grantor the land upon the south side of the stream "except a blacksmith's shop and such privileges of drawing water, as I have heretofore deeded to D R." Several years after this, the shop was destroyed. In ejectment by the plaintiff, claiming under D R, to recover the piece of ground on the south side of the stream where the shop formerly stood;—Held, that the deed to D R was not a mere license to occupy such parcel, but conveyed the fee. Judgment for the plaintiff. Hale v. Barrows, 22 Vt. 240.

112. The description of premises in a mortgage was: "Water lots number one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, the westerly half of ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen and fourteen," and then bounding them in a body, and specifying that on lots number one, six, seven and the westerly half of ten, and on numbers eleven, twelve, thirteen and fourteen, were certain described buildings. The question was, whether the deed conveyed the whole, or only the westerly half of lots eleven, twelve, thirteen and fourteen. Held, that the mere words were consistent with either view; but it being shown that the mortgagor owned only the westerly half of lot ten, and owned the whole of all the other lots, and that the buildings referred to as upon lots eleven, twelve, thirteen and fourteen were situate upon the east end of those lots, held that the deed conveyed the whole of those lots. Edmunds v. Follett, 29 Vt. 116.

113. Where land had been set out to a widow as her dower;—Held, that such dower right was conveyed by a deed of "the reversion of the widow R H,"—this being the subject matter which the parties apparently had in view, and the deed being otherwise senseless and inoperative. Pingrey v. Watkins, 15 Vt. 479.

114. A deed contained the following words, after the description of the lands conveyed: "Reserving from the premises above described three west rows of apple trees in the orchard, two stalls in the southwest corner of the barn, and twelve feet square over said stalls for hay, which is reserved for the use of our mother, Mary Wood." Held, that these last words were not merely an additional description of the land, but described the nature and character of the estate reserved in the land, viz., an estate for life in Mary Wood. Keeler v. Wood, 30 Vt. 242.

115. The administrator of an insolvent estate conveyed the lands as follows: "I do in my said capacity give, grant," &c., "all the right, title, interest and estate which of right belonged to Elisha Davis, deceased (excepting the widow's thirds hereinafter to be described), to the following tract," &c. Then follows a description by metes and bounds embracing the whole territory of the tract, concluding, as follows: "Excepting the widow's thirds which is set off by the judge of probate, on the west line of the above described land, containing eleven acres and forty rods, reference being had to the survey bill," &c. Held, that the words, "widow's thirds," meant here the interest of the widow in the land, and not the particular piece of land in which she had a dower interest; and that the deed conveyed the whole interest of the intestate in all the described premises, except the life estate of the widow in the eleven acre piece. Crosby v. Montgomery, 38 Vt. 238.

116. Nov. 18, 1847, A and B executed to M a deed conveying "one undivided half of the following described tracts and parcels of land," and then particularly described the several parcels. Jan'y. 8, 1849, A and B executed to M a deed of their remaining undivided half "of all and singular the lots, tracts, pieces and parcels of land described in our deed to the said M, dated Nov. 18, 1847"—"being all our interest in said lands." They took back from M a mortgage, of the same date, of "the following real estate," &c., "viz., the same and all the real estate described in the deed of the said A and B to me the said M, dated Nov. 18, 1847." Held, that the words "real estate," as here used, were synonymous with the word lands, and that the purpose of the reference to the deed of 1847 was to identify the land, and define its boundaries as therein described, and not to limit the quantity or extent of interest in it to be conveyed; and that the mortgage conveyed not merely a moiety, but the whole—interest which M, the mortgagor, acquired by the two deeds from A and B. Carpenter v. Millard, 88 Vt. 9.

117. A warranty deed from a father to his son contained this condition: "provided, nevertheless, and it is the express condition of this deed, that I am to have the use and improvement of the premises during my life, if I have occasion therefor, and shall choose to do so." Held, that the grantor retained a life estate in the premises which could be surrendered only by deed; and that a surrender, by parol, of the control and possession, was not such a surrender of the estate of the grantor as to take away his legal right to resume possession. Colby v. Colby, 28 Vt. 10.

118. A deed in its granting part conveyed to A B "and her heirs and assigns forever, a certain piece or parcel of land" [describing it] "that is to say, one undivided half of the same, with the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging, bounded," &c. [giving the boundaries] "always provided that in the event of her decease, the same shall revert to me, if living, if not, to my heirs"—habendum "to the said A B and her heirs and assigns, to her and their own proper use, benefit and behoof forever." Then followed the usual covenants, and this clause, viz: "always reserving the reversion to myself and heirs as stipulated in the deed." Held, that the plain intent and effect of the deed were to convey an estate for life only, and in one-half of the lands. Flagg v. Eames, 40 Vt. 16.

119. A deed contained this reservation: "Reserving to ourselves the right to use and occupy the said granted premises for five years, if we choose to do so for that length of time; but if we leave the possession and occupancy of said premises before the expiration of said five years, then this reservation shall be at an end and determine, and the grantee above-named shall have full possession thereof." The grantor leased a part of the premises for four years at an annual rent, and the lessee went into possession, the grantor retaining the personal possession and occupation of the rest of the premises. The grantee brought ejectment against the grantor and his lessee. Held, 1st, that the right reserved "to use and occupy" was equivalent to the right to the use and occupancy; that it was general, and not personal, and was the right to occupy by himself, his agent, tenant or assignee, though the word assignee was not used; 2d, that the contingency on which the plaintiff's right to enter was conditioned had not arisen; that the grantor had not left the possession and occupancy of the premises so long as he resided on and personally occupied that part of the premises not leased; and that the plaintiff could not recover any part of the premises. Cooney v. Hayes, 40 Vt. 478.

120. A description of land in a deed as "certain tracts and pieces of land, numbered 42, 44," [in figures] is sufficient. Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336.

121. An exception in the grant of a lot of a certain number of acres "off the west end of said lot," where the lot was in rectangular form, having its sides towards the cardinal points, was held to require the land to be separated by a line parallel with the lot line. Rich v. Elliot, 10 Vt. 211. 27 Vt. 256. Id. 748; and see Sawyer v. Coolidge, 84 Vt. 303.

122. Where a lot is of rectangular form, its side lines corresponding nearly with the cardinal points, a deed of "the north half" imports one half of the lot in quantity, and in rectangular form, and is that part of the lot which lies north of a line running through it, which bisects the east and the west line of the lot; and such description cannot be controlled by parol evidence. Butler v. Gale, 27 Vt. 739; and see Beecher v. Parmele, 9 Vt. 352.

123. Falsa demonstratio. Where there is an incongruity or inconsistency in the description in a deed, a part may be rejected if a sufficient description remains, and that part should be rejected which goes to defeat the intention of the parties, as apparent on the face of the deed, or as would defeat the deed altogether;—as where an inaccuracy occurs in a particular erroneously added for greater certainty. Hull v. Fuller, 7 Vt. 100.

124. If the words employed in the description in a deed sufficiently ascertain the premises intended to be conveyed, the addition of things false or mistaken will not frustrate the grant. Lippett v. Kelley, 46 Vt. 516.

125. Where land conveyed is described in the deed by clear and well defined metes and bounds, such description will prevail over any general words of description tending to enlarge or diminish the boundaries. Pierpoint, J., in Spiller v. Scribner, 36 Vt. 246.

126. The place of beginning being given, and all the courses and distances;—Held, that the boundaries were not enlarged by the additional words "meaning to take three-fourths of lots Nos. 28 and 29." Gilman v. Smith, 12 Vt. 150.

127. The grant was of "all the tracts, pieces and parcels of land lying and being in the towns G and N, which were left to me by my late husband." Held, that the grant was not restricted by the added words, "and being the farm on which I now live and occupy." Hibbard v. Hulburt, 10 Vt. 173.

128. Where the deed bounded the land "south on the highway";—Held, that by legal intentment this was the center of the highway, and that the grant was not carried to the south line of the highway by the additional words "meaning to convey a piece of land I hold by a deed from A B." Morrow v. Willard, 30 Vt. 118.

129. The grant was of lots Nos. 22 and 23 in the second division of lots in Chelsea. Held, that this was in legal effect a description according to the lines of said lots, as surveyed and established in the original division of the town, and was not enlarged by the additional words "and is all and the same land which we now occupy and improve as our home farm." Spiller v. Soribner, 36 Vt. 245.

130. Monuments, courses, &c. Where the original monuments are found, no testimony can be received to show that the surveyor intended to locate the boundaries elsewhere. Hull v. Fuller, 7 Vt. 100.

131. Where courses and distances and known monuments are given in the deed, or levy of execution, the monuments will control, even to the rejection of the courses. That the opposite course is given, in such case, is of no more importance than if varied only one degree. Barnard v. Russell, 19 Vt. 334.

132. But where courses and distances are alone given in a survey, the needle must govern the one, and the chain the other; and the intention of those who made the survey cannot be let in to vary the result. Owen v. Foster, 13 Vt. 263; and see Brooks v. Taylor, 2 Vt. 348.

133. Boundaries and monuments established about the time of a conveyance, and a line so ascertained and afterwards assented to by all parties interested, were held to prevail over courses and distances named in a subsequent deed. Keenan v. Cavanaugh, 44 Vt. 268; and see Patch v. Keeler, 28 Vt. 332.

134. In order for an application of the rule that courses and distances yield to monuments, the existence and location of the monuments must be proved; and to prove this, parol evidence is admissible. If no monuments are mentioned in the deed, or, if mentioned, their existence and location are not shown, the courses and distances govern. Bagley v. Morrill, 46 Vt. 94.

135. In order to warrant the court in assuming a mistake in a deed in the course of a line and substituting another, the deed itself, or the deed with proof of such facts as are competent to be shown in aid of the construction of a written instrument, must contain the necessary elements to make such assumption a matter of legal construction, as contra-distinguished from matter of extrinsic proof. Ib.

136. Where a deed described the line in dispute as running from a corner, on a given course a given number of rods, to a corner, but did not state whether, or not, those corners were marked on the land;—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to prove that those corners were in fact marked by monuments; that, the corners being thus established, the authentic boundary would be a straight line from one corner to the other, notwithstanding it did not conform to the course and distance named in the deed; and that the existence of a straight line of marked trees from one corner to the other tended to show the marked corners called for by the deed, and that the line between the two was a straight line. Clary v. McGlynn, 46 Vt. 347.

137. Where a line was described in a deed as "beginning" on the south line of A's land, thence running "east 15 degrees south on said A's line," and A's line in fact ran east 13½ degrees south, and the grantor owned to A's line;—Held, that the words "on said A's line" were the controlling description, and the course "east 15 degrees south," was to be regarded as the false description, and that A's land, that is, the border or extreme limit of it, was made an abuttal, or boundary, the same as if the deed had bounded the lands granted north by A's land. Park v. Pratt, 88 Vt. 545.

138. A deed of a house lot described the land as beginning at a point in the centre of a highway; thence northerly eleven rods to a corner, &c.; thence easterly, &c., to a corner; thence southerly eleven rods to the centre of the highway; thence westerly in the centre of the highway to the place of beginning. The court charged, that unless there was some object or mark in the corner of the eleven-rod lines intended by the parties to mark the northern termini, the distance named in the deed must govern. Held correct,—and that neither an accommodation fence across the lot, not intended to mark the true line, nor the corners of adjoining lots, not shown to have any connection with or reference to the corners in question, could fix said corners, by legal intentment. Day v. Wilder, 47 Vt. 583.

139. A deed conveyed a tract of land, "except eight acres on the south-west corner of said tract, being the land where J C now lives." These eight acres, as occupied by J C, had definite limits and boundaries, not extending to the true west line of the tract. Held, that the exception was limited to the west line, as occupied and claimed by J C. Sawyer v. Coolidge, 34 Vt. 308.

140. Where the dispute is one of boundary merely, and one has occupied to a boundary beyond the true limits of his deed, and he conveys according to his deed, such deed conveys to the purchaser according to the boundary the grantor has claimed and occupied to. Takeaway v. Barrett, 88 Vt. 316.

141. A deed to M described one line of the land conveyed, as running "north 34 degrees west on said M's line and C's north line, 45 rods and 16 links, to the bound begun." This land of M referred to, extended northerly only to a brook which intersected the line above given. C's land was on the opposite side of the brook and extended along the brook several rods further north-easterly than the termination of "said M's line" on the brook, so that, by extending the line across the brook on the course given to the place of beginning, the deed would include a part of C's land which was referred to as bounding the land conveyed. On the other hand, in order for the line in question to reach and run on C's north line, it would, at the point where it reached C's land at the brook, have to turn nearly at a right angle and run north-easterly on his line a few rods to a corner of his land, then turn at a still greater angle running on his north line in a course north $67\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west. C's north line was at that time marked by a log and slash fence, as nearly on the line as such fences usually are. The court adopted the latter construction, giving control to the monuments and abutments over the courses;—that is, by following M's land as far as that extended, and then by C's land as then owned and occupied by him. Bundy v. Morgan, 45 Vt. 46.

142. Quantity. In a deed conveying land by metes and bounds, the words "containing thirty-four acres and nineteen rods of ground," do not import an agreement that the tract described contains that quantity, but are to be taken as part of the description. Beach v. Stearns, 1 Aik. 325.

143. So, where the lands were described as bounded on certain other lands, without giving courses or distances, "the same containing about five and three-fourths acres, be the same more or less;"—Held, that these words were part of the description only, and were not conclusive that the grantee had not purchased and agreed to pay for the land at a certain price per acre, as he claimed. White v. Miller, 22 Vt. 380.

144. Where a deed described the land conveyed by reference to the lines and lands of adjoining proprietors, and the calls of the deed could be answered either by including or excluding a particular parcel, the quantity named, as "about forty acres," was held to determine the construction. Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165.

145. Reference to other instruments. In trespass qua. clau. the plaintiff made title from an original proprietor and survey bill, recorded, of fifty acres. The first two deeds following described the lot as forty acres and omitted one line given in the survey bill, but referred to the survey on record. The remaining deeds down to the plaintiff continued the same error in the description, and omitted the reference to the survey. The plaintiff proved possession of the entire lot in himself and his predecessors from the date of the survey, more than 30 years, down to the time when the defendant entered upon ten acres of it. The county court construed the deeds as conveying all the land embraced in the survey, without referring that question to the jury. Held correct. Stevens v. Hollister, 18 Vt. 294.

146. In construing a deed, where another deed is referred to for a description of the premises conveyed, the deed referred to is regarded as of the same effect as if copied into the deed which refers to it, and whatever is described in it will pass. The two descriptions should be considered together. Lippett v. Kelley, 46 Vt. 516.

147. Bounding by a stream. A deed describing a boundary as running up a river upon the south bank to certain falls, "thence continuing to run in such a direction as to include a mill-yard, and the whole of a mill-pond which may be raised by a dam on said falls, to a road that leads to E, thence easterly on said road," &c., was held to indicate the road as the boundary of the land, and not as a limit of the pond. Hull v. Fuller, 4 Vt. 199.

148. The description in a deed was as follows: "Beginning at the intersection of the road from Chelsea to Allen's saw-mill and the branch on which the saw-mill stands on the northerly side of said branch and nearly opposite my now dwelling house; thence on the easterly side of said road until said road strikes the bank of said branch; thence down said branch in the middle of the channel, to the first mentioned bounds." Held, that the point of commencement was at the intersection of the northerly bank of the stream with the eastern side, or edge, of the road, and that no land lying south of that point, and no part of the highway was conveyed. Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484. Redfield, J., dissenting.

149. —by a highway. Where one conveys land adjoining to or bounded upon a highway, of which the grantor owns the fee, the law presumes the party intended to convey to the middle of the highway, and will give the deed such an effect, unless the language used by the grantor is such as to show a clear and explicit intent to limit the operation of the grant to the side or outer edge of the highway. And in all cases, where general terms are used in a deed, such as "to," or "upon," or "along a highway," the law presumes the parties intended the conveyance to be to the middle or centre line. Poland, J., in Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 489; approved, Marsh v. Burt, 34 Vt. 289; Morrow v. Willard, 30 Vt. 118; and applied to a railroad, in Maynard v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 619.

150. This doctrine recognized, but qualified in its application to a levy and set-off upon execution. Cole v. Haynes, 22 Vt. 588.

151. The owner of Lot No. 17 conveyed to the plaintiff all "except that part of said lot which lies on the north side of the road, at the north-east corner of said lot, being about three-fourths of an acre," and at the same date he conveyed to the defendant that part of the lot "lying in the north-east corner of the lot, being that part which lies on the north side of the road, three-fourths of an acre, more or less." Held, that the exception in the plaintiff's deed included all the land lying on the north-easterly side of the road which ran from south-east to north-west over said lot, and included not only the parcel which lay strictly in the north-east corner of the lot, but also a small strip, not strictly in the north-east corner, but further south and a little separated from the main parcel by a curve in the road, which for a short distance ran along the east line of the lot—thus making the road the dividing line between the parties throughout. Morse v. Weymouth, 28 Vt. 824.

152. Three parcels of land, constituting originally but a single piece, and separated from each other only by a highway, were conveyed in one deed by separate descriptions. The first, "Beginning on the west side of the road at the end of a wall, running westerly on said wall," &c.; thence (around) "to the road, thence on said road to the place of beginning." The second piece was described as "on the south side of the road opposite to the last mentioned piece, fenced on two sides, being a ridge of land lying between said road and the centre line of lot No. 3 to extend so far east as to make just five acres." The third piece was described as "opposite to the last mentioned piece on the east side of said road within the fences or wall." Held, that as to each of said parcels, the grant extended to the centre line of the highway; that, as to the first, the end of the wall is referred to, not as excluding the road, but as a tangible and permanent boundary, such as could not be had in the centre of the road, and is controlled by the other two references to the road, which apply to the centre line; that, as to the second, the references to the road mean the centre line, there being nothing to indicate the contrary; that, as to the third, as it in fact was bounded on two sides by the highway, and opposite the others, applying the language of the description to the peculiar case and circumstances, it should not be limited to the fences inclosing it. Marsh v. Burt, 34 Vt. 289.

153. —by a railroad. The description in a deed was as follows: "Beginning on the west line of the V. & C. railroad and south-east corner of land west of said railroad, owned by," &c.; "thence south on the west line of said railroad," &c. Held, that the west line or side of the land owned by the railroad company, was intended, and that was the boundary. Maynard v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 617.

154. Lease. Construction of lease. Brigham v. Avery, 48 Vt. 602.

DEFINITIONS.

(Words—Phrases.)

ABLE-BODIED. (Militia acts.) 10 Vt. 152. (Pauper acts.) 15 Vt. 200.

ABSENT PERSON. (G. S. c. 19, s. 1, 9th clause.) 35 Vt. 232.

ABUTMENT. Part of a bridge. 15 Vt. 438.

ACCEPT AND RECEIVE. (Stat. of Frauds.) 28 Vt. 801. 47 Vt. 848.

AFFIRMANCE, on appeal. 1 D. Chip. 338.

AGGRAVATION, matter of. 19 Vt. 102.

AGREEMENT. (Stat. Frauds.) 3 Vt. 290. 15 Vt. 691. 41 Vt. 541.

APPEAL. (Listing Act.) 34 Vt. 134.

APPEAR, as used in a recognizance. 7 Vt. 529. 15 Vt. 9.

APPROVED NOTE. 48 Vt. 227.

ASSAULT. 44 Vt. 476.

BAGGAGE. 35 Vt. 605.

BANK NOTE, BILL, PROMISSORY NOTE. (R. S. c. 96, s. 4.) 17 Vt. 151.

BARGAIN. (Stat. Frauds.) 15 Vt. 691.

BELONGING to a town. (Pauper Act.) 8 Vt. 45.

BEREFT OF REASON. 48 Vt. 172.

BOND, of railroad company. 32 Vt. 297.

BRIDGE. Includes abutments. 15 Vt. 438. See 38 Vt. 44.

BRINGING A PETITION for divorce. 45 Vt. 538.

BUSHEL. 13 Vt. 245.

CASH SALE—SALE FOR CASH. 8 Vt. 252. 24 Vt. 85. 32 Vt. 622.

CATHOLIC CHAPEL. 33 Vt. 593.

CHALLENGING. (Breach of Peace Act.) 1 Tyl. 180.

CHARACTER—REPUTATION. 26 Vt. 270.

CLAIM AND DEMAND. (Corporate Stock.) 30 Vt. 246.

CIVIL ACTION. (Penalty—Qui Tam.) 8 Vt. 272. 10 Vt. 487. (Bastardy.) 7 Vt. 419. 11 Vt. 543. 8 Vt. 141.

CLOSE—INCLOSURE. 39 Vt. 326.

COASTING in highway. 41 Vt. 271.

COLOR OF TITLE. The term color of title, means a deed or survey of the land, placed upon the public record of land titles, whereby notice is given to the true owner and all the world that the occupant claims the title; and, because of such notice, occasional entries, cutting timber, &c., which would ordinarily be mere acts of trespass in a stranger, are considered as acts of possession when done by one having color of title. Poland, C. J., in Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 345. See Buck v. Squiers, 23 Vt. 498.

COMING AND RESIDING—COME TO RESIDE. (Pauper Acts.) 1 Vt. 385. 6 Vt. 200. 10 Vt. 22. 13 Vt. 215. 19 Vt. 267. Id. 392. 29 Vt. 396. 33 Vt. 159. 44 Vt. 382. 46 Vt. 606.

COMPANY.—As railroad company; not necessarily importing a corporation. 27 Vt. 723.

COMPROMISE. 8 Vt. 473.

CONSIDERED SOUND. 16 Vt. 525.

CONTINGENCY. (Trustee Acts.) 19 Vt. 899. 25 Vt. 650.

CONVEY—DEED OF CONVEYANCE. 11 Vt. 47. Id. 549. 13 Vt. 53. 33 Vt. 470.

COUNTERFEIT—COUNTERFEITED. 2 Aik. 89. 18 Vt. 198.

COURSE OF BUSINESS. (Promissory Notes.) 37 Vt. 421. 46 Vt. 674. 48 Vt. 590.

CREDIT, sale on. 32 Vt. 616. 42 Vt. 528.

CREDITOR. (Trustee Act.) Brayt. 234. (Attachment.) 32 Vt. 460.

CRIME—OFFENSE. 26 Vt. 205.

CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE. 14 Vt. 414. 35 Vt. 452.

CURRENT BILLS. Not money. 11 Vt. 268.

DEAL—DEALER. (Liquor Acts.) 15 Vt. 425. 21 Vt. 484. 22 Vt. 32. 23 Vt. 293. 24 Vt. 312.

DEBT, OR CONTRACT. 3 Vt. 328.

DEBTS NOW DUE. (Town of Windsor—Act of 1848.) 24 Vt. 337.

DELIVERY. (As of crops.) 14 Vt. 14. Id. 214.

DISINTERESTED. (Appraiser on execution.) 9 Vt. 27.

DISINTERESTED. (Commissioner for highway.) 47 Vt. 393.

DUE COURSE OF BUSINESS. 37 Vt. 421. 46 Vt. 674. 48 Vt. 590.

EMANCIPATION,—of infants. 5 Vt. 481. 23 Vt. 328. 37 Vt. 528. 39 Vt. 17. 41 Vt. 55.

ENCLOSURE. (Impounding.) 1 Vt. 470. 39 Vt. 34. Id. 326.

ENGINEER. (The engineer.) 27 Vt. 678.

ESTATE. 45 Vt. 215.

ESTIMATES. (Railroad construction.) 27 Vt. 673. Id. 700.

EXPENSES. (Reasonable), not limited to cash expenditures. 28 Vt. 401.

EXPERT. 48 Vt. 835. Id. 366. Id. 412.

FAMILY. (Pauper acts.) 6 Vt. 291.

FARMING TOOLS. 40 Vt. 138.

FELONY. 16 Vt. 551. 24 Vt. 130.

FIGURES. (Arabic), to express sums, as 37, 89. 22 Vt. 433.

FILED. (Affidavit for a capias.) 39 Vt. 585.

FINAL JUDGMENT. 21 Vt. 23.

FORTHWITH. (G. S. c. 25, s. 18.) 41 Vt. 449. 8 Vt. 264.

FRANCHISE. 30 Vt. 190. 36 Vt. 452.

FREIGHT. 27 Vt. 77.

FRONTIER. (U. S. Neutrality act.) 15 Vt. 163.

FULLED CLOTH. 14 Vt. 80.

FURNISH. (Liquor law.) 27 Vt. 523.

FURNISH THE CASTINGS. (Contract.) 36 Vt. 711.

GAME OR SPORT. (G. S. c. 119, s. 13.) 26 Vt. 530.

GET UP A MORTGAGE. 31 Vt. 570.

GOOD. . Not a warranty of quality in a sale. 1 Aik. 269.

GOODS. (G. S. c. 35, s. 18.) 35 Vt. 247.

GOOD AND COLLECTIBLE. 11 Vt. 265. 30 Vt. 127. Id. 246.

GOOD COARSE SALT. 21 Vt. 437.

GOOD WARRANTY DEED. 33 Vt. 470. 13 Vt. 66.

GOOD WHITE MARBLE. 37 Vt. 114.

GRAIN—GRAIN IN THE STRAW. The expression in an officer's return describing the property attached by copy left in the town clerk's office, as all "the hay and grain in the barns and in stack," &c., was held to embrace grain in the straw. Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57.

HABITUAL DRUNKARD. 34 Vt. 323.

HALF-BLOODED MERINO WOOL. 22 Vt. 301.

HEALTHY AND ABLE-BODIED. (Pauper acts.) 15 Vt. 200.

HEIRS. (Used as words of purchase.) 27 Vt. 475. 29 Vt. 240. 36 Vt. 210.

HEIRSHIP AND REPRESENTATION. 40 Vt. 354.

INADVERTENCE. (U. S. Stamp Act.) 44 Vt. 13.

INCUMBRANCE BE REMOVED. 13 Vt. 129.

INDORSE. 7 Vt. 351.

INFAMOUS CRIME. (U. S. Constitution.) 8 Vt. 57.

INHABITANT. (Trustee Act.) 2 Aik. 345.

INJURY. The word injury, as used in Stat. 1869, No. 4, s. 3, means unlawful damage or hurt, and not a justifiable act. Smith v. Wilcox, 47 Vt. 537.

INJURIOUSLY AND WRONGFULLY, (in an indictment.) 27 Vt. 103.

INN KEEPER. 6 Vt. 295.

IN REM. 20 Vt. 65.

INTERVENING DAMAGES. 1 Tyl. 264. 17 Vt. 46. Id. 562. 19 Vt. 573. Id. 592. 20 Vt. 297. 27 Vt. 276. 28 Vt. 757. 37 Vt. 16.

INTOXICATED. (Liquor Law.) 47 Vt. 294.

IRREPARABLE INJURY. 32 Vt. 423.

JUDICIAL ACT. 6 Vt. 509. 10 Vt. 261. 19 Vt. 304.

KNOWN PROPERTY. (Stat. Limitations.) 12 Vt. 240. 15 Vt. 727. 20 Vt. 113. 29 Vt. 538. 44 Vt. 97.

LAI D OPEN TO BE WORKED. (Highway Acts.) 16 Vt. 415.

LEATHER. Payable "in leather." 17 Vt. 105.

LEGISLATURE. General Assembly. 4 Vt. 215.

LIEN. (Bankrupt Act.) 21 Vt. 529.

LOAD. (G. S. c. 25, s. 41.) 25 Vt. 163.

MASTER. (Master and apprentice.) Brayt. 158. 1 Vt. 69. 7 Vt. 446.

MAY,—in legislative resolution, construed as permissive. 44 Vt. 356.

MEANING TO SELL. (Clause added.) 18 Vt. 111.

- METES AND BOUNDS. (Levy of execution.) 9 Vt. 352. 27 Vt. 252.
- MONEY—means legal tender. 11 Vt. 268.
- MONTH—means calendar month. 2 Vt. 188.
- NEGOTIATE A LOAN. 29 Vt. 127.
- NEXT OF KIN—includes half-bloods. 1 D. Chip. 860.
- NEXT TERM. 10 Vt. 123. 11 Vt. 331.
- NON-RESIDENT PROPRIETOR. (Taxation.) 84 Vt. 433.
- NUMERALS. (Figures and characters.) 22 Vt. 433.
- OCCUPATION—a fact. 43 Vt. 717. 46 Vt. 47.
- OFFICER. (Stat. for impeding.) 6 Vt. 215.
- OR. (Marriage Act.) 2 Aik. 41.
- ORDER. (Forgery.) 23 Vt. 519.
- ORDINARY BUSINESS OF FAMILY CONCERNS. (Turnpike Acts.) 2 Vt. 512. 12 Vt. 212.
- ORDINARY CARE AND PRUDENCE. (As distinguished from that of a prudent and careful man.) 28 Vt. 184. 36 Vt. 591.
- OUT OF THE STATE. (Process Act.) 1 Aik. 107. 12 Vt. 212.
- PARTY. (Corporation.) 6 Vt. 315. (Town.) 38 Vt. 440.
- PEDDLER. 41 Vt. 139.
- PERFECTLY GOOD. (Sale of a note.) 7 Vt. 67.
- PER MILE. (Side tracks of railroad.) 27 Vt. 766.
- PERSON INJURED. (Inspections Act.) 26 Vt. 787.
- PERSON INTERESTED. (Probate appeal.) 10 Vt. 420. 16 Vt. 225.
- PERSONAL PROPERTY. 28 Vt. 26.
- PLACE OF PUBLIC RESORT. (Liquor Acts.) 34 Vt. 323.
- POUND. 36 Vt. 341.
- PREMISES. (In a deed.) 19 Vt. 272.
- PROBABLE CAUSE. (U. S. Revenue Acts.) 22 Vt. 655.
- PROPER AND LAWFUL AUTHORITY. The plaintiff and defendant were owners in severalty of several parts of a lot bounded on the west line of the town, and, in order to ascertain the true division line between them, it was necessary to ascertain the true south-west corner of the town. The parties, then supposing a certain point to be such south-west corner, agreed in writing that a certain line should be the permanent boundary between them, provided that the understood corner "shall not be moved on proper and lawful authority and manner either to the eastward or westward." Held, that the parties must have intended to refer to such a tribunal, for determining the corner, as the law has invested with authority to decide the question,—as, a court of competent jurisdiction; and that it could be determined in this present action of ejectment. Bishop v. Babcock, 22 Vt. 295.
- PUBLICATION OF AWARD. 28 Vt. 445.
- PUBLIC PEACE. 11 Vt. 236. 22 Vt. 323.
- PUBLIC PLACE. (G. S. c. 47, s. 4.) 31 Vt. 617. 36 Vt. 645. 40 Vt. 448.
- PUBLIC TAXES. 46 Vt. 773.
- PUBLIC USE. (Taxation.) 1 Vt. 350.
- PURCHASED. 48 Vt. 166.
- REASONABLE CAUSE. (U. S. Revenue Acts.) 23 Vt. 655.
- REASONABLE COSTS. 46 Vt. 724.
- REASONABLE TIME. 5 Vt. 299. 30 Vt. 633. 41 Vt. 233. Reasonable time does not begin to run, until some one interested in the matter calls for some thing to be done respecting it. Cameron v. Wells, 30 Vt. 633.
- RECEIVED INTO RECORD. 17 Vt. 619.
- RECORD, of deed, &c. 8 Vt. 172. 19 Vt. 77. 24 Vt. 27. 25 Vt. 273.
- RECOUPMENT. 28 Vt. 413.
- RELATIONSHIP. Reckoned by the civil law. 12 Vt. 661.
- REMOVAL. (G. S. c. 30, s. 73.) 46 Vt. 60.
- RENTS, ISSUES AND PROFITS. (Married Woman's Act.) 26 Vt. 741.
- REPRESENTATION. 40 Vt. 354.
- RESERVATION. 26 Vt. 64. 44 Vt. 416.
- RESIDE. 2 Vt. 437. 23 Vt. 275.
- REVERSION. (Special sense.) 15 Vt. 479.
- RIGHT. (Stat. Fraudulent Conveyances.) 10 Vt. 54. 26 Vt. 736.
- RIP-RAP WALL. 24 Vt. 608.
- ROAD—includes bridges. 12 Vt. 679. 20 Vt. 16.
- RUNNING AT LARGE. (G. S. c. 100, s. 29.) 46 Vt. 600.
- SAME OFFENSE. (Liquor Act.) 27 Vt. 325.
- SAW-MILL SAW. Part of machinery of the mill. 44 Vt. 629.
- SCHOOL PURPOSES. 45 Vt. 202.
- SELL. (Probate Act.) 44 Vt. 529.
- SEQUESTERED TO PUBLIC USE. 1 Vt. 336.
- SLANDEROUS WORDS. (Act restricting costs.) 1 Tyl. 164. 2 Vt. 434.
- SOLDIER IN ACTUAL MILITARY SERVICE. (Wills Act.) 39 Vt. 111. Id. 498.
- SOLE SEPARATE USE, OR SEPARATE ESTATE. 37 Vt. 78.
- SOUND AND RIGHT. 43 Vt. 608.
- SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS. 15 Vt. 290.
- SPRING—OF WATER. A spring of water is a place where water by natural forces usually issues from the ground. Hence, a grant of the privilege of taking water from springs in a particular locality, conveys no right to take the water from a place where it does not thus issue from the ground,—as by digging wells. Magoon v. Harris, 46 Vt. 264.
- STEER. (Cattle.) 20 Vt. 537.
- SUFFER. (Impounding acts.) 1 Aik. 316.
- SUFFICIENT SECURITY. 18 Vt. 87.
- SUIODE. 48 Vt. 335.
- SUIT. Held, that the word "suit" used in Stat. 1864, No. 31, s. 1; the words "suit or proceeding at law" used in G. S. c. 36, s. 24, and the word "action" in the proviso of that section, are used in the same sense. Calderwood v. Calderwood, 38 Vt. 171.

SUPPORT—for one's self. 45 Vt. 300.

SUPPORTS—of a bridge. 38 Vt. 666.

THEN AND THERE. (In pleading.) 5 Vt. 28. 14 Vt. 296.

TOOL. 2 Vt. 404. 3 Vt. 183. 6 Vt. 594. 20 Vt. 248. 35 Vt. 427. 45 Vt. 472.

TRANSIENT PERSON. (Pauper Acts.) 6 Vt. 200. 10 Vt. 22. 19 Vt. 267. Id. 392. 29 Vt. 894. 33 Vt. 159. 44 Vt. 386. 46 Vt. 606.

TREAT, by way of. (G. S. c. 37, s. 16.) 38 Vt. 440.

UNCOLLECTED DEMANDS. 10 Vt. 529.

VALUE RECEIVED. 1 D. Chip. 345. 1 Vt. 247. 19 Vt. 202.

VOTE—means by vote of a majority. 38 Vt. 177.

WAGER. 22 Vt. 291.

WARRANTY DEED. 28 Vt. 382.

WASTE. 11 Vt. 293.

WATER PRIVILEGE. 20 Vt. 250.

WEARING APPAREL. 28 Vt. 249.

WELL—OF WATER. The conveyance of "a well," by that name, creates more than an easement, or right to take water. It creates a fee, and the term "well," ex vi termini, includes not only the orifice reaching down to the water but the whole opening in the earth before it was stoned, and the stone laid in the wall, and the water therein, and all the land within these outside boundaries. Mizer v. Reed, 25 Vt. 254.

WHENEVER. (G. S. c. 30, s. 73.) 40 Vt. 103.

WILLFULLY. (Trespass Act.) Brayt. 223.

The word willfully, as used in Stat. 1869, No. 4, s. 3, means such willfulness as a drunken person may have, and if the act is the result of such capacity for determining what he will do as the intoxicated person has, it is within the statute. Smith v. Wilcox, 47 Vt. 537.

WORK OF NECESSITY. (Sabbath Act.) 35 Vt. 297. 47 Vt. 28.

WORTH $60—as descriptive of the article. 27 Vt. 237.

WRITING OBLIGATORY. In a declaration upon a jail bond, the words "writing obligatory" were held to be of the same import as deed in writing, and to imply both signing and sealing. Denton v. Adams, 6 Vt. 40. 32 Vt. 298.

WRITTEN. Ballot printed is written. 4 Vt. 585.

sition to be thereafter used on a trial of the cause in the county court. Bowen v. Hall, 23 Vt. 612. (Changed by G. S. c. 36, s. 4.)

2. Deposition of party. Before 1855, the deposition of a party, in the action of book account, could not be used before the auditor. Pike v. Blake, 8 Vt. 400; but might be used by the adverse party, as an admission. Gilbert v. Toby, 21 Vt. 306.

3. The witness act of 1852, No. 13, contemplated the examination of a party as a witness only in open court, and did not authorize the taking of his deposition. (This authority was first given by statute of 1855, No. 8.) Armstrong v. Grinold, 28 Vt. 376.

4. Right of party to take. It is the unquestionable right of a party to a suit to take a deposition in view of possible or supposable contingencies, to be used or not, as should seem expedient on the trial; and the legal duty of the witness to make his deposition does not depend on the contingency of its being used as evidence, nor on the settled and exclusive purpose to so use it. Though an important, but not exclusive, purpose be "to get light" as to pleadings and preparation for trial, this purpose is not unlawful in such sense as to deprive of the right to take the deposition at all. In re Foster, 44 Vt. 570.

5. This extends to the case of enforcing a deposition from the adverse party, even by a commitment to jail in case of a refusal. Id.

6. Witness refusing. The refusal of a witness, after having commenced the giving of his deposition, to answer further questions, and to perfect it by subscribing and swearing to it, is a refusing "to make his deposition," within G. S. c. 36, s. 12. Id.

7. Death of deponent. A deposition, not legally taken, does not become admissible by the deponent's death. Johnson v. Clark, 1 Tyl. 449.

8. Commissioner. A deposition taken otherwise than in the manner prescribed by the statute—as of a witness in the State by a commissioner appointed under a rule of court—is not admissible. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Hathaway, 36 Vt. 539.

9. Form, the law. The form of the caption of a deposition is a part of the law. It is not a form got up in accordance with the provision of the law, but it is the law itself. Hibbard, J., in Whitney v. Sears, 16 Vt. 591.

10. Though the form given in the statute is to be regarded as a part of the law governing the taking of depositions, it has never been regarded as necessary that the form should be literally and exactly followed, but all it contains and requires should be substantially used and embraced, in order to make a sufficient compliance with the law. Poland, C. J., in McCrillis v. McCrillis, 38 Vt. 136.

DEPOSITIONS.

1. Cause in supreme court. While a cause is pending in the supreme court, the law does not authorize a justice to take a depo-

11. The form of the certificate and caption prescribed by the statute is a part of the law relating to depositions, and must be observed in matters of substance, and facts required to be stated therein cannot be supplied by parol—as, that the deponent was sworn; or was incapable of traveling and attending court by reason of sickness. Lund v. Dawes, 41 Vt. 370; or that the adverse party lived more than 30 miles from the place of caption. (Under old statute.) Chipman v. Tuttle, 1 D. Chip. 179. Pingry v. Washburn, 1 Aik. 264.

12. Notice. A commission to take a deposition out of the United States must direct notice to be given to the adverse party, and such notice must be proved. Ferguson v. Morrill, Brat. 44.

13. — must be reasonable. Whether a “reasonable time” has been allowed in the notice for taking a deposition, is entirely a matter of discretion with the court in which the deposition is to be used, which the supreme court will not revise. Hough v. Lawrence, 5 Vt. 299.

14. The notice of the time and place of taking a deposition should be such that the adverse party may have reasonable time and opportunity to attend, by himself, and his counsel in the cause. Kimpton v. Glover, 41 Vt. 283.

15. Thus, a party cannot be required to attend the taking of a deposition during a term of the court, unless by leave of court upon due notice and sufficient cause shown. Id. Stephens v. Thompson, 28 Vt. 77. Bemis v. Morrill, 38 Vt. 153.

16. Notice for the taking of a deposition set the time of taking as “on or about” a certain day. Held insufficient;—the time and place must be specifically named. Miller v. Truman, 14 Vt. 138.

17. Where a party verbally agreed with the adverse party upon the time and place of taking a particular deposition, and the deposition was taken accordingly, though without the attendance of the adverse party, and the party prepared and appeared for trial relying upon using the deposition;—Held, that the adverse party could not repudiate the agreement, and was estopped from objecting to the deposition for want of notice. Ormsby v. Grandy, 48 Vt. 44.

18. Under G. S. c. 36, s. 6, requiring notice of the taking of a deposition to be given to the adverse party;—Held, that in case of a number of plaintiffs or defendants, notice to one plaintiff or defendant who is a real party, or apparently such, is prima facie sufficient;—leaving it to the court to decide whether the party giving the notice acts in good faith in selecting the one to be notified, and whether the relations of the parties are such that the notice affords a reasonable protection to the interests of all. Spaulding v. Ludlow Woolen Mill, 36 Vt. 150.

19. Citation—Authority signing. A justice, notary, or other officer signing the citation, who shall have been of counsel in the case, cannot authorize an indifferent person to serve it;—this being a judicial act. St. Johnsbury v. Goodenough, 44 Vt. 662.

20. Service. The service of such citation by reading is not sufficient. A deposition taken only upon such notice, was held not admissible. Fitts v. Whitney, 32 Vt. 589.

21. Legal notice to the attorney of a party to appear at the taking of a deposition, can be given only by a citation, duly served. Brintnall v. Sar. & W. R. Co., 32 Vt. 665.

22. Such notice given to one, not an attorney in the cause, but only an attorney of the adverse party for a special service, was held not sufficient. Id. (G. S. c. 36, s. 6.)

23. Return. The return of the citation should be made to the magistrate issuing it. Parker v. Meader, 32 Vt. 300.

24. A citation was issued by a justice of Orange county, directed to any sheriff or constable in the State, citing a party in Caledonia county to be present at the taking of a deposition without the State, and was served in Caledonia county by a deputy sheriff of Orange county, and returned to the justice. Held correct. Id.

25. An apparent alteration in a citation is not, in the absence of evidence, to be presumed made after service, but before. Davis v. Davis, 48 Vt. 502.

26. Name of magistrate to take deposition. Where the name of the magistrate before whom a deposition is to be taken is inserted in the citation, the deposition is not admissible if taken before another magistrate. Henry v. Huntley, 37 Vt. 316.

27. Nor is it admissible, if the name of such magistrate is omitted in the citation. St. Johnsbury v. Goodenough, 44 Vt. 662. Davis v. Davis, 48 Vt. 502.

28. Taking of the deposition—Time. The adverse party notified to be present at the taking of a deposition, has not two hours after the hour named in the citation to make his appearance. The statute makes no provision requiring the magistrate to delay for the party. Morrill v. Moulton, 40 Vt. 242.

29. The plaintiff, being cited to attend the taking of a deposition, attended, and waited the full two hours after the hour set, without any appearance by the defendant, when, being informed by the magistrate that the time for taking the deposition had expired, he departed. Held, that the deposition thereafter taken according to a notice of adjournment given by the defendant, and not emanating from the magistrate, and where the plaintiff did not attend, was not admissible. Hennessey v. Stewart, 31 Vt. 486. (G. S. c. 36, s. 9.)

30. Adjournment. The taking of a deposition may be adjourned by the magistrate, and a verbal notice of the adjournment, given to the adverse party by the magistrate, is sufficient. Edgell v. Lowell, 4 Vt. 405.

31. The magistrate may adjourn the taking of a deposition, though neither party appear, to another day than that first set, provided reasonable opportunity be given to the adverse party to participate in the taking, on the adjourned day. Pindar v. Barlow, 31 Vt. 529.

32. Question of names. Notice was given for the taking of the deposition of "Mrs. J. V. Perley." The deposition was signed by Emily A. Perley, and by that name, and she was the wife of J. V. Perley. This the adverse party knew when the notice was served upon him, and was not misled. Held, that the deposition was admissible. Kent v. Buck, 45 Vt. 18.

33. Deposition taken abroad. The county court has power, on the application of one party, to issue a dedimus potestatem to take testimony in a foreign country, without the consent of the adverse party. Farnsworth v. Pierce, 7 Vt. 83.

34. A deposition taken in a foreign government was held not admissible, without proof of the official character of the certifying magistrate, and of his authority to take depositions. Bown v. Bean, 1 D. Chip. 176.

35. The authority of a magistrate of another State to take depositions, and the fact that the deposition was taken according to the law of the place of taking, may be determined by the court upon their own knowledge, or upon the introduction of parol evidence, or in any other way which satisfies the court. Danforth v. Reynolds, 1 Vt. 259. 18 Vt. 387.

36. A justice of the peace in the State of New York has authority to take a deposition to be used in this State. Pike v. Blake, 8 Vt. 400. Mattocks v. Bellamy, 8 Vt. 463.

37. It is the settled practice in this State, to receive depositions taken in any of the United States, provided they purport to have been taken by competent authority, which is not impeached. The court will presume the officer taking the testimony to be lawfully entitled to the official character he assumes, and to have competent authority to take the deposition, until the contrary appears. Crane v. Thayer, 18 Vt. 162. Barron v. Pettes, 18 Vt. 385.

38. As to depositions taken without this State, it has sometimes been the practice to inquire of witnesses in regard to the power of certain officers, under the laws of such State, to take depositions, and perhaps the form of taking. But the rule finally established is, that the fact of their being taken is prima facie evidence of the power of the officer to take; and where they are taken professedly according to the form of the place where taken, it is not required to produce a copy of the statute of that State, ordinarily, perhaps. Redfield, C. J., in Smith v. Potter, 27 Vt. 304.

39. Agent or attorney not to write. The provision that "no agent, attorney, or person interested in any cause, shall write or draw up the deposition of any witness," (G. S. c. 36, s. 14), includes an agent or attorney employed by the party to take the deposition, although not otherwise employed in the case; but does not extend to one who should merely assist the magistrate in drawing up the deposition, as the agent of the magistrate, although paid by the party, but not acting essentially as his agent or attorney. Moulton v. Hall, 27 Vt. 233. See Heacock v. Stoddard, 1 Tyl. 344.

40. The writing or drawing up of a deposition, so prohibited, does not extend to the mere copying of it, but signifies composing, or inditing the story; giving it form, expression, and dress. Moulton v. Hall.

41. The law partner of the master who took certain depositions, acted as counsel in taking them, for the party for whom taken. Nothing more appearing,—Held, that the court could not presume that the partnership covered business of this nature, so as to bring the case within the prohibition of the statute. Whitaker v. Morey, 39 Vt. 459.

42. Unfairness in taking. Where a party was excluded, against his protest, from being present on the giving in of the direct testimony of a deposition;—Held, that the deposition was improperly admitted, although he afterwards cross-examined the deponent—it not appearing that he intended to waive the previous irregularity. Pratt v. Battles, 34 Vt. 891.

43. So, where the agent of the party in whose behalf the deposition was taken so interfered with the witness, by suggesting or dictating his answers, as to make it doubtful whether the answers taken down were such as the witness would have given, if left free to dictate them himself. Id.

44. Jurat. A deposition was held inadmissible, where the certificate was simply that the witness was sworn to the truth of the deposition—although the certificate further stated, that he was previously cautioned to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Burroughs v. Booth, 1 D. Chip. 106.

45. It is not important whether a deponent is sworn before he gives his evidence, or whether he swears to the deposition after it is made up by the magistrate. A certificate in either form satisfies the statute. Barron v. Pettes, 18 Vt. 385.

46. The jurat of a deposition following the letter of the statute form—"personally appeared A B, and made oath, &c.," not naming the deponent—was held insufficient. Lund v. Dawes, 41 Vt. 370.

47. The jurat was, that the deponent “personally made oath,” &c., omitting the words “appeared and” after the word personally, as in the statute form;—Held sufficient. Streeter v. Evans, 44 Vt. 27.

48. Caption. The residence of a deponent appeared in the body of his deposition, but was not stated in the magistrate’s certificate. Held sufficient. Houghton v. Stark, 10 Vt. 520.

49. A deposition taken in a qui tam action is admissible, although in the caption the prosecutor is named as plaintiff, simply, omitting the qui tam. Dupy v. Wickwire, 1 D. Chip. 237. 45 Vt. 329.

50. —as to names of parties. It must appear in the caption that the deposition was taken at the request of one of the parties. Where it was certified to be have been taken at the request of A B, who was not a party, it was held not admissible. Whitney v. Sears, 16 Vt. 587.

51. Where the caption wholly omitted the names of some of the defendants, describing them as “Lyman Cobb and others,” the deposition was held not admissible. Swift v. Cobb, 10 Vt. 282. Haskins v. Smith, 17 Vt. 263.

52. The caption described the defendants as “H. C. & N. B. Flanagan”—both defendants having that same surname. Held sufficient. Adams v. Flanagan, 36 Vt. 400.

53. The caption stated that “the deposition was taken at the request of Carr & Blanchard, in which cause Carr & Blanchard are plaintiffs.” The style of the plaintiffs’ partnership was “Carr & Blanchard,” and by this name the suit was instituted. Held, that the caption was sufficient. Carr v. Manahan, 44 Vt. 246.

54. The omission, addition or misstatement of the initials of a middle name, in describing the parties in the caption, is not cause for excluding the deposition. Allen v. Taylor, 26 Vt. 599. Isaacs v. Wiley, 12 Vt. 674. Hopkinson v. Watson, 17 Vt. 91. Walbridge v. Kibbee, 20 Vt. 543.

55. The caption stated that the deposition was taken at the request of the “plaintiff,” without naming him, but in another part of the certificate it was stated who the plaintiff was. Held sufficient. Harrison v. Nichols, 31 Vt. 709.

56. In the writ, the plaintiff being named, was described as “a corporation duly established by an act of the legislature of the State of Connecticut, doing business at Hartford in the State of Connecticut.” In the caption of a deposition taken in the cause, the plaintiff named was described as “a corporation established in the State of Massachusetts.” Held, that the word “established” in the caption should be taken as expressing a state of being simply, and as if the words in business had been inserted after it, and that it was sufficient—since the corporation might well be doing business at Hartford, and at the same time be established in business in Massachusetts. Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29.

57. The caption of a deposition was: “Taken at the request of Robert McCrillis, defendant, and to be used in an action now pending between him and Evans McCrillis, plaintiff”—naming the court and term. Held sufficient. McCrillis v. McCrillis, 38 Vt. 135.

58. In the caption of a deposition, the christian name of one of two defendants was written Edward, instead of the true name, Edwin; but both defendants were correctly described as the trustees of a certain railroad, named—in which capacity they defended the suit, and appeared at the taking of the deposition. Held, that the deposition was admissible. Mann v. Birchard, 40 Vt. 326.

59. The citation for taking a deposition described the parties to the cause as—“Aretus Stephens is plaintiff, and Margaret Joyal, so called, administratrix of the estate of Joseph E. Joyal, is defendant.” The caption described them as, “Aretus Stephens as plaintiff, and Margaret Joyal, so called, is administratrix, is defendant.” On the docket the case was entitled, “Aretus Stephens v. Joseph E. Joyal’s estate.” Held, that as said Margaret was in fact the party defendant, the parties were sufficiently named, and that the deposition was admissible. Stephens v. Joyal, 45 Vt. 325.

60. —time, place, court and suit. In the caption of a deposition to be used before an auditor, the time and place of trial should be as definitely stated, as if taken to be used before a justice. Pike v. Blake, 8 Vt. 400.

61. Where a declaration on book is filed in offset, this is only a branch of the original cause, and a deposition to be used before the auditor, certified as taken to be used in the original cause, is properly so certified. Cross v. Haskins, 13 Vt. 536.

62. Where a deposition is taken to be used before auditors, the caption may describe the case as to be tried before the auditors, on a day certain, or “to be tried by the county court at a term next to be holden, &c.” Churchill v. Briggs, 24 Vt. 498.

63. A deposition taken to be used in a cause pending in the county court, which cause becomes discontinued by the death of the defendant and the appointment of commissioners, cannot be used on the trial of an appeal from the adjudication of the commissioners upon the same claim. Austin v. Slade, 8 Vt. 68. This was construing the statute most strictly, according to the letter. Bennett, J., in Pierce v. Paine, 32 Vt. 231; and quare.

64. The time and place of the sessions of the several county courts being fixed by statute, it is a sufficient designation of the court and time of trial for which the deposition is taken to be used, to describe them, in the caption, as "the county court next to be holden at"—naming the statute place of session. Clark v. Brown, 15 Vt. 658.

65. For the same reason, the place of session need not be named, where the county court and time are stated. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388.

66. The caption of a deposition, taken on the first day of May, stated that it was taken to be used at a term "next to be holden on the first Tuesday of May next." Held, that either of the words "next" might be rejected, and that the deposition was admissible for the May term following the taking, or any subsequent term. Gallup v. Spencer, 19 Vt. 827.

67. The caption of a deposition, taken out of the State, described the court as to be held at "Woodstock within and for the county of Windsor," without naming the State, but named the party for whom taken as of "Ludlow in the county of Windsor and State of Vermont." Held sufficient. Spaulding v. Robbins, 42 Vt. 90. See Harrison v. Nichols, 31 Vt. 709.

68. Instance of disregarding the specific day named in the caption for the hearing before referees, where the record showed it erroneous, and the adverse party had sufficient notice. Davis v. Davis, 48 Vt. 502.

69. The caption of a deposition taken to be used before commissioners under the reference act of 1856, p. 10, described them as referees, without naming the court in which the cause was pending. On a trial of the cause by jury in the county court;—Held, that the deposition was not admissible. Plimpton v. Somerset, 42 Vt. 35.

70. Agreement. Where a deposition was taken according to a written agreement of the parties attached to the deposition, and so certified;—Held, that it was admissible, although the time and place of the trial were omitted in the caption,—the cause and trial being sufficiently identified. Bates v. Maack, 31 Vt. 456.

71. Separate signatures. The statute contemplates separate signatures of the magistrate, one to the jurat or certificate, and the other to the caption, of a deposition; and where these were separately drawn, a blank being left for the signature to the certificate, and the only signature being at the foot of the caption;—Held, that the deposition was not admissible. Shed v. Leslie, 22 Vt. 498.

72. But where the certificate and caption were drawn together, forming one connected statement of facts;—Held, that one official signature at the foot of the entire statement, was sufficient. Hauzhurst v. Hovey, 26 Vt. 544.

73. Other errors. Where the cause of taking a deposition was certified in these words: "The deponent being more than thirty miles from the place of trial"—instead of living; Held, that the deposition was not admissible,—that the defect could not be supplied by intentment, nor by the body of the deposition. Barron v. Pettes, 18 Vt. 385.

74. The cause of taking was stated thus: "The said deponent living beyond the jurisdiction of the court where the said action now pending is to be heard and tried," &c. Held equivalent to a statement that the deponent resided out of this State, and to be sufficient. McCrillis v. McCrillis, 38 Vt. 135.

75. "The deponent being in feeble health is the cause of taking this deposition,"—without stating that the deponent is thereby rendered incapable of traveling and appearing at court—is insufficient in the caption. Lund v. Dawes, 41 Vt. 370.

76. The certificate of the cause of taking was, that the deponent was so aged and infirm in health as to render him "unsuitable" to attend the trial—the statute word being incapable. Held insufficient. The word "unsuitable" being changed to unable, this was held sufficient. Oatman v. Andrew, 43 Vt. 466.

77. A deposition taken to be used in two different cases, though between the same parties, but not so taken by consent, was held not admissible. Bemis v. Morrill, 38 Vt. 153.

78. Superscription. "The within deposition was taken and sealed up by me"—omitting the name of the deponent—was held a sufficient superscription of a deposition. Nys v. Spalding, 11 Vt. 501.

79. Wrapper lost. A deposition got separated from its wrapper, on which was the filing, and the county court found, on evidence, that the paper offered was the deposition originally filed, and admitted it. Held, that such determination was final. Walbridge v. Kibbee, 20 Vt. 543.

80. Copy of deposition. Where a deposition had been taken and filed, but was destroyed by the burning of the clerk's office where it was lodged;—Held, the witness being still living, that a copy of the deposition could not be used as evidence on the trial. Follett v. Murray, 17 Vt. 530.

81. But where the deponent had deceased, and on proof that the deposition was taken with all due formalities, and on proof of loss, a copy, proved to be correct, was held admissible, although the deposition had not been filed. Lou v. Peters, 36 Vt. 177.

82. Conclusiveness of certificate. The certificate of the magistrate of the cause for taking a deposition, is not conclusive,—as, that the deponent was incapable of appearing at court, &c. The magistrate acting as agent of the court, no deceit practised by him, or upon him, will be sanctioned. Pingry v. Washburn, 1 Aik. 264.

83. It is the province of the magistrate taking a deposition to determine the capacity of the witness to relate the facts; and where a boy of fourteen years had given his deposition, and the facts narrated were few and simple, the county court rejected the offered testimony of the magistrate to show apparent want of intelligence in the boy. Held correct. Hough v. Lawrence, 5 Vt. 299.

84. Cause for taking—continuing. Although the cause for taking a deposition may be temporary, more or less, it is to be treated as continuing and as existing at the time when the deposition is offered, unless the removal of the cause be shown by the opposite party. Pierson v. Catlin, 18 Vt. 77. Randolph v. Woodstock, 35 Vt. 291.

85. —removed. If a deponent is personally present in court, his deposition cannot be used. Sergeant v. Adams, 1 Tyl. 197.

86. A deposition, taken for the cause that the deponent resides more than 80 miles from the place of trial, cannot be used, if, at the time of the trial, he resides within that distance, the cause of taking having ceased. Gallup v. Spencer, 19 Vt. 327.

87. Computation of distance. The distance of the witness's residence from the place of trial, as affecting the right to take and use, or to enforce the giving of his deposition, is to be computed upon the way of usual travel from one point to the other,—although there be a shorter way not usually or but seldom traveled. In re Foster, 44 Vt. 570.

88. Suit continued. A deposition was taken by the defendant, the cause of taking being the inability of the deponent to attend the trial; but he was produced by the plaintiff at the trial, and testified. The witness afterwards died, and at a subsequent trial;—Held, that the deposition was admissible as testimony in chief;—as was also the testimony given by the witness on the former trial. Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 15 Vt. 200. 42 Vt. 196.

89. A deposition was taken, the cause stated being that the deponent was going out of the State, not to return before the then next term of the court in which the suit was pending. The deponent did leave the State and had not returned before said term, at which the cause was continued without trial. After said first term and before the next, the deponent returned to the State, remained for a time, and again went out of the State and remained and was out of the State when the trial came on. Held, that the deposition was admissible. Johnson v. Sargent, 42 Vt. 195.

90. Amendment. A deposition was admitted, against exception taken thereto for a defect in the caption and certificate. After the term, the magistrate, without leave of court, amended his certificate making it conform to the statute. On a second trial, the court admitted the deposition against exception. Held, that although on the first trial the court erred in admitting the deposition, and although the magistrate had no authority without leave of court to amend his certificate, yet, as such amendment might have been made by leave of court in its discretion, the subsequent admission of the deposition was a ratification of the act of the magistrate, and the admission of the deposition was not error. Oatman v. Andrew, 43 Vt. 466.

91. Substance of deposition. Where a deponent testified that he received of the defendant certain property for which he now claims pay of the plaintiff, and had credited the defendant therefor on the deponent's books, and settled with him therefor;—Held, that it was no objection to the admission of the deposition, that such books were not produced on the trial,—they not being within the plaintiff's control. Cross v. Haekins, 18 Vt. 536.

92. Where a witness in his deposition detailed a statement which H, a third person, had made, and added, that the defendant "affirmed all that H had previously stated;"—Held, that the deposition was admissible against the defendant. Hicks v. Crane, 17 Vt. 449.

93. A deposition, at the close of the examination in chief, had these words: "The above is a copy of a deposition which I gave in 1849 (except the date having been altered), when the facts were fresh in my recollection." Then followed the cross examination, and then the deposition was signed and sworn to. Held, that the deposition was admissible, and was a sworn statement of all the facts contained in it. Robinson v. Hutchinson, 31 Vt. 443.

94. The question being whether a negotiable promissory note had been transferred to the plaintiff in such way as to cut off a defense as against the payee, the deposition of the witness stated that the note was transferred to him by the payee "before the maturity thereof and before due; that he received the same in the course of business, without any knowledge or notice of any claim or defense, &c." The county court, on motion, ordered the words "in the course of business" to be erased, before submitting the deposition to the jury. Held, by a majority, that this was properly done,—that these words were only an expression by the witness of his judgment of the legal result of the facts which he had specifically stated. Clough v. Patrick, 37 Vt. 421.

95. Where a deposition is equivocal, the better rule is to admit the testimony, and leave the interpretation to the jury with proper instructions from the court; but the court may also put its own construction upon the evidence, and direct a verdict, but is not obliged to do so, as it is in case of written contracts. Powers v. Leach, 26 Vt. 270.

96. Where a deposition is shown by special verdict of the jury to be wholly immaterial as evidence, the supreme court will not consider the question whether the county court erred in excluding it because of an alleged defect in the caption. Fullam v. Goddard, 42 Vt. 162.

97. Practice. A deposition once used becomes a part of the papers and exhibits of the cause, for use in any future stage of the same cause,—as, on appeal, or before auditors or referees. By allowing it to be once read without objection, the party waives, for that and all future trials of the case, all objections to any informality or irregularity in the taking, of which he has knowledge, whether apparent in the caption and certificate, or not; and can thereafter raise objections only to the competency of the witness, or the subject matter of the deposition. Randolph v. Woodstock, 35 Vt. 291. Walsh v. Pierce, 12 Vt. 130. Perry v. Whitney, 30 Vt. 390.

98. Where a deposition contains matter improper or irrelevant, it should not be delivered to the jury, and only such part be read as is admissible. Wood v. Stewart, 7 Vt. 149.

99. Though some portions of a deposition should have been excluded, if particularly pointed out and objected to, it is not necessarily error to admit the deposition against a general objection "for lack of substance." Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465.

100. The testimony of a witness given by deposition may be impeached by proof of inconsistent declarations of the deponent, without first calling his attention to them; and this, whether the deposition was taken with or without notice, and whether or not the adverse party attended the taking. Downer v. Norton, 19 Vt. 838. Robinson v. Hutchinson, 81 Vt. 443.

101. A party taking a deposition at law is not obliged to exhibit it to his adversary before trial, Skinner v. Tucker, 22 Vt. 78; nor to use it in evidence, nor to permit his adversary to use it, Lord v. Bishop, 16 Vt. 110;—although the adverse party appeared at the taking and cross-examined the deponent, and although the deposition has been filed, but not once used. Wait v. Brewster, 81 Vt. 516. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

102. A deposition, properly taken to be used before a justice, may be opened by the justice before the day set for trial, and can be used before an auditor after an appeal, although not used before the justice, nor filed in the county clerk's office. Skinner v. Tucker, 22 Vt. 78.

103. Depositions taken to be used in a case referred, need not be filed with the clerk before being opened, but the referee may open them, and should file them as opened by him;—the same as to an auditor. Ladd v. Lord, 36 Vt. 194.

104. Ex parte depositions. It was no objection to an ex parte deposition that it was not filed 30 days before the next term of court after it was taken, if it was filed 30 days previous to the term at which it was offered in evidence. Smith v. Woods, 3 Vt. 485. Clark v. Brown, 15 Vt. 658.

105. Only depositions taken ex parte were required to be filed 30 days before court. If taken with notice, the deposition was admissible without previous filing, although the case was such that the deposition might have been taken ex parte. Wainwright v. Webster, 11 Vt. 576.

106. Where a deposition was taken ex parte;—Held, that the magistrate must certify the reason why the adverse party was not notified; and that the court could not judicially take notice of any facts, as a reason for not so notifying him, which do not appear in the certificate. Hopkinson v. Watson, 17 Vt. 91.

107. Under the statutes for taking depositions without notice;—Held, that an ex parte deposition, taken to be used before auditors, was not required to be filed thirty days before the hearing. Brigham v. Abbott, 21 Vt. 455. Churchill v. Briggs, 24 Vt. 498.

108. A deposition taken without notice and not filed 30 days before court, and so inadmissible under the law as it then was, was held to have become admissible under s. 3 of the Act of 1854, No. 4, which repealed the former acts requiring such filing. Armstrong v. Griswold, 28 Vt. 376.

Note. By this Act (G. S. c. 36, s. 6), notice is required to be given in all cases, except as specified in s. 7, of same chapter.

109. Fees. The statute fee of thirty-four cents allowed to a justice for "taking a deposition including caption and certificate," does not exclude a proper charge for writing it. Lockwood v. Cobb, 5 Vt. 422.

DIVORCE.

- I. CERTAIN CAUSES.
- II. POWERS OF COURT.
- III. PROCESS, PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE.
- IV. DECREE AND ITS EFFECT.

I. CERTAIN CAUSES.

1. Alienation. A total alienation of the affections of one or both of the parties, is not cause for a divorce. Brainard v. Brainard, Brayt. 55.

2. Idiocy. Nor, that the wife has become an idiot and impotent. Norton v. Norton, 2 Aik. 188.

3. Refusal to support. A husband appropriated to his own use all his wife's property, having none of his own, and then abandoned her without any means of support, and refused to provide support. This continued for several months. The court granted the wife a divorce, on the ground of the husband's refusing support, having sufficient ability. Hurlburt v. Hurlburt, 14 Vt. 561.

4. In order to warrant the granting of a divorce to a wife, for the cause that the husband, being of sufficient ability to provide suitable maintenance for her, without cause, grossly or wantonly and cruelly refuses or neglects so to do (G. S. c. 70, s. 19), something more, and other, than the ordinary case of willful desertion, or abandonment and refusal to support, must exist. Mandigo v. Mandigo, 15 Vt. 786. Jennings v. Jennings, 16 Vt. 607.

5. Willful desertion. A desertion to be "willful," such as to justify the granting of a divorce for "willful desertion," must be without any sufficient cause, or any cause which the deserting party, upon probable proof, believes to be sufficient. Pocell v. Pocell, 29 Vt. 148.

6. Where a wife refused to go with her husband "to live with him near his relations," and both parties persisted in their contrary resolutions;—Held, that in the absence of evidence that this was a simulated excuse, the court would regard it as made in good faith; and that if her refusal to go and live with him in that locality, was because she believed that her comfort would thereby be destroyed, or her health, it should not be treated as willful. Id.

7. Annulling marriage. A marriage was annulled for fraud where the petitioner, a weak-minded woman and town pauper, was imposed upon by the town authorities to consent to the marriage, and they hired the petitionee, whose settlement was in another town, to go through the form of marriage without afterwards intending to fulfil or fulfilling its obligation, and where this was done only for the purpose of changing the petitioner's settlement. Barnes v. Wyethe, 28 Vt. 41.

8. A petition to annul a marriage, void from the beginning, cannot be sustained after the death of one of the parties, but only, in certain specified cases, where the marriage is voidable. Pingree v. Goodrich, 41 Vt. 47. (G. S. c. 69, s. 4. Id. c. 70, ss. 1, 2, 5, 6.)

9. Nor can an administrator in any case bring such petition, but only some relative of the deceased. Id.

10. It is only where a decree of nullity is necessary in order to the proper descent or distribution of an estate, that a petition for that purpose, after the death of one of the parties to the marriage, would seem to be necessary or proper. Peck, J. Id.

11. Practice. The practice of transferring petitions for divorce in the supreme court from county to county, discountenanced. Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 2 Aik. 232.

II. POWERS OF COURT.

12. The supreme court, in the matter of granting divorces and annulling marriages, has other powers than those which are expressly conferred by statute. It has all those incidental powers which are necessary to make the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by the statute effectual; and they are to be exercised in accordance with the principles and practice of the English courts in like cases. LeBarron v. LeBarron, 35 Vt. 365..

13. Personal examination. Thus, under a petition for annulling a marriage for the cause of impotency, the court, upon motion, ordered a personal examination of the defendant, but declined to order that he answer interrogatories;—the question of the court's power in respect to this last point, not decided. Id.

14. Temporary alimony. So, also, the court may order temporary alimony during the pendency of the petition, though not prescribed by statute. Id.—herein overruling Harrington v. Harrington, 10 Vt. 505. Hazen v. Hazen, 19 Vt. 603.

15. Alteration of decree. The court under G. S. c. 70, ss. 31, 39, has power to alter former decrees in divorce cases, at least so far as to give further allowances for the support of the minor children, and to grant further alimony; and is not limited to cases where the original decree was for an annual allowance. Buckminster v. Buckminster, 38 Vt. 248.

16. But although the court has the power, it should be very slow, under any circumstances, to revise or alter the original decree for alimony. (Reasons given for a refusal to increase the amount, but the petitionee was decreed to make up the original sum.) Id.

17. The statutes of 1870, Nos. 27 and 28, do not confer upon the county court jurisdiction in matters of divorce which had their inception in the supreme court by original libel. Orders in such cases, after decree, must be made in the supreme court. Preston v. Preston, 44 Vt. 680.

III. PROCESS, PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE.

18. Petition and summons. Petition for divorce dismissed, because the citation was signed by a justice of the peace, instead of a judge of the court. Parker v. Parker, N. Chip. 27.

19. So, also, because the citation, petition and order were served by an indifferent person not named in the deputation. Moffat v. Moffat, 10 Vt. 432.

20. Held, in such case, that it was not such a notice as the petitionee was bound to regard—and, he not appearing, the court refused to proceed. Spafford v. Spafford, 16 Vt. 511.

21. Where the libel was not signed, and the summons was signed by a justice;—Held, that the proceedings were fatally irregular, and not cured by the appearance of the libellee at the taking of the testimony; and that these defects were not amendable. Philbrick v. Philbrick, 27 Vt. 786.

22. The date and issuing of the summons and order of notice attached to a petition for a divorce were held to be the time of "bringing the petition," under G. S. c. 70, s. 20, and not the date of the petition. Blain v. Blain, 45 Vt. 538.

23. Specifications. Where a divorce is sought for adultery, the libellee is entitled to a specification, either in the libel or separately filed, stating the particeps and the time and place of committing the offense, to be furnished before the testimony is taken. If the particeps be unknown, and presumptive evidence of guilt is relied upon, and a specification cannot be given, a statement of the evidence relied upon will be required. Sanders v. Sanders, 25 Vt. 713.

24. Condonation. The condonation of injury by husband or wife is always conditional upon kind treatment and proper conduct in future. In order to caucel the condonation, it is not necessary that the same injuries should be repeated, nor, if of a similar character, that they should go to the former extent. Langdon v. Langdon, 25 Vt. 678.

25. Evidence. The confession or admission alone of the party charged with adultery, has never been deemed sufficient evidence of the fact for the purpose of granting a divorce. Gould v. Gould, 2 Aik. 180.

26. On a petition for a divorce, the court admitted proof of the marriage, by reputation, where no record of the marriage could be found, and the magistrate who was reported to have solemnized the marriage was dead. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 11 Vt. 134.

27. The court permitted depositions to be read, which had been taken ex parte and not filed for 30 days, but taken during the term—though objected to for this reason. Booth v. Booth, 11 Vt. 206.

28. On the petition of a wife for divorce for intolerable severity;—Held, that the record of a conviction of the petitioner of an assault and battery upon the petitioner, was not admissible as evidence of the fact of the assault, but could only be proof of the fact of conviction. Quinn v. Quinn, 16 Vt. 426.

29. In divorce proceedings, it is not error, but is within the discretion of the court, to receive in evidence, on the trial, the record of a former adjudication, not specially pleaded. Blain v. Blain, 45 Vt. 538.

30. Witness. In divorce cases, notwithstanding the witness act of 1852, neither party can be a witness. Manchester v. Manchester, 24 Vt. 649. (Changed by Act of 1870, No. 27, where the cause alleged is intolerable severity; and by Act of 1876, No. 77, where the cause alleged was willful desertion.)

31. On a petition of a woman for a decree of nullity of marriage, on the ground that her consent to the marriage was obtained by force and fraud;—Held, that she was not a competent witness, although the pretended husband was dead, and although the petition was brought in her behalf by her guardian. Davis v. Plymouth, 45 Vt. 492.

32. Amicus curiæ. On a petition by a wife for divorce, the attorney of certain creditors of the husband who had levied on the husband's interest in the wife's real estate, moved for leave to appear and oppose the petition, in behalf of such creditors, and for leave to inspect the affidavits and other evidence, upon the suggestion that the petition was collusive between the husband and wife. The court refused both motions, but ruled that such attorney, or any member of the bar, might as amicus curiæ make such suggestion of collusion, and direct the attention of the court to such parts of the testimony as might show collusion, or as might be insufficient to sustain the petition. Stearns v. Stearns, 10 Vt. 540.

IV. DECREE AND ITS EFFECT.

33. A decree in a divorce case, giving to the mother the care and custody of the children, does not discharge the father from his natural obligation to contribute reasonably to their support; and the court will enforce this duty by subsequent decree under proper circumstances. So done in Buckminster v. Buckminster, 38 Vt. 248.

34. A lease by the husband of lands held in right of his wife is terminated by a divorce a vinculo; but the tenant will be entitled to his emblements. Gould v. Webster, 1 Tyl. 409.

35. An estate during coverture is determined by a divorce a vinculo. Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326.

36. A woman divorced a vinculo is not a competent witness against her former husband, on trial of an indictment for an offense committed during coverture. State v. Phelps, 2 Tyl. 374. Tyler, J., dissenting. Overrules State v. J. N. B., 1 Tyl. 36.

37. Presumption. A former marriage having been proved, the law will not presume a divorce in order to legalize a second marriage. Morristown v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 33.

38. Where a decree of divorce is introduced in evidence, the jurisdiction of the supreme court in granting it will be presumed, and need not appear by the record. Huntington v. Charlotte, 15 Vt. 46.

39. Decree of another State. Parties married in New York in 1831 and there lived together for more than 30 years, when they removed to S, in this State, and there resided some six months, when the husband left the wife, and she returned to New York, and was there domiciled when she preferred her complaint to the supreme court of New York for a divorce, alleging for cause the adultery of the husband in this State, while they were living here and afterwards, and setting the husband up as having had his last known residence in S, but as then being of parts unknown. Notice of the suit was given by publication in New York, and by mailing a copy of the complaint and summons to the husband at S, whence he had removed to another town in this State. He did not appear in the suit, and the wife obtained a decree of divorce and for alimony. Held, that said court acquired no jurisdiction of the person of the husband, to render a decree for alimony which bound him in this State;—and, semble, that the decree of divorce was not binding in this State. Prosser v. Warner, 47 Vt. 667.

DOWER.

1. Of what dowerable. By the probate act of 1799, the widow of a testator, though he died without issue, could not, by waiving the provisions of the will, be endowed of any more than the use for her life of one-third of the real estate. Hendrick v. Cleaveland, 2 Vt. 329.

2. The widow of a mortgagee is not entitled to dower in the mortgaged estate, before foreclosure. Reed v. Shepley, 6 Vt. 602.

3. When estate vests. Under the statutes of this State, the widow's right of dower becomes a present vested estate on the decease of the husband, which does not depend on the contingency of the dower being assigned, or set out. Dummerston v. Newfane, 37 Vt. 9. Grant v. Parham, 15 Vt. 649. Gorham v. Daniels, 23 Vt. 600, 611.

4. "She may continue to occupy the same," with the heirs, before assignment (G. S. c. 55, s. 10), and so has a right of entry, and may convey her right. Ib.

5. Conveyance to defeat dower. A conveyance made by a husband, in anticipation of his death, of all his property to his children, without valuable consideration, and with intent to defeat his wife of her dower and her share, as widow, of his personal estate, securing to himself at the same time the possession and use of the property during his life at a nominal rent, was held to be in fraud of the claims of the wife, as his widow, and was set aside in chancery, although the husband and wife had separated. Thayer v. Thayer, 14 Vt. 107.

6. A person seized of lands executed a deed of them to his brother, for the consideration, as expressed, of love and affection and one dollar, and afterwards delivered the deed to a third person to keep in trust for the grantee, and to deliver to him, when called for, after the death of the grantor. After the grantor's death the depository delivered the deed to the grantee. Held, that the estate did not pass, for want of a legal delivery of the deed until the widow's right of dower had attached;—and she was allowed dower therein. Ladd v. Ladd, 14 Vt. 185.

7. One cannot hold, exempt from a widow's right to dower, property received by him from her deceased husband as a gratuity, or as an heir, and conveyed to him to defeat such right, but may be held to account in chancery to the widow to the extent of her right. Jenny v. Jenny, 24 Vt. 324.

8. Waiver of jointure, &c. By the Act of 1864, No. 66, the probate court may allow a waiver of a jointure, or other provision by settlement, or will in lieu of dower, upon application of the widow made at any time before the settlement of the estate is closed. It is not necessary that she should petition for an extension of the time for an election, within the eight months named in G. S. c. 55, ss. 5, 6. Hathaway v. Hathaway, 44 Vt. 658.

9. Where by an ante-nuptial agreement a pecuniary provision was made for the wife, expressed to be in lieu and discharge of her dower, and she covenanted therein not to claim any share of her husband's estate otherwise;—Held, the widow not having waived such provision within the time limited by the statute and according to its terms, that the probate court had no power to decree to her either dower, or homestead, although such provision was wholly inadequate to her support. S. C., 46 Vt. 234.

10. Contribution towards incumbrance. One to whom dower has been assigned in an equity of redemption, may maintain a bill in chancery for contribution to the payment of the incumbrance, before having paid it;—the debt having become due, and the estate in danger. Danforth v. Smith, 23 Vt. 247.

11. In apportioning the incumbrance between the dowress and the reversioner, it is not competent for the court of chancery to prescribe any rule for repairs of the estate. Ib.

12. I do not think the American courts have generally required any tenant for life, certainly not a dowress in an equity of redemption, to keep down the interest of the mortgage. I see no reason why the dowress should. Redfield, J. Ib.

13. Jurisdiction of probate court. The probate court has exclusive jurisdiction of the assignment of dower, and if the dowress claimed to have a special rule of apportionment of a mortgage resting on the premises, the probate court, we are inclined to say, alone has the power to establish any such rule in her favor. But if the probate court assigns dower generally in an equity of redemption, without in any manner determining the proportion which the widow shall pay in lessening the incumbrance, this is equivalent to saying it shall be in proportion to her estate;—that is, one-third shall be placed upon the widow's thirds, and two-thirds upon the other portions; and the court of chancery, upon bill by the dowress for that purpose, will apportion the burden according to this general rule in equity, except so far as the parties may have waived that rule, by an agreement executed—the mere fact that the estate may have been purchased subject to the widow's dower, not seeming sufficient to raise any special rule of apportionment, different from the general rule. Id.

14. Repairs. A tenant in dower is not held, under G. S. c. 55, s. 18, to any more rigid rule in the management and preservation of the property, than would be observed by a prudent owner of the entire estate. If the want of repair is causing no immediate injury, the tenant may pay a reasonable regard to a present very high price of materials and labor, and wait a reasonable time for prices to be reduced to the ordinary level. What acts are not waste, considered and decided. Harvey v. Harvey, 41 Vt. 373.

15. Setting out dower. In the setting out of dower, it is the duty of the commissioners to appraise all the lands of the estate, and this they must do on view of the premises;—for lack of this, their report was set aside. Kendrick v. Harris, 1 Aik. 273.

As to assignment to widow, see PROBATE COURT, II. 2. (d).

E.

EJECTMENT.

I. EJECTMENT.

1. For what the action lies.
2. The plaintiff and his title.
3. The defendant,—his possession,—ouster.
4. Joinder of defendants.
5. Declaration.
6. Defense.
7. Extent of recovery.
8. Effect of judgment.

II. DECLARATION FOR BETTERMENTS.

I. EJECTMENT.

1. For what the action lies.

1. Ejectment does not lie for an easement,—as a right of way. Judd v. Leonard, 1 D. Chip. 204.

2. A, owning land in fee, allowed B to erect a house upon it, under a contract to pay B for the house when completed or convey him the land for a price stipulated, at A's election. The plaintiff, a creditor of B, set off the house on execution against him. The defendant, a creditor of A, set off the land, expressly excepting B's interest in the house, on execution against A. A had never expressed his election to B. Held, that the ejectment for the house lay for the plaintiff upon an ouster by the defendant. King v. Catlin, 1 Tyl. 355.

3. Commissioners set off to a widow, as dower, "three west rows of apple trees on the west side of the orchard, running north and south in the center between the third and fourth rows." Held, that this was a setting out of territory, and not merely a right to take and use the fruit of the trees; and that ejectment lay therefor. Patch v. Keeler, 27 Vt. 252.

4. Commissioners set to a widow, as dower, "two stalls at the south-west corner of the horse-barn," &c., "also twelve feet square on the loft over said stalls for hay." Held, that the identity of the stalls and space above could be shown by parol evidence; that the widow took a life estate therein, and that an action of ejectment lay therefor. Id.

2. The plaintiff and his title.

5. Equitable title. Ejectment does not lie upon a mere equitable title. Dewey v. Long, 25 Vt. 504. Cheney v. Cheney, 26 Vt. 606. South Royalton Bank v. Downer, 28 Vt. 635. Buck v. Gilson, 37 Vt. 653.

6. Where A holds the legal title to lands, but in trust for B, and the same are set off on execution against B, the levying creditor acquires only the equitable title of B, and cannot maintain ejectment or trespass qua. clau., unless where the previous legal title was in B and he had conveyed the land by a deed void as to creditors. The creditor's remedy is in equity. Dewey v. Long. Buck v. Gilson.

7. The plaintiff in possession of land under S sold his betterments to the defendant, who afterwards procured a conveyance of the land from S. Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain ejectment, although the defendant had not paid for the betterments, as agreed. Downer v. Richardson, 9 Vt. 377.

8. Under the general Banking Act of 1851, the plaintiff bank assigned a bond and mortgage to the State Treasurer. Held, that without a re-assignment, the bank could not maintain ejectment upon the mortgage, for want of title. South Royalton Bank v. Downer, 28 Vt. 635.

9. Legal title. If the plaintiff in ejectment has no title at the commencement of the suit, it cannot be aided by any thing done afterwards. McKenzie v. Putney, N. Chip. 11. Shattuck v. Tucker, Ib. 69.

10. The plaintiff in ejectment, in order to recover, must have title both when his action is commenced and when it is tried. He cannot recover damages for rents and profits, unless he recovers the land sued for. Burton v. Austin, 4 Vt. 105. 20 Vt. 88. Tryon v. Tryon, 16 Vt. 318. McDaniels v. Reed, 17 Vt. 674. Cheney v. Cheney, 26 Vt. 606. (Changed by G. S. c. 40, s. 4.)

11. Where several plaintiffs in ejectment count upon a joint title and right of possession, such title and right must be in them all, not only at the commencement of the suit, but also at the time of trial. In such case, where some of the plaintiffs have parted with their title to the defendants before trial, the case is not aided by G. S. c. 40, s. 4. Cheney v. Cheney.

12. If the plaintiff in ejectment have title at the commencement of his suit and also at the time of trial, he may recover possession and his damages, notwithstanding he may, during the intervening period, have been without title by having conveyed the premises to a third person. Beach v. Beach, 20 Vt. 83. Edgerton v. Clark, 20 Vt. 264.

13. A decree of foreclosure obtained by a third person against the plaintiff, but not yet expired, does not prevent a recovery. Catlin v. Washburn, 3 Vt. 25.

14. The plaintiff is not prevented from recovering, by having executed a mortgage of the premises after the bringing of his action, although by a deed absolute in terms, but with a writing of defeasance back. Gibson v. Seymour, 3 Vt. 565.

15. An objection that the plaintiff had conveyed away his title, is answered by the fact that such deed was void, under the statute, by reason of an adverse possession. Nason v. Blaisdell, 17 Vt. 216.

16. Plaintiff's possession. In order to maintain ejectment, it is not necessary that the plaintiff, having title, should ever have been actually in possession. Rood v. Willard, Brayt. 67.

17. Actual prior possession, not apparently tortious, will furnish a prima facie case for the plaintiff in ejectment. Perkins v. Blood, 36 Vt. 283. Ellithorpe v. Dewing, 1 D. Chip. 141. Hathaway v. Phelps, 2 Aik. 84. Doolittle v. Linsley, Ib. 155. Warner v. Page, 4 Vt. 291. Reed v. Shepley, 6 Vt. 602. Russell v. Brooks, 27 Vt. 640.

18. An execution debtor remaining in possession of the land after levy is, by statute, tenant of the creditor, and may maintain ejectment against a stranger who ousts him. Hathaway v. Phelps.

19. A prior seisin and possession, though of less than fifteen years' standing, if not abandoned, give a right of entry, or right to maintain ejectment, against any one having no prior or better right. Hall v. Dewey, 10 Vt. 593.

See POSSESSION.

20. Administrator—Heirs. Where no administrator of an estate has been appointed, the heirs may maintain ejectment without an order of distribution from the probate court. Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484. See PROBATE COURT, II. 1.

21. The residuary devisee consented to a sale by F, the executor, of a part of the real estate, for the payment of debts and specific legacies; and to enable him to do so, without an order of sale by the probate court, he quit-claimed the premises to F, who sold the same, giving a bond to convey, and applied the price received in payment of such debts and legacies, and gave the purchaser authority to sue in the name of F, the executor, to recover possession of the premises then in the adverse possession of the defendant. The purchaser brought ejectment in the name of F, as executor, and, he having deceased, the suit was further prosecuted in the name of an administrator de bonis non of the estate. The deed to F, the executor, was not recorded, but the defendant had knowledge of it, and afterwards, and while the suit was pending, and after a decree of the probate court assigning all the estate to such devisee, he obtained from her a deed of the premises. Held, that the title of the devisee under the will, and the assignment by the probate court, enured to the benefit of the purchaser by force of the deed to F, the executor; that the defendant acquired no right by his deed, as against the plaintiff; that the action was not defeated by the devisee's deed to F, since the defendant was then in adverse possession; and that the suit could go on in the name of the administrator de bonis non. Smith v. Hall, 28 Vt. 364.

22. Original proprietor. The plaintiff in ejectment, on showing himself an original proprietor in the town, need not show a division in severalty, unless the defendant shows such an interest as makes him tenant in common with the plaintiff, or shows a separate interest; but the plaintiff may recover, against a stranger to the title, his undivided interest, and put the defendant out of the possession of the whole. Coit v. Wells, 2 Vt. 818.

3. The defendant—his possession; ouster.

23. To recover in ejectment, the plaintiff must prove the defendant in possession at the bringing of the action. Evarts v. Dunton, Brayt. 70. Stevens v. Griffith, 3 Vt. 448. Skinner v. McDaniels, 4 Vt. 418.

24. In such action commenced in May, the defendant was proved in possession in March previous. Held, that this was sufficient evidence of possession at the commencement of the suit, where there was no evidence of abandonment. Chilson v. Buttolph, 12 Vt. 231.

25. To maintain ejectment, there must be not only a right of possession in the plaintiff, but a wrongful possession by the defendant amounting to a disseisin of the plaintiff. Where the possession is by the plaintiff's license or consent, the action will not lie. Chamberlin v. Donahue, 41 Vt. 306. Campbell v. Bateman, 2 Aik. 177.

26. Ejectment does not lie against a mere lodger or boarder with the party in possession. Jones v. Webber, 1 D. Chip. 215.

27. Acts of trespass upon land, by one claiming title, may be considered acts of possession and an ouster of the true owner, so as to enable him to sustain ejectment. Chilson v. Buttolph, 12 Vt. 231. 14 Vt. 404.

28. It is a sufficient possession in the defendant to sustain an action of ejectment against him, that he has a deed of the land upon record and claims it, though not in actual possession. McDaniels v. Reed, 17 Vt. 674.

29. In ejectment, it appeared that D was in fact in possession, having previously conveyed his right in the premises to the defendant, with an agreement that D should retain the use and occupancy of the land for one year. Held, that D thereby, became the tenant of the defendant, and that the defendant was so in possession, as D's landlord, as to be subject to the action. Hodges v. Gates, 9 Vt. 178.

30. The parties owned lands situate upon opposite sides of a stream and extending to the center. The defendant, by permission of the plaintiff, extended a dam from his side across, and upon the plaintiff's land, thereby setting back the water upon the plaintiff's land. Afterwards the plaintiff requested the defendant to remove the dam, or else take a lease of the land. The defendant refused to do either, but did not thereafter enter upon the premises, nor do any act thereon, though he continued to use the water of the pond to supply his trip-hammer shop on his own side of the stream. Held, that here was no such disseisin, or wrongful possession, as would sustain ejectment;—that the plaintiff's remedy was to remove the dam himself. Cooley v. Penfield, 1 Vt. 244.

4. Joinder of defendants.

31. If the grantee in an absolute deed leaves the grantor in possession, the grantor becomes a quasi tenant of the grantee, a tenant at sufferance; and both may be joined as defendants in ejectment. Patch v. Keeler, 27 Vt. 252.

32. The plaintiff in ejectment is not obliged to join the landlord with the tenant in possession who holds by a parol lease, or by a written unrecorded lease, unless it is shown that the plaintiff, at the time of the commencement of his suit, had knowledge of the existence of such lease. Wallace v. Farnsworth, 2 Tyl. 294. Brush v. Cook, Brayt. 89. Paris v. Bartlett, 19 Vt. 639.

33. The grantee of a mortgagor, where the mortgagor remains in possession by his consent after the law day has expired, may be joined with the mortgagor as defendant in ejectment by the mortgagee, and both are liable for the rents and profits. Warner v. Pate, 5 Vt. 166.

34. The lessee of a mortgagor, who has taken possession under his lease which remains unexpired, does not free himself from liability to be joined in an action of ejectment upon the mortgage, by merely leaving the premises, without a surrender of his lease. Collins v. Gibson, 5 Vt. 243.

35. In ejectment against a mortgagor in possession, the suit will not abate for the non-joinder of the mortgagee, although the mortgagee, in such case, may properly be joined. Paris v. Bartlett, 19 Vt. 639.

36. A joint action of ejectment lies against all who occupy the premises, though their occupation be several—as, of different rooms in a house. Each may plead severally as to the part occupied by him, and disclaim as to every other part, if he does not choose to be responsible for the other defendants. Marshall v. Wood, 5 Vt. 250; and see 18 Vt. 309. 26 Vt. 13.

37. Freehold action. A freehold action before a justice to be restored to possession of lands leased, under G. S. c. 46, s. 23, is analogous to an action of ejectment. The lessee and his several subtenants may be joined in it as defendants, although the lessee is not in actual possession, and although the subtenants claim, and are in possession of, several and distinct portions of the premises; and if such defendants sever in their defense, the damages may be apportioned among them according to their respective possessions, and separate judgments may be rendered therefor. Middlebury College v. Lawton, 28 Vt. 688.

5. Declaration.

38. Description of premises. In ejectment, the premises should be so described in the declaration, that the defendant may be able to ascertain for what he is sued, and that the record of the recovery may enable the plaintiff to point out to the sheriff, who serves the writ of possession, the land recovered, and that the record may furnish evidence of the limits to which the title is established by the judgment. Davis v. Judge, 44 Vt. 500. Clark v. Clark, 7 Vt. 190.

39. Thus, where the premises were described as bounded "south by the defendant's land," (Davis v. Judge); "on the north and west by the land on which the defendant resides," (Clark v. Clark)—judgment for the plaintiff was arrested after verdict, because the declaration left it uncertain to what extent, or to what limit, the plaintiff claimed.

40. A special verdict, in such case, that a certain line indicated on the plaintiff's plan was the true line, was held not to cure the defect, inasmuch as the plan was not incorporated into the record, and, if it could be, it could not be located on the land. Davis v. Judge.

41. Where the lands of a town had been surveyed into lots and numbered, though never legally divided;—Held, in ejectment by an original proprietor, that the land was sufficiently described by the number of the lot, with parol evidence that the lot bore that name and description. Cott v. Wells, 2 Vt. 318.

42. In ejectment the land was described, after giving the terminus a quo, by courses and distances only, without reference to lot lines, or any ancient survey, or any certain or natural monuments. Held, that the lines must be run according to the direction of the magnetic needle at the time the action was brought. Brooks v. Tyler, 2 Vt. 348; and see 13 Vt. 263.

43. Amendment. An amendment of the statutory form of a declaration in ejectment, by adding an allegation of special damage done to the premises, is allowable, in the discretion of the court. Lippett v. Kelley, 46 Vt. 516.

6. Defense.

44. Abatement. The non-joinder of the landlord, with the tenant as defendant in ejectment, can only be taken advantage of within the rules applicable to pleas in abatement. Wallace v. Farnsworth, 2 Tyl. 294. Tucker v. Starks, Brayt. 191.

45. Common source of title. Where both parties claim title from the same person, neither can dispute the title of such person. Ames v. Beckley, 48 Vt. 395.

46. Outstanding title. A defendant in ejectment who did not derive his possession from the plaintiff, and claims adversely, may, at any time before trial, purchase in an outstanding title to protect his possession. Tucker v. Keeler, 4 Vt. 161.

47. In ejectment, the defendant may show an outstanding title in a stranger, and such title may be established by presumptive proof, although the defendant be in no way connected with it. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 183.

48. As against a prior actual possession, not apparently wrongful, a defendant in ejectment cannot set up an outstanding title in a stranger unless he connects himself with that title; and the rule that the plaintiff in ejectment must recover by the strength of his own title, without regard to the weakness of the defendant's, must be taken subject to this qualification. Perkins v. Blood, 36 Vt. 273. Hathaway v. Phelps, 2 Aik. 84. Stevens v. Dewing, Id. 112. Braintree v. Battles, 6 Vt. 395. Russell v. Brooks, 27 Vt. 640. Stacy v. Bostwick, 48 Vt. 192.

49. A defendant in ejectment cannot claim that the taking of a lease by the plaintiff from a party to whose title the defendant is a stranger, was in law an abandonment of the prior possessory right of the plaintiff. As to him, the question is one of fact. Perkins v. Blood.

50. Estoppel. A deed was executed in 1819, but retained subject to the control of the grantor, until his death in 1826, and after his death was delivered by his administrator. The deed conveyed a life estate to his daughter A, remainder to "her eldest son which should be living at the time of her decease." A went into possession under the deed, and occupied until 1829, and then conveyed in fee with warranty; and her grantee and successors in the title occupied, under the deed from her, until after her death in 1865. In ejectment by such eldest son against the last grantee;—Held, that the defendant could not impeach the deed. A for want of a proper delivery, so as to set up a title by adverse possession under color of title given by the deed of A to him. Ford v. Flint, 40 Vt. 382.

7. Extent of recovery.

51. As to interest and quantity. In ejectment the plaintiff recovers according to his right, though it be less than he declares for;—thus, he may sue for a whole lot, and recover a less quantity; may declare for an estate in fee, and recover against a stranger a term of years; may declare for an interest in severalty, and recover the share of a tenant in common. Eoarts v. Dunton, Brayt. 67. Chapin v. Scott, N. Chip. 33. 1 D. Chip. 41.

52. The plaintiff in ejectment declared for and recovered a fee, upon proof of an estate for 999 years. The court refused to set aside the verdict. Rood v. Willard, Brayt. 67.

53. Damages—Mesne profits. The claim for mesne profits, after judgment for the plaintiff in ejectment, is local in this State, in New Hampshire and at common law. Burgess v. Gates, 20 Vt. 326.

54. In ejectment, under the statutory form of declaration, the plaintiff recovers, as damages, mesne profits derived only from the use and occupancy of the land, and not for such acts of trespass as arose from the wanton misconduct of the defendant. Hence, a judgment in ejectment is not a bar to an action of trespass for such acts committed while the action of ejectment was pending. Walker v. Hitchcock, 19 Vt. 634.

55. The plaintiff in ejectment may recover, in addition to mesne profits, all damage done by the defendant to the premises while he was wrongfully in possession, provided such damage is specially declared for; and such profits and special damage may be reckoned from the time of actual ouster, although that was before the date laid in the declaration. Lippett v. Kelley, 46 Vt. 516.

56. On default in ejectment for lands held by levy of execution against the defendant, mesne profits, as damages, are to be computed from the date of the levy. Little v. Meashum, 1 Tyl. 438.

57. Where there are several defendants. In ejectment against several, as against a landlord and sundry tenants holding under him, the plaintiff may recover, as damages, the rents of the whole premises against all the defendants, although they may have severally held only distinct parts of the premises in severalty, unless they separate in their defense by a disclaimer under the statute. Wires v. Nelson, 26 Vt. 13; and see Lamson v. Sutherland, 13 Vt. 309. Rood v. Willard, Brayt. 67. Marshall v. Wood, 5 Vt. 250.

58. In ejectment against S and M, where M was in possession as tenant of S, judgment passed against both, and they reviewed, and thereafter the suit was delayed, for some years, by an injunction from chancery procured by S, and finally judgment passed against both by nil dicit, when, on the assessment of damages, their relative situation to each other was disclosed, and it appeared that M had remained in possession only part of one season after the commencement of the suit. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover rents and profits, as damages, against both jointly, for the full time he had been kept out of possession. Whether a different rule could, or could not, be adopted, if M had suffered judgment by default, or disclaimed title as soon as he abandoned possession—quære. Lamson v. Sutherland, 13 Vt. 309. 20 Vt. 289.

59. In ejectment against landlord and tenant, and a joint verdict, damages cannot be assessed, embracing rents and profits which accrued before the entry of the tenant. Edger-ton v. Clark, 20 Vt. 264.

60. In ejectment against mortgagor and mortgagee, the mortgagee will not be answerable for rents and profits unless he has received them; and if the defendants plead severally, as they may, judgment for damages may be rendered against the mortgagor alone. Marvin v. Dennison (U. S. C. C.), 20 Vt. 662.

8. Effect of judgment.

61. To settle title. A general verdict in ejectment is conclusive of the title, as between the parties, according to the statute; hence, where the plaintiff is entitled to recover but a special interest, the verdict should be special, describing the interest recovered. Warren v. Henshaw, 2 Aik. 141.

62. The object of the action of ejectment in this State is not merely to recover the possession of lands, but to settle the title and establish the right of property thereto; and the judgment is, as between the parties, conclusive evidence of that title. Marvin v. Dennison, 20 Vt. 662. Hunt v. Payne, 29 Vt. 172.

63. A recovery in ejectment by an executor or administrator against the devisees or heirs of the estate, is conclusive as to his title, and also in behalf of an administrator de bonis non succeeding him, unless it appear that the devisees or heirs have acquired a right in the premises subsequent to such recovery. Hunt v. Payne.

64. One who unsuccessfully defends an action of ejectment brought against another who claims the land as his, is not necessarily concluded by the judgment in that case from again contesting that plaintiff's title;—as was allowed in this case in chancery. Clark v. Lyman, 8 Vt. 290.

65. The prima facie effect of a judgment may be qualified, even in ejectment, by showing by parol that the title was not in fact litigated; or by showing that the judgment was against the plaintiff, not on the title, but because he did not prove that the defendant was in possession; or because the defendant showed a temporary estate or right in himself, which has since expired. Collamer, J., in Parks v. Moore, 13 Vt. 183.

66. The defendant in ejectment pleaded in bar a former recovery in ejectment by his landlord against the plaintiff, alleging it to have been for the same land,—and this was traversed. Held, that the evidence must be confined to the question of identity, for, (1), that was the issue; (2), the former recovery was conclusive, and could not be impeached by evidence which would have constituted a defense in that action. Id.

67. The defendant had conveyed to the plaintiff's grantor a right of land, with covenants of warranty. The plaintiff afterwards brought ejectment against one K for the whole right, and cited in the defendant to maintain his warranty, but proved K to be in possession of only one lot of the right, and that was the only lot in controversy on the trial. The plaintiff failed to recover of K. In an action on the covenant;—Held, that that judgment was conclusive as to the title of that lot only; and that the plaintiff could not, relying on the record alone, recover the value of the whole right, but only of that lot. Brown v. Taylor, 13 Vt. 631.

68. Where a judgment in ejectment had terminated the defendant's right of possession in land and the defendant still remained in possession and raised crops;—Held, that he did so without right, and acquired no title to such crops, although no writ of possession was ever issued. Adams v. Dunklee, 19 Vt. 382.

69. As a bar to action for mesne profits. A recovery in ejectment is a bar to an action of trespass for mesne profits, or assumpsit for use and occupation, for the period covered by the judgment;—and this, though only nominal damages, or no damages, were recovered. Strong v. Garfield, 10 Vt. 502. 33 Vt. 90. 46 Vt. 524.

70. As to landlord not joined. A landlord is not concluded by a judgment in ejectment against his tenant, where he is not joined in the suit. Brush v. Cook, Brayt. 89.

71. A judgment in ejectment against landlord and tenant is not conclusive of the title of the landlord, where it was obtained by collusion of the tenant; and, held, that the landlord might prove that he had no notice of the suit, and that an appearance entered by an attorney, as for both, was by the procurement of the tenant without authority of the landlord. Rider v. Alexander, 1 D. Chip. 267. (G. S. c. 40, s. 8.)

See LANDLORD AND TENANT; MORTGAGE; TENANCY IN COMMON.

II. DECLARATION FOR BETTERMENTS.

72. The Betterment Act. It has always been held in this State and may be considered as settled law, that the Betterment Act is always in force, but suspended in its application by the restriction that it shall not extend to entries thereafter made; and that where this restriction is repealed, the act extends to all who were before within the restriction. Whitney v. Richardson, 81 Vt. 800.

73. Its application. Under the general issue, the defendant's claim for betterments can be used only to the extent of excluding from the plaintiff's claim for mesne profits anything on account thereof. Ford v. Flint, 40 Vt. 382.

74. After judgment in ejectment, the defendant may, as matter of statutory right which the court cannot refuse, file his declaration for betterments, and upon such declaration the action for betterments must be tried. Gage v. Ladd, 5 Vt. 266. 17 Vt. 116. 18 Vt. 585. Bingham v. Smith, 1 Tyl. 287.

75. In a declaration for betterments, the questions of law in relation to the claim can only be determined on the trial to be had before the jury, subject to revision in the supreme court, and not on demurrer. Beckley v. Wilbard, 18 Vt. 538.

76. A declaration for betterments is a mere incident or adjunct of the action of ejectment, and is not a "cause tried" to which the right of review applies. Gage v. Ladd, 6 Vt. 174. 24 Vt. 638. Allen v. Taylor, 26 Vt. 599.

77. The right of a defendant in ejectment to recover for betterments (G. S. c. 40, s. 15), depends solely on his bona fide supposition that at the time of his purchase he was purchasing a title good in fee, &c. Whitney v. Richardson, 81 Vt. 800.

78. The records of previous conveyances are not such constructive notice of the true state of the title, as to preclude such supposition. Id.

79. Nor will notice to him, after his purchase, that his title in fee was doubtful, preclude him from recovering for betterments thereafter made. Id.

80. And he may recover for all betterments made by himself and by all his predecessors in the title, except such, if any, as did not suppose when they purchased that they were obtaining a good title in fee. Id. Brown v. Storm, 4 Vt. 37.

81. Where one purchased, by what he supposed a good title, an interest as tenant in common of lands and went into possession and made improvements, and was afterwards ejected by action by the right owner;—Held, in a declaration for betterments, that he was entitled to recover such proportion of the value of the betterments to the whole interest, as the part recovered bore to the whole. Strong v. Hunt, 20 Vt. 614.

82. No recovery can be had in a declaration for betterments founded on an alleged want of title in the defendant, (the plaintiff in the ejectment.) Brown v. Storm, 4 Vt. 37. 17 Vt. 114.

83. A levying creditor recovered in ejectment against a party who took a previous conveyance from the debtor, on the ground that such deed was fraudulent as to such creditor, and that the defendant participated in the fraud. In a declaration for betterments;—Held, that such judgment was conclusive of the right, and of the facts found, and that no recovery could be had. It was not a case where the defendant in the ejectment had a right to "suppose such title to be good in fee." Thompson v. Gilman, 17 Vt. 109.

84. Held, that one could not recover for betterments made by himself, where his entry was made and the trial had while the restrictive provision of the Betterment Act was in force; nor for betterments made by his grantor, who did not suppose, when he made his purchase, that he was acquiring a good title. Winslow v. Newell, 19 Vt. 169.

ERROR.

- I. WRIT OF ERROR.
- II. WHAT IS REVISABLE ON WRIT OF ERROR, OR EXCEPTIONS.

I. WRIT OF ERROR.

1. When the writ lies, and when not. Held (1802), that a writ of error would lie from a justice's judgment in a criminal case. Brckett v. State, 2 Tyl. 152. (Since changed by statute, G. S. c. 80, s. 95.)

2. A writ of error does not lie to test the authority of the tribunal to act as a court and render a judgment, since such writ supposes a record and a judgment, and so the existence of a court to render it. Adams v. Wheeler, 1 D. Chip. 417. 2 Aik. 195.

3. A writ of error does not lie for rejecting a report of auditors, or referees—this being but an interlocutory proceeding, and there being no judgment in the case. Richards v. Wheeler, 2 Aik. 161. Id. 369.

4. But where the court, in such case, rendered judgment for costs;—Held, that a writ of error lay. Chittenden v. Wright, 2 Aik. 198.

5. Error lies to reverse a judgment rendered upon a report of auditors, as in other cases. Read v. Barlow, 1 Aik. 145.

6. Probably, questions of law standing upon the record by a report of auditors, or upon pleadings, or placed upon the record by agreement of the parties, may be revised by writ of error, although no exceptions to the judgment, in conformity with G. S. c. 80, s. 57, be filed. Redfield, C. J., in Small v. Haskins, 30 Vt. 174, citing Carpenter v. Dole, 18 Vt. 578.

7. From a judgment dismissing a suit with costs, being a final disposition of the suit, error lies. Barber v. Ripley, 1 Aik. 80.

8. Two writs of error, one for error in law and the other for error in fact, may be sustained at the same time, for reversing one and the same judgment. Herring v. Selding, 1 Aik. 101.

9. The statute giving an appeal to the supreme court did not take away the remedy by writ of error, in any case. Hathaway v. Allen, 1 Aik. 18. (1825.)

10. In trespass to the person and to property, the general issue was pleaded and joined, as to the first, and a justification was pleaded, as to the second, which was demurred to. The record showed no trial of the issue of fact, and no judgment except in these words: "Damages, $53; costs $37.58; agreed to." Held, that there was error in the record and judgment, and the same were set aside. Andrew v. Conro, Brayt. 72.

11. The court will not sustain a writ of error coram nobis for error in law, where the same point was decided in the same cause on motion in arrest. Cook v. Chipman, 2 Tyl. 45, note.

12. Where a party traverses a defective pleading, and the issue is found against him and judgment follows, he cannot assign for error such defect. Brydia v. Platt, 2 Tyl. 369.

13. A writ of error does not reach such formal errors as the omission of a similiter, or of the word plaintiff in the ad damnum, not noticed below. Stons v. Van Curler, 2 Vt. 115.

14. A writ of error does not lie for entering up too large a judgment through an error in computation, or misprision of the clerk, but application for correction of the error, should be made to the court which rendered the judgment. Campbell v. Patterson, 7 Vt. 86. Arthur-ton v. Durkee, 2 D. Chip. 20.

15. After plea to the action, the plaintiff's incapacity to sue,—as, that being administratrix, she had before suit married, whereby her right was extinguished—can no longer be questioned, either in the progress of that cause, or afterwards by writ of error. Lyman v. Albee, 7 Vt. 508.

16. If a feme sole plaintiff marries pending the suit, and it proceeds to judgment without objection taken on the ground of her coverture;—Held, that the judgment is not erroneous;—the coverture was but matter in abatement. Bates v. Stevens, 4 Vt. 545.

17. The omission to suggest upon the record the death of one of several plaintiffs, or defendants, pending the suit, and the entry of judgment in the names of all, is not, in a case where the cause of action survives, such an error as to warrant a reversal of the judgment. On writ of error for this cause, the judgment was affirmed in the name of the survivor. Herring v. Selden, 1 Vt. 14.

18. If it appears distinctly upon the record that the defendant in error is entitled to judgment, the judgment below will not be reversed for an error which could not have affected the result. Houghton v. Slack, 10 Vt. 520.

19. Parties. All the parties against whom a judgment is rendered must join in a writ of error. Hence, where one of the parties was an infant, and the writ issued within one year after his arriving of age;—Held, that it came within the saving clause as to infants, and so was not barred as to either. Priest v. Hamilton, 2 Tyl. 44.

20. When returnable. Writ of error abated because not made returnable to the next term after signed. Rogers v. Brace, Brayt. 21.

21. Where a term of the supreme court intervenes between the service and the return of a writ of error, such writ is not abatable merely, but is absolutely void. Brace v. Squire, 2 D. Chip. 49. 25 Vt. 350.

22. Supersedeas. A supersedeas, on allowing a writ of error, only affects the execution and leaves the judgment in force, on which debt or scire facias may be maintained. Dictum. Ib.

23. An order of supersedeas arrests forthwith all the proceedings, to remain in statu quo; and, if to an execution, renders the execution wholly powerless and inoperative. Where such order was exhibited to a sheriff after he had levied an execution, but before sale, and he still insisted upon collecting it, and it was paid to him;—Held, that he acted without authority, and was liable, in an action for money had and received, to repay the money. Hopkinson v. Sears, 14 Vt. 494.

24. The showing of an order of supersedeas to the person to be affected by it, is a sufficient service to bind him. Ib. See G. S. c. 42, s. 8.

As to Bail in error, see RECOGNIZANCE.

See G. S. Ch. 42 for provisions regulating Writs of error.

Form of a writ of certiorari in error, Brackett v. State, 2 Tyl. 152.

II. WHAT IS REVISABLE ON WRIT OF ERROR, OR EXCEPTIONS.

25. Common law proceedings. A writ of error (or exceptions) does not lie to the action of the county court, except when it exercises its jurisdiction substantially according to the course of the common law. The remedy, in other cases, is by certiorari, mandamus, or other proper writ. Stiles v. Windsor, 45 Vt. 520. Beckwith v. Houghton, 11 Vt. 603. Courser v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 476. Whitcomb v. Burlington & Lamoille R. Co., Chittenden Co., January T, 1877.

26. Change of law. A court of error is only to determine whether error was committed at the time of rendering the judgment which is on review; to do which, we are to look at the matter as the law then stood, and not at any alteration of the law since. Barker v. Esty, 19 Vt. 181.

27. The error of admitting an incompetent witness is not cured by the fact that, pending the exceptions, a statute has been passed under which he would be competent on another trial. Hulett v. Hulett, 37 Vt. 581. Johnson v. Dexter, 37 Vt. 641.

28. New facts. The supreme court can only pass upon the case as it was in the county court. No new proof can be made, nor new facts introduced—not even facts proved by record. Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 89. 19 Vt. 364. 25 Vt. 564. Note.

29. Harmless error. A judgment will not be reversed for an error in the judge's charge, where it could not have affected the verdict rendered, and where justice has been done. Ross v. Bank of Burlington, 1 Aik. 43. 24 Vt. 265.

30. Though the county court in their charge may lay down a rule which, as a naked proposition of law without reference to the facts, could not be supported, yet if in its application to the facts in evidence the jury could not have been misled by it, a new trial will not be granted. Brackett v. Wait, 6 Vt. 411.

31. Although it is erroneous to leave matter of law to the jury, yet if the verdict is in accordance with the law, the error is cured and the verdict will not be disturbed, nor the judgment thereon be reversed. Danforth v. Evans, 16 Vt. 538. Castleton v. Langdon, 19 Vt. 210.

32. It is not an error of which a party can complain, that the court omitted to charge upon a point raised by him, where a right charge would have been against him. Beebe v. Steele, 2 Vt. 314.

33. Although the ruling below was erroneous, yet if a correct ruling would have produced the same result, the judgment will not be reversed. Burnell v. Maloney, 39 Vt. 579.

34. A judgment will not be reversed for an error that, by the verdict, is rendered immaterial. Nones v. Northouse, 46 Vt. 587.

35. A party cannot except to a judgment because it awards him a greater sum than he claims, by having credited him a sum which should go to the credit of some other person, or firm. Wheelock v. Moulton, 13 Vt. 430.

36. A judgment is never reversed on exceptions for errors in the proceedings in the county court which have in no wise harmed the excepting party. Sampson v. Warner, 48 Vt. 247.

37. A judgment will not be reversed for a technical error in the charge, which had no bearing upon the case as it actually appeared in the court below. In order to warrant a reversal, there should be something more than the mere possibility that the jury were misled. There should be a reasonable probability, at least. Fletcher v. Cole, 26 Vt. 170.

38. The court refused to reverse a judgment rendered on the report of auditors, although the auditors admitted improper evidence, where it was so remote that it was absurd to suppose it could have had any bearing in determining their findings. Carter v. Wright, 25 Vt. 656.

39. Where the plaintiff in ejectment claimed title through a supposed devisee, under a will improperly admitted in evidence because not duly probated, and recovered;—Held, that the judgment must be reversed, although it appeared that the plaintiff might, otherwise, have made title through the same party as heir,—his own evidence showing that the ancestor did not die intestate. Ives v. Allyn, 12 Vt. 589.

40. Presumption in case of apparent error. Where a verdict is general, the judgment must be reversed for any error which is the subject of exception unless it appears that both the verdict and the judgment would have been the same, if there had been no error. Johnson v. Burden, 40 Vt. 567.

41. Where the county court makes a wrong ruling, in a matter apparently material, against the party who is cast in the suit, it cannot be assumed in the supreme court that there was something in the case that made this of no importance, but this must be shown affirmatively, in order to heal the error. Armstrong v. Colby, 47 Vt. 359.

42. Matters of fact—Issue of fact. Where an issue of fact is put to the court, their finding, as to the facts, cannot be re-examined on writ of error, or exceptions. Noble v. Jewett, 2 D. Chip. 36. 1 Aik. 41.

43. The supreme court can no more revise the judgment of the county court in relation to matters of fact, than the verdict of the jury upon the same facts; so the sufficiency of the testimony cannot be inquired into, if it was legal in its character and tended to prove the issue. Card v. Sargeant, 15 Vt. 398. Stevens v. Hewitt, 30 Vt. 262. West River Bank v. Gale, 42 Vt. 27.

44. In ejectment, where the issue was tried by the court, there was evidence from which a jury might have inferred an adverse possession and ouster, and the county court found these facts. Held conclusive in the supreme court. Kirby v. Mayo, 13 Vt. 103.

45. Where an issue of fact is tried by the court, upon testimony properly before it, and the testimony warrants the judgment rendered, error cannot be predicated of it, on the ground that if the court had taken another view of the testimony, it could not have arrived at the result without an erroneous decision of a question of law. Cilley v. Cushman, 12 Vt. 494.

46. Where an issue of fact has been tried by the county court, without a jury, the supreme court cannot correct the judgment rendered, unless it appears that the whole testimony was clearly and legally insufficient to support the judgment, and that the county court was bound to have rendered judgment the other way. Emerson v. Young, 18 Vt. 603.

47. Where an issue of fact was tried by the court, and the whole evidence was stated in the exceptions, and the evidence did not warrant a recovery, the judgment rendered thereon for the plaintiff was reversed. Benedick v. Champlain Glass Co., 11 Vt. 19.

48. Where an issue of fact is tried by the county court, and the facts are found and placed upon the record, the supreme court will revise the decision of the county court upon the legal effect of the facts found, and render such judgment as the county court should have rendered; and this applies to the case of an issue formed on a plea in abatement, as in other cases;—as where, in an action of book account, the supreme court reversed the judgment of the county court that the writ abate, and rendered judgment that the defendant account, and appointed an auditor. Peach v. Mills, 13 Vt. 501. Vanderburg v. Clark, 22 Vt. 185.

49. Where an issue of fact is tried by the county court and judgment is rendered upon the facts stated in the bill of exceptions, the judgment will not be reversed if the facts found, together with such inferences as may properly be made and legitimately drawn from them, are sufficient in law to uphold the judgment, although the case may not expressly find such inferences and deductions to have been made by the county court. Smith v. Day, 23 Vt. 656.

50. The supreme court cannot reverse a judgment rendered upon a finding of facts by the county court, on the ground of any apparent error in finding and stating the facts, where the evidence is not reported. Roberts v. Welch, 46 Vt. 164.

51. A question of fact decided by an auditor, and then by the county court on the report, cannot be revised by the supreme court, however questionable it may seem, unless there was no testimony tending to prove such fact. Harrington v. Edson, 24 Vt. 555.

52. It is never the province of a court of errors to deduce inferences of fact from a case agreed, a special verdict, or a report of referees, or of auditors. Thus held in a case where it was evident from the judgment below that the county court did not intend to make the inference claimed. Abbott v. Camp, 23 Vt. 650; and see Pratt v. Page, 32 Vt. 13.

53. Upon a report of auditors, and especially of a referee, all inferences of fact are to be made, and can only be made, by the court to which the report is returnable; and after that court has rendered judgment upon the report, if the judgment can be fairly sustained by any inference of fact which that court might have drawn from the report, it is the duty of a court of error to presume that the judgment was based upon such inference. Wills v. Judd, 26 Vt. 617. Emery v. Tichout, 13 Vt. 15. Stone v.

Foster, 16 Vt. 546. Birchard v. Palmer, 18 Vt. 203. Barber v. Britton, 26 Vt. 112.

54. But where the county court is silent on the subject of its finding of facts, and only sends up its decision, accompanied by the report upon which it is based, the supreme court will only presume, in aid of the judgment, that the county court inferred such facts from the report as, on examination of it, the supreme court can see that the county court fairly ought to have inferred. Pratt v. Page, 82 Vt. 13. Corliss v. Putnam, 87 Vt. 119.

55. Matters of discretion. The decision of a court on a matter addressed to, and properly falling within, its discretion, is not subject to revision either upon exceptions, or writ of error, or audita querela. Foster v. Austin, 33 Vt. 615. Sutton v. Tyrrell, 10 Vt. 87. Cummings v. Fullam, 13 Vt. 459. Perry v. Ward, 18 Vt. 120. Moseaux v. Brigham, 19 Vt. 457. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. v. Wales, 24 Vt. 299. Banfill v. Banfill, 27 Vt. 557. Amidon v. Aiken, 28 Vt. 440.

56. Instances. As, for the acceptance or setting aside of a report of referees. Whitmore v. Rider, 1 D. Chip. 279.

57. —For the refusal of an auditor to continue a case, Hickok v. Ridley, 15 Vt. 42;—so as to give opportunity to procure the release of an interested witness. Newton v. Higgins, 2 Vt. 366.

58. —For a denial of a motion for a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury—the question standing upon affidavits. Bloss v. Kittridge, 5 Vt. 28.

59. —For refusing to allow an amendment, although, by the rules of law, the court might have granted it. Probate Court v. Hall, 14 Vt. 159.

60. Though the county court, in the exercise of its discretion, may, under certain circumstances, refuse to receive a plea, yet the receiving of it, against objection, is not ground of exception or error, but being received it must be answered by replication, or demurrer. Emerson v. Paine, 9 Vt. 271.

61. That a deposition went to the jury without an obliteration of certain rejected portions, is not error in law revisable in the supreme court, so long as the court below made no wrong decision to which exception was taken. Hopkinson v. Steel, 12 Vt. 582.

62. Questions as to the manner of obtaining the disclosure of a trustee, the conducting of the examination, disposition of a motion to re-commit, and the like, rest in the discretion of the county court, and are not revisable on exceptions. Peck v. Merrill, 26 Vt. 686.

63. The allowing of an entry of non-suit, or the refusing to vacate such entry, whether in the action of account, book account or other action, rests in the discretion of the county court which, whether properly or improperly exercised, can never be assigned for error. Squires v. Burgess, 81 Vt. 466.

64. The power to set aside a default, either at the term at which it is entered, or at a subsequent time on petition and citation, is incident to the court where the default is entered, and is addressed solely to the discretion of that court. Jurisdiction in such cases is not given to the supreme court. Scott v. Stewart, 5 Vt. 57. Adams v. Howard, 14 Vt. 158. Goddard v. Fullam, 38 Vt. 75; and see Moseaux v. Brigham, 19 Vt. 457. Foster v. Austin, 33 Vt. 615.

65. The county court may, in their discretion, in cases not provided for by statute, strike off a default on terms, such as paying costs to the plaintiff, or of waiving some advantage. But where, in such case, the court ordered the plaintiff to enter his cause anew and pay the entry fees therefor, and upon his refusal ordered a judgment of non-suit;—Held, that this was error. Hale v. Grinbold, 1 D. Chip. 107.

66. The county court, on motion, dismissed an appeal from commissioners of claims, because the appellant had failed to give any notice to the adverse party of the appeal, as required by statute. Held, that this rested in the discretion of the county court, and could not be revised on exceptions. Rutland & Burlington R. Co., v. Wales, 24 Vt. 299; and see State Treasurer v. Raymond, 16 Vt. 364.

67. Preliminary question. It is not ground of error that the county court admitted secondary evidence of the contents of a paper, claimed to be lost, upon proof of loss which the supreme court might deem unsatisfactory. Janes v. Martin, 7 Vt. 92.

68. Most matters of discretion, occurring in the course of a trial, are considered subject to revision in a court of error, the facts being conceded or found;—as, in regard to the interest of witnesses, the loss of original papers, the challenge of jurors. Redfield, J., in Hart v. Skinner, 16 Vt. 144.

69. Upon a preliminary question made to the court—as upon the admission in evidence of a confession—the decision of the county court that the confession was voluntary and so admissible, may be revised in the supreme court where there was no conflict in the testimony, nor dispute about the facts upon which such decision was based. State v. Walker, 34 Vt. 296. State v. Phelps, 11 Vt. 116.

70. Certificate of "willful and malicious." After a verdict for one cent damages in an action for an assault and battery, upon an application for a certificate of "willful and malicious," the county court refused to receive the affidavits of the jurors that they did not consider the assault willful and malicious, and refused to hear further evidence beyond what had been given on the trial, and granted the certificate. Held, that there was no legal error; that the opinion of the jury was not material; that no legal inference as to the character of the assault could be drawn from the verdict; and that it rested in the discretion of the county court whether, or not, to allow further hearing. Robinson v. Wilson, 22 Vt. 35.

71. Whether a trespass to land was willful and malicious, so as to entitle the plaintiff to full costs, must be determined by the court before which the action is tried. Where the county court refused such certificate, the supreme court refused to revise the decision. Dodge v. Carpenter, 18 Vt. 509.

72. If the county court were to grant a certificate of "willful and malicious" in a case where, from the form of action, none could be legally granted, or were to refuse one on the ground that the form of action would not allow it, such decision would furnish ground for exception or writ of error. But in cases where the court may grant the certificate upon proper evidence, the allowance or refusal of it becomes necessarily a matter of fact and of discretion which the supreme court cannot revise. Soule v. Austin, 35 Vt. 515.

73. The decision of the county court, granting a certificate under the statute that the cause of action arose from the willful and malicious act or neglect of the defendant, &c., is not revisable, so far as it proceeds upon matter of fact. If granted in an "improper case," it might be otherwise. Robinson v. Wilson, 22 Vt. 35. Whiting v. Dow, 42 Vt. 262. Langdon v. Bowen, 46 Vt. 512. Styles v. Shanks, 46 Vt. 612.

74. Criminal case. Before the Statute of 1856, No. 9, the allowance of exceptions in a criminal prosecution was matter of discretion, and could not be revised by the supreme court. State v. Hebert, 27 Vt. 595.

ESTATES.

1. Definition. A devise of all the testator's "estate, real and personal," does not pass land of which the testator had but a naked possession, without title, or color of title. This is no estate. Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

2. Fee simple in form of lease. A conveyance, in the form of a lease to one and his heirs, but reserving no rent, and to continue "so long as wood grows and water runs," was held to convey a fee. Arms v. Burt, 1 Vt. 303. Stevens v. Dewing, 2 Vt. 411.

3. So, where, in like case, the reservation of rent was "one barley corn annually, if demanded." Propagation Soc'y. v. Sharon, 28 Vt. 603.

4. Distinction. But where by the lease, though perpetual, a substantial and adequate annual rent was reserved during the whole term, with right of re-entry for non-payment of rent or non-performance of other conditions;—Held, that the relation of landlord and tenant was thereby created, and this was properly a lease only. White v. Fuller, 38 Vt. 193.

5. Fee tail. A devise of lands in this State, by will dated in 1774 and approved in 1781, to one "and to the lawful heirs of her body," was held to create an estate tail in the devisee; and held, that the deed of such devisee and her husband, executed in 1797, and after issue born of their marriage, which deed contained covenants of warranty, had no effect, by way of estoppel or otherwise, to bar the issue in tail after her death. Giddings v. Smith, 15 Vt. 344; and see 31 Vt. 300.

6. A conveyance of lands was in this form: "To said Almena and heirs of her body forever," &c., "to have and to hold," &c., "to the said Almena and heirs aforesaid, their heirs and assigns, to her and their own use and behoof forever." Held, that this created an estate in fee tail and not in fee simple. Haynes v. Bourn, 42 Vt. 686.

7. Estate for life with remainder over. A deed was to A B "for and during his natural life, and no longer, and in remainder to the heirs of his the said A B's body, C B, son of the said A B, excepted, forever." Held, that this did not create an estate tail in A B; that he took only a life estate, and that the remainder in fee vested immediately in his children who would become his heirs, if they survived him, excluding C B; that they took as purchasers, and not by inheritance. Blake v. Stone, 27 Vt. 475.

8. A deed of land was made to one in trust, for the use of Mary, wife of William, during the lifetime of said Mary, "and at the decease of the said Mary, the said land and premises to be and become the property of the five children of the said William and Mary, and their legal representatives in equal shares. The said premises to be held by the said trustee until the decease of the said Mary." Four of said children were living at the date of the deed, and the son of one who had previously deceased. Held, that each child, and the son of the deceased child, took a vested remainder in the premises at the date of the deed. Gourley v. Woodbury, 42 Vt. 395.

9. A deed of lands was "to Asenath Ford during her life time, and to her eldest son which shall be living at her decease, and to his eldest son, and to his eldest son at his decease, and so on from the eldest son to the eldest son to the latest generation." Habendum—"Unto her, the said Asenath Ford, and to her heirs, as aforesaid, to her and their own use and behoof forever." Held, that the deed did not create an estate tail; that it created an estate for life only in Asenath Ford with a remainder to her eldest son living at her decease; that the words in the habendum, "heirs as aforesaid," refer to the specific designation in the granting part of the deed, and do not enlarge the grant, but are used as descriptio personarum, and such eldest son takes not by inheritance, but as by purchase under the deed; and hence, that such remainder man was not barred of his right in the remainder, by any deed of Asenath Ford. Ford v. Flint, 40 Vt. 382.

10. Shelley's case—The word "heirs." The rule in Shelley's case is of no special force in this State, except as one of construction and intention; and the term "heirs" will be construed as a word of purchase, where such was the plain intent of the grantor. Smith v. Hastings, 29 Vt. 240. Blake v. Stone, 27 Vt. 475.

11. Quere, whether under our system of conveyancing, we should make any distinction between a covenant to convey, a will or devise, and a deed, in regard to the necessity of the use of the word "heirs," to create a fee simple, or fee tail. Redfield, C. J., in Blake v. Stone.

12. A lease was made to a married woman for 800 years, and at her decease the premises to pass to "the legal heirs" of her husband by her, and to D S. Held, that the word "heirs," the parties being then in existence, was a term of purchase; and that here was an estate in remainder to such "heirs" and D S, which the husband and wife could not convey. Sawyer v. Little, 4 Vt. 414.

13. A deed to a daughter for love and affection, granted to her "during her natural life all the use and profits" of certain lands, habendum "unto the said Diana during her natural life, and then to her heirs forever"—with a condition that she should keep the buildings and fences in repair, pay the taxes, cut no wood or timber except for the use of the farm, and reserving to the grantor the privilege of cutting timber as he should please; and upon failure of any of the conditions, the deed to be void. Held, that the deed conveyed an estate for life only to the daughter; that her husband surviving her was not entitled to curtesy; and that her children, under the term "heirs," took a fee simple as purchasers under the deed. Smith v. Hastings, 29 Vt. 240.

14. A deed of lands was made to A "in trust for the heirs of B, to be deeded to them when requested by said B, and to said heirs, heirs and assigns forever"—habendum, "to said A in trust for B's heirs and their assigns, to their own use and behoof forever"—covenanting "with the said A and the children of said B, their heirs and assigns." Held, that it appeared on the face of the deed, that by "heirs" of B was intended his children, and that prima facie such children were then in existence, and that a valid trust was created. Flint v. Steadman, 38 Vt. 210.

15. Courtesy. By the statute of 1823 (Slade's Stat. 359,) (G. S. c. 55, s. 15) curtesy is given in lands of which "any man and his wife shall be seized in her right in fee simple," &c. Held, that the surviving husband does not become tenant by the curtesy of the land of his deceased wife, held by her in tail. Giddings v. Cox, 31 Vt. 607. Haynes v. Bourn, 42 Vt. 686.

16. Relation of tenure. There is no such relation of tenure between life tenants and remainder men under a will or grant, as that a partition between the life tenants will bind the remainder men. Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

17. Limitations. The statute of limitations does not commence to run against the issue in tail until at the death of the donee in tail. Giddings v. Smith, 15 Vt. 844.

ESTOPPEL.

- I. IN GENERAL.
- II. BY DEED.
- III. BY RECORD.
- IV. EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.
- V. PLEADING, AND GIVING IN EVIDENCE.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. General rule. One who claims to do an act in one right shall not afterwards be permitted to refer the act to another right, and for a different object. Panton Turnpike Co. v. Bishop, 11 Vt. 198.

2. Instances. An absolute refusal by the defendant to surrender to the plaintiff on his demand a note belonging to the plaintiff, unaccompanied by any intimation that he would ever comply, was held to preclude the defendant from setting up, on the trial, the excuse that he was away from home and had not the note with him when the demand was made, and so had not had reasonable time and opportunity to comply with the demand before the commencement of the suit. Albee v. Cole, 39 Vt. 319; and see Whitcomb v. Hutchinson, 48 Vt. 310.

3. As payment of the note in suit, the plaintiff took another note with different signers executed and payable in New York, embracing usurious interest. In answer to the defense of payment;—Held, that the plaintiff was estopped from setting up the illegality of the second note as being void by the laws of New York. Austin v. Chittenden, 38 Vt. 553. Id. 620. 38 Vt. 306. See Austin v. Dorwin, 21 Vt. 38.

4. S sold a quantity of wool to H, and shipped it to B, a forwarder in Burlington, Vt., subject to the order of H, and sent H a bill of sale of the wool with advice of the shipment subject to his order. H took possession of the wool in Burlington and reshipped it, through B, consigned to D, a commission merchant in Boston, Mass., taking B's receipt for the wool to be forwarded, and sent the receipt to D and drew on D for the value of the wool, and D accepted and paid the drafts. While in transitu to D in Boston, the wool was attached by B and others as the property of H and was put back in the possession of B for custody. In trover by D against B for the wool;—Held, that S, H and B were each, by their acts and the papers, estopped from setting up any title to the wool as against D. Davis v. Bradley, 24 Vt. 55. S. C., 28 Vt. 118. 45 Vt. 198.

5. Where an attempted reorganization of a school district by the selectmen was unauthorized and void;—Held, that the defendant was not estopped from denying the legality of such organization, by reason of having expressed his assent thereto, and by having presided as moderator of the district under such organization. There could not be one district as to him, and another as to others of the same territorial district. Thomas v. Gibson, 11 Vt. 607.

II. BY DEED.

6. Recital. A recital in a deed does not conclude as an estoppel, because it is no direct affirmation. Where the verity is apparent in the same instrument or record, there is no estoppel to allege the truth. Probate Court v. Matthews, 6 Vt. 269.

7. The grantor in a deed poll, and, to some extent, all who claim title under him, are bound by recitals in the deed; but they are bound by a deed recited, only to the extent of its obligation, and are not precluded from producing it to the court, nor from proving that it is defective. Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 39.

8. In order to an estoppel by deed, it is essential that it be a valid instrument. No estoppel by deed is created by a void deed. Abell v. Lothrop, 47 Vt. 375.

9. The recital in the defendant's deed of warranty, that the land so conveyed had been deeded to him by a certain person named, was held to be plenary evidence of that fact, and to estop him from disputing the fact recited, and from setting up a title adverse to it as derived from such person. Green v. Clark, 13 Vt. 158.

10. Where the terms of an indenture were recited in a bond conditioned for its performance;—Held, that the signers of the bond, upon general principles of estoppel, were concluded, and that other proof of the terms of the indenture was not needed. Fletcher v. Jackson, 28 Vt. 581.

11. Grant. A conveyance according to a lot line "as run out" by commissioners of the Legislature, was held to be such an acquiescence in the accuracy of the lot line, as to conclude the grantor from any claim by constructive possession beyond that line. Hull v. Fuller, 7 Vt. 100.

12. Parties having a special interest, as mortgagees, in certain machinery, joined in conveying their interest to a third person, but for the benefit of the mortgagor, and the machinery was thereafter run, used and possessed for his benefit. Held to be a release of their special interest, and that they were estopped from setting it up against a subsequent attaching creditor of the mortgagor. Wahworth v. Readsboro, 24 Vt. 252.

13. Where a deed of the lands of a feme covert was not properly acknowledged by the feme;—Held, that as against the grantee it was good by way of estoppel, as showing claim of title under the wife, and that his possession would not become adverse to the heirs of the wife, until after their right of entry had accrued, which could not be during the coverture, or the husband's estate by the curtesy. Smith v. Perry, 26 Vt. 279.

14. Where one of two adjoining proprietors took from the other a warranty deed of a strip of land off the edge of the grantor's farm where the two farms joined;—Held, that this was in law a concession that the grantor was the owner of the strip so conveyed, and precluded the grantee from claiming that he was, at that time, holding by adverse possession to a boundary still farther upon the grantor's land. Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 327. See Shepherd v. Hayes, 16 Vt. 486.

15. E executed a deed of land to M, without M's knowledge or any understanding with him in respect to it, and left it in the town clerk's office with directions to have it filed but not put upon the record, and to retain it until he should pay M what he owed him, and then to return the deed to him, E. The town clerk afterwards, by mistake, recorded the deed, and E afterwards took the deed from the town clerk's office, and it was among his papers when they were destroyed by fire. M never had the deed in his possession and never saw it. He had no knowledge of it, until some six or eight months after it was executed, at which time E informed him of it, and at the same time told him it was recorded by mistake. E was indebted to M and others, and E's object in the transaction was to prevent his other creditors from attaching the land. On a bill brought by E against M and certain creditors of M, who had levied their executions upon the lands as the property of M, praying a perpetual injunction against setting up title to the lands;—Held, that there had been no such delivery of the deed as to transfer any title to M; and that, as none of these claims were created upon the faith of the title being in M, the orator was not estopped, and was entitled to the relief prayed. Elmore v. Marks, 39 Vt. 538.

16. Covenants of title. Where A conveyed lands in mortgage with covenants of title to J, A having no valid title at the time, and such mortgage was duly recorded, and afterwards A acquired a title from the rightful owner, and thereupon conveyed with covenants of warranty to M, which deed was duly recorded;—Held, that the estate of M was subordinate to the mortgage to J; and, by Bennett, J., the covenants in the mortgage bound A as an estoppel until he acquired a title, and then the estate which devolved upon him fed the estoppel, and ceased to be an estoppel only, and became an interest, and gave J precisely what he would have had, if A had had such title when he executed the mortgage. An estoppel which runs with the land operates upon the title, so as actually to alter the interest in it in the hands of the grantor, his heirs or assigns. Jarvis v. Aikens, 25 Vt. 635.

17. Where an executor, who was sole devisee under the will, conveyed lands, describing himself as executor and as selling and conveying by virtue of a license from the probate court, but added personal covenants of title and warranty, it was held, in an action of ejectment against a stranger to the title, that it must be understood that the executor intended to convey all the title he had, and, although no license to sell was shown, yet, as no claim of creditors intervened, the defendant could not set up a title in the executor, or the estate he represented, in defense,—for that the covenants in the deed operated as an estoppel against both the executor and the defendant, and to convey the whole title of the executor to the plaintiff. Carbee v. Hopkins, 41 Vt. 250; and see Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 435. Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 386. Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 39, and Smith v. Hall, 28 Vt. 364.

III. BY RECORD.

18. Question adjudicated. Where a fact appearing to have been put directly in issue on the face of the pleadings, is determined by a jury in one case, the verdict, when properly pleaded in a subsequent suit between the same parties, is conclusive as to the facts found by the verdict in the first case. This is by way of an estoppel. Isaacs v. Clark, 12 Vt. 692.

19. Trespass for taking certain goods of the plaintiff from his warehouse; Plea—that, the goods belonged to A, and that the defendant took them by legal process against A; Replication,—that the goods were the property of B, and not of A, and that the plaintiff had received them of B to keep for him and to deliver on demand; Rejoinder,—that B brought his action of trespass against this defendant for the same taking, and on issue joined as to B's title, judgment was rendered for the defendant. On demurrer;—Held, that such judgment was well pleaded as an estoppel. Burton v. Wilkinson, 18 Vt. 186.

20. A sued B in trover for certain cloth, in which suit the point litigated was, whether B had taken and carried away the cloth. B obtained a verdict and judgment. Afterwards B sued A for slander in charging him with having stolen the cloth. A set up in justification, under a notice, the truth of the words spoken. Held, that the judgment in the former action was conclusive against the justification set up. Perkins v. Walker, 19 Vt. 144.

21. Where there is an attempt to fix a liability upon a party to a record in a new and independent proceeding, he is not estopped from showing the true relation in which he stands to such record—as that he was a mere nominal party. Catlin v. Allen, 17 Vt. 158. Ross v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 265.

22. Justice's judgment. Held, arguendo, that the judgment of a justice, not appealed from, in an action of trespass qua. clau. where the title of land is brought in question and litigated, is, like the judgment of the county court, conclusive of the title. Small v. Haskins, 26 Vt. 209. Redfield, C. J., contra. But see same judge in Reynolds v. Provan, 31 Vt. 638.

23. Collateral estoppels discussed. Small v. Haskins.

24. Mutuality. Estoppels must be mutual, and can only operate upon the parties to the issue, and those who stand in privity of estate, or descent. Wright v. Hazen, 24 Vt. 143.

25. A party not concluded by a record cannot insist that the other party shall be concluded thereby, for both must be bound or neither is. Knapp v. Marlboro, 31 Vt. 674. But see Austin v. Hall, 43 Vt. 110. Spencer v. Dearth, 43 Vt. 98.

26. Husband and wife, in a joint action against a town, had recovered final judgment for personal injury to the wife caused by the insufficiency of a highway. In a second action by the husband to recover his damages for loss of service of the wife, medical attendance, &c;—Held, that the former judgment was conclusive upon the town as to all the facts put in issue and found against it in that suit. Lindsey v. Danville, 46 Vt. 144.

27. The defendant had agreed to pay all claims that might thereafter come up against the plaintiff, as administrator of an estate. Such a claim was presented, and the defendant, being notified of it, promised to take care of it if sued, and was afterwards notified of suit brought upon it. He had before offered to pay part of it. He neglected to attend the suit, and judgment passed against the plaintiff, which the plaintiff paid. In an action to recover the sum so paid;—Held, that upon these facts the defendant was precluded from objecting that this was not a claim against the plaintiff, as administrator. Randall v. Kelsey, 46 Vt. 158.

28. A portion of the demanded premises had been decreed to the plaintiff in a former suit in chancery in his favor against the defendant and others. During that suit, the defendant had obtained a deed of the premises, but the title under it was not in issue nor litigated, although the defendant might have been permitted to set it up, on application to the court at any time before the final decree. Held, in ejectment, that the defendant was not estopped by the decree from setting up his title under said deed. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

29. A party is not estopped by his bill in chancery, though sworn to by him, from explaining by his own and other testimony, the circumstances and qualifications under which he was led to sign and swear to the bill, when it is read in evidence against him in another cause. Whitcher v. Morey, 39 Vt. 459.

30. Case of an estoppel by rule of court. Stillman v. Barney, 4 Vt. 331.

See JUDGMENT.

31. Attachment and sheriff's return. An officer was commanded by his writ to attach the goods and chattels of the defendant to the amount of twenty dollars; and he made return thereon that, by direction of the plaintiff, he had attached all the hay, grain, oats and peas in the defendant's barn.—Held, (1), that the officer was estopped from saying that there was no hay, grain, oats or peas in the barn; (2), that the writ and return were prima facie evidence that the property attached was of the value of twenty dollars. Barney v. Weeks, 4 Vt. 146.

32. Where an officer, having an attachment for service, represents to the creditor that he has made a valid attachment of certain property, and thereby induced the creditor to rely upon it and forego making any further attachment, which he might then have done, the officer is bound by his representations, and estopped from showing that in fact he made no legal attachment. Hovos v. Spicer, 23 Vt. 508.

33. The plaintiff and defendant, two officers, made attachments of the same property at about the same time, so as to make it doubtful which had the priority, and thereupon they agreed to divide the property equally between them. The property was duly charged in execution by both sets of creditors, when the defendant seized and sold all the goods on the executions committed to him. In an action of trover;—Held, that such agreement was upon good consideration; that the defendant could not, after that, raise the question of priority; and that the plaintiff could recover the value of one-half the property. Lyman v. Dow, 25 Vt. 405.

34. A sold a wagon to B, to remain A's property until paid for. B repaired it, adding four-fold to its value, and without paying for it, sold and delivered it to C. A sued B for this and other indebtedness, and attached the wagon in the possession of C, and sold it on execution. In an action of trespass by C against the attaching officer;—Held, that he could defend, under the general issue, as the servant of A, the owner; and that the attachment was no estoppel as to A's title as owner. Child v. Allen, 33 Vt. 476.

35. In scire facias upon a recognizance for the prosecution of an appeal, where intervening damages were claimed;—Held, that the defendant was not estopped by the sheriff's return of nulla bona on the execution, from showing the real condition of the debtor's property. Green v. Shurtliff, 19 Vt. 592.

36. The plaintiff, a mortgagee, brought a trustee writ upon the mortgage debt, of which the officer, without direction of the plaintiff, made additional service by attaching the mortgaged premises. The plaintiff entered his suit and prosecuted it—as the fact was found—merely to hold the trustee, and not with the intention of holding the premises on the attachment. Held, that this was not such a ratification of the attachment of the land, as to estop the plaintiff from his right of entry on the premises under his mortgage, although there was no notice given of any disclaimer of this unauthorized act of the officer. Mason v. Gray, 36 Vt. 208.

IV. EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

37. Rules and instances. If one stands by and sees his own property sold, or dealt with by another, he is estopped from afterwards setting up his own title against persons thus purchasing, or giving credit upon it, even though his own conduct resulted from mere carelessness or negligence, and with no real purpose to defraud. Cady v. Owen, 34 Vt. 598.

38. The plaintiff was in fact the owner of certain sheep in the possession of the defendant. The defendant, being about to sell the sheep, inquired of the plaintiff if he owned them, and offered to give them up if he did. The plaintiff replied that he had no claim to or interest in the sheep. Upon this understanding, the defendant sold them. Held, that the plaintiff was estopped thereby from setting up any title to the sheep. Downer v. Flint, 28 Vt. 527.

39. Where the grantee of lands was present when his grantor re-sold them, witnessed the deed, received part of the purchase money and fraudulently concealed his own claim;—Held, at law, that he was estopped from setting up his claim against the second grantee. Ivers v. Chandler, 1 D. Chip. 48. S. C., N. Chip. 61.

40. B, a second mortgagee, stood by and saw the mortgagor induce A, a first mortgagee, to release his mortgage and take an assignment of another security which he supposed to be next to his own, but which was in fact subsequent to B's mortgage. B was an attesting witness to the assignment, and for a long time treated it as prior to his own claim, and led A into that belief. Held, that such substituted security should be preferred to B's mortgage. Stafford v. Ballou, 17 Vt. 329.

41. Where the defendant, occupying the position of a mortgagor, had surrendered the premises to the orator, who occupied the position of a mortgagee and had paid for them their full value, and the orator had conveyed the property with covenants of warranty, being induced by the acts, declarations and conduct of the defendant so to do, and upon the professed surrender by the defendant of all claim to the premises;—Held, that the defendant was estopped from asserting any claim to the premises, or right to redeem them, after they had become enhanced in value. Wheeler v. Willard, 44 Vt. 640.

42. Effect upon one's title as mortgagee in lands, by silence as to his claim, when he witnesses the sale to another as free from any claim, reads and witnesses the deed, and knows that the purchaser believes it to be unincumbered—see Miller v. Bingham, 29 Vt. 82, 89.

43. The rule as to an estoppel in pais applicable to personal property, was held, in an action of ejectment, to apply equally to real property, and a title of record was defeated thereby. Shaw v. Beebe, 35 Vt. 204.

44. An estoppel in pais, as affecting a legal title, is quite as effectual in a court of law, as in a court of equity. A resort to equity, in such case, was held unwarranted. Vt. Copper Mining Co. v. Ormsby, 47 Vt. 709.

45. Where A and T owned certain land in common, and their respective titles were spread upon the town records, and T mortgaged the entire premises, and A being present drew up and signed the mortgage note as surety for T, and drew the mortgage, filled up the certificate of acknowledgement, and witnessed the execution of the mortgage;—Semle, that the mortgagee and his assignee were chargeable with notice of the real title of T, and that A would not be estopped from setting up his title, there being no legal fraud; and held, that the defendant's levy of an execution upon the share of A in the land, as it appeared on the records, was good as against the mortgage. Bigelow v. Topliff, 25 Vt. 273.

46. A was confessedly the owner of a certain number of acres off the south end of a lot of land, and B of the balance of the lot, but the parts were not distinguished by any line or boundary. They employed a surveyor to run and mark the line between them, and he, by mere mistake of measurement or calculation, ran and marked the line too far south. Held, that the parties were not concluded thereby—the true boundary not being disputed, indefinite, or uncertain. Burnell v. Maloney, 39 Vt. 579.

47. It is indispensable to the creation of an estoppel by representations, that the party to whom the representations are made, should rely and act upon them. Id.

48. Where A, using an alley as a way to his lot, saw B erecting a barn across the alley so as entirely to close the same, without objection or notice of any claim of right in the alley, but protested against extending the building four inches upon A's lot;—Held, that A was estopped from thereafter claiming a right of way in the alley against B and his grantees. Dodge v. Stacy, 39 Vt. 558.

49. A parol declaration or stipulation of the former owner of lands as to his possession,—as that he should not claim the land by possession,—does not estop his grantee, who took his deed while his grantor was in possession and without knowledge of such stipulation. Hodges v. Eddy, 41 Vt. 485.

50. A party occupying lands by consent of another, is estopped from setting up an adverse title in an action against him for use and occupation. Clough v. Horton, 42 Vt. 10.

51. A party may vary his liability and rights as fixed by a written contract, by what he may agree or do after the making of it, and so as to be estopped from insisting upon the interpretation apparent on its face. Montpelier & Wells River R. Co. v. Langdon, 45 Vt. 137.

52. Requisites. An estoppel in pais exists where a party makes a statement to another, which that other relies and acts upon, and which it would be a fraud in the party making the statement to afterwards controvert, so far as the statement affects the other's pecuniary rights. Aldis, J., in Shaw v. Beebe, 35 Vt. 208.

53. A man who has induced a course of action in another by his conduct or declarations, must stand by them, whether true or false. Redfield, J., in Soper v. Frank, 47 Vt. 368.

54. If one man has made a representation, which he expects another may or will act upon, and the other does in fact act upon it, he is estopped to deny the truth of the representation. This is in order to preserve good faith and prevent fraud, and is almost the only ground of an estoppel in pais. Redfield, J., in Hicks v. Cram, 17 Vt. 455. 45 Vt. 137.

55. Thus, where one suffered himself to be held out to the world as a partner in a firm, he was held liable for all debts contracted by the firm upon the joint credit of themselves and him. Ib. 449. See Davis v. Bradley, 24 Vt. 64.

56. So, when A, knowing that B was proposing to purchase a piece of land adjoining A's land, pointed out to B the division line, and B made his purchase relying upon A's representations as to the line, A is estopped from disputing B's title up to that line. Spiller v. Scribner, 36 Vt. 245. Halloran v. Whitcomb, 43 Vt. 306.

57. By arrangement between the defendant (the maker of a promissory note indorsed to the plaintiff bank), and F (the president of said bank), it was for F to pay the note. When the note fell due, the defendant and his indorser called at the bank to attend to it, and they were then told by the bank's cashier that F had informed him that the note was for F to pay, and that F had directed it to be charged to him in his account with the bank, and that this had been so done, and they need give themselves no further trouble about it. Relying upon this as true, the defendant afterwards paid over to F a sum of money belonging to him in the defendant's hands, nearly enough to satisfy the note. In fact, F had not paid the note, and it was not charged to him in his account with the bank, and he died insolvent. Held, that the bank was estopped from recovering upon the note, even any balance which might be due from the defendant to F upon a settlement of accounts, although the cashier did not know, when he made those representations, that the defendant had F's money in his hands. Manufacturers' Bank v. Scofield, 39 Vt. 590; and see Hickok v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 35 Vt. 476.

58. To give one's declaration the force of an estoppel in pais as against his claim, it should appear that such declaration was made with the intent of leading the other party to believe that such claim would not be enforced, and thereby such party has been led to do, or to omit to do, something in regard thereto that has been to his injury. White v. Langdon, 30 Vt. 599. Strong v. Ellsworth, 26 Vt. 366.

59. An equitable estoppel, or estoppel in pais, cannot be set up, unless it appears that the action of the party setting it up was influenced by the act, declaration or omission claimed to constitute the estoppel. Wooley v. Edson, 35 Vt. 214.

60. The declarations of a party cannot operate as an estoppel in favor of a person having no knowledge of them, and consequently in no way misled by them. Bucklin v. Beals, 38 Vt. 653.

61. Where the conditional guarantor of a note became acquainted, after his guaranty, with facts which constituted a defense for him;

—Held, that his omission to give notice of such facts to the holder and of his intention to avail himself thereof, was not a waiver of such defense, where the holder had not been induced to alter his course by not having notice. Russell v. Buck, 14 Vt. 147.

62. A promise by a debtor to an assignee to pay the claim assigned, but which was made without consideration, and was not made a ground of action, and which the assignee had not been induced to act upon to his prejudice, was held not to operate as an estoppel to the setting up, in equity, of an equitable set-off against the assignee, which existed against the assignor at the time of the assignment. Foot v. Ketchum, 15 Vt. 258.

63. The plaintiff was in possession of three cows, two of which the defendant, an officer, attached upon a writ in favor of G. After the attachment, but before sale on the attachment, the plaintiff told G's attorney that he owned all three of the cows. Afterwards, but before the sale, he told the defendant that one of the cows attached belonged to his father, and the other was his own, and was his last and only cow, and forbade the sale of it; but the defendant proceeded to sell it. In an action of trespass for the taking and conversion of the cow;—Held, that the plaintiff was not estopped by his declaration to G's attorney, from claiming that this was his last and only cow; because, regarding the attachment as the trespass, the admission was made subsequent to it, so that the attachment could not have been made on the faith of it; and, regarding the sale as the trespass, the defendant took the risk as to which of the declarations of the plaintiff should prove to be true. Robinson v. Hawkins, 38 Vt. 693.

64. The defendant, administrator of a lessee of a farm and of stock in which the estate of the intestate had some interest, while proceeding to have the stock appraised and inventoried, inquired of the plaintiff (the lessor) if he claimed any of the property, and the plaintiff replied that he had no interest in it; whereupon the defendant proceeded and had the appraisal and inventory made, and returned and accepted by the probate court; but before the defendant had sold any of the property, the plaintiff claimed it of him and forbade the sale. In an action of trover for a subsequent sale;—Held, that the plaintiff was not estopped of his claim. Turner v. Wakdo, 40 Vt. 51.

65. Assumpsit for two yoke of oxen that the plaintiff claimed to have sold to the defendant, through the plaintiff's agent. The defendant claimed that he bought the oxen as the agent of his son, and that the plaintiff's agent knew this at the time of the trade. The plaintiff called on the defendant for pay, and the defendant replied that he could not pay the money, but offered his note, and said nothing indicating that the debt belonged to his son to pay. The plaintiff, in reply, said it was a cash trade and he wanted the money, and refused the note. The defendant's son afterwards became bankrupt. It not appearing that the defendant then understood that the plaintiff claimed that he was primarily liable, nor that the conduct of the plaintiff was influenced by the admissions or conduct of the defendant;—Held, that the defendant was not estopped from denying his liability. Ripley v. Billings, 46 Vt. 542.

66. A party is not bound or estopped by an admission or statement, when made in good faith, or under a mistaken impression of its nature or extent in fact. In order to an estoppel thereby, it must appear affirmatively that the declarations were made with an intent to induce a line of conduct which the other party would not otherwise have taken, and that in reliance upon those declarations that line of conduct was pursued—so that, if the fact stated or admitted were allowed to be disproved, it would operate as a fraud and injury to the party relying upon it. Wakefield v. Crossman, 25 Vt. 298.

67. No party is estopped by an admission made in ignorance of his rights, induced by an innocent mistake of facts in material points. Thrall v. Lathrop, 30 Vt. 307.

68. An estoppel in pais was held not to apply to a case where there was no intent to deceive by the representations made, and where the party's attention was not called to the material fact in question. Church v. Fairbrother, 38 Vt. 33.

69. A party cannot be covertly led into a declaration which shall operate as an estoppel in pais, or equitable abandonment of a claim, a kind of perpetual disclaimer. In order to this, he should be made fully aware of the interest of the party making the inquiry, or that the declaration is going to be, or will be likely to be, relied upon by some one. Wooley v. Chamberlain, 24 Vt. 270.

70. The defendant gave the plaintiff a promissory note for his accommodation and without consideration, to be used by him as collateral security for his debt to A, and it was so used. The plaintiff paid that debt. Afterwards, and while the note was overdue, A, proposing to take the same note as collateral security for a new obligation for the plaintiff, inquired of the defendant whether the note was due and whether there was any offset to it, but did not inform him that the debt for which it was originally used as collateral was paid, nor did the defendant know that fact. The defendant replied that the note was due, and that there was no offset to it. Thereupon A took an assignment of the note from the plaintiff as collateral security for such new obligation assumed by A. In an action upon the note brought for the benefit of A;—Held, that the defendant was not bound by the admission so made by him, by reason of A's suppression of the fact that the debt was paid for which it had been first given as collateral; and that the plaintiff could not recover. Sargeant v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 371.

71. Where one is inquired of as to a matter in respect to which his answer may affect his pecuniary interest, he has a right to know whether the person making the inquiry has an interest which entitles him to make it, and what the object of the inquiry is, and that the answer will be relied upon. Unless so informed, and where he may think that mere inquisitiveness, or idle or impertinent curiosity prompts the question, then his answers should not affect his legal rights, or pecuniary interests. Hackett v. Callender, 32 Vt. 97.

72. H purchased and paid for land, taking a deed in the name of F, but took and maintained possession as apparent owner. W, an attorney, having for collection a demand against H, inquired of him if he owned the land, and H replied that it belonged to F. Afterwards, W, having a demand for collection against F, again inquired of H if he had any claim to the land, and H answered substantially that he had not, but the land belonged to F; whereupon W attached it for the debt of F and set it off on execution. It appearing that W made no disclosure to H of the object of his inquiry, and that his intent was to keep H ignorant of his purpose;—Held, in a bill by H to enjoin the setting up of such levy, that he was not concluded by his answer so, under the circumstances, given, and that they were not sufficient to rebut the notice of equitable title raised by his possession. Id.

V. PLEADING, AND GIVING IN EVIDENCE.

73. Matter of estoppel, not relied on as such in the pleadings, cannot be urged to the exclusion of evidence of fraud in procuring the instrument claimed to be an estoppel. Sawyer v. Hoyt, 2 Tyl. 288.

74. Where the matter does not amount to a full and complete estoppel, and cannot be pleaded as such, or the party has no opportunity to plead it, he may show it in evidence. Dorset v. Manchester, 3 Vt. 370.

75. Where a party has opportunity to plead matter in estoppel, he is bound so to plead it; and, if he omits it, the jury will not be bound by the estoppel, but may find according to the fact. If, however, there has been no opportunity to plead the matter as an estoppel, it may, in general, be given in evidence, and it will have the same conclusive effect as in cases where it is pleaded. Isaacs v. Clark, 12 Vt. 692; and see 17 Vt. 419. 19 Vt. 144. 35 Vt. 580. Lord v. Bigelow, 8 Vt. 445.

76. A party cannot be estopped to plead the general issue. An estoppel can be replied only where the defendant pleads some particular fact or matter as to which he is concluded as party, or privy. On trial under the general issue, the matter relied upon as concluding the defendant can only be given in evidence. Fry v. Cook, 2 Aik. 342.

77. Where a former adjudication is relied upon as having determined the entire merits of the controversy now in hand, it need not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be treated as an equitable defense, like payment, &c., and in some actions, as assumpsit, &c., may be given in evidence under the general issue; in others, as trespass, &c., it need only be pleaded as in any other plea in bar, and not as an estoppel. Gray v. Pingry, 17 Vt. 419.

78. The greatest strictness is required in pleading estoppels. Every fact necessary to create the estoppel must be alleged with the strictest certainty, and that all these facts appear by the record which is vouched as an estoppel; and the plea in its conclusion must rely upon the estoppel. The court then determines the matter on inspection of the plea, if demurred to, or of the record, if that be denied. Id.

79. Where a former adjudication is relied upon as settling some collateral fact involved in the present trial, and this is pleaded in estoppel, it must appear by the record of the former judgment vouched in the plea, in order to be conclusive, that that fact was put distinctly in issue and was determined. Id.

80. In order to estop a party from proving a fact because the fact had been found against him in a former suit, it must appear that the precise question was adjudicated in such suit. If, from the record relied upon, it appears possible that the question was left undecided, there is no estoppel, for an estoppel must be certain to every intent. Aiken v. Peck, 22 Vt. 255.

EVIDENCE.

- I. NATURE, KINDS AND EFFECT, IN GENERAL.
- II. CIRCUMSTANTIAL AND CORROBORATIVE.
- III. PRESUMPTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.
- IV. ADMISSIONS AND DECLARATIONS.
- V. HEARSAY.
 1. In general.
 2. Declarations of deceased persons.
 3. Recital in deed.
 4. Reputation.

- VI. DYING DECLARATIONS.
- VII. TESTIMONY OF FORMER WITNESS.
- VIII. RES GESTÆ.
- IX. OPINION—PURPOSE, INTENT, &C.
- X. HANDWRITING — ATTESTING WITNESS.
- XI. ORDINANCES; PRIVATE STATUTES; FOREIGN LAWS; JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.
- XII. BEST AND SECONDARY.
- XIII. DOCUMENTARY.
 1. Town clerk's records and certificates.
 2. Court records and files.
 3. Officer's returns.
 4. Other official entries.
 5. Private documents.
- XIV. PAROL EVIDENCE.
 1. In general.
 2. To vary a writing; to give it application.

I. NATURE, KINDS AND EFFECT, IN GENERAL.

1. Measure of proof. There is no middle rule of evidence between that of criminal cases, where the evidence to warrant a conviction must exclude all reasonable doubt, and that of ordinary civil cases, where a bare balance suffices. But in civil cases, whenever the act alleged involves fraud, dishonesty or crime, the legal presumption of innocence which prevails equally in all cases, criminal or civil, must be overcome by evidence by the party who asserts the contrary. The stricter rule applied to criminal trials is on account of the penal consequences of a conviction. Bradish v. Bliss, 35 Vt. 326.

2. This ordinary rule in civil cases was applied to an action of trespass for burning a barn, which involved the crime of arson. Id.;—and to an action of slander, where the plea justified charge of forgery. Briggs v. Cooper. Id. 329.

3. Good character. Evidence of general good character is not admissible in defense in civil causes, except where the question of character is directly in issue and material to the amount of damages,—as in slander, and seduction. Aldis, J., in Wright v. McKee, 87 Vt. 161.

4. Held, not admissible in an action of trover, with a count in case, where the plaintiff's testimony virtually charged the defendant with the crime of embezzlement. Id.

5. Affirmative. As a general rule, other things being equal, affirmative testimony is entitled to more weight than negative. Bates v. Cilley, 47 Vt. 1. Barrett, J., in Hine v. Pomeroy, 39 Vt. 219.

6. The prisoner claimed that on a day named he was at a circus at B, and returned to R on the midnight train. As tending to contradict this;—Held, that the State might show by a witness, who knew the prisoner, that he attended the circus at B that day and returned to R on the midnight train, was in and out of the circus several times and went through the train, and did not see the prisoner. State v. Phair, 48 Vt. 366.

II. CIRCUMSTANTIAL AND CORROBORATIVE.

7. Relevancy—General rule. All facts and circumstances upon which any reasonable presumption or inference can be founded as to the truth or falsity of the issue, or disputed fact, are admissible in evidence. Richardson v. Royallton, &c., T. Co., 6 Vt. 496.

8. Application. Where the defendant was under a written contract not to sell certain property without giving the plaintiff ninety days' notice, and likewise allowing him a preference in the purchase;—Held, that such notice might be proved by circumstances, as also a waiver of such notice and preference. Wood v. Stewart, 7 Vt. 149.

9. If one receives of another several chattels at the same time and under like circumstances, and uses and sells a part as his own, with the knowledge of such other and without claim on his part, this, as evidence of ownership of a part, is evidence as to all. Moon v. Hawks, 2 Aik. 390.

10. The poverty of an execution debtor was held admissible in evidence, as having some tendency to prove that the execution might have been delivered to the officer, with instructions not to commit the debtor without express direction. Downer v. Bowen, 12 Vt. 452. 17 Vt. 262.

11. Where the plaintiff's testimony was that a certain lot of wood was mostly unsound, rotten and crooked;—Held, that it was competent for the defendant, in contradiction, to show that the standing timber from which the wood was cut was a good fair lot of timber. Green v. Donaldson, 16 Vt. 162.

12. In an action for services, the defense was that they were rendered under a special contract for a definite time, and that the plaintiff quit such service. The parties disagreed in their testimony, as to the terms of the contract. The plaintiff was allowed to prove that the defendant had said, that the plaintiff had left him, "and he should set his long head to work to cheat him out of what he had done." Held admissible; (1), as impeaching the testimony of the defendant; (2), as tending to show the defendant's understanding of the contract. Hill v. Powers, 16 Vt. 516.

13. Upon the question whether a person offered as surety upon a note was a sufficient security;—Held, that, in addition to evidence of his solvency and credit, evidence of his habits for industry and sobriety was admissible. Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 87.

14. Where, as to a person coming from abroad and stopping at a particular place, the question was, what was the character of his stay or abode at a particular time—whether temporary, merely, or permanent with a purpose and intent to make that his residence or home—his continuing to reside or board there after the date in question, was held admissible, as tending to show a purpose to remain there from the beginning. Hulett v. Hulett, 37 Vt. 581.

15. Where the question was, whether or not one coming from the State of New York into this State had changed his domicile, evidence that during his stay in this State he continued to pay, in the State of New York, taxes upon his personal property, was held admissible, though in the absence of evidence as to the law of New York on the subject of taxation. Ib.

16. Evidence of a promise to pay a debt, not effective to take the case out of the statute of limitations because not in writing, was admitted as tending to prove the original indebtedness—the judge so limiting the effect of the promise in his charge. Held correct. Brechin v. Farrell, 39 Vt. 206.

17. A fact that illustrates, as by an experiment, the condition of the subject matter of the issue in controversy, is not collateral to that issue, but is direct evidence bearing upon it—as, the condition of a highway, where the question is as to its sufficiency. Walker v. Westfield, 39 Vt. 246. Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591.

18. To prove the fact that B had purchased of A, and was the owner of, certain tan-bark delivered by A at B's tannery, evidence was held admissible (A being dead), that immediately after such delivery, A, on coming from the direction of the tannery to a store a few rods distant, exhibited to the witness a note, signed by B alone, for a sum which was the value of the bark. Henry v. Huntley, 37 Vt. 316.

19. The fact that a child at its birth had spasms and convulsions was allowed to be proved, as tending to show the condition and health of the mother during the latter part of her time of pregnancy, as affected by a personal injury. Held correct. Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275.

20. The note sued upon being properly in evidence, and bearing an indorsement of part payment in the handwriting of the plaintiff, with other evidence of such payment and indorsement, the court charged that if the indorsement was made in good faith and the money was actually paid by the defendant understandingly to be applied as payment on the note, this was a very strong circumstance tending to show that he executed the note. Held, not error. Wright v. Williams, 47 Vt. 222.

21. A witness who formerly owned a lot and was acquainted with a stake and stones corner as the N. E. corner, and who had lately examined the lot and corners, was allowed to be asked and to answer the question, where was the stake and stones corner when he owned the lot, in reference to the corner now claimed as the N. E. corner. Small v. Ball, 47 Vt. 486.

22. On the question whether a person did a particular thing or not, the character of the subject matter, and the circumstances affecting the relation of the parties to that subject matter, affect the probability of the thing in question having been done as claimed; and, in contested questions of fact, this principle is applicable as to the admissibility of circumstantial evidence. Barrett, J., in Kimball v. Locke, 31 Vt. 686. 38 Vt. 165. Camp v. Page, 42 Vt. 739.

23. The plaintiff had let his farm to C at the halves, and certain cattle were purchased to be put on the farm, for which purchase the plaintiff advanced his own money. The plaintiff claimed that he bought and owned the cattle. The defendant claimed that the plaintiff and C bought the cattle together, and that C was to repay the plaintiff half whenever he should be able, and that the cattle were owned in common; and there was evidence on both sides. Held, that at this stage of the case it was competent for the plaintiff, as bearing upon the probability of the fact in question, to prove that at the time of the alleged joint purchase C was poor and of no pecuniary responsibility. Kimball v. Locke, 31 Vt. 683; citing three unreported cases; and see Houghton v. Clough, 30 Vt. 312. Buzzell v. Willard, 44 Vt. 44; and for distinction, see Way v. Holton, 46 Vt. 184.

24. The intestate made an agreement with the plaintiff to pay her a certain sum per year, payable at his death, if she would live with him and keep his house. This sum was apparently greatly in excess of the value of the services, and the defense was that it was understood by the parties to be in part a mortuary gift. Held, that evidence of the narrow circumstances of the intestate was admissible in defense, as tending to contradict the claim that the sum promised was for services merely. Frost v. Frost's Est., 33 Vt. 639.

25. Evidence that the plaintiff had paid a debt to the defendant under difficulty and pressure, without making any effort or proposition to apply it upon an older pretended debt of the defendant to him, or making any claim therefor, was held admissible as tending to disprove the existence of such claim. Strong v. Slicer, 35 Vt. 40.

26. In an action on a promissory note, the question was whether the plaintiff had agreed, on receiving from the defendant a re-conveyance of certain lands, to surrender this note in addition to certain mortgage notes, or not; and there was direct evidence on both sides, and contradictory. Held, that it was competent for the plaintiff, as adding probability to his testimony, to prove that the lands were not, at the time of the re-conveyance, worth more than the amount of the mortgage notes agreed to be surrendered. Houghton v. Clough, 30 Vt. 312.

27. Where the testimony was conflicting as to the price agreed to be paid upon the sale of property;—Held, that evidence of the real value was admissible as showing a probability which party was right. Kidder v. Smith, 34 Vt. 294.

28. In a bastardy prosecution, the complainant had testified that she was fourteen years of age when her child was begotten; that it was begotten by the defendant while she was riding home with him from a concert and dance, and that she had not seen him for a year or more before this. She was then allowed, against objection, to state that when she was eleven years old she and the defendant lived in the same family, and that he then had connection with her. Held, that this evidence was admissible; that the previous familiarity or intimacy between the parties was a circumstance bearing on the probability of the fact in question, as it tended to illustrate the relation between the parties. Imperfectly reported in Thayer v. Davis, 38 Vt. 163; as see Sterling v. Sterling, 41 Vt. 93. Kimball v. Locke, 31 Vt. 683.

29. Evidence not of itself, and independent of the testimony of other witnesses, material, but tending to confirm the testimony of another witness as to a material matter, upon which the testimony is contradictory, becomes material and is admissible. Instance—Brown v. Welch, 38 Vt. 241. Bennett v. Stacy, 48 Vt. 163. Davis v. Windsor Savings Bank, 48 Vt. 532.

30. The plaintiff having testified that a certain agreement was made by the defendant in the presence of H, and that H, acting for both parties, made a written statement of their accounts upon the basis of which such agreement was then made;—Held, that such written statement was admissible as corroborative of the plaintiff's testimony. Norton v. Downer, 33 Vt. 26.

31. Where a sheriff had testified that the plaintiff's attorney gave him instructions to take a particular person as the receptor of property to be attached, and the attorney in reply had testified that he did not give such instructions;—Held, that the attorney might further testify in corroboration that, at the time in question, it was his uniform habit and custom of business, as an attorney, not to give such instructions, &c.; and an offer of such testimony having been excluded, the judgment was reversed. Hine v. Pomeroy, 39 Vt. 211.

32. Action upon a promissory note given to a firm in adjustment of a partnership running account against the defendant. The defendant had a running account against one of the partners, and claimed, and his testimony tended to prove, that at the time the note was given, and afterwards, it was agreed that his account should apply upon the note. The plaintiff's testimony contradicted this. Held, that it was competent for the defendant, as rendering his claim the more probable, to prove that the respective accounts accrued under an original agreement that the defendant's account against that one of the partners should apply upon the firm account against the defendant. Camp v. Page, 42 Vt. 739.

33. In an action to recover for goods sold by a traveling agent of the plaintiff's, the issue was whether the goods were sold on a credit of 30 days, as the plaintiff claimed, or on a credit of 60 days, as the defendant claimed,—and there was testimony to sustain each side. The agent testified that he sold the goods on a credit of 30 days only, and told the defendant that his employer never gave longer credit than 30 days, and that he had no authority to give a longer credit. Held, that it was competent to prove by the plaintiff, as tending to confirm the testimony of the agent, that he had, in no case in his business, given a longer credit on the sale of goods than 30 days, and that said agent was not authorized to give a longer credit, but that his instructions to sell only for cash down, or on a credit not exceeding 30 days, were imperative. Hardy v. Cheney, 42 Vt. 417.

34. In an action for wrongfully running against the plaintiff in a highway, the defendants claimed and testified that the injury was caused by their horse becoming unmanageable without their fault. Held proper, on cross-examination, to inquire into their line of conduct from the night before, and on their route, whether they had been drinking, whether they had driven recklessly from the start, &c. Streeter v. Evans, 44 Vt. 27.

35. The question was, whether the defendant had paid certain money to the plaintiff's agent. The agent denied such payment, and testified, without objection, to his mode of doing such business for the plaintiff;—among other things, that he was accustomed to enter all money received upon a cash book, and that there was no entry of such money on the cash book. On cross-examination, the questions and the answers of the witness made the impression that his denial of the payment resulted mainly from the fact that the cash book contained no entry of such payment. Held, that it was competent, on re-examination, as corroborative of the testimony of the witness, to show fully the manner in which the business was done and the manner of keeping and making entries in the book, and that the book was, to this extent and for this purpose, evidence. Missisquoi Bank v. Everts, 45 Vt. 203. 46 Vt. 75.

36. During the trial of a case for an injury upon a highway, the plaintiff submitted to one personal examination by the defendant's medical witnesses, but refused to submit to another, for the alleged reason that she was too feeble and exhausted. Held, that, to rebut any unfavorable inference from such refusal, it was competent for her to show that she had, on another occasion and before the trial, requested the parties in interest to send physicians to examine her. Durgin v. Danville, 47 Vt. 95.

37. Too remote. The question being whether the name of A subscribed as witness to a note was written by him, about which there was evidence pro and con;—Held, that evidence that B, who once held the note, had forged the name of A as subscribing witness to another note of about the same amount, was not admissible. Keith v. Taylor, 3 Vt. 153; and see Rouse v. Bird, 48 Vt. 578.

38. Upon the question of the amount of wool certain sheep would yield as affecting their value, evidence that the sheep "compared favorably" with the best flocks in the country—without more—is too loose and indefinite to be received in evidence. Melvin v. Bullard, 35 Vt. 268.

39. The question being, whether it was by the action of standing water, or of frost, that the walls of a certain building were cracked and thrown out of shape, evidence of the action of frost upon the walls of another building 25 rods distant and on the slope of the same ravine, was held to have been properly excluded,—it not appearing that the location and surrounding conditions of the two buildings were so similar, that one would be any fair test for the other. Haynes v. Burlington, 38 Vt. 350.

40. An attorney having testified that he did not give instructions to a sheriff to take a particular person as receiptor of property attached, another witness testified [irregularly] that the attorney told him that the plaintiff had directed him to give such instructions to the sheriff; and the court below charged that this evidence tended to impeach the testimony of the attorney. Held erroneous, for that there was no contradiction between the two statements, and that the last testimony was not admissible. Hine v. Pomeroy, 39 Vt. 311.

41. An attorney having testified that, on delivering an attachment to an officer to be served, he gave no instructions as to taking receiptors, and that it had been his uniform habit and course of business as an attorney not to give such instructions;—Held, that it was not competent, on the other side, to prove that it was the practice of other attorneys in the same place to give such instructions. S. C., 40 Vt. 103.

42. The plaintiff, a creditor of A, claimed that the defendant agreed to pay the debt. Held, that the fact that the defendant, under circumstances similar or identical, agreed to pay A's indebtedness to another creditor, had no legal tendency to prove such claim of the plaintiff. There is no necessary or legal connection between the two facts. Phelps v. Conant, 30 Vt. 277; and see 8 Vt. 285, and Bishop v. Wheeler, 46 Vt. 409.

43. A witness having testified in his deposition that he witnessed a collision between the carriages of the parties, and that at the time the defendant's carriage struck the plaintiff's the defendant was driving at a fast gait;—Held, that the court properly excluded other parts of the deposition, in which the witness stated that in driving up and down the road, before the accident, the defendant was driving at a very fast gait, and that the gait at the time of the collision was the same. Nones v. Northouse, 46 Vt. 587.

III. PRESUMPTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

44. In general. Presumptions must always rest upon acknowledged or well established facts, and not upon presumptions. Richmond v. Aiken, 25 Vt. 324. One presumption cannot be based upon another. Hammond v. Smith, 17 Vt. 281.

45. Instances—Assent. Where one offered as a witness, who is incompetent through interest, executes a release to the party calling him, such act being apparently for the advantage of the party, his assent to it will be presumed, and a delivery to his attorney will be sufficient. Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191.

46. Letters. Except in cases governed by the law merchant, a letter properly directed and deposited in the postoffice is not per se notice of the contents to the party addressed. Prima facie, the letter in such case will be taken to have been received, but this may be rebutted. Wakworth v. Seaver, 30 Vt. 728.

47. Where a letter was written to the defendant, a hotel keeper, and was answered by the defendant's clerk;—Held, that it was to be inferred that the defendant received the letter and directed the reply, and the letter in reply was therefore evidence. Weeks v. Barron, 38 Vt. 430.

48. Settlement. A 'general settlement made is prima facie a settlement of all claims then existing, but does not exclude proof to the contrary, nor bar a claim or item not in fact included in the settlement. Nichols v. Scott, 12 Vt. 47. Austin v. Berry, 8 Vt. 58. Darling v. Hall, 5 Vt. 91. Whiting v. Corwin, Id. 451. Newell v. Keith, 11 Vt. 214. Wood v. Johnson, 18 Vt. 191. Bushee v. Allen, 31 Vt. 631.

49. Note. The giving of a note for a claim and receiving a discharge therefrom, affords no presumption, either way, between a compromise and substitution, unless the party knew the full grounds of his defense to the claim at the time. Middlebury College v. Williamson, 1 Vt. 212.

50. Burden of proof—Instances. If a party would avoid the effect of his promise, insisting that it was made in ignorance of material facts, the burden is upon him to prove such ignorance. Burton v. Blin, 23 Vt. 161.

51. In case for deceitfully exchanging property with the plaintiff upon which a third person had a lien;—Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to aver or prove that he had no notice of such lien. Patee v. Pelton, 48 Vt. 182.

52. It being conceded that the defendant received the money recovered for, in a fiduciary capacity and without authority to appropriate it to his own use;—Held, that the burden was on him, if he would avoid a certified execution, to prove that the plaintiff afterwards permitted him so to use it. Lamb v. Fairbanks, 48 Vt. 519.

53. Contract. A married woman, holding as her separate estate a note against the defendant, made an arrangement with him, with the assent of her husband, to supply her family with goods from his store, to be applied upon the note. In pursuance of this arrangement, the defendant furnished the family with goods, charging them to the husband, and the account also contained charges for goods not for the use of the family, but delivered to persons not members thereof, upon the orders of the husband. In an action on the note after the husband's death;—Held, that such articles of the account as were furnished for the family were a payment upon the note, but those only; and that the burden was upon the defendant to distinguish the articles, and none could be allowed upon the note except those which he proved to have been for the use of the family. Barber v. Slade, 30 Vt. 191.

54. In an action on a contract by which the defendant was to purchase butter for the plaintiff at a certain commission per pound, and to render the plaintiff a true statement of the weights at which he should purchase it, and should be allowed by the plaintiff the same weights, the breach alleged was, that the defendant had rendered an untrue statement of the weights at which he had purchased the butter, whereby the plaintiff had overpaid him, &c. Held, that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove that the weights at which he received the butter of the defendant exceeded the weights at which the defendant bought the same. Hibbard v. Mills, 46 Vt. 243.

55. Payment. In an action upon a bond conditioned that the defendant would pay certain outstanding notes of the plaintiff's;—Held, that the plaintiff need not prove that he had paid them, nor need he produce them; that the onus of proof of payment was on the defendant. Everts v. Bostwick, 4 Vt. 349.

56. An admission of indebtedness to the plaintiff's intestate contained in a disclosure by the defendant as trustee, in a case which ended without judgment, is sufficient evidence of a continuing and present indebtedness to sustain an action therefor, in lack of any evidence of payment, or other discharge. Farr v. Payne, 40 Vt. 615.

57. Imperfect deed. A paper purporting to be a deed, duly signed, witnessed and acknowledged, and having the clause, "In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal," but having no seal affixed, furnishes sufficient testimony on its face that the signer intended to seal it, but omitted it by mistake; and a court of chancery will correct such omission. Colchester v. Culver, 29 Vt. 111.

58. Law of other States. The presumption is that, upon a common law question, the common law of a sister State is the same as our own. If it be claimed that there is a difference, the burden of proof is upon the party claiming it. Ward v. Morrison, 25 Vt. 593.

59. —of Canada. Where a submission, arbitration and award were had in Canada, and the award was sued in this State;—Held, that although the transaction was governed by the laws of Canada, the court would assume that there was no distinction between those laws and our own, without evidence of such difference. Woodrow v. O'Connor, 28 Vt. 776.

60. Presumption of regularity. Evidence that a person testified as a witness tends to prove that he was sworn, and is sufficient proof, if there is no evidence to the contrary. Cass v. Anderson, 33 Vt. 182.

61. Where a town treasurer made a payment upon a debt owing by the town;—Held, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the payment was made with the approbation of the town, so as to bind the town. Sargeant v. Sunderland, 21 Vt. 284.

62. Where an administrator conveyed a farm subject to the widow's dower, and possession was taken of all except the one-third set off to the widow and was so held for thirty years;—Held, in the absence of a perfect record in the probate court, that the presumption of regularity of the administrator's proceedings, prior to his deed, applied as well to the reversion of the dower as to the other two-thirds. Hazard v. Martin, 2 Vt. 77. 26 Vt. 590. 32 Vt. 210.

63. Circumstances stated, under and from which the granting of license to an administrator to sell real estate, and the regularity of his proceedings and of the probate court in reference thereto, may be presumed and found as facts by the jury, in the absence of original or record evidence. Doolittle v. Holton, 28 Vt. 819; and see 2 Vt. 77. 26 Vt. 588. 29 Vt. 111. 32 Vt. 183.

64. Where, in one contingency, the act of a public officer—as State's treasurer, or sheriff—may be lawful, and he acts, the court must by legal intendment suppose that that contingency existed and that he acted lawfully, until the contrary is shown. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388. Bank of U. S. v. Tucker, 7 Vt. 184.

65. That the justice went to the place named in the writ for trial, after the lapse of two hours from the time set for trial, and entered judgment by default, is very slight ground for presuming against his having been there within the two hours, and is not sufficient to change the burden of proof, or overcome the presumption in favor of the regularity of the proceedings. Underwood v. Hart, 23 Vt. 120.

66. Lapse of time. Where objection was taken to the record of proceedings in the probate court, which had jurisdiction of the subject, that it did not show that they were taken in compliance with the requirements of the statute, but the record did not show anything done contrary to such requirements, and the proceedings were ancient;—Held, that the regularity of the previous proceedings should be presumed. Ford v. Flint, 40 Vt. 382. Giddings v. Smith, 15 Vt. 344; and see Judge of Probate v. Fillmore, 1 D. Chip. 420. Collard v. Crane, Brayt. 18.

67. The question of presumption in favor of the regularity of the proceedings of an administrator in the sale of real estate, after great lapse of time, should be submitted to the jury, as an open question for them to determine according to their view of the facts. If not so submitted, it is error. Doolittle v. Holton, 26 Vt. 588. S. C., 28 Vt. 819.

68. A presumption of the termination of an agency, a demand for an accounting, and a settlement, may be presumed from lapse of time,—as twenty years. Staniford v. Tuttle, 4 Vt. 82.

69. The abandonment of a legal claim, or demand, or debt, is never presumed, though from lapse of time it may be presumed, when not rebutted, that the claim has been paid. Ritz v. Smith, 6 Vt. 348.

70. An account rendered, if no objection be made thereto in a reasonable time, will be presumed to have been acquiesced in as an account stated, and settled. So held, after many years of acquiescence. Tharp v. Tharp, 15 Vt. 105.

71. Presumption of payment from lapse of time is one of fact, depending upon the particular circumstances of the case. It does not arise, as matter of law, short of a period of twenty years [quære, fifteen years in this State] and even then, it is but a presumption, subject to be removed by evidence. Graves v. Weeks, 19 Vt. 178. Dunning v. Chamberlin, 6 Vt. 127. Everts v. Nason, 11 Vt. 122. Kimball v. Ives, 17 Vt. 480. Grafton Bank v. Doe, 19 Vt. 463; and see Mattocks v. Bellamy, 8 Vt. 463. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41, 75.

72. Where there were no records of the county court by which the jail limits could be ascertained;—Held, that proof of general understanding and acquiescence of all concerned for more than 15 years—in this case, 30 years—in certain recognized and well-defined boundaries, as the jail limits, was equivalent to record proof. Downer v. Dana, 19 Vt. 338. Perkins v. Dana, 19 Vt. 589.

IV. ADMISSIONS AND DECLARATIONS.

73. In pleadings. Matters stated in a notice under the general issue cannot be taken as admissions, or evidence against the defendant. Smith v. Shumway, 2 Tyl. 74.

74. A judgment suffered by default in an action upon a contract specially declared upon, is to be regarded in another suit between the same parties reversed, as, at least, an admission by the former defendant of the contract as set forth in that declaration. Suttons v. Tyrell, 12 Vt. 79.

75. Declaration of purpose. The declaration of a party that he intended to do a certain act is not evidence against him, without other evidence that the act was in fact committed. Bullock v. Beach, 3 Vt. 73; and see Barnard v. Henry, 25 Vt. 289.

76. The question being whether the defendant cut certain pine trees, it was held admissible, as tending, in connection with other evidence, to prove the fact, that five or six weeks before the trees were cut, the defendant proposed to the witness that he should go with him and cut some pine timber on that lot. Hunt v. Taylor, 22 Vt. 556.

77. By whom proved. The admission of a person that he signed a promissory note was excluded, on the ground that he might be called as a witness. Warner v. McGary, 4 Vt. 507. But see Aiken v. Peck, 22 Vt. 255, 262. Alger v. Andrews, 47 Vt. 238, and infra.

78. When the admissions or declarations of a party are competent evidence, it is not necessary to call such party to prove them, although he may be a competent witness, but they may be proved in other ways;—as by writing, or by a witness who heard them, &c. Reed v. Rice, 25 Vt. 171.

79. Whenever it becomes necessary to prove a declaration made by one person to another, there is no rule of evidence which confines the proof to the person who made the declaration.

Any person who heard it is competent to testify to it. Miller v. Wood, 44 Vt. 378.

80. Qualified by state of health. Evidence that a person was in poor health, hypochondriac, and subject to depression of spirits, is admissible as qualifying his declarations about his property, and as showing that they ought not to be weighed as if made in a state of better health. Brackett v. Wait, 6 Vt. 411.

81. The whole is evidence. When one party introduces in evidence the admission of the other, he makes the whole declaration evidence to be weighed by the jury, that part which makes against him, as well as that which makes in his favor. But he is not bound by the admission, and though he cannot impeach his own witness, he may contradict the witness or the admission. Patrick v. Hasen, 10 Vt. 183.

82. The general admission of a party—as that he had sold certain property to the other—should be treated as evidence against him according to its terms, and should be left to the jury to have its proper influence, as such, unless explained and counteracted by other testimony;—and, held, that it was error for the court, in such case, to assume that such admission had reference to a previous written contract, so long as no other and distinct contract was disclosed, and so put the opposite party on proof of some independent contract by evidence beyond the admission itself. Ripley v. Paige, 12 Vt. 358.

83. Where declarations or admissions of a party are offered in evidence, the whole, made at one time, must be received and weighed, as well that which is in his favor as that which is against him. But the jury are at liberty to believe one portion and disbelieve the other—to give effect to that part which is against him, and, if from the evidence and all the circumstances of the case they believe the other part untrue, to set the latter aside. Mattocks v. Lyman, 18 Vt. 98; and see State v. Mahon, 32 Vt. 241. State v. McDonnell, 32 Vt. 491.

84. Where an admission of a party is given in evidence against him, whatever was said by him at the time, which in any way qualifies or explains such admission, is admissible in his favor, but no further. Dean v. Dean, 43 Vt. 337.

85. The defendant read in evidence certain portions of the plaintiff's testimony on a former trial. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have read all that he testified to at the same time and in connection with what had been read, which related to the same subject matter. Wright v. Williams, 47 Vt. 222.

86. In an action by husband and wife to recover for a personal injury to the wife, the defendant put in testimony that the husband, soon after the alleged injury and in the presence of his wife, told the witness that his wife's infirmity was caused by hard work in the sugar place in gathering and boiling sap. Held, that it was clearly admissible for the plaintiffs to prove by the same witness, and as part of the same conversation, that the wife denied her husband's statement, and declared that she had not gathered and boiled sap. Lindsey v. Danville, 45 Vt. 72.

87. Where a party who has heard a witness testify, admits the testimony to be true, he thereby makes that testimony evidence against him, not as independent evidence, but as explanatory of the admission, and, by reference, a part of it. State v. Gilbert, 36 Vt. 145.

88. Private memorandum. A private memorandum of a parol contract, made by one of the parties to the contract for his own use, being not of itself evidence of the contract against the other party, is not conclusive upon the party who made it: but is only his admission, subject to explanation. Stannard v. Smith, 40 Vt. 513.

89. Advancement. Declarations made at different times by an intestate, in substance, that he had given his son something handsome, and if he did well for him he should give him more; that he had held a writing, not a note, against his son, and had made him a present of it; that he once had claims against him, but had none then,—were held admissible as tending to prove the surrender by him to the son of a receipt evidencing an advancement, in the absence of evidence tending to show that he had ever given the son anything else, or had held any other writing or claim against him. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 47 Vt. 637.

90. Admission by town agent. The admission of a fact by a town agent, while executing his agency in defending a suit against the town, made at the time and place of trial, and to obviate the necessity of proof, was held admissible, on a subsequent trial, as evidence against the town of the fact. Burlington v. Calais, 1 Vt. 385. See 23 Vt. 130.

91. — by agent. In trover for a barber's chair against a hotel keeper, where the defendant denied that he had ever had the chair, W, testified, for the plaintiff, without objection, that before the demand made he had called at the hotel for the chair by the plaintiff's request, and, in the absence of the defendant, asked the defendant's clerk who had the general supervision and charge of the hotel, if the chair was there, and the clerk replied that it was. Held, that this testimony, having been received without objection, became legitimate evidence, and tended to prove that the chair was at the defendant's hotel when W called for it. Weeks v. Barron, 38 Vt. 420.

92. — by conduct of party. The plaintiff, an attorney, having argued a cause on trial at the suggestion of the counsel employed in it;—Held, that his subsequent assent to a proposal of such counsel to make application to his client to have him engage the plaintiff in the cause, was admissible in evidence against him, as tending to show what was his expectation as to being paid for the service already rendered. Briggs v. Georgia, 15 Vt. 61.

93. — in course of trial. At the trial, on appeal, of an action for an assault and battery, the defendant justified the assault as proper punishment by him as the plaintiff's school master. The plaintiff claimed that the punishment was excessive. Held, that evidence was admissible for the defendant, that on the justice trial the plaintiff did not claim that the punishment was excessive, but only that the defendant, under the circumstances, had no right to punish the plaintiff. Lander v. Seaver, 32 Vt. 114.

94. Any act or omission of a party, unnatural and inconsistent with what he claims to be true, may properly be weighed as evidence against him;—as when on a trial he calls a favorable witness who knows about a disputed fact, and examines him upon other matters, but omits to question him as to the disputed fact. Other instances given. Seward v. Garlin, 33 Vt. 583.

95. On a former trial of the cause, the defendant's counsel, in his presence, put the defense upon grounds wholly inconsistent with the defendant's present testimony. Held, that such fact was admissible in evidence. Nye v. Merriam, 35 Vt. 438.

96. In an action against a railway company for an injury received as a passenger, a witness for the plaintiff had testified to a particular defect in the track which he had observed both before and after the accident, upon examinations made in the presence of a section-master of the defendant. The defendant then introduced a witness, who saw the track only after the accident, and who materially contradicted the plaintiff's witness as to the condition of the track. The defendant omitted to introduce the section-master as a witness. The plaintiff was allowed then to prove that the section-master was accessible to the defendant, so as to be produced as a witness; and to urge to the jury and ask them to infer from these facts, that the account given by the plaintiff's witness was true. Held correct. Beattie v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 41 Vt. 275.

97. Where the original declaration, in an action of assumpsit, set forth with great particularity the facts upon which the defendant's liability was claimed to arise, and, after the entry of the suit in court, an amended count was filed, in which the same transaction, as set forth, was entirely different in its material facts;—Held, that the original count tended strongly to show, that the plaintiff first stated to his attorney the facts, in substance, as therein set forth, and tended strongly to disprove the facts set forth in the amended count, and to discredit the plaintiff's testimony that, before the original declaration was drawn, he stated to his attorney the same facts that are set forth in the amended count. Hotchkiss v. Ladd, 43 Vt. 345.

98. An affidavit, contradictory of the plaintiff's case, had been procured of the plaintiff, through the fraudulent solicitations and practices of the brother of the defendant, who was also his bail, and by the defendant's attorney. The fact that such affidavit had been given and the statements therein were made use of as a substantive ground of defense on the trial. Held, that this was equivalent in legal effect to the use of the affidavit in defense, and tended to connect the defendant with knowledge of and participation in the fraud of procuring the affidavit. Nash v. Doyle, 40 Vt. 96. 44 Vt. 145.

99. That a party sought by solicitations, money and threats to induce witnesses of the opposite party not to attend, was held admissible under the circumstances stated, Hebard, J., dissenting. Kirkaldie v. Paige, 17 Vt. 256.

100. The rule which permits a party to show that the other party has used means to induce the witnesses of the first party to absent themselves from court, does not apply to a witness who is himself a party and in interest, and not a mere nominal party. Pratt v. Battles, 34 Vt. 391.

101. Where a will was contested on the ground of undue influence employed by the sole legatee;—Held, that his false statements, knowingly made, as to the execution and contents of the will, were admissible for the contestants. Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398; and see Robinson v. Hutchinson, 31 Vt. 443.

102. A witness was summoned by the plaintiff, and attended the trial, but was discharged by him without testifying. The witness was afterwards called by the defendant and testified in the case. The plaintiff was afterwards inquired of on cross-examination, if he did not discharge the witness from further attendance because he apprehended that the witness would testify to a certain fact [stated], which made against the plaintiff's case. The question was objected to and excluded. Held correct. Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 122.

103. Explainable. In an action against principal and surety upon a note, the defense was payment by the principal. The plaintiff, claiming that this defense had but recently been conceived, was allowed to prove that the defendants, at a former term, had consented to a silent judgment and taken a review. The defendants were then allowed to prove, but only as an answer to such claim, that when the suit was first commenced, the principal told the surety that the note was paid, and that they acted on that supposition thereafter, and that the surety employed counsel at his own expense, and attended court personally from term to term to make defense, and that this was known to the plaintiff. Held, that this evidence for the defendant, thus limited, was properly admitted. Austin v. Bingham, 31 Vt. 577.

104. Admission by not objecting. Instance of acquiescence and assent to a claim, inferred from not objecting when informed of it. Willey v. Warden, 27 Vt. 655. See Vilas v. Downer, 21 Vt. 419.

105. On the question whether the charges of the plaintiff, a physician, were reasonable;—Held, that evidence was admissible that such charges were his usual rates for similar services, in connection with other proof, that such rates were known to the defendant. Paige v. Morgan, 28 Vt. 565.

106. "What a man says, under the surprise of a sudden and unexpected demand for money, ought to be construed with a good deal of strictness"—applied to language from which the recognition of a claim and promise to pay it were sought to be inferred. Brown v. Mudgett, 40 Vt. 68.

107. Silence of party. The mere silence of a party, under ordinary circumstances, when a claim is made upon him, or he is asked a question in regard to his claims or pretensions in reference to a pending or expected litigation, is no ground of presuming against him. Redfield, C. J., in McCann v. Hallock, 30 Vt. 235. Vail v. Strong, 10 Vt. 457. Gale v. Lincoln, 11 Vt. 152. Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 113. Hersey v. Barton, 23 Vt. 685.

108. Where a third person stated to one party to a contract what he had understood from the other party to be the terms of the trade, and the party replied that "he never told his trades;"—Held, that such reply was not an admission of the correctness of such statement, but rebutted all inference of an admission, and had no tendency to prove the contract. Vail v. Strong.

109. The statement by the plaintiff of the terms of a contract, to a third person, in the presence of one of several defendants, parties thereto, to which such defendant made no reply, was held not to be evidence of the terms of the contract. Gale v. Lincoln, 11 Vt. 152. 23 Vt. 687.

110. Where a claim is made for the mere purpose of drawing out evidence, or in the way of altercation, or, in short, unless the party asserting the claim does it with a view to ascertain the claim of the other, in order to know how to regulate his own conduct in the matter, and this is known to the other party, who remains silent and thereby leads his adversary astray, mere silence is no ground of inference against such other party. Redfield, C. J., in Matlocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 113.

111. But if upon a proper and bona fide inquiry made, the party inquired of consents to make any declarations upon the subject, he then makes all that is said to him on the occasion, and his silence as well as his answers, evidence. McCann v. Hallock, 30 Vt. 238.

112. To justify a presumption of an admission from the silence of a party when a statement, adverse to his interest, is made in his presence, the statement must not only be brought to his attention, but it must be such as to call for a reply. In this case, where the statement was not addressed to the party, but only made in his presence;—Held, that his silence afforded no presumption of assent to the statement. Hersey v. Barton, 23 Vt. 685. See Weeks v. Boynton, 37 Vt. 297.

113. Statements by a third person, made in a judicial proceeding, in the presence of a party, but not directed to him nor replied to, were held inadmissible as evidence against the party, the circumstances not calling for a reply. Brainard v. Buck, 25 Vt. 573.

114. The defendant was employed by the plaintiff and was his book-keeper. The plaintiff charged against him certain money lost through his negligence. This the defendant knew, but nothing was said about it between the parties. Held, that this was not evidence of an agreement to have these charges adjusted in the action of book account, the defendant denying his liability. Chase v. Spencer, 27 Vt. 412.

115. An auditor inquired of the plaintiff's attorney, in the presence of the defendant, if it was necessary to report copies of the accounts, and the attorney replied that, by the Revised Statutes, it was not. The defendant made no objection. Held, that his silence could not be construed as a waiver of this requirement of the law. Flower Brook Mfg. Co. v. Buck, 16 Vt. 290.

116. The defendant held by assignment a note which, by notice to the plaintiff, had become a perfected set-off to the plaintiff's account. The plaintiff afterwards assigned his account to A, and A notified the defendant thereof and demanded payment. The defendant made no express objection to paying, and did not claim to have any counter demand, except a book account, but did not promise to pay A. Held, that the defendant's silence as to the note was not a waiver or exclusion of his right to have it set off. Keyes v. Waters, 18 Vt. 479. See Redfield, J., in Barron v. Pettes, 18 Vt. 388. Otherwise, if he had promised to pay A. Stiles v. Farrar, 18 Vt. 444.

117. The fact that the owner of property attached often met the attaching officer and knew how he was keeping the property and did not complain, is not admissible in evidence against his claim to recover of the officer for negligence in keeping the property. Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57.

118. Letters unanswered, &c. Dictum. The mere fact that letters are received and remain unanswered, has no tendency to show an acquiescence of the party in the facts stated in them. Hill v. Pratt, 29 Vt. 119; Criticised, 31 Vt. 352.

119. The omission of a party to reply to statements in a letter about which he has knowledge, and which, if not true, he would naturally deny, and when he replies to other parts of the letter, is evidence tending to show that the statements so made and not denied are true. Fenno v. Weston, 31 Vt. 345, 352.

120. So, where there has been a correspondence between parties in regard to some subject matter, and one writes a letter to the other making statements in regard to such subject matter, of which the latter has knowledge, and which he would naturally deny, if not true, and he wholly omits to answer such letter, such silence is evidence tending to show the statements to be true. Redfield, C. J., Ib.

121. Still, all such evidence is of a lighter character than silence when the same facts are directly stated to the party. Ib.

122. Declaration in party's own favor—of claim. Where the defendant claimed that the plaintiff's intestate had lost a possessory right in lands by abandonment;—Held, that, to rebut this, declarations of the intestate made to a stranger applying to buy the land, which indicated a then claim to the land, were admissible. Perkins v. Blood, 36 Vt. 273.

123. Where the defence is that the plaintiff has abandoned his claim to property, he may prove his own sayings as to the property, to show that he had not so abandoned it; but no further. Noble v. Sylvestor, 42 Vt. 146.

124. Where one is in the enjoyment of a right—as of the use of water for a mill—what he may say indicating his claim of right is evidence in his behalf of his claim, but not of the truth of the facts stated, nor that he has the right claimed. Kimball v. Ladd, 42 Vt. 747.

125. —as to health, &c. A person's state of health or feeling, when material, may be proved by his statements made at the time in respect to them. State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380.

126. Where the bodily condition of a person at a certain time is in question, what that person said to his attending physician at such time, as to the nature, symptoms and effects of the malady he was then suffering from, is proper evidence for either party. Eari v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275. Hathaway v. National Life Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335.

127. In an action for personal injuries, the plaintiff was allowed, as tending to show their nature and extent, to prove by a physician who was called to examine him preparatory to being a witness on the trial, his statements, made during such examination, of his inability to move his arm in a certain direction, and the effect and pain produced by certain movements of his members. Held correct. Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591.

128. Private entry. In an action of assumpsit to recover for services as an attorney;—Held, that the plaintiff's pocket docket, on which he had entered merely the name of the case in which he acted as counsel, was not admissible as furnishing any evidence, of itself, of his right to charge for such services. Briggs v. Georgia, 15 Vt. 61.

129. Private resolution expressed. In an action against a town to recover for plaintiff's services, as a physician, in attending the town's pauper, the question was whether the contract made with one of the three overseers, and afterwards ratified by the others, was as the plaintiff, or as the defendant, claimed it to be. Held, that it was not admissible for the defendant to prove that the overseers, before making any contract with the plaintiff, agreed among themselves, that they would make such a contract as the defendant claimed, and none other. Edson v. Pawlet, 22 Vt. 291.

130. Subsequent declaration. On the question whether the defendant's act in cutting a tree upon the plaintiff's land was willful and malicious;—Held, that evidence offered by the defendant that, a short time after the cutting of the tree, he admitted to the plaintiff that he had cut the tree and did so because he thought he owned it, and claimed the land on which the tree grew by adverse possession, &c., was properly excluded; that a declaration so made after the trespass was committed was not admissible to show the motive of his act. Clark v. Boardman, 42 Vt. 667.

131. Subsequent transaction. The question being as to whether the parties made a particular contract, and the testimony of the parties being contradictory as to this;—Held, that a subsequent transaction of one of the parties with a third person, although consistent with the making of the contract as he claimed it, was not admissible in his favor as evidence that such contract had been made; that an inference from what occurred afterwards could not be drawn against the party, when he in no way participated in that transaction. Way v. Holton, 46 Vt. 184. Lyon v. Kidder, 48 Vt. 42.

132. Subsequent entry. Long after the rendering of services in the family of the deceased by his daughter, the deceased made an entry on a leaf of his account book that he had given her a great many things, &c., and that she had got well paid for her services, &c. Held, that this was not admissible as evidence against her claim presented against his estate—being a private entry not made in the usual course of business. Putnam v. Town, 34 Vt. 429.

133. Declarations by former owner or grantor. Where the defendant claimed that his liability was to a third person, as owner, to pay for certain property for which he had dealt with the plaintiff, certain letters from such third person to the plaintiff, accompanying the transaction and tending to show that the plaintiff was owner, were held admissible for the plaintiff. Mills v. Brownell, 3 Vt. 468.

134. The admission of the former holder and owner of a note, made while he was so the holder, that it was paid, was held admissible against an indorsee who became such after maturity of the note. Wheeler v. Walker, 12 Vt. 427.

135. Held (against argument of Bennett, J., contra), that the admissions of L, made while he was in possession of personal property, that it belonged to the plaintiff, were not admissible evidence against the sheriff who afterwards attached it as the property of L—L being still living, so that he might be called as a witness. Hines v. Soule, 14 Vt. 99. Overruled in Haywood Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29. Alger v. Andrews, 47 Vt. 238. See 25 Vt. 171, note.

136. In an action by a creditor against a sheriff for neglect to attach, as the debtor's, certain designated property then, and for 20 months then passed, in the possession of the debtor, the defense was that the property belonged to a third person, and was held by the debtor only by virtue of a conditional sale. The plaintiff then offered evidence that the debtor while so in possession had openly and publicly called the property his own, and that such third person knew of these declarations, and had himself said that he had sold the property to the debtor. Held, that this evidence was properly rejected. Redfield, J., dissenting. Deming v. Lull, 17 Vt. 398. But see 135, supra, contra.

137. Where the owner of a mortgage note had transferred it as a collateral security, but had redeemed it and assigned it after due to another person;—Held, that his admission that the note was paid, made while the note was so held as collateral security, was original evidence, against the last assignee, of the fact of payment. Miller v. Bingham, 29 Vt. 82.

138. Admissions of a party in possession of a chattel, against his title to it, are evidence in favor of a party making claim according to such admission, in a suit against an officer attaching the chattel as the property of the party in possession. This is on the ground of privity between the officer and the defendant in the attachment, or successive relationship, to the same rights of property. Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29, overruling Hines v. Soule, 14 Vt. 99.

139. The declarations of a party against his own title and interest in property then in his possession, are evidence against the party who claims from him by subsequently acquired title. Ib. Downs v. Belden, 46 Vt. 674. Miller v. Bingham, 29 Vt. 82. Alger v. Andrews, 47 Vt. 238.

140. Where the defendant, a savings bank, claimed in defense a right to retain, as the property of A, the money sued for;—Held, that the plaintiff could show against the defendant anything which he might against A, if he were the actual defendant,—as A's declaration, &c.,—and that without calling A as a witness. Davis v. Windsor Savings Bank, 48 Vt. 532.

141. The declarations of a person made while in possession of a farm and stock, and which related only to the relations which he sustained to the property in question, whether as owner or mere conditional purchaser, were held to be evidence against the defendant,—a purchaser from him of the stock—in favor of the plaintiff,—the original conditional vendor—as coming from one having privity of estate with the defendant. Bucklin v. Beals, 38 Vt. 653.

142. Declarations of a deceased person against his interest or right are evidence against those who claim in his interest or right. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 47 Vt. 637.

143. Declarations made after transfer. The declarations of the vendor of personal property against the title of his vendee, made after the alleged sale, are not evidence against the vendee, although the vendor was then in possession of the property. Ellis v. Howard, 17 Vt. 330. 41 Vt. 484.

144. After one, by conveyance or assignment, has parted with his interest in any property, right or chose in action, no declarations or admissions of his, made afterwards, although a party of record in the action, are evidence as against his grantee or assignee. Bullard v. Billings, 2 Vt. 309. Brackett v. Wait, 6 Vt. 411. Edgell v. Bennett, 7 Vt. 534. Sargeant v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 371. 31 Vt. 447. Hough v. Barton, 20 Vt. 455. Halloran v. Whitcomb, 43 Vt. 306. Washburn v. Ramsdell, 17 Vt. 299. Leland v. Farnham, 25 Vt. 553. Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29.

145. —after action commenced. The declaration of a former occupant of lands, made after the commencement of an ejectment against his grantee, that his own adverse possession commenced within fifteen years, was held not admissible against the defendant. Shepherd v. Hayes, 16 Vt. 436.

146. Former owner living. The declarations of A, the former owner of land, and now living, that his grantor was insane when he conveyed, are not evidence against the grantee of A by deed recorded, though made while A was in possession under his deed. Carpenter v. Hollister, 13 Vt. 552.

147. Declarations disconnected from possession. Where the question on trial was as to the true division line between the lands of the parties;—Held, that the declarations of a former owner, now living, as to where the line was, which declarations were not connected with the question of occupation, or acquiescence, or of claim while in possession, were not evidence on behalf of his grantee. Wood v. Willard, 36 Vt. 82.

148. By whom provable. The question being as to the acquiescence in a certain divisional line;—Held that the admission of a former occupant of the land, whether as tenant or proprietor, and made while so occupying, that that was the line, was evidence of such acquiescence as against the party who claimed from him; and that such admission could be proved by any other witness, as well as by the person who made it. Beecher v. Parmele, 9 Vt. 352. 17 Vt. 403.

149. Other cases. The claim of the former owner of a tract of land of which the defendant's land was a part, as to the boundary line of the tract, is admissible against the defendant. Davis v. Judge, 44 Vt. 500. Hale v. Rich, 48 Vt. 217.

150. The declarations of a party made upon a lot of which he was in partial possession, stating under what claim he held, were held admissible as evidence in chief against the defendant who claimed through such party by a subsequent arrangement. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

151. Husband. The declarations of a husband in possession of land in right of his wife, tending to qualify such possession and to show it not adverse but subordinate to the right of another, are evidence against one who makes claim derived from such possession. Day v. Wilder, 47 Vt. 533.

152. Persons acting together. In an action for a conspiracy, the acts or speeches of an alleged particeps will not be admitted in evidence to the jury, until a privity between him and the defendant is first shown to the satisfaction of the court. Windsor v. Robbins, 2 Tyl. 1.

153. Where several persons are proved to have combined together to do an illegal act, or to commit a crime, any act of any one of them, done in pursuance of the original concerted plan and in reference to and in furtherance of the common object, is evidence against the others. Their declarations stand upon the same ground as their acts. Aldis, J., in State v. Thibau, 30 Vt. 105.

154. Where evidence is given showing collusion, combination and co-operation between parties for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose, it is competent to give evidence of what either party says in connection with acts in furtherance of that common purpose, and it will operate against either of the colluding parties. Barrett, J., in Jenne v. Joslyn, 41 Vt. 484.

155. But if the declarations are merely narrative, the relation of a past transaction, and not one in furtherance of the illegal act; they are not evidence against others who were not present when they were made. So held in State v. Thibau, 30 Vt. 100.

V. HEARSAY.

1. In general.

156. The statements of third persons out of court, who are still living, although made against their interest, are not, except in special cases, admissible in evidence,—much less their opinions. Davis v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 178.

157. It is no reason for admitting in evidence the declarations of a third person, that such person has become, or is, incapacitated as a witness. Churchill v. Smith, 16 Vt. 560.

158. What a witness, who is not a party, states out of court, is not evidence of the fact stated. Law v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 425.

159. In an action to recover for the support of a pauper, the declaration of the husband of the pauper as to his pecuniary ability is not admissible as evidence of the fact. St. Johnsbury v. Waterford, 15 Vt. 692.

160. The question being whether a purchase on execution sale was collusive and fraudulent as between the purchaser, who was the execution creditor, and the debtor;—Held, that a declaration of the sheriff, who had taken and advertised the property, to his deputy who was about to sell it, that no one would be present at the sale but the execution creditor, was not admissible in evidence against the purchaser. Mazham v. Place, 46 Vt. 434.

161. A witness testifying that he told another a certain thing is not stating that the fact was so, and that he personally knew the fact. Danville v. Wheelock, 47 Vt. 57.

162. The question was whether the defendant was the lawful widow of J, it being claimed that E, to whom she had been married, was living when she married J. To support this claim, evidence was offered of the declarations of the deceased, made after such second marriage, that E was alive and he had met him;—also certain declarations of the parents of the deceased as to what time the deceased and the defendant had lived together. Held to be hearsay, and not admissible. Stevens v. Joyal, 48 Vt. 291.

163. — to identify an occasion. It is admissible to prove what a party, or a third person, said in connection with a current transaction, for the purpose of identifying the particular occasion, or date. Hill v. North, 34 Vt. 604. See Ross v. Bank of Burlington, 1 Aik. 43.

2. Declarations of deceased persons.

164. — respecting lands. Declarations of deceased persons in relation to the ancient course of water, may be given in evidence. Pettibone v. Rose, Brayt. 77.

165. The declarations of deceased persons who had actual knowledge as to the boundaries of lands, whether they concern public or private rights, or who, from their connection with the property, or their situation and experience in regard to such boundaries and the surveys thereof, had peculiar means of knowledge, so that it may be fairly inferred that they had actual knowledge of the same, made at a time when they had no interest to misrepresent, although not wholly disinterested in the subject, and made when upon or in the immediate vicinity of the boundary, and pointing it out, may be received as to the location of such boundary, when, from lapse of time, there is no reasonable probability that evidence can be obtained from those who had actual knowledge on the subject. Wood v. Willard, 37 Vt. 377. Child v. Kingsbury, 46 Vt. 47.

166. Such declarations are admissible, though not made upon the land, nor in its immediate vicinity, nor in connection with showing or pointing out the boundary. Powers v. Silsby, 41 Vt. 288.

167. One of the conditions upon which the declarations of deceased persons as to boundary lines and monuments are admissible in evidence is, that it shall be shown that they had knowledge of the line, marks, &c., relied on, at the time of the saying to be proved. But such knowledge is not to be proved by what was said, but is to be proved by other means. Id. Hadley v. Howe, 46 Vt. 142. Miller v. Wood, 44 Vt. 378.

168. Business entries, &c. On a trial in 1867, the issue was as to whether one Thomas, now deceased, resided in Troy in the year 1829. As tending to prove this, among other evidence, an account book of one Hovey, who resided in Troy at that date, now deceased, was introduced without objection, on which was an account with said Thomas, debt and credit, running through the year 1829, and no question was made but that the accounts were true and genuine, representing actual transactions, and made at the time of the transactions and dates. The accounts were of such character as to indicate, if true, that Thomas then resided in the near vicinity of Hovey. The court refused the request to charge that the book had no tendency to prove the issue, and was not proper to be considered for that purpose; but charged, that the jury were at liberty to consider this with the other evidence, as bearing on the place of Thomas's residence in 1829. Held correct. Cavendish v. Troy, 41 Vt. 99; and see Derby v. Salem, 30 Vt. 722.

169. For the purpose of proving the residence of a person now deceased, writs brought in his name and judgments thereon, in which writs he was set up as of a particular town and the suits were made returnable there and the defendants therein were set up as of a different town, were held admissible in evidence. Cavendish v. Troy.

170. On a trial for murder, for the purpose of identifying a watch found with the prisoner as the watch of the murdered person, the entries made on his book in regular course of business, by a jeweller, since deceased, with whom the watch had been on two occasions left by the murdered person for repairs, giving a description of the watch by its number, name of maker and name of owner, &c., were held admissible in evidence. State v. Phair, 48 Vt. 366.

3. Recital in deed.

171. Recent deed. Where a deed of recent date described the grantors as heirs of a certain person;—Held, that the fact of heirship was not proved by such recital; that this amounted at most to a mere claim of heirship. Potter v. Washburn, 13 Vt. 558.

172. Ancient deed. The plaintiff in trespass made title through one Smith, deceased, under an ancient deed of several lots of land from persons who described themselves therein as the widow and heirs of said Smith. The grantee in that deed had conveyed different lots of the same lands to different persons, who had continued for thirty or forty years in quiet possession. Held, that the recital in the ancient deed, in connection with the conveyances and possessions under it, was evidence to prove that the grantors in that deed were in truth the widow and heirs of Smith. Bell v. Barron, 14 Vt. 307.

173. Deed of third party. In trespass, involving a question of boundary, the plaintiff claimed the premises as part of "the Pierce farm." Held, that a deed between other parties of adjoining lands, in which they were described as bounded "North on the Pierce farm," was not evidence; that such description was but a declaration of the grantor, who was not shown to have deceased, though the deed was 42 years old. Oatman v. Andrew, 43 Vt. 466.

4. Reputation.

174. As to solvency. One's general reputation as to solvency or insolvency is admissible as evidence of the fact. Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 414. Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 87. 28 Vt. 762.

175. Marriage. In all civil actions, except for crim con., a marriage may be proved by reputation and cohabitation. Northfield v. Vershire, 33 Vt. 110.

176. Pedigree. Held, that pedigree may be proved by near relatives from reputation in the family—e. g., who was the witness's father and grandfather, and the fact and date of the death of the grandfather, as having occurred sixty-six years ago, and before the birth of the witness. Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465.

177. Death. A witness testified that her husband died two years ago; that she was not with him when he died, nor was present at the funeral, and had no personal knowledge of his death; that she only knew this from his folks telling her and writing her. Held competent evidence to prove such death. Mason v. Fuller, 45 Vt. 29.

178. State of market. The knowledge of a party of the general course of business in a particular trade, which he derives from being engaged in that trade, although partly derived from information from others in the course of such business, is of that general character that renders it competent evidence—as, of the state of the market. King v. Woodbridge, 34 Vt. 565. Laurent v. Vaughn, 30 Vt. 90;—the loss on sales, derived from statements of account of the commission merchant. Draper v. Austin, 46 Vt. 215.

VI. DYING DECLARATIONS.

179. Dying declarations, to be admissible in evidence as such, must have been made under the full and firm belief of near and approaching death. State v. Center, 35 Vt. 378.

180. Whether dying declarations are made under such full and firm belief of near and approaching death as to be admissible in evidence, is a question for the court to decide. It is not enough that the evidence tends that way, and so admit them and leave it to the jury to say whether they will, or will not, regard them; but the court is to be satisfied in the first instance that they were so made as to be admissible. Id. State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380.

181. The court below having decided that the declarations were not so made as to be admissible as evidence, that decision is conclusive. Redfield, C. J., in State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 404.

182. At the time of making declarations, claimed to be dying declarations, the declarant said "she knew she should die," but said further that "if she lived to get well she would never go to C's again." At that time neither her physician, nor others, thought her dangerously sick. Held, that the declarations were not admissible. State v. Center, 35 Vt. 378.

183. All vague and indefinite expressions, all language that does not distinctly point to the cause of death, and its attending circumstances, but requires to be aided by inference or supposition in order to establish facts tending to criminate the respondent, should be held inadmissible as dying declarations. Ib.

184. The interval of six days between the making of the declaration, and the death, is not a conclusive objection to their admission as dying declarations. Ib.

185. In order to make dying declarations admissible, it is not necessary that the declarant should state everything which constituted the res gestæ of the subject of his statement, but it is necessary that his statement of any given fact should be a full expression of all he intended to say, as conveying his meaning as to such fact. State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308.

VII. TESTIMONY OF FORMER WITNESS.

186. Evidence of what a deceased witness testified to on a former trial of the same cause is admissible, although he was not sworn, where the party now objecting consented to his testifying without being sworn. Wheeler v. Walker, 12 Vt. 427.

187. The testimony given by a witness before the committing magistrate may be given in evidence on the trial of an indictment in the same case, when such witness has deceased. State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 658.

188. The defendant suffered judgment by default, without appearance, after legal notice of the suit, and the clerk, under the rules, assessed the damages without other notice to the defendant, and in his absence. At a subsequent term the default was stricken off, and the case brought forward for trial. Held, that on trial of the merits, the plaintiff could reproduce the testimony given before the clerk on such assessment, by a witness who had since then deceased. Deming v. Chase, 48 Vt. 382.

189. Whenever it becomes necessary to prove the testimony of a witness given on a former trial, it is not necessary that the witness called should be able to give the precise language of the former witness's testimony, but it is sufficient if he is able to relate, and does relate, the substance of that testimony. State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 658. Marsh v. Jones, 21 Vt.

382. Downer v. Rowell, 24 Vt. 346. Whiteher v. Morey, 39 Vt. 459. Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275.

190. A witness was allowed to testify to the testimony given on a former trial by a witness since deceased, although he could not recollect the testimony given on cross-examination, but added, that if the testimony on cross-examination had altered that in chief, he thought he should recollect it. Held correct. Williams v. Willard, 23 Vt. 369.

191. The testimony given by a witness on a former trial may be proved from the judge's notes, or from notes taken by any other person who will swear to their accuracy, or may be proved by any person who will swear from his memory to its having been given. Glass v. Beach, 5 Vt. 172. Johnson v. Powers, 40 Vt. 611. Marsh v. Jones, 21 Vt. 383. Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275.

192. The testimony given by a witness on a former trial may be proved by reading the minutes taken of such testimony, which are proved to be "full, and taken with substantial accuracy." Whiteher v. Morey, 39 Vt. 459—or from a copy of the same, the original being lost. Ib.

193. In such case, the consideration that the witness cannot swear from memory, is not, at present, regarded as important. All that is required is, that the witness shall be able to state, that the memorandum is correct. He may then read it, as well as repeat it. The old rule that the witness must be able to swear from memory, is now pretty much exploded. Downer v. Rowell, 24 Vt. 343. 39 Vt. 472. Johnson v. Powers, 40 Vt. 611.

194. If a witness at one trial give testimony which includes irrelevant and incompetent matter, though no objection be then taken thereto, it is error, on a subsequent trial and after the death of such witness, to read the entire minutes, including such irrelevant and incompetent matter, if the admission of such part be objected to. Willard v. Goodenough, 30 Vt. 398.

VIII. RES GESTÆ.

195. Where declarations are sought to be admitted as part of the res gestæ, the res gestæ cannot be proved by declarations. Barnum v. Hackett, 35 Vt. 77.

196. Declarations concurrent with the act. The declarations of the owner of a package of bank bills, which was taken by him to be delivered and was delivered by him on board a steamer on Lake Champlain for transmission, and which, with the boat, was destroyed by fire, which declarations accompanied and explained his actions, were held admissible in his favor as part of the res gestæ, to prove the character of such bills and the amount,—as that the package contained "$800 Burlington Bank bills." Ross v. Bank of Burlington, 1 Aik. 43. 34 Vt. 616.

197. Declarations of the owner of a farm made in the presence of the occupant, and while at work for the occupant in carrying it on, and assented to by the occupant at the time, and made "in connection with some act of the owner in carrying on the farm," stating that the occupant was carrying on the farm upon shares, or at the halves, were held admissible for the occupant to prove that fact, in his action against an officer for attaching and selling the farm products as wholly the property of the owner;—that they were admissible, either as showing a mutual recognition by the owner and occupant of the terms of the occupancy, or as declarations of the owner constituting part of the res gesta. White v. Morton, 22 Vt. 15.

198. The declarations of a party paying money, made at the time of payment, showing the character and object of the payment, its application or appropriation, are part of the res gesta and admissible evidence for the party. Bank of Woodstock v. Clark, 25 Vt. 308.

199. A transaction cannot be considered as ended, so long as, before the parties to it have separated, anything, according to the usual course of business, remains to be done in regard to it—as, in this case, the giving of a receipt on the payment of money; and, until thus ended, the declarations of the parties are evidence, as being of the res gesta. Fifield v. Richardson, 34 Vt. 410.

200. Where a party's purpose in doing a certain act is material and the act is equivocal, but is relied upon as evidence against him, he may show his own declarations, made while setting about to do the act, and as part of his conduct at the time of entering upon it, which give character to it as indicating his purpose, though made in the absence of the other party. Danforth v. Streeter, 28 Vt. 490.

201. The declarations of a deceased person stating the purpose for which she left home and went to the respondent's [as, to have an abortion effected upon her], and made at the time of her so starting from home, are part of the res gesta and admissible in evidence. State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380.

202. The plaintiff and respondent each claimed to be the owner of certain cattle;—the plaintiff claiming that W bought them for him, as his agent, and with his money;—the defendant claiming that W bought the cattle for himself, with his own money, and sold them to the defendant. The plaintiff gave evidence that W and P, an agent of the plaintiff, had by plaintiff's direction driven these with other cattle admitted to be the plaintiff's, to a pasture hired by the plaintiff and W, and had by his direction branded all the cattle with the mark of the owner of the pasture. W had testified that they were so marked to identify them as belonging to that pasture, in case they should stray. Held, that the declaration of W to P and others, on the occasion of the marking, that these cattle were his and the others were the plaintiff's, was admissible as characterizing the act done, and tending to rebut the inference to be drawn in favor of the plaintiff from the acts proved; as also to strengthen the testimony of W as to the purpose of the marking. Eddy v. Davis, 34 Vt. 209.

203. The complainant in a bastardy prosecution admitted, on cross-examination, that since the birth of her child and the swearing to her complaint, she had admitted that the child was not begotten by the defendant, but by one W, and that she made an affidavit to that effect. On re examination, she testified that she was induced so to do by certain solicitations of the defendant, which she detailed with the circumstances. Held, that as part of the res gesta, it was competent for her to state what she said when so first solicited—as that she then refused to swear the child on W, and stated that the child was not his, but was the child of the defendant. Nash v. Doyle, 40 Vt. 96.

204. In trover for a yoke of oxen, the plaintiff claimed title, as a conditional vendor to H. The defendant claimed them by purchase from H, and that the plaintiff's sale to H was absolute. The defendant introduced a composition deed, which was signed by the plaintiff and other creditors of H, and was made after his sale of the oxen to the defendant, but which never became operative, and claimed that this tended to show that the plaintiff had no lien on the oxen, otherwise he would not have signed the deed. Held, that to rebut such inference, the plaintiff might show that at the time of signing he said he had a claim on the oxen for the price he sold them at, and that he looked to the defendant for the oxen; and that the deed did not include this claim, but referred to another claim against H. Pollard v. Bates, 45 Vt. 506.

205. Declarations after the act. The declarations of a party in his own favor are only admitted when concurrent with an act or transaction of his, and as a part of the act or transaction itself, and to characterize the act or transaction, which, alone and unexplained, might be equivocal in its character. If the act and the declaration are not concurrent, and the act is finished and past before the declaration is made, then it becomes a mere narrative of a past transaction, and is inadmissible, and the length of time that intervenes is not important. Poland, C. J., in Worden v. Powers, 37 Vt. 619.

206. As, where the defendant, "soon after" parting with the plaintiff, told a witness that he had met the plaintiff and what had transpired between them;—Held inadmissible. Id.

207. The declarations of a party injured when no one was present, are not evidence to show the manner in which the injury occurred, however nearly contemporaneous with the occurrence. Such declarations do not tend to characterize the transaction, and are, by consequence, no part of it, and cannot be admitted as such. State v. Davidson, 30 Vt. 377.

208. Mother and son were riding together upon a highway, the son driving, when an accident happened by which the mother was thrown to the ground and injured. Immediately, as soon as witnesses could go about six rods, and while the mother yet lay upon the ground and the son stood holding the horse right near her, the son told what caused the accident. Held, in an action by the mother, that such declarations were mere hearsay, and not admissible against her as part of the res gesta. Downer v. Stratford, 47 Vt. 579.

209. A statement made by the deceased, about two minutes after a shooting affray and some eleven rods distant from the scene of it, "He [the prisoner] shot me before I touched him," was held not admissible against the prisoner as a part of the res gesta. State v. Carlton, 48 Vt. 636.

210. — before the act. The question being whether certain notes were in existence previous to the date of a certain mortgage, the declarations of a party, made the day previous to such date, that he had the notes in his possession and must secure them, &c., were held not admissible in his favor. Holbrook v. Murray, 20 Vt. 525.

211. — not connected with the act. The declarations of a party expressing the terms on which he was carrying on a certain farm, made while he was purchasing seed corn, and two miles distant from the farm, and like declarations, while four miles distant from the farm, made in connection with his saying that he had cut some good hay on the farm, &c., were held not admissible in his favor. Elkins v. Hamilton, 20 Vt. 627.

212. The question being, whether the plaintiff had paid the defendant certain bills included in an account before that time rendered by the plaintiff in the probate court, on settlement of his account, as guardian, with the estate of his ward;—Held, that the plaintiff's declarations and claims made to an agent assisting him in drawing up such guardian's account, that he had paid such bills, were no part of the res gesta and were not evidence for him to prove the fact of payment. Burrows v. Stevens, 39 Vt. 378.

IX. OPINION; PURPOSE; INTENT.

213. Opinion. As a general rule, the opinions of witnesses, not having some peculiar skill or professional knowledge, are not admissible as evidence, although derived from the witness's personal observation, and sought to be given in evidence in connection with the facts upon which they are founded and as derived from them. There are some exceptions—as questions of sanity, value, height, distance, size and appearance of objects, &c. Crane v. Northfield, 33 Vt. 124. Oakes v. Weston, 45 Vt. 430.

214. The general rule is, that a witness must state facts, and not opinion; but this is not a universal rule, nor are the exceptions to the rule confined to experts in matters of science, art or skill. Where the witness has had the means of personal observation, and the facts and circumstances which lead the mind of the witness to a conclusion, are incapable of being described so as to enable any one, but the observer himself, to form an intelligent conclusion from them, the witness is often allowed to add his opinion, or the conclusion of his own mind. Peck, J. Cavendish v. Troy, 41 Vt. 108.

215. Where the facts are of such a character as to be incapable of being presented, with their proper force, to any one but the observer himself, so as to enable the triers to draw a correct or intelligent conclusion from them, without the aid of the judgment or opinion of the witness who had the benefit of personal observation, he is allowed, to a certain extent, to add his conclusion, judgment, or opinion. Thus, a witness who had examined certain gullies in a highway was allowed to answer: "I should think that they had been there, from their appearance, for several days." Bates v. Sharon, 45 Vt. 474; and see Redfield, J., in Smith v. Miles, 15 Vt. 249.

216. After a witness has stated his means of personal observation and knowledge as to a disputed fact, it is not necessarily error to allow him to state, that it could not have occurred, or that he thinks it could not have occurred, without his observing or knowing it. Cavendish v. Troy, 41 Vt. 99.

217. A witness who had examined a highway at the place of an accident, and made some partial measurements of its width, after testifying to its width and the width of different kinds of carriages used on highways, was allowed to testify that, in his opinion, the road was not wide enough at that place to allow two team wagons to pass each other. Held, that this was simply the opinion of the witness as to the width of the highway, and not as to its sufficiency, and was admissible;—like opinion as to distance, size, height, value, velocity, &c. Fulsome v. Concord, 46 Vt. 135.

218. A witness, not a professional man, may give his opinion touching the insanity of a party, in connection with the facts upon which it is founded and as derived from them; but not upon facts proved by other witnesses. Morse v. Crawford, 17 Vt. 499. 35 Vt. 415. Crane v. Crane, 33 Vt. 15.

219. Nor is such opinion rendered inadmissible by the fact that it was not formed at the time the observed facts occurred. Hathaway v. National Life Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335.

220. The opinion of a competent witness was allowed as evidence of the additional amount of work which a saw mill would have done between certain dates, if the wheels and gearing had been constructed in a workmanlike manner, as a basis for estimating damages in an action for not so repairing the mill. Clifford v. Richardson, 18 Vt. 620. 33 Vt. 581. 41 Vt. 108.

221. The opinions of witnesses who were acquainted with the business and running of a particular railroad under a lessee, and with its expenses both before and after it was put into the possession of a receiver, were held admissible to prove the value of such use to the lessee during the period that he was so deprived of possession. Sturgis v. Knapp, 33 Vt. 486.

222. A witness having specified and stated the value of all the property of A, real and personal, as far as he was able, and testified that he knew of no other property of A, was then asked: "From your knowledge of the property of A, what do you think he was worth?" Held, that as his answer would be but a summing up of his previous statements, it was in the discretion of the court to admit or exclude it, and that it was not error to exclude it. Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 414.

223. It is not error to admit the opinions of witnesses in like cases. Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 87. Sherman v. Blodgett, 28 Vt. 149. Richardson v. Hitchcock, 28 Vt. 757.

224. A witness having testified that he could not describe the condition of a bridge at a particular date, was asked to compare its then condition with its condition three years afterwards. The court excluded the inquiry. Held, not error. Stanton v. Proprietors of Haverhill Bridge, 47 Vt. 172.

225. Where all the pertinent facts can be sufficiently detailed and described, and where the triers are supposed to be able to form correct conclusions without the aid of opinion, or judgment from others, no exception to the rule of excluding the opinion of the witness is allowed. Royce, J., in Clifford v. Richardson, 18 Vt. 626.

226. The opinions of witnesses as to the sufficiency of a highway are not admissible. Lester v. Pittsford, 7 Vt. 158. Crane v. Northfield, 38 Vt. 124.

227. "Due course of business"—"in good faith"—these are matters of opinion or conclusions of the witness and not admissible. Clough

v. Patrick, 37 Vt. 421. National Bank v. Isham, 48 Vt. 590.

228. In an action for negligently setting fires to brush upon the defendant's land, which fires spread over the plaintiff's land, certain farmers, who were acquainted with the clearing of land by burning, and were present at the fires, were witnesses for the defendant, and described, as well as they could, the position of the fires and the direction and force of the wind. Held, that their opinions that it was a suitable and safe time for the setting of such fires, were not admissible in evidence. Fraser v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 409.

229. The question at issue was whether the words of an indorsement upon a note were twenty-five or seventy-five dollars. Held, that it was not competent to prove by a witness, not an expert, that upon taking a previous inventory of this and other notes, he called and read the indorsement as twenty-five dollars. This is but opinion. Willard v. Goodenough, 30 Vt. 393.

230. In case for injury to the plaintiff's horse, occasioned by the defendant's overloading and overtasking it in drawing a load of ashes with it and another horse from R to C, certain witnesses for the plaintiff testified that they drew ashes in company with the defendant that day; they testified to the weight of the defendant's load, the condition of the road, the horses, the wagon, and that they had been accustomed to teaming and had drawn ashes from the same place a few days before over the same road. The plaintiff then proposed to these witnesses the question: "Whether, in their opinion, the defendant's horses were unreasonably or improperly loaded, and what would be a reasonable load for that span of horses, with that wagon, and the condition of the going as it then was?" The court excluded the question. Held correct. Oakes v. Weston, 45 Vt. 430.

231. The opinion of a witness as to the future net profits from the running of a railroad, is too uncertain and remote to be received as evidence of the pecuniary responsibility of the company five years before. Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 414.

232. Experts. Where mere opinion is required upon a given state of facts, not observed and testified to by the witness, that opinion is to be derived from professional men. Lester v. Pittsford, 7 Vt. 158. 35 Vt. 415. Morse v. Crawford, 17 Vt. 499.

233. Physicians and surgeons of practice and experience are experts, and their opinions are admissible in evidence upon questions that are strictly and legitimately embraced in their profession and practice; and it is not necessary that a witness of this class should have made the particular disease in question,—as insanity,

—a specialty, to make his testimony, as that of an expert, admissible. Hathaway v. National Life Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335.

234. An expert cannot be asked his opinion on a state of facts appearing upon the minutes of testimony taken by the counsel calling him, where he has not heard all the testimony. Thayer v. Davis, 38 Vt. 163.

235. A consulting physician testified, as an expert, that the testator was affected with a softening of the brain; that this opinion was founded upon a personal examination, and upon what he was told, not in the testator's presence, by the attending physician, since deceased—mainly upon the latter. Held, that it was error to admit the witness's opinion based upon such information of the attending physician. Wetherbee v. Wetherbee, 38 Vt. 454.

236. A medical witness, who has heard the testimony, may give his opinion as to the sanity or insanity of a party as indicated by any given state of facts, so long as such facts are warranted by the evidence and are not conflicting. But where the facts upon one side conflict with facts upon the other, they ought not to be incorporated in one question, but the attention of the witness should be called to their opposing tendencies, and if his skill and knowledge can furnish the explanation which harmonizes them, he is at liberty to state it. But he is not to decide upon the evidence, or settle in his mind disputed facts, or give his opinion as to the general merits of the case. Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398.

237. Hypothetical questions may be put to an expert, where the hypothesis supposes a state of facts proved, or which may be fairly claimed to be proved by the evidence of other witnesses. Id. Hathaway v. Nat. Life Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335. Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 122.

238. A woman who had had experience as a nurse at child-births and, as such, had attended at premature births, was allowed to give her opinion, as an expert, that the birth of the child in the case in question, and where she was in attendance, was premature. Held correct. Mason v. Fuller, 45 Vt. 29.

239. A witness, familiar with the operation of the latch-needle in his knitting machine, was allowed to exhibit the working of his machine to the jury and by that means to explain why, in his opinion, a spring-needle could not take the place of the latch-needle, although he had no experience in the use of the spring-needle, or knowledge of its operation. Held, not error. James v. Hodsdon, 47 Vt. 127.

240. One having experience in floating logs in a certain stream and past a particular dam, was allowed to testify his opinion as to the proper manner of there floating them. Held correct. Dean v. McLean, 48 Vt. 412.

241. Mutual purpose. In an action against a steamboat company as common carriers for the loss of a package of bank bills delivered to the captain for carriage, the witness who delivered the package was inquired of by the party calling him, to whom he intended to give the credit; and answered, that he intrusted the money to the captain in his official capacity, and not in his private capacity. Held, that, although probably harmless, this testimony was not strictly admissible. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Champlain Tr. Co., 23 Vt. 186.

242. Understanding. An agent who had made a purchase for the defendant, testified to his own "understanding" of the contract as to a credit, and that he was confident the other party so "understood" it. Held, that the first part was admissible evidence, but that the second was not. Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123.

243. Intent. Where the intent or mental purpose of a party is a fact material to be proved, and such party is a witness, he may testify directly what was his intent—as in case of domicile. Hulett v. Hulett, 37 Vt. 581;—intent to return to an inn as a guest. McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316.

244. In trover for a yoke of oxen, the plaintiff claimed title as conditional vendor thereof to one H, who sold them to the defendant. The defendant claimed that the plaintiff's sale to H was absolute. After the defendant's purchase H failed, owing the plaintiff a small sum besides the debt for the oxen. Many of the creditors of H sued him and attached his property, which the plaintiff knew, but he did not sue. Held, that, as tending to show that the plaintiff then supposed he had retained a lien upon the oxen, and that his conduct then was consistent with his claim on trial, it was competent for him to testify why he did not sue and attach with the other creditors,—as, that he forbore because he had such lien, and preferred to run his chance of getting his pay for the small debt to bringing a suit for it. Pollard v. Bates, 45 Vt. 506.

X. HANDWRITING—ATTESTING WITNESS.

245. The hearing of a letter read, purporting to have been written by A, is no evidence that A wrote it. Johnson v. Bolton, 43 Vt. 303.

246. Competency of witness. One who had never seen a party write, nor had corresponded with him, nor been in such business relations with him as to have knowledge of his signature, but had only seen what purported to be his signature, was held incompetent to testify to such signature. National Union Bank v. Marsh, 46 Vt. 443.

247. In order that one should be competent as a witness to prove the handwriting of a paper not produced, he should have had such knowledge of the handwriting, at the time he saw the paper, as to have formed some opinion of its genuineness. Guyette v. Bolton, 46 Vt. 228.

248. Comparison. Proof of handwriting may be made by comparison of hands. Gifford v. Ford, 5 Vt. 532.

249. Documents proved to be genuine, though not in evidence except for the purpose of comparison, may go to the jury for this purpose. Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 256. State v. Ward, 39 Vt. 225.

250. The genuineness of the document which goes to the jury for the purpose of comparing the contested document with it, must either be admitted, or else be established by clear, direct and positive testimony. Unless this is in the first instance done, the testimony should, for obvious reasons, be excluded. Id.

251. Although the court has decided that the writing offered as a standard of comparison is genuine, still it is the right and the duty of the jury to judge for themselves in respect to the proof of its genuineness; and they should weigh the testimony by the same rule, and require the same measure of proof that they would require in respect to any other essential point in the case. State v. Ward.

252. In order to prove the genuineness of the signature to a marriage certificate purporting to have been signed by Benjamin Jay, a justice of the peace of Scranton, Pennsylvania, the witness, not knowing any such person, wrote a letter directed to that address and received a reply, purporting to be signed by Benjamin Jay. Held, that there was no such proof, if any at all, that Benjamin Jay signed the letter, as to justify setting that signature up as a standard by which to judge, on a comparison of handwriting, of the genuineness of the signature of the certificate. By Peck, J.; The genuineness of the standard with which the disputed signature is to be compared, must be either admitted, or directly and very clearly proved. State v. Horn, 43 Vt. 20.

253. The only evidence to prove that the defendant signed the note in suit was that of the defendant himself, who, being called by the plaintiff, and shown the signature only, and asked if it was his writing, answered: "It might be and might not be. It looks some like my handwriting; it might be my writing, and it might be some imitation. It looks like my writing; I should think it was." On cross-examination, on being shown the whole note, he testified: "I never signed any such paper." Held, that it was not error for the court to refuse to direct a verdict for the plaintiff, and to leave the question to the jury. National Union Bank v. Marsh, 46 Vt. 443.

254. Experts. Experts may be called to testify to their opinions, whether different writings were written by the same hand. The court first decides whether the witness has had sufficient experience in the examination and comparison of writings to testify as an expert; but the jury must determine from the testimony, whether the witness has sufficient skill and experience to render his opinion of any importance, and the weight which should be given to it. State v. Ward, 39 Vt. 225; and see State v. Phair, 48 Vt. 366.

255. Certain witnesses, offered as experts to determine the genuineness of handwriting by comparison, testified to their experience in such matters, but, not professing any peculiar skill, their opinions were excluded by the county court, on the ground that, admitting their testimony to be true, they were not experts, according to the true idea of the law. Held, not error;—for that so long as the evidence or facts do not constitute or conclusively show the fact of peculiar skill, which is the kernel of the matter, but such skill, as matter of fact, is left to be inferred from such evidence and special facts, the finding of the court is not revisable, whichever way it be. Comments on the value of the evidence of experts. Wright v. Williams, 47 Vt. 222.

256. Comments of the judge, depreciating the value of the testimony of experts in handwriting, but leaving the value of their opinions to the jury, were held not erroneous. Pratt v. Rawson, 40 Vt. 183.

257. Witnessed writing. Testimony of the admission of his signature by a party to a witnessed note was, under special circumstances, admitted (Tyler, J., dissenting). Adams v. Brownson, 1 Tyl. 452.

258. The court refused proof of the execution of a witnessed writing by comparison of handwriting, where the subscribing witness was within the process of the court. Pearl v. Allen, 1 Tyl. 4.

259. So, where the subscribing witness lived without the State, but at a known place within reasonable distance of the place of trial, so that his deposition could have been procured. Rich v. Trimble, 2 Tyl. 349.

260. In order to prove that a subscribing witness to a note, signed by several parties, was in fact only a witness to the first signature, it is not necessary that the subscribing witness should be called. Harding v. Cragie, 8 Vt. 501.

261. The maker of a non-negotiable note promised to pay it to the assignee thereof. In an action on such promise;—Held, that the promise was evidence tending to prove the execution of the note, though not exhibited to the maker, and although the note was witnessed and the subscribing witness was not called. Hodges v. Eastman, 12 Vt. 358.

262. Where a written contract comes only incidentally in question, its execution may be proved otherwise than by the subscribing witness. Curtis v. Belknap, 21 Vt. 493. Chandler v. Caswell, 17 Vt. 580.

263. In an action of ejectment founded upon title under a deed of the collector of a particular land tax, the plaintiff, in order to prove that the collector had given the necessary bond to the committee appointed to expend the tax, produced such bond. Held, that its execution might be proved by one of the committee, although the subscribing witnesses were then living in this State. Chandler v. Caswell.

264. Where the attestation of witnesses is not necessary to the operative effect of a written instrument, its execution may be proved without proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness. Sherman v. Champlain Transportation Co., 31 Vt. 162.

265. An attested deed was allowed to be proved by evidence of the handwriting of the grantor, where it purported to have been executed out of this State, and the witness testified that he did not know the attesting witnesses, and did not know of their being in this State. Held, not error. Ib.

XI. ORDINANCES; PRIVATE STATUTES; FOREIGN LAWS; JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

266. Private enactments. City ordinances, like votes of towns, villages and other municipal corporations, are not public laws of which the court can take judicial notice, but are facts to be pleaded and proved. State v. Soragan, 40 Vt. 450.

267. The court will take judicial notice of the existence of places as incorporated towns within the State, but not of unincorporated villages, though popularly named and known. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Baxter, 32 Vt. 805.

268. The court does not ex officio take notice of a private statute. It must be pleaded, or proved. Pearl v. Allen, 2 Tyl. 311.

269. Foreign laws. Foreign laws must be proved as facts. If written, they must be produced; if unwritten, they must be proved by witnesses conversant with them. Woodbridge v. Austin, 2 Tyl. 364. 19 Vt. 184.

270. The court may possess sufficient knowledge of the laws of another State authorizing a justice of the peace to take the acknowledgment of a deed, to admit a deed so acknowledged, without further proof on that point. Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336.

271. The statute books of other States have been allowed to be read in the supreme court, to show the authority of magistrates there to take depositions, though such books were not introduced in the county court. Danforth v. Reynolds, 1 Vt. 259. 18 Vt. 387. 19 Vt. 364.

272. The existence and provisions of the law of another or foreign State must be proved in the course of the trial of the cause, the same as any other fact is proved. The law cannot be proved by the production of the statute in the supreme court; no facts can be there supplied, not even when proved by matter of record. Adams v. Gay, 19 Vt. 358. 25 Vt. 564, note.

273. Foreign statutes must be specially set forth in pleading them, and must be proved as facts;—as in pleading a bankrupt's discharge obtained in Canada. Peck v. Hibbard, 26 Vt. 698.

274. Our courts cannot take judicial notice of the laws of a sister State. They must be proved as facts. Taylor v. Boardman, 25 Vt. 581. Pickering v. Fisk, 6 Vt. 102. 25 Vt. 601. Territt v. Woodruff, 19 Vt. 182. Adams v. Gay, 19 Vt. 358.

275. The court will not act on the suggestion, without proof, that the laws of a sister State differ from our own. Territt v. Woodruff. Adams v. Gay.

276. Proof a foreign written law may be by some copy of the law, which a witness can swear was recognized in the foreign country as authoritative, and in force. Spaulding v. Vincent, 24 Vt. 501.

277. The statute books of any one of the United States, purporting to be published by the authority of such State, is competent proof of the statute law of such State, in this State. State v. Stade, 1 D. Chip. 303. Patterson v. Patterson. Ib. 200. Danforth v. Reynolds, 1 Vt. 265. State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 60.

278. Legal proof of the statutes of another State is required, where they affect the merits of the trial—as, an authentication according to the act of congress; a sworn copy compared with the record of the statute in the secretary of State's office; or the authorized statute book of the State. This rule is relaxed in regard to depositions taken without the State. Smith v. Potter, 27 Vt. 304.

279. The statute laws of another State must be proved by the production of the statute. The statement of the presiding judge to the jury, that of his own knowledge, justices of the peace, by the laws of Pennsylvania, have authority to solemnize marriage, is not proof. State v. Horn, 48 Vt. 20. See State v. Rood, 12 Vt. 396.

280. Proceedings of foreign courts. The best proof of the proceedings of a foreign court is the original records. But that cannot ordinarily be produced. The testimony usually produced is a sworn copy by one who has compared it with the original, or else an exemplified copy certified by the clerk and the presiding judge and the seal of the court, with the broad seal of the province or kingdom to the appointment of the judge, with the proper certificate from the office of appointment. Redfield, J. Spaulding v. Vincent, 24 Vt. 501.

XII. BEST AND SECONDARY.

281. In general. The rule which requires the best evidence applies to every case, and requires the production of the record, where a party would for any purpose prove the recovery of a judgment. Graham v. Gordon, 1 D. Chip. 115;—or other matter evidenced by the record. Richards v. Pearl. Id. 118;—or other original paper,—as a newspaper notice. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 586.

282. That matter in abatement was pleaded before a justice can be proved only by his record. Martin v. Blodget, 1 Aik. 375.

283. The original lost or destroyed. The rendition of a judgment by confession was allowed to be proved by parol, so as to sustain a sale upon an execution reciting such judgment, where the record was lost. Mazham v. Place, 46 Vt. 484.

284. The existence and contents of papers lost or destroyed may be proved by parol;—as, the records of a village or town meeting. Hutchinson v. Pratt, 11 Vt. 402. Slack v. Norwich, 32 Vt. 818;—of a school district. Sherwin v. Bugbee, 16 Vt. 439;—the contents of a libellous paper. Gates v. Bowker, 18 Vt. 23;—of a grand list. Spear v. Tison, 24 Vt. 420;—an attachment. Brown v. Richmond, 27 Vt. 583;—an execution. Bliss v. Stevens, 4 Vt. 88;—entries in books of account. Tucker v. Bradley, 33 Vt. 324;—contents of notices of sale posted. Eddy v. Wilson, 43 Vt. 362.

285. Proof of loss. Before secondary evidence of the contents of a writing, claimed to be lost, can be admitted, it must be shown that a search for it has been made, in good faith and with proper diligence, in the place where it was likely to be found, and that the party has, in good faith, reasonably exhausted all the sources of information and means of discovery which the nature of the case would naturally suggest and which were accessible to him, and that such search has proved ineffectual. Thrall v. Todd, 34 Vt. 97. Viles v. Moulton, 11 Vt. 470. S. C., 13 Vt. 510. Royalton v. Turnpike Co., 14 Vt. 311. Fletcher v. Jackson, 23 Vt. 581.

286. Where a paper is by law committed to the custody of a particular person or officer, proof of search and that it cannot be found in his office or custody, is prima facie evidence of loss, sufficient to let in secondary evidence of its contents. Braintree v. Battles, 6 Vt. 395.

287. To prove the loss of a paper, so as to let in secondary evidence of contents, the evidence to the court was, that the paper had been left with one D, who, before the trial, had removed from the State; and that the defendant and another witness had called on D before his removal for the paper, and he, in their presence, made a thorough search of all the papers of his office and could not find it. Held, that this was admissible to prove the loss, and that the judgment of the county court that the evidence was sufficient, was not open to revision in the supreme court. Moore v. Beattie, 33 Vt. 219.

288. A tax collector was allowed to testify to the contents of the notices of sale of the property distrained, at a trial held some 16 months after the posting of the notices, he first testifying that he did not know where they were, and had not seen them since he posted them. Eddy v. Wilson, 43 Vt. 362.

289. How far decision is revisable. The decision of the county court as to the loss of a paper, preliminary to the use of secondary evidence of its contents, is revisable when erroneous in matter of law. It is always a question of law, in a given case, whether the rule requiring proper search in the proper places has been followed; but if evidence has been given tending to show that the rule has been followed, the finding of the court on that evidence is not the subject of revision. Durgin v. Danville, 47 Vt. 95.

290. Testimony of party to prove loss. Before the statute allowing parties to be witnesses;—Held, that a party was not competent to testify to the loss of a bond, or note, with a view to the introduction of secondary evidence of contents. Penfeld v. Cook, 1 Aik. 96. Wright v. Jacobs, 1 Aik. 304.

291. Telegrams. Where telegraphic communications are relied on to establish a contract, dependent on the terms used, they must be proved, as other writings are, by production of the originals. If they cannot be produced, then the contents may be shown by the next best evidence, as copies, or otherwise. Durkee v. Vt. Central R. Co., 29 Vt. 127.

292. Where the person to whom a telegram is sent is the employer of the telegraph, or takes the risk of its transmission, the original is the message delivered to the operator. But where the person sending the message takes the initiative, the telegraph is his agent, and the original is the message delivered at the end of the line, and is effective only in that form. Id.

293. Letter. Where the plaintiff offered in evidence a letter written to himself by a third party through whom the defendant claimed, and who was out of the State, or dead, which letter purported to be in reply to one previously written by the plaintiff;—Held, that it was admissible without the production or proof of loss and contents of the letter to which it was a reply. Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29.

294. Partnership articles. In an action charging the defendants as partners, the plaintiff had given evidence, by deposition, of the partnership, and of the terms of the written articles, the defendants having failed to produce the articles upon notice. Held, that the defendants could not, by another deposition of the same witness, taken in their behalf, prove the further or different contents of such articles, but must produce them. Hastings v. Hopkinson, 28 Vt. 108.

XIII. DOCUMENTARY.

1. Town clerk's records and certificates.

295. Original deed. An original deed, containing the statute requisites of witnessing, acknowledgment and recording, is admissible in evidence without other proof of execution, as well in the action of covenant upon the covenants in the deed, as in ejectment. Williams v. Wetherbee, 2 Aik. 329.

296. Recital in deed. The recital of a deed in a subsequent deed is evidence of the former against a party to the latter. So, a subsequent charter or grant of the government reciting a former grant, or surrender, is evidence of that fact as against the government, or party claiming under the last grant. Lord v. Bigelow, 8 Vt. 445; and see Cross v. Martin, 46 Vt. 14.

297. Book of record. The ancient record of a deed in a book in the town clerk's office kept for that purpose, and in the handwriting of the town clerk then in office, though not signed or certified by the town clerk, is admissible as a record, with the force which belongs to it as such. Booge v. Parsons, 2 Vt. 456. 20 Vt. 589. 22 Vt. 356.

298. The same is true of a like record of a marriage. Northfield v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 582.

299. Copies by town clerk. Duly certified copies from the proper town clerk's office of deeds, not presumed to be in the possession of the party offering them, may be used in evidence instead of the originals, as well in covenant as in ejectment. Williams v. Wetherbee, 2 Aik. 329.

300. The official certificate of a town clerk is prima facie authentic, and it is not necessary, in this State, in order to render a record, or other paper certified by him, admissible in evidence, to show by other proof that he was either elected or sworn. Lemington v. Blodgett, 37 Vt. 210.

301. It is the settled law and practice in this State, that in making title to real estate, a party may prove the various links in his chain of title by certified copies of deeds from the records of deeds in the town clerk's office, without the production of the originals, except the deed to himself. Pratt v. Battles, 34 Vt. 891.

302. A copy of the record of a deed, made 49 years after the given date of the original, was properly admitted in evidence, without production of the original or accounting for its non-production, although it was claimed upon the other side, and evidence had been given, that the deed was a forgery. Ib.

303. Town clerk's certificate of record. The certificate of a town clerk upon a deed or execution that he has recorded the same, though not expressly required by statute, has always been received as prima facie evidence of the fact stated. Hutchinson, J., in Hubbard v. Dewey, 2 Aik. 816. Benedict v. Heineberg, 43 Vt. 236.

304. The customary certificate of a town clerk upon the back of a deed that he had received the deed for record, and had recorded it, was, before the statute directing that to be done, received as prima facie evidence of the fact recited. Taylor v. Holcomb, 2 Tyl. 344. Morey v. McGuire, 4 Vt. 327. 34 Vt. 262;—and such certificate was received, where only the first part was signed by the town clerk, but the last part was also evidently in his handwriting. Morey v. McGuire.

305. Where the law has made the time of recording an instrument in the town clerk's office material, his certificate of the time is evidence of that fact. Pawlet v. Sandgate, 17 Vt. 619.

306. A town clerk's certificate of a record, or of the date of recording a deed, or of receiving it for record, is prima facie evidence of the fact, but only that, and may be rebutted, and the truth of the matter, whether certified or not, be shown by parol. Taylor v. Holcomb, 2 Tyl. 344. Morey v. McGuire, 4 Vt. 327. Bartlett v. Boyd, 34 Vt. 256. Johnson v. Burden, 40 Vt. 567.

307. The same is true of the certificates of justices of the peace, county clerks, and town clerks, of the fact of recording an execution and levy. Hubbard v. Dewey, 2 Aik. 812. Myers v. Brownell. Ib., 407. Morton v. Edwin, 19 Vt. 77; and of the certificates of town clerks of the record of proceedings of land tax collectors. Carpenter v. Sawyer, 17 Vt. 121. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388. Kellogg, J., in Bartlett v. Boyd, 34 Vt. 262-3.

308. The record of a town clerk cannot be contradicted by parol evidence—as by proof of a mistake in the record. The only way is for the clerk to correct the record. Hoag v. Durfey, 1 Aik. 286.

309. A copy of the record of an execution and levy is prima facie proof that the paper has been correctly recorded, and at the time indicated. But the inaccuracy of the record may be shown—as by production of the original. Perry v. Whipple, 38 Vt. 278. See Morton v. Edwin, 19 Vt. 77.

310. A town clerk's records are presumed to be made from the original papers, the contrary not appearing. Carbee v. Hopkins, 41 Vt. 260.

311. The certification of a paper by a town clerk as "a true copy of a deed recorded," &c., where it appears from the copy that such a record existed in the office, will be intended as certified from the record, and is well enough. Preston v. Robinson, 24 Vt. 583.

312. A town clerk certified, on a certain date, that the paper so certified was a true copy of record, and that at a certain earlier date it was received for record. Held, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the legal presumption was that the paper was in fact recorded when received for record. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

313. It being made by statute the official duty of a town clerk to record all births in the town, a duly authenticated copy of such record is admissible as evidence of the facts which it embodies, although the record was made upon the report of the parent long after the time of the births. The weight of the record as evidence is for the jury, under the circumstances. Derby v. Salem, 30 Vt. 722.

314. Record of papers not required to be recorded. A revocation of a power of attorney to convey lands not being required by law to be recorded, a copy of the record of such revocation is not admissible to prove the fact of revocation. Bush v. Van Ness, 12 Vt. 83.

315. A town clerk is not a certifying officer of a grand list, or other documents which are required by law to be deposited in his office, but which are not required to be recorded. Hence, neither his official certificate of what a grand list contains, nor a certified copy of such list, is legal evidence. Barnet v. Woodbury, 40 Vt. 266. (Changed by Stat. 1876, No. 55.)

316. An office copy of an instrument recorded in the town clerk's office, purporting to be a deed, but not sealed, however ancient, is not admissible as evidence of title, where no possession has followed it, and there is no other evidence of due execution. Williams v. Bass, 22 Vt. 352.

317. The record of a deed not entitled to registry is not of itself evidence of the existence of the deed, yet such record, in connection with long and undisputed possession consistent with the deed, and other circumstances which tend, as matter of fact, to show the probable execution and loss of the deed, is admissible as evidence from which the jury may find by presumption the existence and loss of the deed. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 183.

318. The record in the town clerk's office of a paper purporting to be a deed, but not sealed, was received as evidence of the existence of an original paper of like tenor, there being other evidence of the existence of an original, now lost. Colchester v. Culver, 29 Vt. 111.

319. So, of a deed defectively acknowledged. Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 183.

320. Certifying negatively. The certificate of a town clerk that there is not on the record a conveyance of certain lands, is not admissible in evidence. It is not an authorized official act. Hill v. Bellows, 15 Vt. 727. 29 Vt. 828.

321. Record of deed in another State. The office copy of a deed recorded in another State, in order to be admissible, must be authenticated according to the act of Congress. Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 435.

322. Proprietor's clerk. Where a deed was certified as recorded by the proprietor's clerk;—Held, that his acting as such was sufficient proof of his official character, without proof of his appointment. Brush v. Cook, Brayt. 89.

323. The records, by proprietors' clerks, of deeds made and recorded before the act of Feby. 26, 1783, authorizing them to record deeds, are not evidence as records. Hart v. Gage, 6 Vt. 170.

324. Entry on town treasurer's books. Where the question was, whether a certain town order in favor of C, had been paid to apply on the plaintiff's execution against him;—Held, that an entry on the town treasurer's books of this order to the credit of the plaintiff, as town treasurer, did not tend to prove the negative. Nye v. Kellam, 18 Vt. 594.

2. Court records and files.

325. A copy attested by the clerk of a court, not only of records, technically so called, but also of all papers, files, rolls, &c., legally deposited in his office and there required to remain, is proper evidence of the original, affording as high a degree of certainty as sworn copies can furnish. Mattocks v. Bellamy, 8 Vt. 463.

326. The files of the county clerk in the cause, with his certificate of the judgment, were admitted in evidence in the supreme court, but with disapproval of the practice. Allis v. Beadle, 1 Tyl. 179.

327. Dictum. An exemplified copy of a judgment is the legal and proper evidence to prove the same. Neither the records themselves, nor minutes, should ever be received, where copies can be obtained. Lowry v. Cady, 4 Vt. 504.

328. A decree in chancery cannot be proved by docket minutes. The decree itself, or a copy of the record, if the decree has been enrolled, is the only legitimate evidence. Austin v. Howe, 17 Vt. 654.

329. A judgment rendered at a former term of the same court may be proved by the files and docket entries; but to make proof in one court of the proceedings in another, it must be by a record written out at length. Armstrong v. Colby, 47 Vt. 359.

330.. A certificate, signed by a register in bankruptcy, that the defendant was by him adjudged a bankrupt, &c., is not evidence. Adams v. Wait, 42 Vt. 16.

331. A certificate of the prothonotary of the court of King's Bench in Canada to a bill of fees and disbursements by an attorney in a suit in that court, was held not admissible as evidence here. Pierson v. Boston, 1 Aik. 54.

332. A paper simply certified by the clerk of a court of record, without seal attached, that it is a true copy of record, is not sufficiently authenticated to be received as proof of the record. Parish v. Pearsons, 27 Vt. 621.

333. A certified copy of record was held defective in substance, where the certifying clerk was clerk of both the county and the supreme court, and it did not appear in which court the record was; nor, except by supplying omissions by intendment, in what state or county the record was. Id.

334. The word "official" attached to a paper, and signed by a proper certifying officer, is no verification of it, as either an original, or a true copy. Johnson v. Bolton, 43 Vt. 308.

335. Probate records. Copies of probate records of the division of an estate among heirs are admissible, though certified to be extracts, if they contain all that need be recorded to make the division legal. Robinson v. Gillman, 3 Vt. 163.

336. Wills devising lands, and probate proceedings affecting the title to real estate, which are required by statute to be recorded, must be first recorded in the town clerk's office, where the estate is situate, or they cannot be used as evidence on the question of title. Harrington v. Gage, 6 Vt. 582. Royce v. Hurd, 24 Vt. 620. (Slade's Stat. c. 44, s. 86. G. S. c. 49, s. 87.) But if so recorded at any time before offered in evidence, this is sufficient. Abbott v. Pratt, 16 Vt. 626.

337. Copies of the records of the probate court of the assignment of dower, &c., in lands, although not recorded in the town clerk's office, were admitted in evidence for the purpose of giving locality to the lands specified in a deed, which referred to such records for a description merely. Held correct. Pingry v. Watkins, 17 Vt. 879.

338. Justice's record. If a justice's record as certified is imperfect, the only remedy is to allege diminution, supported by affidavits, and move for a mandamus upon the justice to certify more fully. Martin v. Blodgett, 1 Aik. 375. Stone v. Proctor, 2 D. Chip. 108.

339. The court will not go into proof by affidavits or statements of counsel and others, in regard to the correctness of a record of other courts. The proceeding must be taken by mandamus, or other proper writ. Nixon v. Barber, 27 Vt. 783. Tufts v. Aiken, 13 Vt. 490.

340. In an appealed case, after judgment and motion in arrest, another certified copy of the record, differing from the former, was presented as the true record. The supreme court continued the cause, that the justice might come into court with his record, and verify the copy on which the trial had been had, or correct it. Tufts v. Aiken.

341. Interpolation. In support of the issue that an administrator's bond was given on the 8th of May, the record of the probate court of that date was of an order that the plaintiff be appointed administrator, and that he give bonds, &c., and then recited that he had executed a bond agreeably to the order and was appointed administrator. Held, that an interpolation in the record on a subsequent day, viz: "which said bond was received and filed in in court May 26," &c., was no part of the record of May 8th, and did not contradict it. Clark v. Tabor, 22 Vt. 595.

342. Foreign judgments. Exemplifications of the record of judicial proceedings in a foreign country, must be considered as prima facie correct; if incorrect, the onus probandi lies on the opposite party. Woodbridge v. Austin, 2 Tyl. 364.

343. A certified copy of the record of a justice's judgment rendered in another State, is the appropriate evidence to prove such judgment. Starkweather v. Loomis, 2 Vt. 573 (overruling Ingersoll v. Van Gilder, 1 D. Chip. 59. Blodgett v. Jordan, 6 Vt. 580); though in such other State (as New York) a justice court is not regarded as a court of record, but is required to keep records. Carpenter v. Pier, 30 Vt. 81. Martin v. Wells, 43 Vt. 428. Semble, that in such case it should be shown, that the person certifying was a justice. Id.

344. Conclusiveness of record. A record of court imports absolute verity, not only when it comes collaterally in question, but also when the judgment of which it is evidence is sought to be enforced, or is made matter of defense; and even when the proceeding is upon a review of the judgment itself for error in law—as, upon writ of error, or certiorari—the truth of the record cannot be disputed. Hall, J., in Mosseaux v. Brigham, 19 Vt. 460.

345. Justices' courts in this State are courts of record, and the record of a justice has the same conclusiveness between the parties as the record of any other court. Stone v. Proctor, 2 D. Chip. 118. Martin v. Blodgett, 1 Aik. 379. 30 Vt. 202.

346. The record of a court cannot be impeached or contradicted by proof of its falsity; and this applies to the records of justices of the peace; and the record is to be tried by the court upon inspection, and not by the jury. Middleton v. Ames, 7 Vt. 166. Spaulding v. Chamberlin, 12 Vt. 538. Barnard v. Flanders, Id.

657. Pike v. Hill, 15 Vt. 183. Walker v. Briggs, 11 Vt. 84. Beech v. Rich, 13 Vt. 595. Eastman v. Waterman, 26 Vt. 494. Farr v. Ladd, 37 Vt. 156.

347. In an action of trespass and false imprisonment;—Held, that it cannot be shown against the record, that the writ was not signed by the justice rendering the judgment, but by another justice, and that the defendant, after the service erased the name of the first justice and inserted that of the justice who rendered the judgment. Spaulding v. Chamberlin.

348. Nor, in debt on a recognizance, that the defendant never consented to have his name entered or to be recognized. Beech v. Rich, 13 Vt. 595.

349. Nor, in case of a confession of judgment where the objection was taken by a subsequent attaching creditor, that the defendant did not appear personally before the justice and give the confession. Farr v. Ladd, 37 Vt. 156.

350. So, in an audita querela to set aside a judgment for want of notice to the complainant, and the record showed notice, it was held conclusive. Eastman v. Waterman, 26 Vt. 494. 37 Vt. 160.

351. So, in an action against a justice for willfully and maliciously absenting himself from the trial, this record was held conclusive in his own behalf. Barnard v. Flanders, 12 Vt. 657. 26 Vt. 500. 37 Vt. 160.

352. To a writ of review founded upon a justice's record showing a continuance of the original suit for notice, a judgment by default and a recognizance for a review, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not out of this State at the commencement of the original suit against him. Held ill, for that the justice's record showed a conclusive adjudication of that fact, and that the party had not had notice. Davis v. Beebe, 5 Vt. 560.

353. Where the record of a judgment shows that the defendant appeared either personally or by attorney, such fact cannot be traversed, nor will he be permitted to show that such attorney had no authority to so appear, and the judgment will effectually conclude him in an action thereon. St. Albans v. Bush, 4 Vt. 58. Newcomb v. Peck, 17 Vt. 302; and see 18 Vt. 214. Hubbard v. Dubois, 37 Vt. 96. Blood v. Crandall, 28 Vt. 896. State v. Bradish, 34 Vt. 425. Abbott v. Dutton, 44 Vt. 546.

354. Where a writ issued against two, and the return showed a service upon one and a non est as to the other, but the record of the judgment stated that the defendants appeared by attorney, that the defendants confessed, &c., and the court rendered judgment against the defendants—using the plural, but omitting the names;—Held, that the record was conclusive that both the defendants in the writ appeared, &c. Blood v. Crandall,

355. But where the record was of a writ against four and a service upon two only, and proceeded: "And at the same term come the said defendants by their attorney," naming him, and then stated the proceedings to a final judgment against the defendants, not naming them in the record after the recital or copy of the writ and return;—Held, that the record should be interpreted as stating an appearance only for those defendants upon whom service was made. Hubbard v. Dubois, 37 Vt. 94. Held, also, that the rule to the auditor, his citation and the return thereon and his report in that case, in which the parties upon whom the writ was served were alone named as defendants, might be considered in connection with the record produced, as aiding to explain the record itself, when doubtful or equivocal. Id.

356. Where a judgment appears by the record to be satisfied, as by the levy of the execution, this is conclusive, until corrected by proceedings brought directly for that purpose. Baxter v. Tucker, 1 D. Chip. 853. 21 Vt. 578. Pratt v. Jones, 22 Vt. 341. 26 Vt. 448.

357. Where not conclusive. A record, or return, is not conclusive in any authorized proceeding brought directly upon it, the purpose of which is to set it aside and vacate, or correct it; and in such case the record or return may be contradicted by parol;—as on petition to the supreme court to vacate an irregular levy of execution. Briggs v. Green, 33 Vt. 565;—on petition to the county court to vacate a justice's judgment. Mosseaux v. Brigham, 19 Vt. 457;—on audita querela to set aside judgments. Paddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 529, citing 1 Aik. 359. 9 Vt. 118. 11 Vt. 161. 12 Vt. 567. But see Eastman v. Waterman, 26 Vt. 494. 37 Vt. 160.

358. In audita querela to set aside a judgment, the record showed suit brought against the complainants "by attachment of their property, with notice." Held, that the record was not conclusive of service on the complainants or of notice to them of the suit, and that they might show want of notice in fact. Godfrey v. Downer, 47 Vt. 653.

3. Officers' returns.

359. The official return of a public officer, —as a sheriff,—is admissible evidence in his favor, as also to affect the rights of third persons. But it is only prima facie evidence for such purposes. It is open to contradiction collaterally as against himself, even by a party to the process; and by third persons because they were neither parties nor privies to the process. But as between the parties to the original suit, or as against himself, his return is conclusive. Barrett v. Copeland, 18 Vt. 67. 26 Vt. 750.

Hathaway v. Goodrich, 5 Vt. 65. Stanton v. Hodges, 6 Vt. 66.

360. An officer's return is not conclusive against him, as to mere inferences or presumptions upon which the return is silent. Thus, where his return upon an execution was, that he had sold the property to A;—Held, that he might prove by parol, the capacity in which A acted,—as that he was the agent of B. Carney v. Dennison, 15 Vt. 400.

361. A constable was sued for an assault and false imprisonment, and justified by virtue of process. Held, that his return was evidence in his favor, but only prima facie evidence, and was subject to contradiction. Barrett v. Cope-land, 18 Vt. 67.

362. In trespass for false imprisonment against a tax collector, where he had made full return of his doings upon the warrant, ending with the commitment of the plaintiff to jail;—Held, that the defendant could not show his proceedings by parol;—that the return was prima facie evidence in his favor, but subject to contradiction by the plaintiff; and that the defendant could rebut the plaintiff's evidence by evidence of like character. Boardman v. Goldsmith, 48 Vt. 403.

363. The return of an indifferent person, authorized to serve a writ, has the same force and effect as that of a regular public officer, and is no more subject to impeachment and contradiction. Downer v. Back, 25 Vt. 259.

364. An officer's return of sale upon execution, although made out of time, is prima facie evidence of the sale. Gates v. Gaines, 10 Vt. 346.

365. The return of an officer levying an execution on land is conclusive on the parties, and all claiming under them. Hathaway v. Phelps, 2 Aik. 84. Eastman v. Curtis, 4 Vt. 616. 25 Vt. 260;—except in case of proceedings brought directly to set it aside. Briggs v. Green, 33 Vt. 565.

366. The return of a proper officer of his levy of an execution upon land is conclusive, as to all persons, of every act or thing stated therein which is within his official jurisdiction and duty, and it cannot be collaterally impeached or contradicted. Swift v. Cobb, 10 Vt. 282.

367. The statement in an officer's return of process served by copy left at the defendant's last and usual place of abode, that he, on the same day, gave the defendant personal notice of the suit and the time and place of trial, is no proper part of the return, and is not evidence for any purpose. Johnson v. Murphy, 42 Vt. 645.

368. Marriage certificate. A marriage certificate issued by an officiating minister, was held admissible to prove the marriage, accompanied by declarations of the party referring to it as evidence of the facts stated in it. State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 60.

4. Other official entries.

369. Patent office. The plaintiff, although he had no connection with the patent office, was permitted to testify to his examination at the patent office for evidence of the granting of a patent, or of an application therefor, and that nothing pertaining thereto could be found except a paper which he produced. Held, not error. James v. Hodsdon, 47 Vt. 127.

370. Municipal corporations. The action of municipal corporations in public meeting can be proved only by their records. Cabot v. Britt, 36 Vt. 349.

371. The records of the proceedings of municipal public corporations, such as towns and school districts, cannot be collaterally impeached;—as, by evidence that a recorded vote of a school district was passed by such as were not legal voters. Eddy v. Wilson, 48 Vt. 362.

372. Notaries. The entries and memoranda, made in the due course of business, by notaries, clerks and other persons, may be received in evidence after the death of the person who made them;—as, in this case, the memoranda and the formal protest, afterwards drawn up, of a deceased notary, of the demand of payment of a promissory note, and notice to the indorsers, were held evidence, not only of the demand, but of the notice also. Austin v. Wilson, 24 Vt. 630.

5. Private documents.

373. Account books. Where the books of the parties are evidence, entries made by the clerk of one of the parties in due course of business, are admissible where the clerk has deceased. Bacon v. Vaughn, 34 Vt. 73.

374. So, although the clerk be in life, and although not produced as a witness. Cummings v. Fullam, 13 Vt. 434.

375. In assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, the books of account of the party, accompanied with evidence of their correctness, are admissible in evidence;—as, also, where it had been agreed that the defendant's account should be payment on a note. Burnham v. Adams, 5 Vt. 313.

376. But such books are not admissible without evidence to support them. Chase v. Smith, 5 Vt. 556.

377. The reputation of a party for fairness and correctness as a keeper of books of account, is not admissible by way of impeachment of his accounts. Hitt v. Slocum, 37 Vt. 524.

378. The fact that charges stand upon the plaintiff's account book, that they were made by him, and at the time they bear date, does not bind the triers, as matter of law, to allow such charges, though there be no evidence against them. The book is evidence, and the triers may or may not find from it, that the charges upon it are in fact true. Semble, the same would be true as to the books of a deceased party. Hunter v. Kittredge, 41 Vt. 359.

379. A party's account books are not generally evidence of a negative character to rebut a presumption, but only evidence in regard to matters which do positively appear upon them, either of debt, or credit. Mattocks v. Lyman, 18 Vt. 98.

380. The plaintiff sued to recover for a quantity of cigars claimed to have been sold and delivered to the defendant and another party deceased, who were in partnership as hotel-keepers. The defense was that the cigars were not sold, but merely left with the firm on deposit. The plaintiff's salesman testified that he sold the cigars to the firm, and that the decedent directed J, the hotel clerk, to credit them to the plaintiff on the hotel books. J testified for the defense that no such order was given him. Held, that in connection with such testimony, and for the purpose of precluding a legitimate argument and inference against the defendant from the non-production of the books, the books, showing no entry of the cigars, were admissible in evidence. Cross v. Willard, 46 Vt. 73.

381. A commission merchant, to whom had been consigned certain butter for sale, testified in his deposition to the weights of the butter as derived from his books of entry and accounts of sales, but that he had no personal knowledge thereof. Held, that the deposition was not admissible to prove the weights; and that the error of admitting it was not cured by instructing the jury not to regard the testimony, if they should find that the witness had no personal knowledge of the weights, aside from such books and accounts. Hibbard v. Mills, 46 Vt. 248.

382. Memoranda. Private memoranda in a pass book, or elsewhere, are not admissible as independent evidence in favor of the party making them. Lapham v. Kelly, 35 Vt. 195. Cross v. Bartholomew, 42 Vt. 206. Goddard v. Orcutt, 44 Vt. 54.

383. A witness may testify from a memorandum made by him, where he has only a general recollection of the transaction, and states that the memorandum was correctly made at the time it was made. Mattocks v. Lyman, 18 Vt. 118.

384. If a witness testifies as to a memorandum, that the facts were within his knowledge and recollection at the time he made the entry, and is confident that he made it correctly about the time of the transaction, and still recollects the transaction generally, although not all the details of the entry, his evidence is received in connection with the memorandum, and both go to the jury; and the memorandum is regarded as auxiliary to or confirmatory of the witness, and may also be used as evidence of the details to supply the present want of recollection, particularly as to names and dates. Lapham v. Kelley, 35 Vt. 195. Cross v. Bartholomew, 42 Vt. 206.

385. The plaintiff and defendant being at issue in their testimony as to a fact;—Held, that the plaintiff might introduce, as a contemporaneous memorandum to sustain his testimony, a letter written by himself upon the business, which contained a statement of such disputed fact. Soules v. Burton, 36 Vt. 652.

386. Receipts. A receipt not under seal, though not technically a release, and though subject to explanation or contradiction, is prima facie evidence of payment according to its terms. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41.

387. A receipt, expressed to be in full of a demand named, is prima facie a full satisfaction of it, and casts upon the party claiming against it the burden of explaining it, or destroying its effect. Guyette v. Bolton, 46 Vt. 228. Stephens v. Thompson, 28 Vt. 77.

388. A receipt "in full of all demands, notes and accounts," was held not to embrace a suit then pending between the parties,—that not being apparently intended. Learned v. Bellows, 8 Vt. 79.

389. —of tax collector. A tax collector's receipt is proper evidence of the payment of the tax received, in behalf of the party paying the tax, as against a third person. Randall v. Kelsey, 46 Vt. 158.

390. Contemporaneous writings. Where two instruments are made at the same time between substantially the same parties, and they are in fact parts of the same transaction, the one is admissible as explaining and qualifying the other, although on their face they do not refer to each other. Rutland & Bur. R. Co. v. Crocker (U. S. C. C.), 29 Vt. 540.

391. Guaranty. A written guaranty is, as against the guarantor, evidence of all the facts therein stated, and they require no further proof. Peck v. Barney, 12 Vt. 72.

392. Writing not signed. Whether an instrument, in the body of which is the name of the party to it, but not signed, is a complete and perfected instrument, is a question of fact depending upon the intention. Brink v. Spaulding, 41 Vt. 96.

393. Affidavits. Ex parte affidavits are neither legal nor competent evidence to prove any fact in issue before a court or jury. Viles v. Moulton, 13 Vt. 510. See Id. 141. 19 Vt. 141. 33 Vt. 565.

394. Life tables. In estimating the value of a life estate, Dr. Wigglesworth's Life Tables were allowed to be used by the jury. Held correct. Mills v. Catlin, 23 Vt. 98.

XIV. PAROL EVIDENCE.

1. In general.

395. Writing incidental. Parol evidence is competent to prove satisfaction of a penal bond to reconvey land, as of any other bond. Reynolds v. Scott, Brayt. 75.

396. On trial of an indictment for a riot, and rescue from the custody of an officer of property attached by him;—Held, that the attachment might be proved by parol, although the return, by mistake, had omitted to mention such property. State v. Daggett, 2 Aik. 148. 27 Vt. 588.

397. The court will not presume that a deed of land has been recorded, so as to require an examination of the proper land records for the purpose of procuring a copy, before allowing oral evidence of its contents. Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326.

398. The plaintiff's claim in book account was to recover against a deceased person's estate for writing a memoir of the deceased, during his lifetime and at his request, the completion and intended publication of which was abandoned at his death. Held, that he might prove, otherwise than by the production of the manuscript of the memoir, though in his possession and demanded, the nature, extent and value of his services. Houghton v. Puine, 29 Vt. 57.

399. Whenever a written instrument is the foundation of an action, or is a necessary part of a title, it must be proved in the usual way; but where it comes in question incidentally, solely for the purpose of proving that such an instrument was executed, the production of the instrument, where it is not in the party's possession, is not necessary; nor, if produced, is the proof of it by the subscribing witnesses necessary. Chandler v. Caswell, 17 Vt. 580. Hurd v. Tuttle, 2 D. Chip. 43.

400. A written memorandum, not signed, becomes admissible as parol evidence, with evidence that the party conceded its correctness. Hosford v. Foote, 3 Vt. 391.

401. The proceedings of churches and of ecclesiastical bodies may be proved by parol,—the minutes of their scribes not being legal evidence. Charleston v. Allen, 6 Vt. 633. Dow v. Hinesburgh, 2 Aik. 18.

402. That a highway surveyor was sworn may be proved otherwise than by the record. Andrews v. Chase, 5 Vt. 409.

403. An application to the probate court to renew a commission, followed by no proceeding upon it, may be proved, as a fact, by parol. Harrington v. Rich, 6 Vt. 666.

404. Where there were apparently two perfect records of the proceedings of a town meeting;—Held, that parol evidence must of necessity be resorted to, to determine which is the legitimate record. Walter v. Belding, 24 Vt. 658.

405. Where the deposition of a witness, apparently interested, was offered;—Held, that the party offering it might prove by parol, that, with the application for taking the deposition, he sent by mail, in the same packet, a written discharge of the witness's interest. Oaks v. Weller, 16 Vt. 63.

406. In an action by one surety against another for contribution, where the plaintiff's claim was for money paid on an execution against both;—Held, that such payment could be proved by parol, without production of the execution, and without proof that such payment was indorsed upon the execution. Hayden v. Rice, 18 Vt. 353.

407. Date. The true date of the execution of a written instrument, having a false date, may be proved by parol;—also, such facts as show that the instrument never had any legal existence, or binding force. Hopkins v. School District, 27 Vt. 281.

408. Delivery of execution, &c. The minute required to be made by an officer, upon an execution, of the time when he received it for service, is not the exclusive or conclusive evidence of the time, but the true time may be proved by parol. Lowry v. Walker, 4 Vt. 76. S. C., 5 Vt. 181. Fletcher v. Pratt, 4 Vt. 182.

409. So, as to the delivery of a rate-bill and warrant to a tax collector. Goodwin v. Perkins, 39 Vt. 598.

410. Subject matter of litigation. The identity of the subject matter of litigation—as, of a former action—generally rests in parol; and this applies as well to lands as other matters. Parks v. Moore, 13 Vt. 183. Chase v. School District, 47 Vt. 524. Gray v. Pingry, 17 Vt. 419.

411. Where it does not appear by the record that new counts to a declaration are for the same identical cause of action as the old, and there is judgment on the new counts, the law presumes that they embraced new causes of action; but this may be rebutted by proof to the contrary, and for this purpose parol evidence is admissible. Austin v. Burlington, 34 506.

412. Where the record of a judgment does not show of what it was made up, this may be shown by evidence aliunde,—as parol. Gilbert v. Earl, 47 Vt. 9. Post v. Smilie, 48 Vt. 185.

2. To vary a writing;—to give it application.

413. Proprietors' and town clerks' records. Parol evidence is not admissible to reconcile, explain, or add to, proprietors' records. Britton v. Lawrence, 1 D. Chip. 103; or to contradict town clerks' records. Hoag v. Dufsey, 1 Aik. 286.

414. Officer's return. An officer's return on a writ cannot be contradicted nor explained by extraneous evidence; not even by the copy left by the officer,—which is no part of the return. White River Bank v. Downer, 29 Vt. 332.

415. Contracts. Once held (Tyler, J., dissenting), that a written contract for the payment of so many dollars could be explained by a contemporaneous parol agreement that the payment might be made in U. S. bank bills. Morton v. Wells, 1 Tyl. 381. Sed quare.

416. Where a note was made payable in "good custom cow-hide boots at $4 per pair," parol evidence was admitted to show the agreement and understanding of the parties in relation to the kind, quality and worth of the boots intended. Wait v. Fairbanks, Brayt. 77. Sed quare.

417. In an action upon a promissory note given in satisfaction of damages claimed for a slander, the defendant was allowed to show in defense and as a satisfaction of the note, that, at the time of giving the note, the plaintiff verbally agreed, that if the defendant would satisfy him that the defendant did not originate the slanderous reports, the plaintiff would give up the note; and that the plaintiff had acknowledged himself satisfied. Sanders v. Howe, 1 D. Chip. 363. (Erroneously cited 29 Vt. 30.) But see infra.

418. Held, by a divided court, that a parol agreement at the time of executing a note that it might be paid in a different mode than as expressed in the note was admissible in evidence. Farnham v. Ingham, 5 Vt. 514. (Overruled in Isaacs v. Elkins, 11 Vt. 679, citing Reed v. Wood, 9 Vt. 285.)

419. It is a principle of universal application, that if there is an ambiguity on the face of a written instrument, it cannot be explained by parol proof of intention. The intention of the parties must be derived from the instrument itself. Pingry v. Watkins, 17 Vt. 379.

420. A written contract cannot be enlarged, varied, or contradicted by parol testimony. Morse v. Low, 44 Vt. 561.

421. The extent of the operation of a written agreement cannot be enlarged, abridged, varied or contradicted by parol. Hakes v. Hotchkiss, 23 Vt. 281;—especially one by deed. Abbott v. Choate, 47 Vt. 53.

422. Oral testimony can no more be received to rebut or contradict the legal intentment of a written instrument, than to contradict its express terms. Rich v. Elliot, 10 Vt. 211. Norton v. Downer, 81 Vt. 407. Brown v. Hitchcock, 28 Vt. 452. Brandon Mfg. Co. v. Morse, 48 Vt. 322.

423. Where a particular description, following a general description in a deed, did not embrace the demanded premises;—Held, that the particular description controlled the general, and that parol evidence of situation, surroundings and appellations, to bring the premises within the general description, was not admissible. Fletcher v. Clark, 48 Vt. 211.

424. Where land is conveyed by deed, parol evidence is not admissible to prove a warranty as to quantity. Cabot v. Christie, 42 Vt. 121; and see Dyer v. Graves, 39 Vt. 369.

425. Where a note for goods sold was written for $200, the court refused to receive parol evidence that the price of the goods sold was a less sum, for the purpose of showing a mistake in the drawing of the note, where no fraud was alleged. Downs v. Webster, Brayt. 79.

426. In an action upon a promissory note;—Held, that the defendant could not give parol evidence of what was in fact a mere mistake in writing the note; nor do this under the pretense that it amounts to a fraud. Bradley v. Anderson, 5 Vt. 152. McDuffie v. Magoon, 26 Vt. 518.

427. Nor, that a note purporting to be absolute, was verbally agreed to be payable only on condition. Farnham v. Ingham, 5 Vt. 514. Hatch v. Hyde, 14 Vt. 25. Gillett v. Ballou, 29 Vt. 296.

428. Nor, that the note might be paid in a mode different from the terms of the note—as, by a return of the property for which it was given. Bradley v. Bentley, 8 Vt. 243. Isaacs v. Elkins, 11 Vt. 679. 29 Vt. 298.

429. Nor, that no installments should be called for upon a premium insurance note, given for a gross sum payable in such sums and at such times as might be assessed. Farmers' M. F. Ins. Co. v. Marshall, 29 Vt. 23.

430. A note was given for a certain sum with a proviso added, that if that sum was not "legally due" upon certain other notes specified, then this note was not to be paid, otherwise, it was to be paid. In an action thereon;—Held, that the condition was in the nature of a defeasance for the benefit of the maker, and the burthen of proof was upon him to show that it was not "legally due;" and that parol evidence was not admissible to prove that by a mistake, not apparent on the papers, the notes specified were made for too large a sum. McDuffie v. Magoon, 26 Vt. 518.

431. A note payable in "good well-finished plows," cannot be controlled by parol evidence of a further agreement, that if there should be any improvement made by the maker of the note in the pattern of his plow, the payee should have the improved kind in payment of the note. Gilman v. Moore, 14 Vt. 457.

432. Parol agreements made at the time of subscribing for stock, inconsistent with the terms of the written subscription, are inoperative and not admissible in evidence. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Bailey, 24 Vt. 465. Blodgett v. Morrill, 20 Vt. 509.

433. Oral evidence of conversations between the parties previous to the execution of a deed cannot, in a court of law, be allowed to control the deed. Vt. Central R. Co. v. Hills, 28 Vt. 681.

434. In a written contract for finishing a stone house, whose walls were already built, but so unevenly as to require lathing, there was a provision for doing the furring "for the whole house, except the basement." Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to prove that the partitions only, and not the walls, were intended to be furred. Herrick v. Noble, 27 Vt. 1.

435. Where a bill of sale was in terms absolute, and the vendee, upon the credit of it, had treated the property as his own, and third persons had so treated it by purchase and attachment;—Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to prove the sale conditional. Sanborn v. Chittenden, 27 Vt. 171.

436. A bill of sale absolute on its face cannot be made conditional by parol testimony. Davis v. Bradley, 24 Vt. 55.

437. So, parol proof of a warranty not expressed in a bill of sale is excluded. Reed v. Wood, 9 Vt. 285. Bond v. Clark, 35 Vt. 577.

438. To a bill of sale absolute in terms, the fact that it was a conveyance by way of security for a debt may be shown by parol, and a verbal agreement of defeasance. Wills v. Barrister, 36 Vt. 220.

439. Where the plaintiff delivered property to the defendant and took his written receipt and contract for its manufacture, or return, which was construed to be a bailment;—Held, in an action for negligence in the care of the property, that parol testimony was not admissible to prove that the plaintiff agreed that the property was to remain at his risk. Brown v. Hitchcock, 28 Vt. 452.

440. Where there was a written contract between the parties;—Held, that it could not be shown that, at the time of its execution, it was agreed and understood to be a sham, designed only to deceive the creditors of one of the parties; nor, by oral evidence, that the real agreement was different from that expressed in the writing. Conner v. Carpenter, 28 Vt. 237.

441. In an action on the covenants in a lease for quiet enjoyment, where the premises were described as bounded on a town line;—Held, that it could not be shown by parol that the parties intended, designated, or recognized a different line as the boundary, though claimed to be the true town line, and thus extend the operation of the covenant to premises which were beyond the actual line named in the lease. Knapp v. Marlboro, 29 Vt. 282.

442. As to the interpretation of letters and the character of a contract concluded, or recognized thereby, it was held that the law will presume that the party meant what his language, by its terms and under the circumstances in which it was used, would fairly be understood to mean, and this presumption is not to be rebutted by proof that he intended something more or different, which he made no attempt to express, and which the other party neither understood, nor had reason to understand. Clark v. Lillie, 39 Vt. 405.

443. Where a written assignment was made to three persons, "to secure them for having signed and become liable for me on my paper;"—Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to prove that it was understood, when the assignment was made, that it was to operate in behalf of one of the assignees only in respect to one particular note signed by him. Fuller v. Hapgood, 39 Vt. 617.

444. Assumpsit to recover $295. In support of the claim the plaintiff introduced the following instrument: "Due Mr. Harvey Groot two hundred and ninety-five dollars, in part payment for a piano. Said piano to be selected by Mr. Groot." Held, that the paper constituted a written contract, and was not a mere receipt; that, as such, it was susceptible of a definite legal construction without extrinsic aid; and that parol evidence was not admissible to explain, enlarge or vary it. Groot v. Story, 44 Vt. 200. Redfield, J., dissenting.

445. The words of a written contract were: "The said S, for the consideration of $650 paid to him by the said W, it being all his personal property, consisting of one horse, one cow, and notes to the above value, hath agreed, &c." Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to prove that it was intended and agreed that other personal property of W, in addition to the articles specified, should pass by the contract. Wood v. Shurtleff, 46 Vt. 325.

446. Rule may be waived. The rule which excludes evidence which should be in writing in order to be admissible, is a rule which a party may waive, and which is waived if not insisted on. Noyes v. Evans, 6 Vt. 628. 8 Vt. 245. 37 Vt. 134. Hartland v. Henry, 44 Vt. 593.

447. The rule as to the non-admissibility of parol evidence to vary or add to written agreements does not touch the validity of the agreement sought to be proved, but only the kind of evidence by which the party may be compelled to prove it. If the agreement is admitted by the pleadings, or on the trial, or is proved without objection by parol evidence, this is a waiver of the rule, and leaves the agreement as fully operative as if it had been proved by a writing. Davis v. Goodrich, 45 Vt. 56.

448. Receipts. A general receipt in full of all demands cannot be explained, or impeached by parol testimony, except for mistake or fraud. Sessions v. Gilbert, Brayt. 75. Dictum of Hutchinson, J., in Raymond v. Roberts, 2 Aik. 208. (These cases not followed. See Giddings v. Munson, 4 Vt. 312, and post.)

449. Simple receipts not under seal are always open to explanation, and even to contradiction, by parol evidence. They are not contracts, so as to be the exclusive evidence of the intention of the parties. Hitt v. Slocum, 87 Vt. 524. Murdock v. Matthews, Brayt. 100. Dodge v. Billings, 2 D. Chip. 26. Raymond v. Roberts, 2 Aik. 204. Burnap v. Partridge, 8 Vt. 144. Giddings v. Munson, 4 Vt. 308. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41. Nye v. Kellam, 18 Vt. 594. McDaniels v. Lapham, 21 Vt. 222. Randall v. Kelsey, 46 Vt. 158.

450. A contract evidenced by several writings, although one is a receipt, cannot be varied or contradicted by parol in a point wherein the writings, taken together, are specific. Raymond v. Roberts.

451. A simple receipt, not constituting or importing a contract, does not preclude other and parol evidence of the purpose for which it was given, nor parol evidence of a contract made at the time of its execution, and as part of the same transaction. Randall v. Kelsey, 46 Vt. 158.

452. The plaintiff gave the defendant a writing, not sealed, as follows: "Received of H C [a sum named], and in consideration thereof I hereby release and discharge him from" [a certain claim specified]. Held, that this was but a receipt and not conclusive as evidence, and that the defendant could prove by parol, that the payment made was in satisfaction also of a claim not named in the writing. Winn v. Chamberlin, 32 Vt. 318.

453. Certain papers construed as receipts in full, or an acknowledgment of satisfaction, and so explainable by parol. Giddings v. Munson, 4 Vt. 308.

454. A receipt given by the payee to the maker of a note, certifying what was the consideration of the note, is not conclusive upon the maker; and he may show, by parol, a different consideration. Sowles v. Sowles, 11 Vt. 146.

455. Indorsement of payment. Parol evidence is admissible to prove the consideration of an indorsement upon a contract—as, "by agreement of parties this contract is satisfied"—and thus to limit the effect of the indorsement. Hall v. Mott, Brayt. 81.

456. An indorsement of payment made upon a note is no part of the note, but only an admission or evidence of payment, and, like a receipt, is subject to parol explanation, or contradiction—as, that it was so made by mistake. McDaniels v. Lapham, 21 Vt. 222; and see State v. McLeran, 1 Aik. 311. Kimball v. Lamson, 2 Vt. 138.

457. Thus, in an action of ejectment by the mortgagee against the grantee of the mortgagor;—Held, that the plaintiff, upon the inquiry as to the sum due, could show that such indorsement was erroneous, where it did not appear that the defendant, in making his purchase, was misled thereby. McDaniels v. Lapham.

458. Recital of consideration of deed and payment. It is not contradicting the essential import of a deed, to show the agreed price of the land; and this may always be shown by parol, although it may contradict the recitals in the deed. Holbrook v. Holbrook, 30 Vt. 432. Beach v. Packard, 10 Vt. 96. Lazell v. Lazell, 12 Vt. 443. White v. Miller, 22 Vt. 380. Thayer v. Viles, 23 Vt. 494.

459. Such recital of the receipt of the consideration is only prima facie evidence of the amount paid, or that in fact anything had been paid. White v. Miller.

460. It may be proved by parol, that the consideration named in a deed was paid as well for the discharge of a debt due the grantor, as for the conveyance. Harwood v. Harwood, 22 Vt. 507.

461. That the grantee in a deed agreed, as part of the consideration of the purchase, to pay the taxes to be thereafter assessed upon the property on an existing list, may be proved by parol evidence, unless the deed professes to set out specifically the terms of the trade, and just what the consideration consisted in. Pierce v. Brew, 43 Vt. 292.

462. Agreement collateral to deed. The plaintiff offered to show that the defendant, in the sale of a mill, agreed to provide a new wheel for the mill provided the old one should prove to be unsuitable. The conveyance of the mill was by a deed which contained no stipulation on this subject. Held, that the contract could be proved by parol. Buzell v. Willard, 44 Vt. 44.

463. The defendant conveyed land by deed to the plaintiff, but remained in possession and cultivated it. In an action of trespass therefor and for removal of the crops;—Held, that, in addition to other evidence of occupation by license, the defendant might prove that before and at the time of the conveyance it was verbally understood and agreed, that the defendant was to have the use of the land and the crops for the current year. Merrill v. Blodgett, 34 Vt. 480.

464. As to third party. A executed to B, his son, a deed of lands for the expressed consideration of $3,000, and took back a bond and mortgage conditioned for the support of himself and wife, and the payment of specified sums to his daughters, amounting to $500. In an action by C against B to recover for the debt of A assumed by B in this trade, as claimed;—

Held, that the plaintiff, not being a party to the papers, was not precluded from proving an additional and suppletory agreement by parol, that as part of the consideration of the deed ($3,000) the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff said debt of A. Wait v. Wait, 28 Vt. 350.

465. Where the indorsee of a promissory note, after the same had fallen due, took of the maker a mortgage to secure the payment of the note in the terms of it;—Held, in an action against the indorser, that he could prove a previous parol agreement between the parties to the mortgage to extend the time of payment, in consideration of the giving of the mortgage, though variant from the terms of the mortgage; and could use such agreement in defense as a release of his liability as indorser. Morse v. Huntington, 40 Vt. 488.

466. Collateral agreement. While the plaintiff, a physician, was attending upon the father and mother of the defendant, under a contract with the father that if there was no cure there should be no pay, the defendant gave the plaintiff a writing by which he agreed that he would "be holden" to the plaintiff "for the payment of his bill for medicine and attendance" upon the father and mother. Held, that this undertaking was collateral to the contract of the father, and that this contract could be proved by parol; and that, having failed to "cure," the plaintiff could not recover on the guaranty. Smith v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 54.

467. Bill of sale. A quantity of scrap iron had been contracted, by parol, to be sold by the plaintiff's agent to the defendant, by weight. The iron was afterwards weighed off for delivery by the plaintiff in the absence of the agent. The plaintiff claimed that the iron should be computed at net weight—the defendant, at gross weight;—and the defendant represented that such was the special contract with the agent, and agreed that if this was not right he would make it right when they could see the agent. The plaintiff thereupon executed a bill of sale of the iron, computing it therein at gross weight. Held, in an action for the price, that the plaintiff was not concluded by the bill of sale, but could prove by parol evidence, that by the contract with the agent the iron was to be computed at net weight. Edwards v. Golding, 20 Vt. 30. 27 Vt. 175.

468. The defendant purchased goods and took a bill of them, as: "A. B.—Bought of C. D.—Six per cent. off for cash." Then followed a list of the articles and prices. Held, that this bill of sale did not import a contract; that it was given, not to express a contract, but in consequence of one having been previously made; that it was simply declaratory of a fact, and out of this, with other things, the contract must be made; and that the defendant was not precluded by it, from proving that the purchase was made on a six month's credit. Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 128.

469. Where a bill of sale, or invoice, accompanies the delivery of goods, it may nevertheless be shown by parol that the goods were delivered and received by way of consignment. Hayward Rubber Co. v. Dunclee, 30 Vt. 29.

470. The plaintiff purchased butter of the defendant, and the following paper was made on the occasion, and was signed by the defendant: "Stamford, Jany. 10, 1860. Elias K. Carpenter. Bill of butter; 72½ lbs. @ * * * 603 lbs. gross. Tare, each 11 lbs., making. Received payment for the above butter, as weighed at Weld's store. Elias K. Carpenter." Held, that the paper imported no contract of sale, there being in it no words of sale, nor name of purchaser, nor of the defendant as a seller, but was a mere memorandum of weight of butter, and that the defendant had received payment of some one not named; and that the plaintiff was not prevented by it from proving, by parol, the contract of sale, and a warranty of the quality of the butter. Houghton v. Carpenter, 40 Vt. 588.

471. Order. The plaintiff gave the defendant an order, as follows: "H. H. Spafford: Please pay S. Merrill the extra pay due me from the State of Vermont, after paying yourself what may be due you, until further notice. Hy. Allen." Held, to be a mere direction as to the appropriation of the money, and, beyond the sum then due the defendant, does not create or fix a debt on the plaintiff to the defendant or Merrill; and that the consideration and object and purpose of the parties are open to parol evidence on both sides. Allen v. Spafford, 42 Vt. 116; and see Perkins v. Adams, 30 Vt. 230.

472. Part of contract not intended to be in the writing. Where it is satisfactorily shown that, for any reason, the parties to a written contract did not intend to reduce the whole contract to writing, and the portion omitted is consistent with the writing, such omitted part may be proved by parol evidence. Winn v. Chamberlin, 32 Vt. 318.

473. So, where the writing by its terms contemplates a subsequent supplemental agreement, such subsequent agreement by parol may be proved. Field v. Mann, 42 Vt. 61.

474. Consideration. The consideration of a written contract may be proved by parol. Smith v. Ide, 3 Vt. 290. Phelps v. Stewart, 12 Vt. 256. Patchin v. Swift, 21 Vt. 292. Troy Academy v. Nelson, 24 Vt. 189. Gregory v. Glead, 33 Vt. 405.

475. In an action upon a written contract, expressing a mere naked promise and requiring parol proof of consideration, the plaintiff's evidence may be met by parol proof of the real consideration; and proving that may prove the contract, "taking into consideration the unwritten as well as the written part of it." Perkins v. Adams, 80 Vt. 280. Allen v. Spafford, 42 Vt. 116.

476. Ambiguity from extrinsic matters. To ascertain the intent of the parties in entering into any contract or agreement, in a case where that intent upon the face of the instrument is doubtful, or the language used will admit of more than one interpretation, the court will look at the situation and motives of the parties, the subject matter of the contract or agreement, and the object to be attained by it, and will allow these circumstances to be shown by parol evidence, notwithstanding the contract itself is in writing. Kellogg, J., in Wing v. Cooper, 37 Vt. 178. Lowry v. Adams, 22 Vt. 160.

477. Whenever any ambiguity in the language of a written contract arises from extrinsic matters, or when, from the language used, the object or extent of the contract cannot be determined, parol evidence is admissible to remove that ambiguity, and ascertain the object upon which the contract was designed to operate. Isham, J., in Noyes v. Canfield, 27 Vt. 85. Rugg v. Hale, 40 Vt. 144.

478. Where the words of a written agreement were open to either one of two constructions;—Held, that the intent might be shown by extrinsic and parol evidence. (What that evidence was, does not appear in the report.) Wing v. Gray, 36 Vt. 261.

479. An order drawn by A on B was in this form: "Please to let C have $30, and that will be your discharge from me in full of our accounts." Whether this was an assignment of the debt to C, or created a mere agency to receive and hold for A's benefit, was properly left to the jury to be found, in connection with the circumstances proved. Harrington v. Rich, 6 Vt. 666.

480. Terms—Phrases. In order to determine the force of terms used in a written contract, we must frequently resort to proof of the circumstances attending the transaction, although not specified in the writing;—as, in a contract to "convey" land, that both parties understood that the premises were leasehold, and that only a leasehold title could be obtained. Lawrence v. Dole, 11 Vt. 549; and see Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 32 Vt. 805.

481. Where a letter was directed to "J W," evidence was held admissible to prove it intended for E W, and the letter was received in evidence against the writer. Wilkins v. Burton, 5 Vt. 76.

482. Parol evidence is admissible to show that by certain marks or characters appended to his name by the cashier of a bank, the word cashier was intended. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Day, 13 Vt. 36.

483. Where a letter of credit was directed to A B, "President, Detroit, Michigan";—Held, that it might be shown by extraneous evidence for whom the letter was intended, by showing that A B was president of the plaintiff bank, and thus authorize a suit thereon in the name of such bank. Michigan State Bank v. Peeks, 28 Vt. 200.

484. The grantor in a deed reserved all the free stones on the land, with the privilege of carrying off said stones. The question being whether this extended to the stone of a ledge under ground;—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to show the situation of the property at the date of the deed, as that there were 80 to 100 tons of free stones then lying on the land, disconnected from any fixed ledge, and that this ledge was not then known; and this being proved,—held, that the reservation did not embrace the stone in the ledge. Putnam v. Smith, 4 Vt. 622. 44 Vt. 207.

485. Parol evidence is admissible to give an application of a written contract to its subject matter, in cases in which the thing, as expressed, is applicable indifferently to more than one subject. Hart v. Hammett, 18 Vt. 127.

486. In an action for the non-delivery of oil, equal to a sample, purchased under a written contract calling for "winter-strained lamp oil," evidence of the meaning of these words as generally used by dealers in oil was properly introduced, from which it appeared that they applied indifferently to winter-strained sperm lamp oil, and to winter-strained whale lamp oil, and that the latter was inferior in quality to the former. The latter was delivered under the contract. Held, that the defendant was properly allowed to prove, that at the time the written contract was executed, the defendant informed the plaintiff that the sample and the oil he was selling was not sperm oil. Ib.—Approved, 40 Vt. 466.

487. The defendant, a forwarder, contracted with the plaintiffs in writing to transport "their freight," during the navigable season, at a stated price per ton, "wool excepted, except at special rates." In an action for a refusal to transport pressed hay under the contract;—Held, that, for the interpretation of this general term "freight," as understood by the parties, parol testimony was admissible in defense, to prove the situation of the parties at the time of making the contract, and the nature, extent and character of the plaintiff's freighting for several years previous,—as, that the defendant had been familiar with the plaintiffs' freighting business and had done it for them under similar contracts; that the plaintiffs had never before dealt in hay to be freighted, and that hay could not be transported at less than double the rates named in the contract, &c. Noyes v. Canfield, 27 Vt. 79.

488. The conditions of a railroad subscription required the extension of the road to Derby Line. Held, that the court would take judicial notice that there was such an incorporated town as Derby, and as the railroad charter, a public act, fixed the north line of Derby as the terminus, the term, Derby Line, upon the face of the contract, must be construed to mean the north line of the town. But evidence was admitted that on the north line of the town was a village, universally known and called "Derby Line." Held, that an ambiguity was thereby raised as to the place intended by that term, which presented a question of fact to be determined by the jury upon proper evidence. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co. v. Baxter, 82 Vt. 805.

489. Parol evidence, not conflicting with nor changing the sense of a written agreement, but only showing to what it was intended to apply—explaining and identifying the subject matter of it by attending circumstances—is admissible. [This applied to the case of what was named in the writing as "contracts" for cloth boards.] Bradley v. Pike, 34 Vt. 215.

490. Where two parcels of land were covered by the same mortgage, and one of them was sold "subject to the mortgage," as expressed in the advertisement and deed;—Held, that this phrase is of doubtful meaning and susceptible of two interpretations, viz: subject to the payment of the whole mortgage debt, or subject to contribute its just proportion with the other parcel; and that parol evidence was admissible to show the sense in which the language was used. [This evidence included declarations made on the occasion of the sale.] Merrill v. Cooper (chancery appeal), 36 Vt. 314.

491. In the sale of a farm, stock, and farm property, a memorandum of the sale was executed by the seller, in which, after enumerating sundry articles and farming tools, was added: "Meaning all the farming tools, &c., now owned by me, and on said farm." The question being whether certain milk pans, used in the management of the farm as a dairy farm and not specifically named in the memorandum, passed by the sale;—Held, that the term "farming tools, &c.," was susceptible of divers meanings, and that parol evidence of extrinsic circumstances and facts was admissible for the purpose of ascertaining to what specific property these words were intended to, and did, apply—as, that the pans were purchased in connection with the farm, which the purchaser contemplated carrying on as a dairy farm, and was so understood by the parties. Rugg v. Hale, 40 Vt. 188.

492. But held, that parol evidence was not admissible to prove that certain grain, raised upon another farm, was included in the purchase and intended to be conveyed. Id.

493. The plaintiff made a written contract with the defendant to cut and fit all the stone work for the fronts and wing walls of a railroad tunnel, at a set price per superficial foot, to be measured in the walls after laid, "all the face of the work that shows to be measured, and none else." In the proper performance of the contract the plaintiff cut, dressed and finished not only the drop, or perpendicular face of the wall, but also the horizontal surfaces of the trend, or slope of the walls which receded by steps, and of the coping stones, and claimed payment for such horizontal surface work under the contract. Held, that parol evidence of the meaning of the words, "face of the work," as used in the trade was proper; but, the meaning of the words being thus ascertained, that evidence of what was said by the parties during the negotiations before the execution of the written contract, as to how the measurement should be made, or what face measurement meant, was properly excluded. St. Martin v. Thrasher, 40 Vt. 460. See 18 Vt. 127. 27 Vt. 79. 40 Vt. 188.

494. To identify subject matter. The identity of the subject matter of a deed, or grant, rests in parol. Patch v. Keeler, 27 Vt. 252.

495. —by concurrent act. Where, in a written description of land, an uncertainty arises, not from the terms used but from their application to the subject matter in its nature and situation, oral evidence is admissible in explanation—as, of the survey actually made and monuments erected. Patch v. Keeler, 28 Vt. 332.

496. Thus, where the setting out of dower by commissioners was of "three rows of apple trees on the west side of the orchard, running north and south in the centre between the third and fourth rows," and the question was whether two trees, the westernmost standing in a line, should be counted as a row or not;—Held, that such evidence was admissible. Id.

As to evidence in particular actions, see the appropriate titles,—as ASSUMPSIT; COVENANT; TRESPASS, &c.;—in particular transactions, see CONTRACT; DEDICATION; FRAUD, &c.;—as affected by the pleadings, see PLEADINGS.

EXCEPTIONS.

- I. TAKING, SIGNING AND FILING.
- II. REQUISITES OF BILL AS TO REFERENCE AND STATEMENT.
- III. ENTRY IN SUPREME COURT; EFFECT; DISCONTINUANCE.
- IV. CONSTRUCTION OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.
- V. CASE STANDS AS UPON WRIT OF ERROR.

I. TAKING, SIGNING AND FILING.

1. When exceptions lie, in general. Exceptions lie to every decision of the court upon a question of law, as well where the issue of fact is to the court, as where it is to the jury. Nash v. Harrington, 1 Aik. 39.

2. Rule as to time of taking exceptions. Exceptions to a charge must be taken at the close of the charge, and before the jury retire. State v. Clark, 87 Vt. 471.

3. Rule of county court. Where a rule of the county court required all exceptions to be taken and noted, and the judge certified in the exceptions other points than those;—Held, that although the judge was not bound to certify any other points than those noted, yet he might properly do so, if satisfied that the matter merited further consideration. Steele v. Bates, 2 Aik. 388.

4. The rule of the county court requiring exceptions to the charge to be taken before the jury retire, is one of practice merely, and cannot be regarded in the supreme court; and when any question arises on the charge, and the court below allows exceptions and spreads the charge upon the record, the supreme court is bound to revise all questions made in regard to such charge, although not excepted to at the time, and application to allow exceptions was only made after the jury had rendered their verdict. Buck v. Squiers, 23 Vt. 498.

5. It is not error for the county court, after verdict, to allow an exception not before taken, that upon the evidence the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Williams v. Heywood, 41 Vt. 279.

6. Exception to entire charge. The county court may and ought to refuse an exception to the entire charge to the jury; and counsel should always be required to specify the particular points in the charge, or in the omission to charge, to which they take exceptions, and they should do this before the jury leave their seats. Goodwin v. Perkins, 39 Vt. 598.

7. Where an exception is to the judgment of the court upon the evidence detailed, and the evidence does not warrant the judgment, the respondent has the benefit of the defect under this exception, although not particularly alluded to before the case was submitted. State v. Gilbert, 36 Vt. 145.

8. Signing. A bill of exceptions signed by the assistant county judges, instead of the presiding judge, was dismissed on motion. Small v. Haskins, 29 Vt. 187. (G. S. c. 30, s. 57.)

9. A writ of error based upon a bill so signed, was dismissed, for that it was no part of the record. Small v. Haskins, 30 Vt. 172.

10. The judge who presided at the trial may correct a bill of exceptions, nunc pro tunc, after his time of office has expired. Lyons v. Rood, 11 Vt. 165. Contra, Phelps v. Conant, 30 Vt. 277. (Now allowed by G. S. c. 30, s. 58.)

11. Filing. If exceptions taken in the county court are not in fact filed in the clerk's office within 30 days after the rising of the court (G. S. c. 30, s. 57), they cannot afterwards be filed nunc pro tunc, and cannot be considered in the supreme court. Higbee v. Sutton, 14 Vt. 555. Nixon v. Phelps, 29 Vt. 198.

12. Nor will a writ of error lie thereon, they not being part of the record. Small v. Haskins, 30 Vt. 172.

13. Where a declaration on book was filed in offset, and to a judgment on the report of the auditor exceptions were duly filed by the defendant;—Held, that such exceptions could be entertained so far as the judgment of the county court for the ultimate balance was affected thereby; but that they did not uphold exceptions taken upon trial of the other branch of the case [the original action], which last exceptions were not seasonably filed. Nixon v. Phelps, 29 Vt. 198.

14. The statute requiring exceptions to be filed with the clerk within thirty days after the rising of the court, has reference only to that term of the court at which final judgment in the case is rendered, and not to some previous term when some interlocutory judgment was rendered. Thetford v. Hubbard, 22 Vt. 440.

II. REQUISITES OF BILL AS TO REFERENCE AND STATEMENT.

15. The judge, in drawing up a bill of exceptions, certified that his charge upon a certain point was the same as in another case named. Held, well enough; it was but making a copy of the charge in the other case a part of this. St. Johnsbury v. Waterford, 15 Vt. 692.

16. Where two bills of exceptions were placed upon the record, and they were contradictory;—Held, that, neutralizing each other, this was equivalent to a refusal to charge, and the judgment was reversed. (Redfield, J., contra, thinking that the bill last allowed superseded the first.) Briggs v. Georgia, 12 Vt. 60.

17. Depositions or papers filed as evidence in the court below are no part of the record, and cannot be regarded as such in the supreme court, except as the facts therein are stated in the exceptions or the case agreed. Sargeant v. Leland, 2 Vt. 277.

18. All papers in a case belonging to the files in the county court, as the record, writ, service, pleadings, &c., are always treated as part of the case in the supreme court on exceptions, though not specially referred to in the exceptions as part of the case. Frost v. Bates, 16 Vt. 145. Wheelock v. Sears, 19 Vt. 559. Other documents and writings, used on the trial as matters of evidence, must be specially referred to and made a part of the case, or they will not be noticed. Wheelock v. Sears. Sargeant v. Leland.

19. Copies of all papers referred to in a bill of exceptions, not belonging to the files in court, should, properly, be attached to the bill of exceptions before signing it. Unless attached to the case, the excepting party must see that such copies are furnished, or he cannot be heard in support of his exceptions, and the judgment below must be affirmed. Frost v. Bates, 16 Vt. 145. Fish v. Field, 19 Vt. 141.

20. The party who tenders a bill of exceptions must, at his peril, place so much there as shows that the county court did err. This must be made to appear affirmatively, either by stating definite law points arising and decided, or by stating the whole evidence, the legal import of which is embraced in the decision, and, in such case, it must appear to be the whole;—for the presumption is that the judgment below is correct until the contrary appears. Richardson v. Denison, 1 Aik. 310. Eaton v. Houghton, 1 Aik. 380. Adams v. Ellis, 1 Aik. 24. Stearns v. Warner, 3 Aik. 26. Green v. Donaldson, 16 Vt. 162.

21. An objection to a tax sale and proceedings "for other defects on the face of the papers, apparent of record," is too indefinite and vague for consideration. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

III. ENTRY IN SUPREME COURT; EFFECT; DISCONTINUANCE.

22. After final judgment below. Exceptions are not to be entered in the supreme court, until the next term after a motion for a new trial in the county court has been there disposed of. Stimpson v. Cummings, 15 Vt. 787.

23. Before a case can properly come into the supreme court on exceptions, there should be a full and perfect judgment in the county court. Probate Court v. Chapin, 31 Vt. 378.

24. On an issue of fact joined in the county court, the court found and stated the facts in a bill of exceptions, with a judgment in the alternative,—that if the supreme court should be of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the full sum claimed, then the defendant consents that such judgment shall be entered; but, otherwise, for a less sum. Held, that the supreme court could not enforce such rule; and they declined hearing the case, until the exceptions should show an absolute judgment rendered for one of the parties. Day v. Essex Co. Bank, 13 Vt. 115.

25. A case may properly pass to the supreme court on exceptions, whenever it is so far ended in the county court that, if no exceptions were taken, it would go out of court. Hayes v. Stewart, 23 Vt. 622.

26. In a trustee suit in the county court, where there is judgment for the defendant, the case may at once pass on exceptions to the supreme court, without any judgment rendered as to the trustee. Id.

27. No civil cause can pass to the supreme court until after final judgment in the county court. Exceptions taken on the trial—as to an interlocutory ruling or judgment—must be filed, and lie to await the final judgment. If brought into the supreme court before final judgment, the case will be treated as a mis-entry, and be erased from the docket. Gage v. Ladd, 6 Vt. 174. Fisk v. Herrick, 10 Vt. 67. Finney v. Hill, 10 Vt. 264.

Note.—Since Rev. Stats. 1840, corresponding with G. S. c. 30, s. 56, this ruling has been departed from;—as, in Mossecux v. Brigham, 19 Vt. 457, where exceptions were taken to allowing a justice suit to be entered on petition, and before trial or judgment the exceptions were heard and the decision affirmed, and the case remanded to be proceeded with to trial; but this objection was not there taken; so in McDaniels v. McDaniels, where a verdict for the plaintiff was set aside for misconduct of the jury and exceptions taken thereto [principal case reported, 40 Vt. 363]. This was heard and argued January T., 1867, on defendant's motion to strike off the case as a mis-entry, because the case was not ended in the county court. The motion was denied, and the exceptions were heard at General Term, 1867,—the court treating the question as one of discretion. See In re Cooper, 32 Vt. 254. Tarbell v. Downer, 29 Vt. 339. Probate Court v. Brainard, 48 Vt. 620.

28. Effect as to the judgment. An action lies upon a judgment of the county court, although exceptions thereto were taken, but without stay of execution, and they are pending in the supreme court. Tarbell v. Downer.

29. The plaintiff recovered judgment below; the defendant excepted, but execution was not stayed, and the defendant neglected to prosecute the case on his exceptions. Held, that the judgment should be affirmed with costs to the plaintiff, unless he had been notified in writing before the term that the suit would be abandoned. Kelly v. Haskell, 19 Vt. 602.

30. In like case;—Held, that such notice in writing must be given at least twelve days before the term, in order to avoid an affirmance with costs; but that the defendant might elect to be heard on his exceptions. Allen v. Hard, 19 Vt. 606.

31. Discontinuance. Where exceptions are allowed by the county court, with stay of execution, and the exceptions are actually filed, the excepting party cannot abandon them, so as to prevent an affirmance of the judgment in the supreme court. Batchelder v. Tenney, 27 Vt. 784.

32. The death of a party pending exceptions in the supreme court, and representation of insolvency, do not work a discontinuance, but the exceptions must be disposed of, as on a writ of error. Walker v. King, 2 Aik. 304.

IV. CONSTRUCTION OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

33. Favorable presumptions. All reasonable presumptions will be made, in the supreme court, in favor of the regularity of the proceedings and decisions of the county court, and unless it appears affirmatively upon the bill of exceptions that error has intervened, the judgment will be affirmed. Poultney v. Glover, 23 Vt. 328. Bradley v. Pratt, 28 Vt. 378. Green v. Donaldson, 16 Vt. 162. Oaks v. Oaks, 27 Vt. 410. Beard v. Murphy, 87 Vt. 99.

34. Where only the substance of the charge is professed to be stated in the bill of exceptions, the supreme court will treat the bill as a memorandum of a charge that was full, developing into all needful detail of explanation, illustration and application. Dean v. McLean, 48 Vt. 412.

35. Error must be shown affirmatively. Evidence offered must be taken to have been properly rejected, unless it appears affirmatively that it was material. Isham v. Eggleston, 2 Vt. 270.

36. A case must be decided from what appears in the bill of exceptions, and, in order to a reversal, error must be shown affirmatively. Where the question is as to the pertinency of testimony admitted, if such testimony had any legal tendency to prove the issue, in any reasonably supposable state of the evidence as detailed in the bill of exceptions, it is impossible for the supreme court to say that it was improperly received. Green v. Donaldson, 16 Vt. 162.

37. In a hearing on exceptions after verdict, all averments on the side of the successful party which were involved in the issue tried, will be taken to have been duly proved, or admitted, unless something is placed on the record to show the contrary. Gates v. Bowker, 18 Vt. 28.

38. Where the court, "upon the facts found by the referee," adjudged, pro forma, that the cause of action arose from the willful and malicious act of the defendant;—Held, that the conclusive presumption from the granting of the certificate was, that the court found the malice from the facts reported, and that the judgment was pro forma only as to the law arising upon the finding. Patee v. Pelton, 48 Vt. 182.

39. Where, on a trial by the court, the judgment rendered involves the finding of a fact,—as, a demand before suit, or a conversion in trover,—it will be taken that such fact was found, and upon legal evidence, unless the bill of exceptions shows the contrary. Harriman

v. School District, 35 Vt. 818. Seward v. Heflin, 20 Vt. 144.

40. A bill of exceptions does not stand upon the footing of pleadings, where no intentment is to be made in favor of the party thus setting up his right, but is to be understood in the usual and ordinary sense of common communication, as a plain statement of the facts for both parties. Thus, in a pauper case, where a certain relationship was stated in the exceptions, it was held to be understood as a legitimate relationship. Westford v. Essex, 81 Vt. 459.

41. If the interpretation of a bill of exceptions is reasonably doubtful, nothing should be presumed against its statements with a view to predicate error, but all fair and just constructions and intentments should be made in favor of the decision below. Crane v. Crane, 33 Vt. 15. McCann v. Hallock, 30 Vt. 233.

42. An agreed case was aided, to establish the fact of citizenship of a party, by the writ and execution made part of the case, wherein he was described as a resident citizen. Sawyer v. Vilas, 19 Vt. 43.

43. Where an exception appears in terms to have been taken in the county court, it must be regarded as rightly before the supreme court, unless other parts of the bill show, not only that it may not have been passed upon by that court, but, also, to the reasonable satisfaction of the supreme court, that it was not. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536.

44. It "appeared." Where a bill of exceptions states that certain facts appeared, it must be taken that of these facts there was no dispute, or that it was so conceded; otherwise, the statement should be that the testimony tended to prove such facts. Beach v. Packard, 10 Vt. 96.

45. Verdict directed. Where the court directs a verdict, the excepting party has a right to the most favorable view of his case;—that is, he may consider every thing as found in the case, which the testimony had any legal tendency to establish. Knapp v. Winchester, 11 Vt. 351.

46. Presumed waiver. An objection not appearing to have been taken in the county court, will be presumed to have been waived. Brigham v. Hutchins, 27 Vt. 569.

47. Reports of auditors, and referees. In actions of book account, or cases referred, passing to the supreme court upon exceptions, no questions can be there revised, except questions of law arising either upon the facts reported by the auditor or referee, or found and placed upon the record by the county court. Putnam v. Dutton, 8 Vt. 396. Clark v. Whipple, 12 Vt. 488. McDaniels v. McDaniels, 40 Vt. 348.

48. Where referees point out to the court a question of law, the final determination of which they refer to the court, although they themselves decide it provisionally, it is not necessary to file exceptions to the report, in order to raise the question upon such decision. Sargeant v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 380.

49. Where the questions made and decided by the county court, upon the report of auditors, were incorporated into the bill of exceptions, they were held to be regularly before the supreme court for revision, although they did not appear to have been made by the exceptions filed to the report. Vilas v. Downer, 21 Vt. 419.

V. CASE STANDS AS UPON WRIT OF ERROR.

50. All cases passing to the supreme court on exceptions are to be viewed strictly as matters in error. They cannot be treated as motions or petitions for new trials, nor as calling for the exercise of judicial discretion; nor can there be any revision of questions of fact settled below, whether by jury, court, or consent of parties. Way v. Wakefield, 7 Vt. 223.

51. A case brought to the supreme court on exceptions stands as upon a writ of error, and the court has no discretion, if error has intervened as disclosed by the record, but to reverse the judgment. Penniman v. Patchin, 5 Vt. 346. Irish v. Cloyes, 8 Vt. 30. Blodgett v. Adams, 24 Vt. 23.

52. Though the case be of such trifling importance as that a new trial would be refused upon motion or petition, the judgment must be reversed if error has intervened. Fullam v. Cummings, 16 Vt. 697.

53. In our practice, under the statutes upon that subject, the proceedings to revise a judgment of the county court upon exceptions taken there and passed to the supreme court, are similar to the proceedings upon a writ of error, and are not like the proceedings upon exceptions in the English practice, which are heard before a full bench of the same court, and are treated like motions for a new trial. Here, upon a bill of exceptions, although the whole testimony used in the county court may be referred to and may pass to the supreme court as part of the exceptions, the finding of the county court in matters of fact cannot be revised, however erroneous in the opinion of the supreme court that finding might be. Pomfret v. Barnard, 44 Vt. 527. Card v. Sargeant, 15 Vt. 398.

54. Facts, as distinguished from evidence. The supreme court cannot try a question on exceptions, that is to be ascertained by weighing evidence, or drawing inferences therefrom. The facts must be first found and reported. Bartlett v. Churchill, 24 Vt. 218.

55. The supreme court cannot treat as a fact in the case, what is not reported by the county court in a trial by the court as a fact found, although the evidence and special facts reported tended to prove such fact, unless it appears from what was shown, that the county court was bound as matter of law to find that fact. Brattleboro E. Society v. Reed, 42 Vt. 76.

See ERROR; PRACTICE IN SUPREME COURT.

EXECUTION.

I. ISSUING OF EXECUTION.

II. FORM AND REQUISITES.

III. EFFECT.

IV. RELIEF AGAINST ERRONEOUS EXECUTION.

V. PROCEEDINGS UNDER EXECUTION.

1. In general.

2. Levy upon personal property.

3. Levy on real estate.

VI. VACATING INFORMAL LEVIES.

I. ISSUING OF EXECUTION.

1. An award of execution follows final judgment, as of course. Hence, the want of such entry on the record does not vitiate; the clerk may add it at any time. Little v. Cook, 1 Aik. 363.

2. It is no part of the official duty of the clerk to issue an execution, till it is called for by the party entitled to it. Smith v. Howard, 41 Vt. 74.

3. Renewing. An execution cannot be legally renewed by any indorsement made by the magistrate upon it; but upon return of the execution unsatisfied, he may issue another, making a suitable minute on his record. State v. Campbell, 2 Tyl. 177.

4. An execution renewed by the justice who issued it by carrying the date forward, although so done after it has been delivered to an officer for collection but before any service made, is not so far void as that it may be set aside by audita querela. Such practice should be discouraged. Sawyer v. Doane, 19 Vt. 598.

5. Time for issuing. When a judgment is rendered at a term of court ending on Saturday, the next Monday is the earliest date on which the plaintiff, without leave of the court, can take out execution. Allen v. Carty, 19 Vt. 65. (G. S. c. 33, s. 92.)

6. In an action against A and B upon a joint contract, A suffered a default, but B entered a review. Judgment was entered up against A, and execution issued against him, on which he was committed and gave a jail bond. To an action on the bond the defendant pleaded, that there was no such record of judgment against A. Held, by a majority, that the execution issued prematurely and was erroneous; that the review by B vacated the judgment as to both, since there could be but a single assessment of damages; and the plea was sustained. Downer v. Dana, 23 Vt. 22, and see Jones v. Spear, 21 Vt. 426, 431.

7. The county court at its Nov. Term 1857, on the 7th Dec. took a recess, and the following entry was made on the docket: "The court for the purpose of completing the business of its session was adjourned to the 21st Dec. 1857;" and at the same time made an order as follows: "Executions on judgments in trials completed may issue as of date Dec. 8, 1857." The court reassembled on the 21st, and finally adjourned on the 24th Dec. Held, that an execution issued within 30 days after Dec. 25, although upon a judgment completed before the recess, was regular and sufficient to charge the attached property;—that the reassembling of the court was not at an "adjourned term." (G. S. c. 38, s. 92; c. 30, s. 38.) Paul v. Burton, 32 Vt. 148.

8. Prematurely issued. In like case, where the cause was tried before the recess, with judgment for the plaintiff, he took exceptions with an order of stay of execution. During the recess, the clerk, by his direction—no exceptions having been filed—erased the docket entry and issued execution. Held, that the party could not waive the court's order of stay of execution, and that the execution issued prematurely. (G. S. c. 30, s. 57.) Howard v. Burlington, 35 Vt. 491.

9. An execution issued prematurely—as, against the principal debtor before the determination of the case as to the trustee—is not void, but valid for all purposes, until set aside. Spring v. Ayer, 23 Vt. 516. Hapgood v. Goddard, 26 Vt. 401. Passumpsic Bank v. Beattie, 32 Vt. 315.

10. In order to set aside an execution, because issued prematurely and so far irregularly, the moving party must show two things—diligence, and danger of being unjustly affected by the execution. He must apply in a reasonable time, which is the earliest convenient time. If nothing has been done under the execution but what ought to have been done, although prematurely done, it will not be set aside. Hapgood v. Goddard.

11. Within what time must be issued. An alias execution, issued more than a year after the return of a prior one, and then levied upon land, was held irregular, and not evidence of title in ejectment. Anon. Brayt. 66.

12. An execution must be issued within a year and a day after the date of the judgment; and successive executions must be issued, each within a year and a day after the issuing of the previous one. An execution otherwise issued, and the proceedings under it, are erroneous, but not for that cause void. They cannot be attacked collaterally, but remain valid until set aside by some proceeding brought directly for that purpose. Willard v. Whipple, 40 Vt. 219. Fletcher v. Mott, 1 Aik. 339. Allen v. Carpenter, 7 Vt. 397. Porter v. Vaughn, 24 Vt. 217.

13. But if any legal reason exist why the party could not take execution, as if a stay of execution was ordered by the court, or was procured by a writ of injunction, or writ of error, or there be other legal impediment, then the execution may regularly issue within the ordinary time after the removal of such impediment. Poland, C. J., in Catlin v. Merchants' Bank, 36 Vt. 577. Fletcher v. Mott. Porter v. Vaughn.

14. If a judgment be with cesset executio by agreement until such a time, there need be no scire facias until a year and a day after the time agreed, though such cesset is not entered on the roll. Isham, J., in Porter v. Vaughn, 24 Vt. 217. Quere, as to this, by Poland, C. J., in Catlin v. Merchants' Bank.

15. An execution issued more than a year and a day after the date of the judgment is erroneous, notwithstanding the property attached upon the writ was and remains subject to a lien created by a previous attachment, not yet perfected. Catlin v. Merchants' Bank, 36 Vt. 572.

16. Under G. S. c. 31, s. 74, authorizing the county clerk to issue executions upon a justice judgment in case of the death or removal of the justice, "in the same manner as the justice might do if in office;"—Held, that an execution so issued by the county clerk, two years after the death of the justice, was to be treated the same as if the justice had been then alive and had issued it, and though erroneous, it was not void. Willard v. Whipple, 40 Vt. 219.

II. FORM AND REQUISITES.

17. Must follow the judgment. An execution reciting the judgment as of one term, is not sustained by the record of a judgment rendered at a different term. Rider v. Alexander, 1 D. Chip. 267.

18. An execution which misdescribed the judgment as to the sum of damages recovered [a difference of 67 cents], was set aside on audita querela. Semble, such execution is void, as respects the creditor. Wilson v. Fleming, 16 Vt. 649. 38 Vt. 332.

19. The county clerk, as authorized by statute, issued an execution upon the judgment of a deceased justice, by signing it "Justice of the Peace." Held, that such execution was not sufficient to sustain a levy upon lands, since the record of it in the town clerk's office would show a judgment by one justice, and an execution issued upon it by another justice. Perry v. Whipple, 38 Vt. 278.

20. Legal identity. An execution on a judgment by confession recited truly the damages and the costs confessed, but omitted the statement in the record—"and twenty-five cents more for taking and recording said confession," &c. Held, that the apparent and legal identity of the judgment shown by the record and that recited in the execution, was not destroyed by such omission, and that the execution was sufficient to sustain a levy of it upon lands. Id.

21. Immaterial error. A mistake in an execution in the name of the town in which the jail is situated, does not render the execution void, nor imprisonment under it unlawful. Lewis v. Avery, 8 Vt. 287. Avery v. Lewis, 10 Vt. 332.

22. Where it was recited in the body of an execution that the judgment was rendered by a justice for the county of R, and it was dated at a town in that county;—Held, that this was not controlled by the venue in the margin being of a different county, and that the validity of the execution, or of a jail bond, was not affected thereby. Avery v. Lewis.

23. A judgment was rendered against O as defendant, and H and M as his trustees. The execution described the judgment as "against O, and H, and M, trustees of O, debtors," and the precept was to levy it of the goods, &c., "of the debtors." Held, on audita querela, that the execution should be construed as if the word against was inserted before the name H in the description of the judgment, and that the word "debtors," in the precept, meant H and M only, and was sufficient. Hamilton v. Wilder, 31 Vt. 695.

24. — or omission. An execution was committed to an officer for service, in which the usual direction to the officer to dispose of the goods as the law directs, was omitted. Held, that he could not for this cause refuse or neglect to serve it. Chase v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 469.

25. Return day. Where a justice judgment is rendered on confession, under the Statute of 1797, the execution must run 60 days only; it is only where the confession is under the Act of 1821, that the execution can run 120 days. Hatch, ex parte, 2 Aik. 28.

26. Judgment paid in part. Although part of a judgment has been paid, yet if this does not appear by the record, an execution for the full sum is not irregularly issued. Perry v. Ward, 20 Vt. 92.

27. First execution satisfied in part. Where an execution has been satisfied in part, an alias that states that execution of the whole judgment remains to be done, and commands the officer to collect the whole, is irregular, although the amount satisfied on the first execution is indorsed on the alias. So held, as to an alias execution levied on lands. Fairbanks v. Devereaux, 48 Vt. 550.

28. Against the body. In an action of tort, the execution may run against the body, although the original writ did not. Hunt v. Burdick, 42 Vt. 610.

29. — following the original writ. Prima facie, an execution should follow the original writ; as a capias execution—after a capias writ. If new facts arise before execution, entitling the debtor to freedom from arrest, he may pursue his right on habeas corpus, and perhaps in other modes. Wright v. Hazen, 24 Vt. 148.

30. A new affidavit is not necessary to warrant an execution against the body, where the original was so issued and served upon proper affidavit filed. Davis v. Dorr, 30 Vt. 97. Converse v. Washburn, 48 Vt. 129. (G. S. c. 88, s. 76.)

31. Jan'y. 1, 1839. Where different contracts are embraced in the same declaration, some of which were made before Jan'y. 1, 1839, and some after; or, in an action on book, where part of the demand accrued after that date, and there is one judgment, the plaintiff cannot, under the statute abolishing imprisonment for debt upon contracts made after that date, have an execution against the body of the debtor. Witt v. Marsh, 14 Vt. 303.

32. Certificate — "Willful and malicious." Under the Act of 1797, it was the form of the action which determined whether a certificate of "willful and malicious" could be properly allowed upon an execution. Fisher v. Commissioners, &c., 3 Vt. 328.

33. A certificate of "willful and malicious," cannot be granted in an action of trover upon an officer's receipt for property attached. The receipt is substantially a contract, and a failure to meet the obligation of it must be regarded merely as a breach of contract, and not a tort, although, rather by a legal fiction, the officer is allowed to maintain trover upon it. Soule v. Austin, 35 Vt. 515.

34. A certificate indorsed upon an execution issued upon a judgment rendered in an action of tort, in order to be sufficient, should be, not that the cause of action arose from the willful and malicious act or neglect of the defendant, but that, at the time of rendering such judgment it was adjudged by the court, that the cause of action arose, &c. Such a defective certificate was vacated on habeas corpus. In re Wheelock, 13 Vt. 875. (G. S. c. 121, s. 28.)

35. A close jail execution under G. S. c. 121, s. 24, is based on the judgment of the court that the cause of action arose from the willful and malicious act or neglect of the defendant, &c.; and the mode of service of the original process is immaterial. Adams v. Wait, 43 Vt. 16.

36. In an action on the case, the court denied the defendant's motion for a continuance and rendered judgment for the plaintiff, and on his motion, against the defendant's objection, the court, without the introduction of any testimony, adjudged that the cause of action arose from the willful and malicious act of the defendant, and granted a certified execution. Held, that the awarding of the certificate, without evidence, was error. Stowe v. Powell, 46 Vt. 471.

37. Where the facts are spread upon the record by the findings of the county court, or the report of an auditor or referee, it is a question of law, revisable by the supreme court on exceptions, whether such facts entitle the plaintiff to a certificate of "willful and malicious." Styles v. Shanks, 46 Vt. 612. See Robinson v. Wilson, 22 Vt. 35. Soule v. Austin, 35 Vt. 515. Whiting v. Dow, 42 Vt. 262.

38. Where the parties entered into a contract which made them co-partners, practically, and in an action of account, judgment passed against the defendant, and it did not appear affirmatively from what cause the defendant's deficiency arose;—Held, that the county court properly refused a certified execution. Styles v. Shanks.

39. The plaintiff consigned flour to the defendant, a merchant, to be sold on commission, and he mingled with his own funds the avails of the flour so sold, making payments from time to time, and receiving from time to time other consignments. After judgment for the balance, upon a motion for a certified execution, the court found that the defendant had failed to pay the plaintiff on account of misfortunes in business with which the plaintiff had no connection, and adjudged that the cause of action arose from the willful and malicious act of the defendant, and ordered a close jail certificate. Held, that the certificate was properly granted. Langdon v. Bowen, 46 Vt. 512.

40. The county court has power to grant a close jail certificate in an action for seducing the plaintiff's minor daughter and getting her with child, though there was nothing in the evidence to show that the cause of action was willful and malicious, except such facts as were necessary to entitle the plaintiff to recover. Whiting v. Dow, 42 Vt. 262.

41. After judgment in an action under Stat. 1869, No. 4, s. 3, a certified execution is proper against the defendant who unlawfully furnished the liquor. Smith v. Wilcox, 47 Vt. 537.

42. Vacating certificate. Under G. S. c. 121, a judge of the supreme court has jurisdiction to vacate a close jail certificate, granted where the recovery was for money held in a fiduciary capacity, as in other cases, Vt. Life Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 48 Vt. 156.

III. EFFECT.

43. Void. An execution made returnable in 60 days, when required by law to be returnable in 120 days, is irregular and void for all purposes. Bond v. Wilder, 16 Vt. 398. Hatch, ex parte, 2 Aik. 28. Tichout v. Cilley, 3 Vt. 415. Jameson v. Paddock, 14 Vt. 491. Henry v. Niles, 26 Vt. 541. Fifield v. Richardson, 34 Vt. 410. Perry v. Whipple, 38 Vt. 283.

44. In assumpsit by a sheriff upon a receipt for property attached, the declaration averred a demand of the property that it might be levied upon to satisfy the execution mentioned in the declaration. Such execution, as described, was irregular,—being a justice's execution returnable in 60 days, whereas it should have been 120 days. Held, that the plaintiff showed no title, and the declaration was adjudged ill on demurrer. Jameson v. Paddock.

45. All proceedings under a void execution,—as, a levy and return of satisfaction by the officer,—are void, and the judgment remains in full force. Fifield v. Richardson, 34 Vt. 410.

46. Voidable. An execution not void, but merely voidable, is a justification in trespass of every act done under it, according to its precept. Wood v. Kineman, 5 Vt. 588. 8 Vt. 512. 28 Vt. 17.

47. Effect as a bar. An execution in life, and in the hands of an officer for collection, is no bar to an action upon the judgment. White River Bank v. Downer, 29 Vt. 332.

48. Not even if the execution has been levied upon property, unless such levy has produced satisfaction. Tarbell v. Downer, 29 Vt. 339.

49. Interest. Where twelve per cent interest has been allowed on an execution for delay occasioned by an audita querela, the court "inclined to the opinion" that this was a satisfaction of all other interest during the period of such allowance. Perry v. Ward, 20 Vt. 92. 8 C., 18 Vt. 120.

50. Stay as affecting lien. An order for stay of execution, obtained by the plaintiff after judgment by default, would not prolong the lien created by the attachment, unless made for good reason arising from the situation or condition of the property itself in respect to title or claim upon it, so as to require the aid of a court of equity to remove the doubt or difficulty in pursuing the legal remedy. But held, under such circumstances, that the lien was preserved. Rowan v. Union Arms Co., 36 Vt. 124.

51. Presumed satisfaction. An execution issued upon a judgment will be presumed satisfied, unless it be produced, or its loss shown, or the presumption of payment be otherwise rebutted. Peak v. Barney, 13 Vt. 72. 29 Vt. 342. 2 Tyl. 207.

IV. RELIEF AGAINST ERRONEOUS EXECUTION.

52. Mode. An execution, irregularly issued, may be set aside on motion, or petition, or by audita querela. Porter v. Vaughn, 24 Vt. 211. Fletcher v. Mott, 1 Aik. 339. Allen v. Carpenter, 7 Vt. 397. Matlocks v. Judson, 9 Vt. 343. Vandakin v. Soper, 2 Aik. 248. Williams, J., in Hurlbut v. Mayo, 1 D. Chip. 391. Stanley v. McClure, 17 Vt. 258. Hapgood v. Goddard, 26 Vt. 401. Catlin v. Merchants Bank, 36 Vt. 572.

53. Whether the refusal of the county court to set aside an execution, upon motion, for having been issued more than a year and a day after the judgment, is a proper subject of exception to the supreme court, doubted by Poland, C. J., in Catlin v. Merchants Bank, but allowed; as, also, in Allen v. Carpenter, and Hapgood v. Goddard.

54. Waiver of error. If an execution be issued more than a year and a day after the judgment, the error may be waived by any positive act of the debtor indicating an acquiescence,—as by being present at the levying of the execution and participating in choosing appraisers, knowing, or having the means of knowing, of the error. Catlin v. Merchants Bank. Willard v. Whipple, 40 Vt. 219.

55. Burden of proof. In an audita querela to set aside an execution against the body, in a case of contract;—Held, that it was for the defendant, in justification, to show affirmatively that the proper affidavit was filed. Sawyer v. Vilas, 19 Vt. 43.

V. PROCEEDINGS UNDER EXECUTION.

1. In general.

56. Indorsement of date of receipt. An officer is not liable for an omission to indorse upon an execution the date when he receives it, although this is made his legal duty by G. S. c. 47, s. 1, without proof of actual damage from such neglect. In an action for such neglect, the necessity of calling a witness to prove such date, is not such damage. Abbott v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 208.

57. Demand of payment. In case of an execution against a town, a levy without previous demand of the treasurer would not subject the officer to an action of trespass, but only to an action on the case to recover any damages occasioned by his omission to make such demand. Walker v. Denison, 24 Vt. 551.

58. A demand of payment of an execution against a town made of the person who is treasurer, though not made upon him as treasurer, but as an officer of the town (selectman), and his refusal to pay, were held a sufficient demand and refusal to warrant a levy. Id.

59. The provision of the statute requiring an officer to make demand of payment of the debtor before a levy of the execution, is directory merely, and a levy is not invalidated by an omission to make such demand. Eastman v. Curtis, 4 Vt. 616. Dow v. Smith, 6 Vt. 519. Warner v. Stockwell, 9 Vt. 9. Collins v. Perkins, 31 Vt. 624.

60. For a violation of his duty in this particular, the officer is liable,—as, where he commits the debtor in disregard of his right, without apparent necessity, and from motives of oppression, or malice,—and not otherwise. Id.

61. Levy must be within life. An execution cannot be levied after the return day thereof; but if levied before, the sale and return may be made afterwards. The return must show the fact. Barnard v. Stevens, 2 Aik. 429.

62. Judgment by default in an action on jail bond was set aside by writ of error, where the declaration showed that the debtor was committed after the return day of the execution. Roberts v. Wells, Brayt. 87.

63. Return. Where an execution was levied upon the body of the debtor on the last day of its life, but was not returned into the office from which it issued until afterwards;—Held, that the service was good, and that the officer was not liable to the creditor, without proof of actual damage from neglect to make seasonable return. Fletcher v. Bradley, 12 Vt. 22.

64. The commitment of a debtor on execution is legal, and operates effectually for the creditor's benefit, although the execution is not returned. Watkinson v. Bennington, 12 Vt. 404.

65. An informal return of non est upon an execution was adjudged sufficient, being so in substance. Orvis v. Isle La Motte, 12 Vt. 195.

66. Time of delivery. No action lies for the escape of a debtor committed to jail on mesne process, unless the execution be delivered to an officer for service within fifteen days from the time of rendering final judgment, although the debtor escaped from jail before judgment, and has gone to parts unknown. Weeks v. Martin, 16 Vt. 237.

2. Levy upon personal property.

67. Taking in execution. An officer's return of a levy of execution upon hay, stated that he lodged a true and attested copy of the original execution in the town clerk's office, &c., but omitted any statement of his return of levy thereon being so left. Held, that although this would not create a valid lien on the property as a constructive notice of the levy, it was a sufficient taking of the property in execution to support the officer's subsequent proceedings of advertisement and sale. Jewett v. Guyer, 38 Vt. 209.

68. Place of advertising and sale. The term "public place," as used in the statute designating the place for the posting of notifications of sales upon execution (G. S. c. 47, s. 4), and for taxes (G. S. c. 84, s. 11), means a place where the advertisement would be likely to attract general attention, so that its contents might reasonably be expected to become a matter of notoriety in the vicinity. If answering this condition, it might be a private dwelling, a barn, a shed or other out-building, or even a rock, tree, or fountain. It need not be a place which people are accustomed to resort to, or to stop at, to transact business. Austin v. Soule, 36 Vt. 645. Alger v. Curry, 40 Vt. 487.

69. The place named in an officer's return upon an execution, as the place of advertisement and sale, will be presumed to be a "public place," in the absence of proof to the contrary. Drake v. Mooney, 31 Vt. 617. Alger v. Curry.

70. In sales upon execution, where the character and situation of the property and the interests of the parties require, the officer may in his sound discretion, and in good faith, advertise and sell at several places. A return of advertisement and sale at three different places, was held good on its face. Drake v. Mooney.

71. Where property was attached in the town where the debtor resided, and was removed by the officer into another town, and there kept until execution issued, and was there levied upon, but the advertisement and sale were in the town first named;—Held, that this was a compliance with the meaning and spirit of G. S. c. 47, s. 4. Collins v. Perkins, 31 Vt. 624.

72. —must be the same. The advertisement at one place, for sale at another, of property taken in execution, other than hay, grain, &c., makes the officer a trespasser ab initio and liable for its full value, although he may have applied the proceeds of the sale upon the execution. Everts v. Burgess, 48 Vt. 205. Hall v. Ray, 40 Vt. 576.

73. Adjournment of sale. Although no power is expressly given an officer by statute to adjourn an advertised sale on execution, such power is implied as matter of necessity; and in the exercise of a sound and reasonable discretion he may not only adjourn the time but may change the place of sale; provided the place is such as he might have appointed in the first instance. Jewett v. Guyer, 38 Vt. 209. Wood v. Doane, 20 Vt. 612.

74. Return—Presumption. In favor of an officer's proceedings on execution, the court will presume, the contrary not appearing, that the sale was had at the time and place appointed in the advertisement. Beattie v. Robin, 2 Vt. 181.

75. So, that the place of posting was the same as the place at which, by the advertisement, it was to be and was sold. Drake v. Mooney, 31 Vt. 617.

76. So, that the levy was made in the town where the property was advertised and sold. Jewett v. Guyer, 38 Vt. 209.

77. The statement in an officer's return upon an execution was, that he "advertised the property to be sold" at a place named. Held, that this was a sufficient statement that the advertisement was set up at the same place. Collins v. Perkins, 31 Vt. 624.

78. Inequality in sale. Trover will not lie in favor of an execution debtor against the execution creditor, for property bid off by the creditor on the execution sale, because of an irregularity of the officer in the sale. Hale v. Miller, 15 Vt. 211.

79. Execution not returned. It is no objection to an officer's maintaining trespass for taking from his possession property taken on execution, that the execution was not returned. Sewell v. Harrington, 11 Vt. 141.

8. Levy on real estate.

80. Sale. Lands taken on execution in favor of the Vermont State Bank may be sold on the execution, and the execution need not be recorded. (Slade's Stat. 214, ss. 18-15.) Vt. State Bank v. Clark, Brayt. 236.

81. What may be set off on levy. It is no objection to a levy upon land attached, that the debtor had sold and conveyed those premises subsequent to the attachment, and that he had other lands sufficient to satisfy the execution, which might have been levied upon. Young v. Judd, Brayt. 151. Nor, that the appraisers had appraised other land to an amount larger than the execution, and that the creditor then abandoned that property and levied upon the land in question. Id.

82. The death of a defendant after judgment does not prevent the levy of an execution upon the real estate attached and held upon the original writ. Passumpsic Bank v. Strong, 42 Vt. 295; and see Downer v. Brackett, 21 Vt. 605-6.

83. The sheriff having two executions in favor of one creditor against one debtor, levied them together upon the same parcel of land, as a whole, in satisfaction of both executions. Held good. Baldwin v. Foot, 1 Tyl. 14.

84. Where the legal title to lands is of record in A, but the equitable title and ownership is in B, notice of B's title, received by an attaching creditor of A before levy of execution upon the land, though after the attachment, will protect the title of B against the levy. Hackett v. Callender, 32 Vt. 97.

85. The levy will not hold the equitable title in such case, even though the creditor have no notice of the trust. Hart v. Farm. & Mech. Bank, 33 Vt. 252. Abell v. Howe, 43 Vt. 409.

86. Interest set off must be designated. A levy upon "all the right, title and interest of the debtor, in and to" certain lands, without further designation of the interest levied upon, is void. Paine v. Webster, 1 Vt. 101. Arms v. Burt, 1 Vt. 803.

87. Alteration of return on the attachment. A levy of execution is not affected by a subsequent unauthorized alteration of the officer's return upon the attachment. Gilman v. Thompson, 11 Vt. 643.

88. Statute requisites—Conditions. The levy of an execution upon lands is a proceeding in invitum. Hence, all the statute requisites to the passing of the title must be complied with. They are in the nature of conditions precedent. Bennett, J., in Morton v. Edwin, 19 Vt. 80.

89. Mode of levy—Estate of husband. The mode of levying upon a husband's estate in the land of his wife, after issue born alive, is by metes and bounds, and upon his entire interest to that extent. Matlocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326.

90. —of tenant in common. The levy upon part of the interest of a tenant in common should be upon an aliquot proportion of his entire interest. If made upon his entire interest in a part of the land, as by metes and bounds, it is void. Smith v. Benson, 9 Vt. 138. Gahusha v. Sinclear, 3 Vt. 399; arguendo, 11 Vt. 325.

91. A levy must be upon the whole estate which the debtor has in the land. If a less estate be carved out, leaving a reversion in the debtor, such levy is void as against the debtor, and no title passes. Howe v. Blenden, 21 Vt. 315.

92. A levy upon an undivided moiety of a given portion of the land held by the debtor in common with another, instead of upon an undivided portion of the whole, is not absolutely void, but only voidable at the election of the other tenant; it is well enough as to the debtor, and he cannot object to it. Ib.

93. Equity of redemption. A levy upon a fractional or undivided portion of the debtor's land, instead of in severalty by metes and bounds, is wholly ineffectual to transfer the title, unless the statute reasons therefor, as adjudicated by the appraisers, are stated in the officer's return—and this, although the land was in fact subject to a mortgage. (G. S. c. 47, ss. 33-34.) Morgan v. Armington, 33 Vt. 13. Sleeper v. Newbury Seminary, 19 Vt. 451. Edwards v. Allen, 27 Vt. 381.

94. The levy upon a portion of an equity of redemption less than the whole, must be upon an aliquot proportion of the whole; and if made upon a part by metes and bounds, it is absolutely void. Swift v. De-n, 11 Vt. 323. Collins v. Gibson, 5 Vt. 243.

95. A levy upon mortgaged premises was objected to, because it purported to be not a levy upon the land but upon the debtor's equity of redemption in the land. Held good. Ib.

96. In levying upon an equity of redemption, the creditor is not bound to levy upon the entire interest of the debtor in the premises, although the execution exceeds the appraised value of the equity; but he may levy for a portion of his debt upon an undivided part of the debtor's entire interest; and this, although another creditor, at the same time, makes a like levy of his execution, thus making such creditors tenants in common of the equity. Kimball v. Smith, 21 Vt. 449.

97. A mortgage of a leasehold estate, although by metes and bounds, seems to be only an assignment of the rents. And where such mortgage covered also two other parcels of land held in fee, it was held that in a levy of execution upon the equity of redemption, the leasehold estate might be disregarded. Hulett v. Soullard, 26 Vt. 295.

98. The levy of an execution without noticing a mortgage chargeable upon the land, or by estimating the mortgage at too small a sum, is not a defect of which the debtor, or those claiming under him, can complain. It is the creditor in such case, and not the debtor, who is injured. Perrin v. Reed, 35 Vt. 2. Slocum v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 137. See Paine v. Webster, 1 Vt. 101, 129 131.

99. In setting off lands upon execution, the value of the interest set off must be ascertained,—as, if the lands are incumbered, the value of the equity of redemption. Fairbanks v. Devereaux, 48 Vt. 550.

100. Homestead. If the lands are subject to the homestead right, the homestead must be first set out. A set-off of the land subject to the homestead right is irregular. Ib.

101. Equitable title. Land was conveyed by absolute deed, but with a secret defeasance. A judgment creditor of the grantor, proposing to levy his execution upon the land, applied to the parties for information as to the character of the transaction, and, if in trust, to state the amount of the claims upon it, and they refused to inform him. He then levied his execution upon enough of the land, in fee, to satisfy it, and brought his bill against both parties to have the conveyance set aside as fraudulent. It appearing on hearing, that the deed was in effect a security, and that the land not levied upon was amply sufficient to satisfy the just claims of the grantee, the court ordered a decree that the defendants, at their election, pay the orator's execution, he relinquishing all his title under the levy, or else that they quit-claim to him all their right in the part levied upon, and, in either case, that they pay all costs. Smith v. Onion, 19 Vt. 427.

102. Appointment of appraisers—Notice. It is the duty of an officer making a levy upon lands, to notify the debtor to choose an appraiser. If he do not, the levy may be set aside. Briggs v. Green, 38 Vt. 565.

103. No notice need be given to the debtor to appoint appraisers when he is out of the State, nor to his attorney in the suit, unless he be a known agent or attorney legally authorized to act in the premises. Galusha v. Sinclear, 3 Vt. 394. Gilman v. Thompson, 11 Vt. 643.

104. An attorney for the debtor, although his name is indorsed as such upon an execution, is not, without special appointment, an agent for receiving notice for the appointment of appraisers, although the debtor may be without the State. Dodge v. Prince, 4 Vt. 191. Galusha v. Sinclear.

105. Where the execution creditor chose one of the appraisers, and a justice, on his application, appointed the other two, and the debtor had no notice to appoint;—Held, that the levy was void. Stanton v. Bannister, 2 Vt. 464,—overruling Young v. Judd, Brayt. 151.

106. "Disinterested." Appraisers on the levy of an execution should stand in no such relation to either party, as would disqualify them for the execution of judicial power between the parties. The word disinterested, as used in the statute expression, "judicious and disinterested freeholders," means something more than being devoid of pecuniary interest. Blodgett v. Brinsmaid, 9 Vt. 27, 30.

107. Unfriendly feelings of appraisers towards an execution debtor,—as, that they were his "personal enemies and were in litigation with him,"—constitute no legal disqualification, like interest or relationship, to their action as such in the setting off of the debtor's lands upon execution. The justice in making the appointment acts judicially, and is sole judge of their suitableness and fitness. Briggs v. Green, 38 Vt. 565.

108. "Agreed upon." In the return of a levy of execution upon land, a statement that the appraisers were "mutually appointed," or "agreed upon," by the parties, complies with the statute. Eastman v. Curtis, 4 Vt. 616. Aldis v. Burdick, 8 Vt. 21.

109. Appraisal. A levy and set-off which is made on the basis of an appraisal by two of the appraisers, the third not concurring but appraising the land at a less sum, will not be vacated by audita querela at the instance of the debtor. He has not been injured. Hopkins v. Haywood, 36 Vt. 318.

110. Officer's return—Form. The transfer of title to land by levy of execution is a matter stricti juris, and all the material facts necessary to show that the law has been complied with, should appear by the officer's return, and not rest in parol. Sleeper v. Newbury Seminary, 19 Vt. 451. Morgan v. Armington, 33 Vt. 18.

111. A levy made according to the form given by Chief Justice Chipman (N. C. 264), has uniformly been supported, though it wants that particularity which would be required in a new case having no such foundation in forms or in practice. Cleveland v. Allen, 4 Vt. 176. Dodge v. Prince, 4 Vt. 191. Seymour v. Beach, 4 Vt. 498. Chase v. Bowen, 7 Vt. 431. Aldis v. Burdick, 8 Vt. 21. Day v. Roberts, 8 Vt. 413.

112. "Good and lawful freeholders of the vicinity," as used in Judge Chipman's form of the levy of an execution, imports disinterested, and also that the appraisers were residents in the town where the land was situate, as used in the statute,—and in this respect such return is sufficient. Day v. Roberts. Seymour v. Beach. Chase v. Bowen.

113. But not so, where the word "judicious" was used, instead of disinterested. White v. Fox, cited in 8 Vt. 418.

114. Where appraisers are appointed by a justice, the return must certify that he was one who by law might judge between the parties in civil causes, or the levy will be invalid;—unless the return has adopted the more general and approved form of Judge Chipman. Dodge v. Prince, 4 Vt. 191. 8 Vt. 417.

115. Sundry objections taken to a levy of execution considered, and held not material, viz.: irregularity of proceedings before judgment; omission to state demand of payment; mere statement that the appraisers were "mutually appointed" by the parties; that they were "judicious disinterested" (instead of disinterested) "freeholders"; that "they appraised the same," without saying in what way they ascertained the value, as by view of the premises, &c.; that no certificate of the appraisers accompanied the return; that the form of oath administered was not given, except in the statement "I have sworn them as the law directs"; that the bill of fees was too large; that the return was signed as deputy sheriff; that it was not sealed. Eastman v. Curtis, 4 Vt. 616.

116. Description of premises. The levy is sufficient, as to the description, by reference to former deeds upon record, such as to fix the identity of the property with certainty. Maeck v. Sinclear, 10 Vt. 103. Gilman v. Thompson, 11 Vt. 643. 19 Vt. 338. Galusha v. Sinclear, 3 Vt. 394. Hyde v. Barney, 17 Vt. 280.

117. A levy which is good against the debtor, is good against everybody—as, subsequent levy.

ing creditors—the question being, whether the levy sufficiently described the land; and, as to this, the same rule is to be applied to a levy as is applicable to a deed. Barnard v. Russell, 19 Vt. 384.

118. A levy and set-off of a specified number of acres “off of the east end” of a lot, the lot being in rectangular form, was held to be a sufficient description by “metes and bounds,” and should be intended to be cut off by a line parallel with the lot line. Clark v. Fuller, 9 Vt. 356. 10 Vt. 213. 27 Vt. 256. Id., 748.

119. A defective description of some lots in a levy, though they are all appraised together at a gross sum, does not vitiate the levy as to such lots as are well described, unless in some proceeding to set aside the levy. Cleveland v. Allen, 4 Vt. 176. Paine v. Webster, 1 Vt. 101, 129.

120. In a levy, the description began at a notch in the fence “on the east side of the road,” &c., and thence around, by specific courses and distances, “to the road”; and thence “on the line of the road,” &c., and thence by specific course and distance “to the place of beginning.” Held, that no part of the highway was included. Cole v. Haynes, 22 Vt. 588.

121. Record in town clerk's office, return to court and record there. In order to the validity of a levy of execution upon lands so as to pass the title, it is necessary that the execution, with the officer's return thereon, should be recorded in the proper town clerk's office, and should be returned into the office of the court from which it issued, all within the life of the execution. Russell v. Brooks, 27 Vt. 640. Hubbard v. Dewey, 2 Aik. 312. Hall v. Hall, 5 Vt. 304. Downer v. Hazen, 10 Vt. 418. Morton v. Edwin, 19 Vt. 77. Perrin v. Reed, 33 Vt. 62. Little v. Sleeper, 37 Vt. 105. Willard v. Whipple, 40 Vt. 219.

122. It is not necessary that it should be recorded in the office from which it issued, within its life. Perrin v. Reed.

123. But it must be recorded in such office before the suit is brought by which the title under it is to be tested. Morton v. Edwin, 19 Vt. 77.

124. An execution and return of levy upon lands was duly returned to the county clerk's office and filed by him for record, and he commenced recording it, but, before completing the record, went out of office. The execution was inadvertently and by mistake taken from the office and remained lost for three years, when, on being found, it and the return of levy were recorded by the then county clerk. Held, that, as between the levying creditor and the debtor, this was sufficient to pass the title of the debtor under the levy. Perrin v. Reed, 33 Vt. 62.

125. The creditor cannot sustain ejectment against the debtor, founded upon the levy of execution, unless the execution and return have been recorded at length in the town clerk's office, and also in the office of the court from which the execution issued, prior to the commencement of the action. Both are essential to the passing of title by the levy. Morton v. Edwin, 19 Vt. 77.

126. It is not necessary to the validity of a levy, that the officer making it should state in his return, that the levy was actually recorded in the town clerk's office, since the recording is not his act; but where his return is, that he left the execution and levy in the proper town clerk's office “together with seventy-five cents for recording the same, to be recorded in the records of lands in said town,” and there is a certificate of the town clerk of the same date indorsed, that he recorded the same, this, in connection with the return, is prima facie evidence that the execution and return were properly and seasonably recorded, and is a sufficient compliance with the statute in this respect. Willard v. Whipple, 40 Vt. 219.

127. Record as notice. A levy takes effect, as notice, from the time when the execution and return are recorded in the town clerk's office, and if returned to the court from which the execution issued and there recorded within the life of the execution, such levy will prevail over an attachment made after such record in the town clerk's office, though before the return to and record in such court. Willard v. Lull, 20 Vt. 373.

128. — as connecting levy with attachment. Whether, in order to preserve a priority of lien created by the attachment of lands, the execution, with the officer's return of the levy and set-off, must not only be recorded in the proper town clerk's office, but be also returned into the office of the court from which it issued within the five months after the judgment—quære. Id. Willard v. Whipple, 40 Vt. 219–228.

129. The levy of an execution upon lands originally attached, and a set-off, made within five months from the judgment, but not recorded in the town clerk's office until after the five months have expired, is not seasonable to connect it with the attachment lien, so as to prevail against an intervening conveyance or incumbrance. Ellison v. Wilson, 36 Vt. 60.

130. Record from copy. A duly certified copy of an execution and levy from the town clerk's records, was held sufficient prima facie evidence of the recording of the original, although the officer in his return had certified that he had delivered to such clerk a true and attested copy of such execution, &c. Hubbard v. Dewey, 2 Aik. 312.

131. The record in the town clerk's office of the levy of an execution, made from a copy of the execution and officer's return, is sufficient if it substantially agrees with the original. Skinner v. McDaniel, 4 Vt. 421. Williams, J., dissenting.

132. Town clerk's record controls as notice. Where the record of the levy in the town clerk's office showed a void levy,—as, that it was for more than the sum required by the execution to be levied,—although it was correct in the original;—Held, that the execution and return were not so recorded as to convey a title;—that the record was notice only of a defective levy, and might be so treated by creditors and purchasers. Skinner v. McDaniel, 5 Vt. 589. Baylies, J., dissenting.

133. Notice of a levy upon lands, which is defective, does not affect a party acquiring title against it. Ellison v. Wilson, 36 Vt. 60.

134. Evidence of fact of record. Held, that a copy of an execution and levy from the town clerk's office, and a copy of the same from the county clerk's office, were evidence that the execution and levy had been duly recorded in both offices. Hubbard v. Dewey, 2 Aik. 312.

135. A duly certified copy of record, from the county clerk's office, of a county court execution and the levy thereof upon lands, which record embraces a certificate of the town clerk that he had duly recorded the execution and levy in his office, and embraces also the sheriff's return stating the same fact, is prima facie evidence that the execution and levy were duly recorded in the town clerk's office. Benedict v. Heineberg, 48 Vt. 281.

136. — of time of record. Where a town clerk's certificate disagrees with the officer's return, as to the date when the levy of an execution was recorded in his office, such certificate will prevail over the return. Ellison v. Wilson, 36 Vt. 60.

137. Who may impeach levy. Where the plaintiff in ejectment made title by levy of execution;—Held, that it could not be impeached for fraud in the judgment by a defendant whose own levy was defective and void, so that he had not acquired the legal interest of the judgment debtor. Cleveland v. Deming, 2 Vt. 584.

138. Where, in ejectment, the plaintiff claimed title by virtue of a levy so defective as to render it void;—Held, that the defendant in possession, though without title and not a party to the judgment and levy, could object to the levy as a defect in the plaintiff's title. Perry v. Whipple, 38 Vt. 278.

139. But otherwise, as to a stranger to the title of the execution debtor, where the defect is not in the judgment, execution or levy, but in a matter entirely collateral—as, for failure to execute a proper recognizance before taking out execution, such execution being good against all persons until set aside for irregularity. Phelps v. Parks, 4 Vt. 488. 38 Vt. 285.

140. Redemption from levy. By neglect to redeem the levy of an execution according to the terms of the statute (G. S. c. 47, s. 25), the title of the levying creditor becomes absolute. A tender to the creditor personally, but not accepted, has no effect to defeat or redeem the levy. Chandler v. Sawtell, 22 Vt. 818.

141. Debtor a tenant. Where the debtor, or his tenant, remains in possession of the land levied upon, after the six months given for redemption, and without redemption, he holds as tenant of the creditor, and cannot set up an adverse possession. Aldis v. Burdick, 8 Vt. 21.

142. An execution debtor who remains in possession of land levied upon, after the six months given for redemption, is liable in ejectment. Matlocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326.

143. In case on the statute to recover the mesne profits of land levied upon, the defendant may show that he had no title or interest in the land, and has had no possession since the levy. Bowne v. Graham, 2 Tyl. 418.

VI. VACATING INFORMAL LEVIES.

144. The power of the supreme court, on petition, under G. S. c. 48, s. 46, to vacate a levy of execution upon lands for defects in the levy, is not confined to defects apparent upon the face of the levy. Briggs v. Green, 33 Vt. 565. Hyde v. Taylor, 19 Vt. 599. 22 Vt. 845.

145. Upon petition to the supreme court to vacate a levy, for want of notice to the debtor to choose an appraiser, the fact may be proved by parol, in contradiction of the officer's return. Briggs v. Green.

146. Cured by lapse of time—two years. In a levy of an execution upon the whole undivided interest of an heir in the lands of his ancestor, the proportionate share, or amount of such interest, was not stated. Held, that this was, at most, a mere defect of form, and was cured by the lapse of two years without the action of either party to correct it under the statute. (G. S. c. 47, s. 49.) Hyde v. Barney, 17 Vt. 280.

147. Whether G. S. c. 47, s. 22, applies to the levy of an execution on separate parcels of land in two different towns—quare; but if so, and the appraisers are appointed partly from both towns, and no injustice has been done, an acquiescence for two years cures the defect, under s. 49. Perrin v. Reed, 35 Vt. 2.

148. —20 years. A petition to vacate the levy of an execution, and for a new execution, was refused after a lapse of more than twenty years;—the presumption of law being that the debt was satisfied, nothing appearing to rebut such presumption. Tudor v. Taylor, 26 Vt. 444.

149. Levy defective in substance. G. S. c. 47, s. 49, was intended to apply to formal defects, and not to cure, by lapse of time, a levy of execution defective in substance as to the subject matter of the levy, by taking too much of the debtor's land to satisfy the execution. Such levy is and remains invalid. Hopkins v. Hayward, 84 Vt. 474; and see Bell v. Roberts, 13 Vt. 582.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

- I. APPOINTMENT, AND REVOCATION.
- II. RIGHTS, AUTHORITY AND DUTY.
- III. LIABILITY.
- IV. ACCOUNTING.
- V. ACTIONS BY.

I. APPOINTMENT AND REVOCATION.

1. Appointment. The appointment of an administrator de bonis non by the probate court of a district other than the one of original appointment, but to which the town where the deceased resided had been attached by a later statute, was held not void, but only voidable on appeal. Clapp v. Beardsley, 1 Vt. 151.

2. The appointment of an administrator rests exclusively within the jurisdiction of the probate court, and its legality cannot be inquired into in any other court, nor be collaterally questioned in any way. McFarland v. Stone, 17 Vt. 165.

3. A decree of the probate court appointing an administrator, not appealed from, is conclusive as to all matters then existing and involved in the appointment. Laurence v. Englesby, 24 Vt. 42. Steen v. Bennett, 24 Vt. 303.

4. Revocation. The marriage of a female guardian, executrix or administratrix, determines her authority at once by force of the statute, without any order or decree of the probate court for that purpose. (G. S. c. 72, s. 54. Id., c. 51, s. 18.) Field v. Torrey, 7 Vt. 372. Lyman v. Albee, 7 Vt. 508.

5. The supreme court, on appeal, reversed a decree of the probate court removing an administrator who resided out of the State, where he so resided when he was appointed, and was the executor under the will, and where he had a suit pending in this State, as administrator, against the party who sought to have him removed, &c. Wiley v. Brainerd, 11 Vt. 107.

6. The removal of an administrator for any cause within the law, is matter of discretion, merely, of the probate court, or of the county court on appeal, and cannot be revised in the supreme court. Holmes v. Holmes, 26 Vt. 536.

II. RIGHTS, AUTHORITY, AND DUTY.

7. In respect to proof of will. An executor has no authority under a will, without a judgment or decree of the probate court approving or allowing the will. Tucker v. Starks, Brayt. 99.

8. —giving of bonds. Where several are named executors, and only one has given bonds, he is sole executor. So, where several are named trustees, and only one accepts and acts, he is sole trustee, and may sue alone. Trask v. Donoghue, 1 Aik. 870.

9. The acts of executors and administrators done after their appointment, although before they have given bonds, are valid—the statute requiring bonds being regarded as merely directory. Probate Court v. Niles, 32 Vt. 775. Clark v. Tabor, 22 Vt. 595.

10. —representation of insolvency. There is a vast difference between the system of settling estates in this State and in England. Here, the administrator must either represent the estate insolvent, or be taken to have sufficient estate to satisfy all the creditors in money. He must inventory and sell the real estate when necessary for the payment of the debts, and cannot require a creditor to levy his execution upon lands of the estate. In such case he cannot plead plene administravit. Bates v. Kimball, 1 Aik. 95. (1826.) (Since changed by statute, so that all estates are to be settled as if insolvent, without representation as such.)

11. The representation of the insolvency of an estate, without the appointment of commissioners, does not prevent a creditor from sustaining an action against the administrator. Blodget v. Brinsmaid, 7 Vt. 9.

12. —making inventory. An inventory and appraisal of the choses in action of an estate is seldom made in the probate court, and, whether done or not, is of no importance. Adams v. Adams, 22 Vt. 50. Boyden v. Ward, 38 Vt. 636.

13. Powers. An administrator may submit to arbitration any personal claim concerning the estate, so as to bind him, without the consent of the judge of probate. Dickinson v. Dutcher, Brayt. 104.

14. Where goods under attachment were wrongfully taken from the officer, and he died before action brought;—Held, that his administrator could maintain trover for the goods, for the benefit of the attaching creditor, although the intestate had paid nothing, and no claim had been presented against his estate. Hall v. Walbridge, 2 Aik. 215. 2 Vt. 520.

15. An executor's power over the estate is exclusive; and creditors or legatees cannot follow the assets, and make the executor and debtor parties to a bill in equity to enforce their claims, except in some special case, such as collusion or insolvency. Robinson v. Swift, 8 Vt. 377.

16. Whether an administrator de bonis non has a right to represent the creditors of the estate in the prosecution of their rights under an order of distribution,—as, by a prosecution of the bond of the principal administrator for non-payment of the debts under the order of distribution,—quære. Sargent v. Kimball, 87 Vt. 320.

17. He is not responsible for the sum found in the former administrator's hands and ordered to be paid to the creditors, nor is he entitled to the possession or control of it. Poland, C. J. Ib. 323.

18. Joint executors, &c. In case of joint executors or administrators, the authority of each is entire, and the act of one is equally effectual as the joint act of all,—as, to give a release. Gleason v. Lillie, 1 Aik. 28.

19. Where one of two joint administrators discharged a claim due the estate, in consideration of a new promise to him;—Held, that such promise was his private and individual right, which his co-administrator could not control or release. Ib.

20. The plaintiff and two others were executors of a will. The testator had placed in the hands of the plaintiff a note against the defendant, for collection. After the testator's death, the defendant gave a new note for the old one, payable to the plaintiff or bearer, upon which the plaintiff brought suit in his own name, as bearer. After this, the defendant paid the note to the other two executors, upon their agreement to indemnify him against the suit. Held, a good payment. Grinwold v. Clark, 28 Vt. 661.

21. The claim of a surviving administrator against the estate of his co-administrator, for property in his hands in trust to account for, was held properly presentable, on an appeal from commissioners, in a declaration in account; and that questions as to final distribution were foreign to the accounting before the auditor. Adams v. Corbin, 3 Vt. 372.

22. Where lands were devised to A, and he was made executor jointly with B;—Held, under the probate act of 1797 and without the aid of the act of 1821, that whenever all debts due at the decease of the testator with charges of administration, &c., and all specific legacies have been paid, A holds the lands as devisee, and no longer as executor. Nason v. Smalley, 8 Vt. 118.

23. In respect to real estate. It is the duty of an administrator to redeem the mortgaged estate with any property of the deceased, for the benefit of the creditors and heirs; and he cannot take an assignment to himself and set up such title against the estate, unless it appear that he purchased with his own funds, and when there were no assets of the estate where-with the purchase could be made. Clapp v. Beardsley, 1 Aik. 168. S. C., 1 Vt. 151, 167.

24. In administering an estate mortgaged, the administrator should sell, either the whole or the equity, and dispose of the proceeds in payment of the mortgage debt in such way as that the mortgagee can claim a dividend only upon the balance; and his return of sales and account should so exhibit the manner of the transaction;—otherwise, it should be rejected. Duncan v. Fish, 1 Aik. 281.

25. An administrator de bonis non may recover in ejectment against one who obtained his title from the first administrator through collusion, and in fraud of creditors and heirs. Clapp v. Beardsley, 1 Aik. 168.

26. A final recovery of lands in ejectment by an administrator, as such, is prima facie evidence of assets, which is not rebutted simply by evidence of a quit-claim deed of earlier date, executed by the intestate to the administrator, of all his right to lands in the same town. Blodget v. Brinsmaid, 7 Vt. 9.

27. An executor or administrator may satisfy his execution upon the real estate of the debtor; and it must be set off to him, being creditor, and not to the heirs of the estate he represents. Hathaway v. Phelps, 2 Aik. 84. Eastman v. Curtis, 4 Vt. 616.

28. An administrator who is out of possession of land, whether he is disseized or has surrendered the possession to the heir, cannot maintain an action in behalf of the heir, for an act which is a damage to the inheritance. Lyman v. Webber, 17 Vt. 489.

29. An administrator has no authority to execute a deed to the party filing a declaration for betterments in ejectment. Tracy v. Spear, 10 Vt. 490. (Changed by G. S. c. 40, a. 29.)

30. An administrator cannot mortgage one part of the lands of the intestate, to pay a charge upon another part. Green v. Sargeant, 23 Vt. 466.

31. A title which one holds only as executor, or administrator, may be transferred by a conveyance of "all his interest," &c., where the intent to transfer the interest which he has as executor, or administrator, appears from the whole instrument. Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165; and see Stewart v. Thompson, 3 Vt. 255.

32. Where an administrator took a lease of lands from an outside party for the purpose of strengthening the right of his intestate, and after his death his administrators went into possession, and a recovery in ejectment was had against them by the present defendant;—Held, that such recovery did not affect the right of the original intestate, in an action by his administrator de bonis non, because the administrators of the first administrator did not represent the right of the original intestate, and they became trespassers by their entry. Perkins v. Blood, 86 Vt. 278.

33. Where an administrator by order of the probate court sold lands of the intestate and took back a mortgage of the same land to himself, as administrator, to secure part of the purchase money;—Held, that upon foreclosure of such mortgage the title became absolute in him in his individual capacity; that his subsequent conveyance of the land to the same party was not void, but conveyed such title as he had acquired by the mortgage, although in his deed he described himself as administrator, and professed to convey and to covenant in that capacity; and that such covenants bound him personally. Higley v. Smith, 1 D. Chip. 409.

34. An assignment, or conveyance, to one as administrator, vests the property in the estate represented by him, and it becomes subject to the orders of the probate court, as the property of the estate. Shaw v. Partridge, 17 Vt. 636.

35. A license granted by the probate court to an executor or administrator to sell real estate, does not authorize him to incumber the land; but the word "sell," in the license and the statute, is the operative word, and imports that the whole title is to be parted with for an equivalent in money. This authority cannot be enlarged, by his action under it, beyond this its legal effect. Where the executor under a license to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as would be sufficient to raise a certain sum, sold and conveyed one parcel, and with it the privilege of a foot pass to it over another parcel;—Held, that the conveyance of the foot pass was unauthorized, and created no incumbrance upon the second parcel. Brown v. Van Duzee, 44 Vt. 529.

36. The deed of an administrator need not recite the authority for executing it. It is sufficient if the authority exists, and he conveys as administrator. Langdon v. Strong, 2 Vt. 284. 24 Vt. 173.

37. An order or license of the probate court to an administrator to sell real estate, where neither the order nor the records recited such facts found as warranted the order, but only that it appeared to the judge that a sale of the whole would best subserve the interests of all concerned, was held not sufficient to support a deed from the administrator under such sale. Clapp v. Beardsley, 1 Aik. 168. S. C., 1 Vt. 151. 2 Aik. 397. 2 Vt. 255.

38. The acquiescence of an administrator, or guardian, in a mistaken boundary line for the true line, does not bind minor heirs or wards. Burnell v. Malony, 86 Vt. 686.

39. An administrator cannot purchase in, for his own benefit, an outstanding title to land of which his intestate died seized in fact, claiming title; and a title so acquired, or acquired by possession, will enure to the benefit of the estate. North v. Barnum, 10 Vt. 220. S. C., 12 Vt. 205. Perkins v. Blood, 86 Vt. 288.

40. An administrator has no right to become a purchaser of the estate upon which he administers, even when he is solvent and pays the full price. If he do so, those interested may compel a re-sale, or they may, at their election, treat him as purchaser. Green v. Sargeant, 23 Vt. 466.

41. Estate in foreign jurisdiction. Choses in action belonging to a deceased person have their situs in the place of residence of the debtors. They become local by the death of the creditor, and are bona notabilia or assets in the place of the debtor's residence, and (by Redfield, C. J.), according to our decisions, no one but an administrator of the State of the debtor's residence can collect, release or properly administer them. It is held in some states, that they may be remitted to the administrator of the place of domicile of the deceased, but this is no discharge here, I think. Abbott v. Coburn, 28 Vt. 663. 5 Vt. 387.

42. Thus, an administrator in this State has no control over choses in action, where the debtor resides in another State. Bullock v. Rogers, 16 Vt. 294.

43. Where the domicile of the deceased was in another State;—Held, that an administrator, appointed in this State, could not maintain an action to collect a debt due the deceased from a debtor residing in another State. Abbott v. Coburn, 28 Vt. 663.

44. The owner of a bond for the payment of money, given by a debtor resident in New York, died possessed of it in this State. After his decease, the defendant took away the bond into New York. The plaintiff, being afterwards appointed administrator in this State, demanded of the defendant in New York a surrender of the bond, and he refused. In an action of trover for the conversion of the bond;—Held, that the paper contract (the bond) was a chattel in possession, the title to which vested in the plaintiff, as administrator, from the decease of the intestate, although the debt evidenced thereby belonged to the foreign administrator; and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of the bond. Bullock v. Rogers, 16 Vt. 294.

45. Foreign administrator. An administrator, appointed in another State only, acquires no interest in property of the deceased situate in this State, nor in the debts due from resident citizens of this State. Dodge v. Wetmore, Brayt. 92. Lee v. Havens, Brayt. 93. Vaughan v. Barret, 5 Vt. 383.

46. Such administrator cannot indorse a note against a resident of this State, so as to convey any right to the indorsee. Lee v. Havens.

47. Nor discharge such debt, so as to bar a suit thereon by an administrator appointed in this State. Vaughan v. Barret, 5 Vt. 833.

48. Nor maintain ejectment for lands in this State. Anon, Brayt. 108.

49. Nor convey lands of the intestate situate in this State, under an order of sale obtained in such other State. Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 435.

50. Administrator of executor, &c. An executor died, pending an appeal from a decision of the probate court granting license to sell land of the testator for payment of debts. Held, that the administrator of the executor had no such interest in the proceeding as to justify his prosecuting the application in the county court. The administrator of an executor would seem to have no further interest in the first estate, than to close the account of the executor in the probate court. Nason v. Smith, 18 Vt. 170.

III. LIABILITY.

51. Personal contract. A promise by an administrator, where he had assets, to pay a debt against the estate, whereby it was not presented to the commissioners for allowance, was held binding. Willard v. Brewster, Brayt. 104.

52. A special promise of an executor to pay to an assignee a debt allowed against the testator's estate, in consideration of such assignment and of sufficient assets in the hands of the executor, is valid, and he is liable thereon in his own right. Moar v. Wright, 1 Vt. 57. 6 Vt. 675.

53. An administrator is individually liable on his personal contracts, though made for the benefit of the estate. Lovell v. Field, 5 Vt. 218.

54. Administration bond. Where an executor or administrator is solvent, it is his duty to inventory and account for any notes or obligations which the deceased may hold against him, and which are due and payable; and a neglect to do so is a breach of his bond. Probate Court v. Merriam, 8 Vt. 284.

55. The neglect of an administrator de bonis non to return an inventory of the estate is a breach of the condition of his administration bond, for which an action lies. Wilson v. Keeler, 2 D. Chip. 16. So also, for neglect to render his account, according to the condition of his bond. Id. Matthews v. Page, Brayt. 106.

56. The failure of an administrator, or of a guardian, to render his account in the probate court according to the condition of the bond and the order of the court, entitles the prosecutor to recover nominal damages, but no more. Probate Court v. Chapin, 31 Vt. 373. Probate Court v. Slason, 23 Vt. 306.

57. Preliminary decree of probate court. Executors and administrators are not personally liable, nor are the sureties upon their probate bonds, for non-payment of the debts of the estates which they represent, until after the probate court has made an order or decree for the payment of the debts. Bank of Orange Co. v. Kidder 20 Vt. 519. Probate Court v. Vanduzer, 18 Vt. 135. Probate Court v. Chapin, 31 Vt. 373. Boyden v. Ward, 88 Vt. 688. Nor is an executor liable for non-payment of a legacy, until after a probate decree of payment. Probate Court v. Kimball, 42 Vt. 320.

58. The same rule applies to the bonds of guardians and their accounts. Probate Court v. Slason, 23 Vt. 306.

59. An action upon an administrator's or executor's bond is merely a means of enforcing a judgment of the probate court; a mode of obtaining an execution upon its decree. Benton v. Fletcher, 81 Vt. 432. Bank of Orange Co. v. Kidder, 20 Vt. 519.

60. A declaration upon an administrator's bond, assigning as a breach the non-payment of debts, but not averring that the administrator had sufficient assets to pay all the debts, nor alleging any decree of the probate court for the payment of the debts, was held ill, on demurrer to the defendant's plea. Probate Court v. Saxton, 17 Vt. 628.

61. An heir cannot maintain an action against the administrator to recover his distributive share, until the probate court has first ascertained and determined his right. Adams v. Adams, 16 Vt. 238.

62. Payment to former administrator. In an action upon an administrator's bond, assigning as a breach the non-payment to the prosecutor of a dividend struck in the probate court, receipts given to a former administrator for payments made by him on account of the claim, were held properly admitted under the plea of payment. Gordon v. Clapp, 5 Vt. 129.

63. After judgment against an administrator for the penalty in a probate bond for not accounting for land sold, the defendant was allowed, in mitigation of damages, such part of the proceeds of the sale as came to the hands of the administrator de bonis non, for which he had accounted. Probate Court v. Bates, 10 Vt. 285.

64. Legacy—Interest. As to the charge of interest against an executor upon legacies payable to infants, and those of full age, see Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41.

65. Liability for costs. Under the statutes of this State (G. S. c. 54, a. 13), executors and administrators are placed on the same ground with other suitors, as respects their liability for costs; and execution therefor issues against them personally, though the damages recovered in cases appealed must be certified to the probate court. O'Hear v. Skeeles, 23 Vt. 152.

66. Illegal fees. The statute against taking illegal fees (G. S. c. 125, s. 17), is not applicable to administrators, whose compensation is fixed by the probate court. Hubbell v. Olmstead, 36 Vt. 619.

67. Joint executors, &c. One executor is not liable for the devastavit of another joint executor, as to goods which were never under his control; but if he permits the funds, once in his hands, to go into the possession of his co-executor, who squanders them, he is liable. Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41.

68. If executors give a joint bond for faithful administration, each is liable for the acts of the others. Ib. Marsh v. Harrington, 18 Vt. 150.

69. If one of two executors fraudulently consents to a judgment against both, the other executor will be relieved in equity; and if the judgment operates as a fraud upon the estate, it will be enjoined absolutely,—and this, although the judgment creditor was not privy to the fraud, if he is a trustee merely for the party to the fraudulent agreement. Nason v. Smalley, 8 Vt. 118.

70. Recording foreign will. An executor who records a foreign will is not holden upon his bond, thereupon given in this State, for effects received in the State where the deceased had his domicile, and where was the principal administration. Probate Court v. Matthews, 6 Vt. 260.

71. Executor de son tort. The statute (C. S. c. 50, s. 12), authorizing an administrator to recover of any person embezzling or alienating any of the effects of a deceased person before the granting of administration, double the value, and that he "shall in no other way be liable therefor," was held only to take away the right of a creditor, at common law, to sue such person as executor de son tort; and not to take away the common law right of the administrator to sue in trespass or trover. Roy v. Roy, 13 Vt. 543.

72. Where one wrongfully disposes of the effects of a deceased person, either before or after letters testamentary or of administration, he is liable to an action therefor by the executor or administrator when appointed; and this extends to such acts as would make him, at common law, an executor de son tort,—as, defraying funeral expenses out of such effects. Shaw v. Hallihan, 46 Vt. 389.

73. An executor in his own wrong must be sued as executor generally. Buckminster v. Ingham, Brayt. 116.

IV. ACCOUNTING.

74. In general. It is a good accounting for an administrator, that he has paid the funds in his hands for distribution over to the parties entitled, though without an order of the probate court. Scott's Account, 36 Vt. 297.

75. Where the administrator of an estate is also guardian of an heir entitled to the funds on distribution, he may charge himself, as guardian, with the funds, and this will be a good accounting as administrator, though without an order of the probate court, and this will bind his surety upon his guardian's bond. Ib.

76. In equity. The passing of an administrator's account in the probate court, or an allowance in his favor by commissioners, is not conclusive in equity, inasmuch as the proceeding is in effect ex parte, the administrator representing both sides. Adams v. Adams, 23 Vt. 50. 24 Vt. 408, note; 28 Vt. 720. Green v. Sargeant, 23 Vt. 466.

77. Where an administrator claimed against the estate title to lands by virtue of deeds from the intestate to himself, and it appeared to the court of chancery that those deeds were false and fabricated, or were obtained out of the usual course, and not in good faith, the court enjoined him from asserting title under such deeds, and required him to account therefor, with the proceeds, as the property of the estate. Adams v. Adams.

78. Claims of administrator against the decedent. It seems, that an administrator having claims against the estate which he represents may, at his election, present them to the commissioners—which is the more convenient practice—or bring them in on his final accounting in the probate court. Redfield, J., in French v. Winsor, 24 Vt. 408, note.

79. Administrator of an administrator. Where an appeal is taken from the allowance of an administrator's account, and, pending the appeal, the administrator dies, the administrator of such administrator cannot, under section 61 of the probate act of 1821 (Slade's Stat. 345), be cited before the court in which the appeal is pending to pursue the appeal and settle the account. By such death all previous proceedings, not perfected by a decree, are vacated. Wentworth v. Wentworth, 12 Vt. 244.

80. Charges. Where an administrator has inventoried property as belonging to the estate, a decree charging him with it will be affirmed, unless it appears clearly that it was not assets; a doubtful right will not avail. Briggs, ex parte, Brayt. 103.

81. An administrator was made chargeable with loss on the sale of real estate, for lack of prudent and proper management, and where he was interested in the bid. Bames Estate, 4 Vt. 256.

82. Where the principal administration was in this State, the administrator was made chargeable, in the first instance, with the effects received by him as administrator in another State,—he having rendered no account there, and there not appearing to be any creditors there, and there having been great delay in his settlement of the estate. He was also made chargeable with interest, where interest was, or ought to have been, received. Id.

83. Whether an administrator should be charged with interest, on the settlement of his account, will depend on considerations arising from the facts and circumstances of each particular case. It is difficult to lay down any general rule. Phelps v. Stade, 10 Vt. 192.

84. An administrator, wanting in due diligence in collecting the funds of an estate and endeavoring to protect himself by a bond of indemnity from certain heirs, was made chargeable for the loss, on the settlement of his account, in behalf of a creditor. Holmes v. Bridgeman, 37 Vt. 28.

85. An administrator who acts with due judgment and discretion, and in good faith, in the sale of the personal property of the estate, is not liable for losses, whether he sells at public or private sale, and although he so sells without an order of the probate court, if entitled thereto. Mead v. Byington, 10 Vt. 116.

86. An administrator is not required to account to the estate for the avails of property of which the equitable title is not in the estate, but in a third person. Sherman v. Dodge, 28 Vt. 26.

87. Allowances—for payments. In the settlement of an administrator's account;—Held, that there should be allowed to him what he had paid to extinguish a claim allowed by the commissioners against the estate which was "fictitious, unfounded and illegal," and was allowed with the assent and connivance of the administrator,—it not appearing that he had derived any benefit from it, and no appeal having been taken by heirs, creditors or other person. Reynolds v. McGregor, 16 Vt. 191.

88. An administrator, being surviving partner of the intestate, inventoried the interest of the intestate in the partnership property at half the value of the whole, and himself paid the partnership debts after the commission of claims had expired, although such debts were not presented to nor allowed by the commissioners. Held, that he was entitled, on the settlement of his administration account, to be allowed such payments. Mead v. Byington, 10 Vt. 116. 21 Vt. 494.

89. Where a claim against an estate was duly presented and actually allowed by the commissioners, who certified their allowance upon the claim presented, but, by oversight, the claim was not entered upon their report returned to the probate court, and the administrator paid the claim;—Held, that he should be allowed therefor in his administration account. Clark v. Clark, 21 Vt. 490.

90. Quære, whether, in any supposable case an administrator can be, allowed in his account for the payment of claims, not preferred, which were not allowed by the commissioners. French v. Winsor, 24 Vt. 402.

91. In the settlement of an administrator's account, he is entitled to be allowed for the payment of any claim which might have been enforced against him, either at law or in equity. Richardson v. Merrill, 32 Vt. 27.

92. — for services and expenses. Under the probate act of 1821, an administrator was not allowed in his account for the support of children of the deceased, who were over seven years of age. Mead v. Byington, 10 Vt. 116.

93. By needless delay in the settlement of an estate, an executor does not forfeit all compensation for actual services, faithfully performed, and necessary expenditures, but this may be considered in fixing the date from which interest should be cast against him. Hapgood v. Jennison, 2 Vt. 294.

94. The fact that an administrator charges a gross sum for his services, furnishes no legal reason for disallowing the charge, but it should be examined and allowed with great caution, in a case where the items could well have been kept. Evarts v. Nason, 11 Vt. 122. Id. 219. Hapgood v. Jennison.

95. An executor may be allowed in his account a reasonable percentage upon payments collectable and paid only in cattle, grain, &c., and converted by him into cash, though he never kept any exact account of the expenses and loss in the same;—but such uncertainty should not operate in his favor, but rather the reverse. Id.

96. An administrator who advances money, in good faith, for the estate, and is not guilty of neglect nor of unreasonable delay in converting the effects into money, will be allowed interest on his advances. Rix v. Smith, 8 Vt. 365.

97. An executor was allowed in his account for time and expenses in procuring an injunction against a judgment obtained against him and his co-executor through the fraud of his co-executor. Evarts v. Nason, 11 Vt. 122.

98. An administrator will be allowed his account for expenditures in a law suit in which he fails, where he acts in good faith and with reasonable prudence—as where he acts under the advice of suitable counsel, believing that he has the right of the case. Allowed in Holmes v. Holmes, 28 Vt. 765. But he may press on a suit with so little prudence, and so little prospect of recovery, that he ought not to be allowed his costs. Disallowed in Eames v. Creditors, 4 Vt. 256.

99. An administrator is entitled to an allowance against the estate for his time and services in taking care of the property of the estate, so long as it remains under his management as administrator, and he is accountable for it as such; although the use of the property was bequeathed to another, who during all the time has had the income of it. Richardson v. True, 28 Vt. 876.

V. ACTION BY.

100. Right to sue. The plaintiff, being administrator of an estate of which he and the defendant were heirs at law, delivered certain goods of the estate to the defendant, valued at a certain sum, taking therefor his receipt to account for on the settlement of the estate. In assumption on the receipt;—Held, that the plaintiff must show a settlement of the estate in the probate court, and such as to show the propriety of withdrawing the goods from the defendant. Curtis v. Hubbel, 2 D. Chip. 9.

101. After the assignment by the probate court to the heirs or devisees of the lands of an estate, the executor or administrator cannot maintain ejectment therefor. Stone v. Griffin, 3 Vt. 400.

102. Where a suit is brought in the name of an administrator, in respect to any property of the estate, courts presume it rightful, unless it is shown that the property has been distributed to the heirs, or has gone into their actual possession and control. Perrin v. Granger, 33 Vt. 106. McFarland v. Stone, 17 Vt. 165.

103. The right of an administrator to maintain an action of ejectment to the use of the heirs of an estate, must depend upon the continuing right of the heir. If the rights of some of the heirs are lost, as by the statute of limitations, the recovery will be restricted to those shares only which are not so lost. McFarland v. Stone.

104. An administrator may maintain an action of ejectment until after a decree of assignment or distribution of the estate by the probate court, whether under the statute of 1797, or of 1821. Id; or under G. S. c. 52, s. 9, 10. Austin v. Downer, 27 Vt. 636. Bunell v. Malony, 36 Vt. 636; and see Roberts v. Morgan, 30 Vt. 319.

105. The plaintiff took out letters of administration of an estate more than 15 years after the death, and brought ejectment against an heir in possession. Held, that by lapse of time there was a legal presumption that there were no debts existing which the land was necessary to satisfy; and, there being no evidence that there was any other heir, that the plaintiff could not recover. Roberts v. Morgan. See Cushman v. Jordan, 18 Vt. 597. Hubbard v. Ricart, 3 Vt. 207. Abbott v. Pratt, 16 Vt. 626. Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484. Coz v. Inglestone, 30 Vt. 258.

106. An executor, though a residuary legatee prosecuting the suit for his own benefit, can, at any time before a final settlement and order of distribution in the probate court, maintain an action, as executor, upon a promissory note made to the testator. Ewing v. Griswold, 48 Vt. 400.

107. T G, by will, bequeathed one-fourth of his estate to remain in the hands of his executor, with powers of management, for the benefit of the testator's son. After the death of the executor, J H was appointed administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed, of T G. He perverted the trust funds, and was removed by the probate court, never having rendered his account, nor filed any bonds as trustee. Held, that his successor in the administration could maintain his bill in chancery, as administrator de bonis non of T G, against J H and others, to recover the funds so perverted. Abell v. Howe, 43 Vt. 403. See Sherman v. Abell, 46 Vt. 547.

108. Form of declaring. A note to A, administrator of B, may be sued in the name of A's executor. Bottam v. Morton, Brayt. 108.

109. An executor may join a count for money had and received, to the use of the testator, with a like count to his use, as executor. Flowers v. Kent, Brayt. 134.

110. An executor or administrator need not sue as such, for an injury to property of the estate in his possession. Trask v. Donoghue, 1 Aik. 370. 33 Vt. 106.

111. Only where it is necessary for an executor or administrator to show his representative character, or, in other words, to make proof of his letters, need he sue in that character. Thus, in debt on judgment recovered by him as executor, he need not describe himself as such. Adams v. Campbell, 4 Vt. 447.

112. An administrator, suing in trover, may always declare in his representative capacity, where the property belongs to the estate. He must so declare, where the conversion relied upon was during the life of the intestate. But he may declare in his own name, as an individual, counting upon his own possession, where he ever had such possession in fact. Manwell v. Briggs, 17 Vt. 176. 33 Vt. 106. 46 Vt. 394.

113. Where an administrator parts with the property or money of the estate and takes a note for the same, though running to himself as administrator, he may treat himself as the debtor of the estate, and the note as his own, and sue thereon in his own name, or he may sue as administrator. Riz v. Nevins, 26 Vt. 384.

114. Where one sues as administrator, he may join causes of action accrued during the life of the intestate and since his decease, if both are assets in the administrator's hands. Pope v. Stacy, 28 Vt. 96.

115. Where it appears from the writ and declaration that the plaintiff sues as administrator, an express averment that he sues as administrator is not necessary, and a conclusion, in such a declaration, to the damage "of the plaintiff" is sufficient. Id.

116. An administrator may sue to recover the price of property belonging to the estate of his intestate and sold by himself personally, without naming himself as administrator, or joining his co-administrator. Aiken v. Bridgman, 37 Vt. 249.

117. Executors and administrators who contract for the sale of their testator's or intestate's effects, or make other agreements in their representative capacity, are not obliged to sue in that capacity, but may so sue; or may sue in their individual right without naming their representative character; in which last case, they may join other causes of action for which they are obliged to declare in their own right. Haskell v. Bowen, 44 Vt. 579.

118. When he must prove his appointment. That the plaintiff is not administrator must be pleaded in abatement, and cannot be urged under the general issue, where he declares upon the seisin of his intestate; but if he declares upon his own seisin, he must show his letters as part of his title. Clapp v. Beardsley, 1 Vt. 151.

119. Where an executor or administrator in ejectment declares upon his own seisin, he must, even under the general issue, prove his appointment as part of his title. It is otherwise, under the general issue, where he declares and relies upon the seisin of his testator or intestate. Aldis v. Burdick, 8 Vt. 21. 33 Vt. 106. Austin v. Downer, 25 Vt. 558.

120. Thus, where no seisin accrued to the intestate, and the disseisin arose after the death of the intestate;—Held, that the plaintiff's appointment must be shown as part of the proof of his title, under the general issue. Austin v. Downer.

See PROBATE COURT; ACTION.

F.

FACTOR—COMMISSION MERCHANT.

1. Sale on credit. The undertaking of a factor authorized to sell goods on credit, is merely to answer for the solvency of the buyer, or rather to guarantee to the principal the payment of the debt due from the buyer,—to pay to the principal the purchase money, if the buyer fails to pay it when it becomes due. Bradley v. Richardson (U. S. C. C.), 28 Vt. 720.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF, 14.

2. Where a factor had sold his principal's goods upon credit;—Held, that he could not bind his principal by the presentation of the claim and the allowance thereof in insolvency proceedings, although he had a lien upon the claim for his commissions, without at least giving notice of his lien and an opportunity to discharge it. Blackman v. Green, 24 Vt. 17.

3. Sale for cash. Where a commission merchant is directed to sell "for cash," he is accountable to his employer if he delivers the articles sold without receiving the pay therefor;—any custom among such merchants to treat sales upon a few days' indulgence as "cash sales," to the contrary notwithstanding. Biss v. Arnold, 8 Vt. 252. Catlin v. Smith, 24 Vt. 85. Chapman v. Devereux, 32 Vt. 616. See Jackson v. Bissonette, 24 Vt. 611.

4. Lien. To give a factor a lien upon goods consigned to him, but not received, the consignment must be in terms to the factor; and in order to the conclusiveness of such lien against creditors of the consignor, or subsequent purchasers, the consignee must have made advances, or acceptances, upon the faith of those particular assignments. Davis v. Bradley, 28 Vt. 118.

5. Where goods were shipped and consigned to a factor, the proceeds to be applied on general account and for advances previously made, and no advances had been made on the faith of this particular consignment, and no bill of lading, shipping list or receipt had been delivered to the consignee;—Held, that the consignee had acquired no lien upon the goods in the hands of the carrier, as against an attachment by a creditor of the consignor. Elliott v. Bradley, 23 Vt. 217.

6. Where goods are consigned to a factor and the bill of lading, or shipper's receipt, showing such consignment, is forwarded to the consignee, and he makes advances or acceptances on the strength of it;—Held, that he thereby acquires a lien upon the goods in the hands of the carrier, and his title thereto is perfected to the extent of his lien. Davis v. Bradley, 24 Vt. 55. S. C., 28 Vt. 118. 45 Vt. 198.

7. Commissions. Where the defendant contracted to consign certain goods to the plaintiffs as commission merchants for sale, upon the usual commission of 5 per cent for sale and guaranty, and the defendant failed to consign a portion of the goods and sold them himself;—Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover for commissions on the goods not consigned, (1), because the commissions were not earned by a sale and guaranty; (2) because such damages are contingent and too remote. Corkies v. Estes, 31 Vt 658.

8. Other matters. The plaintiff made advances for the defendant and received from him a draft by way of reimbursement, as also a bill of sale of certain butter and cheese, with an agreement that if the draft was not duly paid the plaintiff might consign the butter and cheese to H, a commission merchant in Boston, to be sold for reimbursement. The draft not being paid, the plaintiff so consigned the property, and H sold it for less than the amount due the plaintiff, who brought this suit to recover the balance. Held, that the plaintiff's right to recover did not depend upon whether the defendant had a remedy against H for his unfaithfulness, and such inquiry was unimportant; but that the court committed no error in replying to such inquiries by the jury, that the defendant had such remedy against H in the name of the plaintiff, or in his own name, if he was the general owner of the property. Langdon v. Burrill, 21 Vt. 466.

9. Where a factor brought suit against his principal for an unpaid balance due him for advances made beyond the amount agreed to be advanced, and was at the same time liable upon notes and acceptances for the principal not yet matured, and had previously sold goods for his principal upon a credit not then expired;—Held, that he was entitled to have the avails of such sales, as they became due, applied in satisfaction of the advances made in payment of such notes and acceptances as they fell due, and not that they should be applied upon the account in suit. Bradley v. Richardson (U. S. C. C.), 23 Vt. 720.

10. The plaintiff left money with the defendant for him to purchase, on commission, certain specified lots of butter. The defendant purchased and delivered at the place directed the lots of butter ordered, and other lots, and neglected on reasonable request to separate the parcels, and insisted that the plaintiff should take the whole, &c. Held, that the plaintiff could recover the money deposited. Safford v. Kinsley, 40 Vt. 506.

See COMMISSIONS.

FENCES.

1. Extent of obligation to maintain. Under the recent statutes in this State, the law is, as it ever has been in England, that the owner is under no obligation to fence his land along a highway, his obligation in this respect being limited to his duty to restrain his cattle from trespassing upon his neighbor. Holden v. Shattuck, 34 Vt. 336.

2. The statutes of this State, in respect to fences between occupied lands, do not relieve the owner of cattle from the common law duty to keep them from straying into the possessions of others. Where the fences are divided pursuant to the statutes, and the cattle stray into the plaintiff's close through defect of the plaintiff's part of the fence, he cannot recover, for the reason that his own neglect contributed to the injury; but where not so divided, he can recover. Keenan v. Cavanaugh, 44 Vt. 268. Sorenberger v. Houghton, 40 Vt. 150.

3. The object and purpose of all legislation on the subject of fences are, to require and compel the owner of animals to restrain them from going at large, and to keep them upon his own premises. Since the statute of 1853, No. 20 (G. S. c. 102), the duty imposed, as to maintaining fences, has reference to fences between adjoining proprietors, and is one which they may mutually dispense with. If they do so, other persons cannot complain of it, but they remain under the same obligation to restrain their animals and keep them at home as they would be under if such adjoining proprietors kept up legal fences; and the land owner owes no duty in respect to fences except to an adjoining proprietor. Hence, it is no answer to an action for trespass upon occupied lands, by cattle other than those of an adjoining proprietor, that the plaintiff's fences were insufficient. Wilder v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 678. See Jackson v. Rut. & Bur. R. Co., 25 Vt. 150. Bemis v. Conn. & Pass. R. R. Co., 42 Vt. 375.

4. Liability for defect. The fact that the plaintiff's part of a division fence was insufficient, is no bar to a recovery for damages sustained solely through the insufficiency of the defendant's part of such fence. Sutton v. Bemis, 31 Vt. 540.

5. The right to recover damages suffered through the neglect of the defendant to maintain his part of a division fence, is not dependent upon the plaintiff's having proceeded to make or put in repair the fence, under G. S. c. 102, s. 6. Ib.

6. The liability of a party for neglect to maintain his share of a division fence is not, under this statute, nor at common law, restricted to injuries connected with the use of the adjoining land, but extends to all damages which are the legal and natural consequences of such neglect—as, the escape of cattle from the adjoining land and consequent injury to them. Ib.

7. In trespass qua. clau. for the breaking and entering by the defendant's cattle;—Held, that it is not necessary, in order to sustain the action, that the plaintiff should give any evidence as to the quality of his fences. A defect therein is matter of defense. Sorenberger v. Houghton, 40 Vt. 150, 44 Vt. 268.

8. The plaintiff declared in case, alleging that he and the defendant were owners and occupiers of adjoining lands; that the defendant was bound to keep up a legal division fence between them, and that he neglected to do so, whereby the defendant's mare passed over the fence upon the plaintiff's land, and kicked and injured the plaintiff's horse.—Held, that the obligation and neglect to keep up the fence are the gist of this action, therein differing from trespass qua. clau., in which the gist of the action is the breach of the plaintiff's close; and the plaintiff failing to prove that the mare got over that part of the fence which the defendant was bound to maintain, both parts being defective, held, that the plaintiff could not recover. Tupper v. Clark, 43 Vt. 200.

9. Under the general counts in assumpsit for work, labor and materials;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover of the defendant one-half the expenses of building one-half of an undivided division fence between them, under an agreement that if the plaintiff would build such half the defendant would build the other, or pay the plaintiff for the one-half of what he should build—the defendant having neglected to build any part. Strong v. Slizer, 33 Vt. 466.

10. Fence as a boundary. Where a fence is built between adjoining proprietors by a mutual arrangement, and for convenience, on both sides of a line which they, or the occupants of the two lots, regard as the division line, this is very significant and important evidence to show the recognition and acquiescence in such line as the parties understood to be the true line, and as indicated by the general direction of the fence. The irregular line marked by the fence would not be established thereby, but that line would be established (if recognized for 15 years,) which the fence was intended to indicate by its general course, and which the parties had in mind as the true line, though not necessarily the original surveyed line. Clark v. Tabor, 28 Vt. 222. Ackley v. Buck, 18 Vt. 895.

11. As to whether, and how far, a fence or wall built for part of the length of what is claimed to be a line between two adjoining proprietors indicates a claim according to that same line extended, see Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 327, limiting and explaining Buck v. Squiers, 23 Vt. 498.

12. Fence viewers. Fence viewers are authorized to divide fences, but have no authority to settle the rights of different claimants to landed property, or to establish disputed boundaries. Neither party, therefore, is concluded by their decision from contesting the question of ownership in himself, or his adversary, or the location of their boundaries, Shaw v. Gillman, 23 Vt. 565.

See POUNDS.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

1. Under the forcible entry and detainer statute (Slade's Stat. 187), an administrator may prosecute and show possession in his intestate, although he has not embraced the land in his inventory returned to the probate court. Allen v. Ormsby, 1 Tyl. 345.

2. Such process will not abate, though it states that he was possessed, as administrator. Edmonds v. Morrill, Brayt. 20.

3. Security for costs of prosecution must be given before the warrant issues. Morgan v. Barrett, Brayt. 125. Whittaker v. Perry, 37 Vt. 681. (G. S. c. 46. Ib. c. 81, s. 9.)

4. On a complaint under section 6 (Slade's Stat. 187), a minute of the time of exhibiting the complaint is not necessary. Allen v. Ormsby, 1 Tyl. 345. Otherwise, if brought upon section 24, Hall v. Brown, 2 Tyl. 64.

5. Upon trial of an appeal from a freehold court, the ordinary juror's oath in civil causes must be administered. Allen v. Ormsby, 1 Tyl. 345.

6. Where a tenant entered upon a farm under a parol lease for one year, containing stipulations that he would carry on the farm in a good husbandlike manner, build a particular piece of fence, cut a certain piece of bushes, pick up the stones in a certain field on the farm, cut none of the growing timber, and cut the hay and feed it out to the lessor's cattle on the farm, but there was no provision for re-entry for breach of these stipulations;—Held, that proof of such breach would not sustain an action for possession by the lessor under the "forcible entry and detainer" act (C. S. c. 44, s. 30. G. S. c. 46, s. 22), before the expiration of the year; that the intent of the act was to afford such summary relief, only in those cases where an action of ejectment would lie at common law. Hadley v. Havens, 24 Vt. 520.

7. A forcible entry by the landlord and ejectment of the tenant holding over, are not justified by the fact that the tenant had agreed to leave by a certain previous date, and that, if he did not so leave, the landlord might put him and his effects out in any way he should choose. Dustin v. Cowdry, 23 Vt. 681. Whittaker v. Perry, 38 Vt. 107.

8. The party forcibly put out of possession, even by him who has title and right of entry, is entitled by proceedings under the statute to restitution, and may subject the ejector to punishment by fine, and may sustain an action of trespass upon the statute, and recover therein three-fold damages for the expulsion and detention. One cannot acquire lawful possession by an unlawful act. Dustin v. Cowdry.

9. The party so wrongfully ejected may, without resorting to the statute remedy, waive the penalty and maintain trespass qua. clau., against the ejector, and title and right of entry will be no defense. Id. Mussey v. Scott, 32 Vt. 82. Whittaker v. Perry, 38 Vt. 107. Carpen-ter v. Barber, 44 Vt. 441.

10. Any person entitled to the possession of premises—as the grantee of the lessor—may recover possession against the lessee, or person holding under the lessee, by proceedings under G. S. c. 46, s. 22, before a single justice. Barton v. Learned, 26 Vt. 192.

11. In such proceeding before a justice, the jurisdiction is not defeated by setting the ad damnum of the writ at more than $30, although (by sec. 25) the plaintiff could recover not exceeding that sum for rents. The jurisdiction to order restitution of the premises, is not affected by the amount of rents due. Weston v. Haley, 27 Vt. 283.

12. This summary remedy before a single justice does not apply to a detainer of lands, unless held by a technical lessee after all title and right in him, both legal and equitable, has ceased; and has no application to an equitable mortgagor. Davis v. Hemmaway, 27 Vt. 589; and see Pitkin v. Burch, 48 Vt. 521.

13. A party in possession of a house, having no family, left the house for the day, locking the door, and leaving his furniture in the house. In his absence, the party having title and right of possession forced open the door, set the furniture out into the road, fastened up the house, and posted up a notice on the door that he was in possession. Held, that this was not a violation of the statute of forcible entry and detainer, and was the exercise of a legal right in a legal manner, and put the party in lawful possession. Mussey v. Scott, 32 Vt. 82.

14. The entry into an unoccupied house in the night, and furtively, but without apparent force or violence, is a mere trespass, and not a forcible entry under G. S. c. 46. Foster v. Kelsey, 36 Vt. 199.

15. Where the complaint under G. S. c. 46 is for a forcible entry, and forcible detainer, there may be a conviction for the latter, though the evidence fail to prove the former;—as, where the entry is unlawful but peaceable, and the detainer is forcible; and in such case no demand in writing to quit possession is necessary. Id.

FOREIGN LAW.

1. Does not affect domestic remedy. The law of another State which affects the remedy only upon a contract there executed, has no effect and furnishes no rule for decision, when suit is brought upon such contract in this State. Cartier v. Page, 8 Vt. 146. Suffolk Bank v. Kidder, 12 Vt. 464.

2. Instances. A statute of Canada provided, that “every promissory note on which no suit is brought within five years next after it shall have become due and payable, shall be considered to be paid and discharged, provided the debtor will make oath, if required, that such note is paid and discharged.” In an action in this State on a note executed in Canada;—Held, that the statute was merely a statute of limitations, and, as relating to the remedy, had no force or application in this State. Cartier v. Page.

3. By an act of the legislature of Massachusetts it was provided that no contract containing usury should be thereby rendered void, but that when, in an action upon a contract, it should appear upon special plea, that more interest was reserved or taken than is allowed by law, the defendant should recover his costs, and the plaintiff should forfeit three-fold the amount of the whole interest, and have judgment only for the balance. In an action in this State upon an usurious contract executed in Massachusetts;—Held, that this statute related to the remedy only and to the courts of that State, and could have no operation, nor furnish a rule of decision, in this State. Suffolk Bank v. Kidder, 12 Vt. 464.

4. It is no objection to the allowance by the auditor, in an action of book account, of items of debt created after the commencement of the suit, that such items were created in another state, by the laws of which they could not be recovered for in any action commenced before the credit had expired. This is a matter pertaining to the remedy merely. Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191.

5. The plaintiff had an opportunity to urge his claim in set-off in a former suit between him and the defendant in the State of New York, where they both had their domicile, but neglected it. The statute of New York provided that, in such case, “he shall be forever thereafter precluded from maintaining any cause to recover such claim.” Held, that the statute did not operate to discharge or extinguish the claim, but related to the remedy and was local in its operation, and was not a bar to the action in this State. Carter v. Adams, 38 Vt. 500. See WAGER, 9.

6. Right barred by. Where a demand is absolutely barred by the laws of a foreign country where the contract was made, it cannot be revived by transferring it to an inhabitant of this State. Woodbridge v. Austin, 2 Tyl. 364.

7. Right local. A cause of action which accrued in New Hampshire, and was local there, and died with the person of the defendant, cannot be pursued against his estate in this State, although by the law of this State such cause of action would have survived here. It might be otherwise, perhaps, with a mere transitory cause of action. Burgess v. Gates, 20 Vt. 326.

8. —not surviving. A cause of action which does not survive at common law and by the law of the State where it arose, cannot be prosecuted in this State, by force of a general statute of this State creating survivorship in such cases;—the cause of action being there extinguished by the death, and our statute having no extra-territorial force. So held in an action by an administrator for an injury in New Hampshire causing death. (G. S. c. 52, ss. 12 15.) Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 38 Vt. 294.

9. —of statute creation and mode of enforcement. Where an official bond, as a sheriff's or guardian's bond, is given in another State, and by the laws of that State is to have effect only in a particular way, and to be enforced only in a particular mode pointed out by those laws, the enforcing of it in that mode is the exclusive province of the tribunals of that State; and it cannot be enforced in this State, where it is merely a creation of the statute law. Pickering v. Fisk, 6 Vt. 103. Judge of Probate v. Hibbard, 44 Vt. 597.

See INSOLVENCY.

FORMS.

1. Declaration. Approved form of declaration in case for false warranty—warrantizando vendidit. Beeman v. Buck, 3 Vt. 53. Gode-nough v. Snow, 27 Vt. 720.

2. In case of sale of lands. Harlow v. Green, 34 Vt. 379.

3. On order with conditions. Goss v. Barker, 22 Vt. 520.

4. On promissory note. Binney v. Plumley, 5 Vt. 500. Brooks v. Edson, 7 Vt. 351.

5. Plea. Plea in abatement for insufficient service of the writ. Held good. Boarts v. Georgia, 18 Vt. 15.

6. Indictment. Indictment for having in possession, with intent to pass, a counterfeit bill. State v. Randall, 2 Aik. 89.

7. For uttering, passing and giving in payment a counterfeit bank bill. State v. Wilkins, 17 Vt. 151.

8. Writ. Writ of certiorari on writ of error. Brackett v. State, 2 Tyl. 152.

FRAUD.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES FRAUD OR DECEIT.

II. EFFECT OF FRAUD.

III. RIGHT OF ACTION THEREFOR; PLEADINGS; EVIDENCE.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES FRAUD OR DECEIT.

1. Opinion. Fraud can not be predicated of the expression of an opinion, though erroneous, as to one's rights growing out of facts fully known to both parties. Blake v. Peck, 11 Vt. 483.

2. Non-actionable deceit—Instances. In the sale of a patent right for making saddles, the plaintiff falsely represented that a saddler in Burlington [120 miles distant] had offered him $300 for the three northern counties in the State, and that his uniform price for a license was $3.00 a saddle, and that he had so sold in New Hampshire. Held, that these representations were not such as the law declares a fraud. Williams v. Hicks, 2 Vt. 36; and see 1 Tyl. 387.

3. Where the defendant, by falsely asserting that he had attached the property of a debtor, induced the plaintiff to delay, for a time, attaching the same property, whereby the defendant was enabled to get his attachment first served;—Held, that this was not such a fraud as entitled the plaintiff, in equity, to a priority. Bardwell v. Perry, 19 Vt. 292.

4. After an audit between the parties, the defendant was informed, as the fact was, that the auditor had made report against him. The plaintiff, not knowing that any report had been made, but having heard that either no report had been made, or that it was against him, applied to the defendant to settle the suit; and thereupon, without inquiry made by the plaintiff, or disclosure of his own suspicions, or disclosure by the defendant of his knowledge of the auditor's report, the parties settled, each agreeing to pay his own costs, and to relinquish all claims; and the plaintiff thereupon executed to the defendant a discharge of the suit, costs and damages. Held, that such mere omission of the defendant to disclose his knowledge as to the report, was not, under the circumstances, fraudulent, so as to defeat the release. Judd v. Blake, 14 Vt. 410.

5. It is no fraud or legal wrong for one about to pay money to another, to inform such person's creditors of the fact, and to aid them in the attachment of the money when paid over. Root v. Ross, 29 Vt. 488.

6. A deputy sheriff had advertised for sale certain property taken on execution, and at the auction sale sold also an article of his own, of the same kind. Held, that he could recover the price, although he did not disclose his ownership, and the bidder supposed the article to be part of the property taken and sold on the execution; that this was not a fraudulent deception. Rice v. Andrews, 32 Vt. 691.

7. Adoption of a falsehood. Where one claims the benefit of a falsehood uttered in his presence, though he may not know it to be so when uttered, he makes the falsehood his own. Keyes v. Carpenter, 3 Vt. 209.

8. Falsehood at hap-hazard. The affirmation of what one does not know or believe to be true, intentionally made to induce another to enter into a contract, is in law as unjustifiable as the affirmation of what he knows to be false. Twitchell v. Bridge, 42 Vt. 72.

9. Passing off belief for knowledge. See Cabot v. Christie, 42 Vt. 121, post 35.

10. Half truth. On the sale of a horse having an observed lameness, the defendants were held liable for a deceit, on the ground of a fraudulent concealment of the permanency of the lameness. By Peck, J.: As the plaintiff inquired in relation to the soundness of the horse, and the defendants undertook to tell, they were bound to disclose all they knew on the subject, and the plaintiff had a right to act upon the supposition that they had done so. Having discovered that the horse was permanently unsound, they had no right intentionally to conceal it, but were bound fully to disclose the whole truth. They had no right to impart a portion of their knowledge and withhold the residue for the purpose of deceiving the plaintiff. Under such circumstances, the suppression of the truth is equivalent to the assertion of a falsehood. Graham v. Stiles, 38 Vt. 578.

11. The defendant, wishing to buy of the plaintiff certain stocks, of the value of which he knew that the plaintiff was ignorant, and designing to mislead her and induce her to sell the stocks at less than he knew their value to be, told her of a fact calculated to depreciate their value and lead her to wish to part with the stocks, but omitted to disclose other and all the facts within his knowledge calculated to enhance their value, and thereby succeeded in purchasing the stocks at much less than their value. Held, that although this was telling a truth, it was not the whole truth, and was telling it in a manner to produce the effect of a falsehood, and was fraudulent and actionable, [under the peculiar confidential relations existing between these parties.] Mallory v. Leach, 35 Vt. 156.

12. A false representation of a material fact, not believed to be true when made, and made to induce a sale, if damage to the purchaser be occasioned thereby, is fraudulent and actionable. It is not necessary that the fact be directly misrepresented; but if a false impression be produced by words or acts, in order to mislead and obtain an undue advantage, this is a manifest fraud. Howard v. Gould, 28 Vt. 528.

13. The defendant having been informed, and having reason to believe, that his horse had the glanders, was inquired of by the plaintiff, in a negotiation for an exchange, what was the matter with the horse—which was apparently much diseased—and whether he had not got glanders. The defendant replied that the horse had got the horse distemper of the worst kind, he supposed, but the plaintiff might examine him. The defendant did not communicate the information he had received respecting the glanders, and the plaintiff made the exchange after examining the horse, but relying upon the plaintiff's representation. The horse had the glanders. Held, that the defendant was liable for a fraudulent suppression of material facts, which, if disclosed, would probably have prevented the trade; and that, if the defendant believed the horse had the glanders, he was liable for fraudulent representations. Id.

14. Fraudulent concealment. The plaintiff labored for the defendant, under a contract with the defendant's son that he would pay therefor. Held, that the plaintiff could recover of the defendant in general assumpsit, upon proof that the parties fraudulently concealed from him the fact of the son's bankruptcy. Carrigan v. Hull, 5 Vt. 23.

15. The defendant traded off to the plaintiff a horse having a secret malady of a fatal character. In an action for a deceit, the county court charged the jury, that if they should find that the plaintiff was wholly ignorant of this internal malady before the trade, and that it was known to the defendant, that it was not obvious to the plaintiff and there were no indications or signs which would have led a person of ordinary vigilance and prudence to apprehend anything of the kind, or to suspect it, and the defendant received from the plaintiff such a consideration that he might reasonably suppose the plaintiff would not have so traded had he been informed of it, and that the plaintiff, if he had received such information, would not have so traded, then the defendant was bound in good faith to disclose the facts, and, if he did not, he was guilty of a deceit for which he was liable. This charge was held erroneous—the court not being prepared to say that the vendor of a chattel is, in all cases, bound to disclose all known defects in the article, which are unknown to the other party, and not discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care. Paddock v. Strobbridge, 29 Vt. 470. See S. C. in CASES CRITICISED.

16. Affirmative falsehood. Where the seller of a horse had reasonable and good ground to suppose that the horse was unsound, and knew that if he communicated what he had discovered and had been told about the horse, it would lessen the value of the horse in the estimation of the buyer, or any buyer;—Held, that it was an affirmative false representation and actionable, irrespective of the seller's actual belief, to assert that the horse was sound "so far as he knew"—the horse being in fact unsound. Wheeler v. Wheelock, 34 Vt. 558.

17. The plaintiff purchased of the defendant a machine which, as the defendant pretended, embodied a new discovery in mechanics, by which perpetual motion could be produced, but which, in fact, was a humbug—the motive power being ordinary clock work artfully concealed in the base of the machine. The plaintiff was deceived by such representation into making the purchase, and upon discovering the cheat returned the machine. In an action for the deceit;—Held, that the plaintiff could recover the price paid. Kendall v. Wilson, 41 Vt. 567.

18. In 1863, A purchased of B a mowing machine, without seeing it, relying upon B's representation that it was "a good mower and did its work well." The machine was a good one of its kind, and a referee reported that that kind was in use up to 1860, and "as compared with other machines at that time to be procured was a good mower and did its work well," but then became gradually superseded by machines of a better kind, until in 1862 it had passed nearly out of use, and then, "when compared with the other mowers at that time to be procured, with reference to their draft and the quality of their work, it was of no value for the purposes of a mower." Held, that the report did not show any false representation; that if the machine was a good mower and did good work, its quality was not altered, though its market value may have been, by the introduction of better machines; and that the representation did not go to the value of the machine or the quality of the work as compared with other mowers. Wallace v. Stone, 38 Vt. 607.

19. Confidential relations. The defendant sold the plaintiff certain stock in a mining company and gave her a written agreement to repurchase the stock at a future day named, at a price named, if she should so desire; and he did so repurchase it at her request at the price named, which was much less than what he knew to be the then market value. In an action for fraudulent representations and concealment as to such value;—Held, that evidence of what was said at the time of the execution of the written contract was admissible, for the purpose of showing such a special confidence and relation between the parties as to characterize the subsequent conduct of the defendant in making the repurchase; and if such a confidence and trust was thereby created and existed at the time of such repurchase, that the defendant would keep the plaintiff advised of the true value of the stock, and he knew that she relied upon this, then it was a fraud in him to repurchase the stock at less than its value, without first communicating to her all the knowledge he possessed in regard to it. Mallory v. Leach, 35 Vt. 156.

20. A and B are creditors of C. C being in failing circumstances, discloses to A, who is an attorney, his situation, and his purpose to secure both. He directs A to make a mortgage to B of certain lands, and to attach certain other property for his own security. A makes no objection, but makes out the mortgage to B, which C takes away to be recorded, and A then at an unusual hour, and unknown to C, attaches in his own behalf the same lands before the mortgage is recorded. Held, in chancery, that the mortgage took precedence of the attachment. Temple v. Hooker, 6 Vt. 240.

21. Where the defendant set up a contract which was largely to his personal advantage; and was obtained, without adequate consideration, from one who reposed great confidence in him, and whose mind had become enfeebled by a long course of intoxication, the contract was set aside in equity upon the inferences of fraud and undue influence arising from the facts. Under such circumstances, the burden is upon the defendant to prove affirmatively, that the contract was understood by the party executing it, and that he intended what it purported. Conant v. Jackson, 16 Vt. 335.

22. Puffing. A owned a bowling-alley subject to a lease to S. S secretly confederated with and employed R to represent to A the earnings of the alley as much greater than they really were, and to promise to purchase the property at a price much above its real value, if A would purchase in the lease and give R a good title. Upon these representations, A purchased in the lease of S at an exorbitant price, and gave S his notes therefor. R absconded without concluding his purchase. Held, that these representations were not excusable as mere "puffing," but that the transaction was such a fraud as entitled A to an injunction against S and to a surrender of the notes. Adams v. Soule, 33 Vt. 588.

23. Fraudulent recommendation for credit. Case lies against the defendant for advancing money to an insolvent, with the fraudulent intent of enabling him to purchase goods upon a credit, where the goods go into the possession of the defendant, although the plaintiff had no knowledge of the defendant in the sale. Windover v. Robbins, 2 Tyl. 1. Robbins v. Windover, 2 Tyl. 11.

24. An action lies for the false and fraudulent representation of the pecuniary responsibility of another, whereby the plaintiff has suffered damage. Weeks v. Burton, 7 Vt. 67. Evins v. Calhoun, 7 Vt. 79.

25. D sent a written order to the plaintiff for a certain quantity of books to be sold him on credit, on which the defendant wrote and signed the following: "I consider the above order good." In an action for a false and fraudulent recommendation of D;—Held, that the proper construction of these words was not merely that the defendant believed that the plaintiffs might safely trust D with the books named, and that if they did so they would get their pay for them from D; nor yet a representation that D was responsible for the amount and that payment thereof could be enforced, by law, out of his property; but it was a statement of the defendant's belief that D was responsible, predicated on the fact of his having pecuniary means rendering him able to pay the amount, whether such means could be reached by process of law, or not. Crown v. Brown, 30 Vt. 707.

26. In an action for false and fraudulent representations, by reason whereof credit was given to another for goods sold;—Held, that it was sufficient to allege the substance of the representation, without attempting a literal recital. Cutler v. Adams, 15 Vt. 237.

27. A declaration averring that the defendant asserted and represented in substance that F was a fit person to be trusted, and that the plaintiff might safely sell him goods on credit, is not sustained by proof of representation that F was "doing a fair business." Id.

28. An action for deceit does not lie against one who makes false representations of his own pecuniary resources, in order to obtain, and thereby obtaining, a credit for goods sold him. Fisher v. Brown, 1 Tyl. 887.

29. Case cannot be sustained for false and fraudulent representations by the defendant of his pecuniary responsibility and resources, whereby the plaintiff was induced to sell him property on credit, where the plaintiff has already sued and recovered judgment upon the contract, as a sale. Dyer v. Tilton, 23 Vt. 313.

30. An action for fraud will not lie against a person obtaining credit upon his simple representation, that he is safe to be trusted and given credit to. This should be regarded but as matter of opinion. Jude v. Woodburn, 27 Vt. 415.

31. The purchaser of goods on a credit obtained by his own misrepresentations of his circumstances and ability to pay, may be guilty of such fraud as authorizes the seller to rescind the sale and reclaim the goods. Poor v. Woodburn, 25 Vt. 234. 28 Vt. 314. Fitzsimmons v. Joslin, 21 Vt. 129. Hodgden v. Hubbard, 18 Vt. 504.

32. In respect to real estate. How far misrepresentations by the vendor of land conveyed by quit-claim deed, as to an incumbrance upon it not amounting to a total failure of consideration, may affect the contract,—considered. Richardson v. Bortright, 9 Vt. 863.

33. We are unable to see any sound reason, why a party should not be made liable to an action for fraud in a contract relating to land, as well as in a contract for the sale of goods. Poland, C. J., in Harlow v. Green, 34 Vt. 379.

34. So held, where there was a false and fraudulent representation as to a boundary line, whereby the purchaser was deceived as to the quantity. Id. So held, where a lot conveyed by its number was other and less valuable than the one represented and pointed out as the one bargained for. Kelley v. Pember, 35 Vt. 183; and so held, where the fraudulent representation was of the quantity of timber growing upon the lot sold. Whittan v. Goddard, 36 Vt. 780.

35. Where, in the sale of lands, the vendor represented the quantity to be larger than it was, and stated this as of his own knowledge, when in fact he was aware that he had no such knowledge;—Held, that this was an actionable fraud, although he believed the quantity to be as represented. It was a fraud to pass off his belief for knowledge. One's belief, to excuse him for a false representation, must be a belief in the representation as made. Cabot v. Christie, 42 Vt. 121.

36. Where the defendant's intestate, professing to have but not having power to sell lands, conveyed the same to the orator by quit-claim deed, and after payment of part of the price the matter lay dormant for some 20 years, and without benefit to the orator, chancery refused to compel the orator to receive confirmation of title, and enjoined the defendant from prosecuting the orator's bond for the balance, and decreed that it be surrendered to be cancelled. Williams v. Matlocks, 3 Vt. 189.

II. EFFECT OF FRAUD.

37. Generally. Fraud invalidates every transaction, as well at law as in equity. Morris v. Gill, N. Chip. 63. S. C., 1 D. Chip. 49.

38. Contracts fraudulent as to creditors do not thereby become void between the parties. Carpenter v. McClure, 39 Vt. 9. Peaslee v. Barney, 1 D. Chip. 331. Martin v. Martin, 1 Vt. 91. Gifford v. Ford, 5 Vt. 532. Conner v. Carpenter, 28 Vt. 240. Boutwell v. McClure, 30 Vt. 676.

39. Where one, by fraudulent means, has induced another to pay him money, he cannot shield himself from paying it back by the fact that both parties had an illegal end in view—as, to stifle a criminal prosecution. The law applicable to a case of duress applies. Hinsdill v. White, 34 Vt. 558.

40. Effect as to third persons. A creditor who attaches property obtained by fraudulent practice or misrepresentation, acquires no better right to hold it than the fraudulent vendee had. He stands in the shoes of his debtor. Poor v. Woodburn, 25 Vt. 234. Fitzsimmons v. Joslin, 21 Vt. 129. Hackett v. Callender, 32 Vt. 97. Field v. Stearns, 42 Vt. 106. 43 Vt. 409.

41. A mere assignment of the goods in security of a pre-existing debt, confers no greater right than an attachment;—there being no new consideration in such case, the assignee takes only the right of the assignor. Poor v. Woodburn; and see Downs v. Belden, 46 Vt. 674.

42. Where goods are obtained on credit by such fraudulent representations as entitle the seller to reclaim the goods of the buyer, he may reclaim them of an attaching creditor of the insolvent buyer before sale on execution, although the debt of the attaching creditor was contracted after the fraudulent purchase and on the strength of the debtor's having a good stock of goods in his store, including these goods, but on no other inducement except such possession and appearance. Field v. Stearns, 42 Vt. 106.

43. Where, through the fraudulent act of a third person, one of two innocent parties must suffer, the one who, by trusting such third person, had clothed him with the means of perpetrating the fraud, must bear the loss. Passumpsic Bank v. Goss, 31 Vt. 321. Farm. & Mech. Bank v. Humphrey, 36 Vt. 558. Barber v. Britton, 26 Vt. 112.

44. A bona fide purchaser without notice will not be affected by the fraud of his vendor, or grantor. Hoy v. Wright, Brayt. 208.

45. A mortgaged to B and paid the debt, but the mortgage remained undischarged upon the record, when he mortgaged to C. A and B then fraudulently procured a foreclosure of the mortgage to B, so that B's title on the record appeared fair. Afterwards D purchased bona fide of B and without knowledge of the fraud. Held, that D acquired title as against the mortgage to C. Atwater v. Seymour, Brayt. 209.

III. RIGHT OF ACTION THEREFOR.

46. A, knowing or having good reason to believe that B's possession of certain cattle was wrongful and that he was not the right owner of them, cooperated with C by advising him and furnishing him means, for the purpose and with the intent of having him buy and kill the cattle, and thus put them beyond the reach of the right owner; and C was thereby induced to and did buy, kill and dispose of them. Held, that A was liable in trover to the right owner. Moore v. Eldred, 42 Vt. 18.

47. Where the defendant by fraud induced the plaintiff to subscribe and pay for stock in a company to be formed under the statute;—Held, that an action lay for the fraud, whether the plaintiff's money came to defendant's use or not. Paddock v. Fletcher, 42 Vt. 889.

48. Essentials. To warrant a recovery for a false representation in a sale, it must be relied on, and be an inducement to the purchase. But it should not be left to the jury to find that the plaintiff would not have made the purchase but for such representation. This is a mere speculative inquiry, and not the test of the plaintiff's right. Cabot v. Christie, 42 Vt. 121.

49. If the vendor's fraudulent representations constitute one of the inducements to a purchase, this is sufficient to avoid the sale. James v. Hodaden, 47 Vt. 127.

50. To sustain an action for deceit in a sale, the plaintiff must prove, not only that the representations made were false and that he relied upon them as true, but that the defendant knew them to be false. Bond v. Clark, 35 Vt. 577.

51. There must be both fraud and damage. The lie must be relied upon, and must occasion damage. Nye v. Merriam, 35 Vt. 488.

52. The same rule applies where a party seeks to avoid a contract on that ground, and to recover back the consideration. He is entitled to be put in the same condition as if the representation had been true. If he is just as well off as if the representation had been true, he cannot complain, for he has suffered no damage. Peck, J., in Putnam & Thompson v. Hill, 38 Vt. 92.

53. The defendant put in a bid at the P. O. Department for a mail route, for and in the name of his minor son, which was accepted on the defendant's guaranty. The plaintiffs, desiring to get the contract for themselves, the plaintiff P went to Washington and got the contract annulled, and procured a contract for the plaintiffs at the same price. On the same day the other plaintiff, T, having no confidence that his partner would succeed at Washington, purchased of the defendant his contract and paid therefor a bonus of $200, and got an order of the defendant, signed in the name of the son, to have the contract transferred to the plaintiffs. This was done without the knowledge of the son, or other authority than such as results from the relation of a father to a minor son. The plaintiff T, in dealing with the defendant, supposed him to be the party in whose name the contract had been taken, and the defendant purposely induced him so to believe. In an action to recover back the bonus paid;—Held, that as the son had never revoked the sale, but acquiesced in it, and as the contract with the P. O. Department was, at the most, only voidable by the Department on account of the minority of the son, the misrepresentation of the defendant had occasioned no damage to the plaintiffs, even though the plaintiffs would not have made the contract with the defendant if they had known of the son's minority; that the plaintiffs had got just what they purchased, and could not recover. Id., 85.

54. Rescission. Where goods are obtained by false practice or misrepresentation, the vendor must, in order to sustain an action for the fraud, offer to rescind the contract of sale at the earliest possible moment after discovering the fraud, and thus abandon his remedy by contract. By retaining the securities, when any such are given, or by not so offering to rescind, the contract becomes binding upon both parties, and the tort is waived. Redfield, C. J., in Poor v. Woodburn, 25 Vt. 284.

55. Thus, where the creditor had sued upon the contract and recovered judgment;—Held, that an action on the case for the fraud did not lie. Dyer v. Tilton. 23 Vt. 313. 45 Vt. 157.

56. A party to a contract has a right to rescind on account of the fraud of the other party as soon as discovered; or he may proceed and take his rights under the contract, even after discovery of the fraud, and maintain his action for damages for the fraud. A ratification of the contract is not a waiver of the claim to damages for the fraud. Mallory v. Leach, 35 Vt. 156. Kelly v. Pember, Id., 183.

57. Where goods are purchased, but upon such fraudulent representations on the part of the purchaser, and of the defendant [a third person], as to authorize a rescinding of the sale and a recovery of the property, and the property has come to the defendant and been by him converted into money, the vendor may waive the tort and maintain an action for money. But quære as to this, if the purchaser himself acted in good faith. Phelps v. Conant, 30 Vt. 277.

58. Damages. In an action for a deceit in the sale of a yoke of oxen, sold as and for working cattle, the referee found that the oxen were worth $25 less for work than falsely represented, and $10 less for beef. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the larger sum. Ladd v. Lord, 36 Vt. 194.

59. In an action for fraudulent representations in a sale, and actions of this character, the general rule of damages is the difference between the value of the property as it really was at the time of the sale, and what its value would have been had the representation, for which the seller is found liable, been true. He is liable only for such damages as followed in consequence of the particular representation or representations being untrue, for which the jury find him liable. For a disregard of this distinction the judgment below was reversed. Bowman v. Parker, 40 Vt. 410.

60. Pleadings. In an action for deceit or fraud in a sale, the scienter must be alleged and proved. Evidence of an express warranty alone will not support such declaration. Bates v. Martin, Brayt. 78. Barlow v. Enos, Brayt. 125. 3 Vt. 57.

61. Case of an attempt to draw a declaration sounding in fraud, alleging a fraudulent purpose, without any appropriate facts to found it upon. Ida v. Gray, 11 Vt. 615.

62. Evidence. An action for fraud in the sale of lands may be sustained by parol testimony, and it is not necessary that the fraud should be apparent on the deed. [The fraud, in this case, was in pointing out wrong boundaries, and misstating the quantity of land conveyed as "more or less."] Sandford v. Rose, 2 Tyl. 428.

63. Gross inadequacy of price alone is evidence from which a jury will be warranted in presuming fraud, or mistake, in the contract, unless there are other circumstances in the case which rebut the presumption. Brown v. Sawyer, 1 Aik. 180. 17 Vt. 32.

64. In order to the setting aside of a contract for fraud, imposition, or undue influence, positive and direct evidence is not required. Though these must be proved, yet influence is not susceptible of direct proof. Conant v. Jackson, 16 Vt. 335.

65. An action for false and fraudulent representations of a person's circumstances and credit, is not an action of a criminal nature, and the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict upon a fair balance of evidence in his favor. Cutler v. Adams, 15 Vt. 237.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

- I. PROMISE OF ADMINISTRATOR.
- II. PROMISE TO ANSWER FOR THE DEBT, &C., OF ANOTHER.
- III. CONTRACT FOR THE SALE OF LANDS.
- IV. AGREEMENT NOT TO BE PERFORMED WITHIN ONE YEAR.
- V. CONTRACT FOR THE SALE OF GOODS.
- VI. THE MEMORANDUM.
- VII. FORCE OF CONTRACT WITHOUT MEMORANDUM.
- VIII. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

I. PROMISE OF ADMINISTRATOR.

1. A verbal promise of an administrator to pay a debt of his intestate out of his own estate, upon a consideration not for his personal benefit, since the statute of frauds of Nov. 9, 1822, cannot be enforced. Harrington v. Rich, 6 Vt. 666.

II. PROMISE TO ANSWER FOR THE DEBT, &C., OF ANOTHER.

2. Distinction between independent and collateral promises. A parol promise to pay the debt of another, the original party remaining still liable, is within the statute of frauds. Cole v. Shurtleff, 41 Vt. 311. Anderson v. Davis, 9 Vt. 136. Fullam v. Adams, 37 Vt. 391.

3. Where a promise is ancillary to and in aid of the promise of another, it is within the statute of frauds. This is always the case, where there is no new and independent consideration, and there exists another and previous liability. Neuell v. Ingraham, 15 Vt. 422.

4. Where an agreement is auxiliary to a subsisting agreement which remains in force for the party now claiming on the new contract, there the new contract is collateral to the other, is within the statute of frauds, and must be in writing. But where the first contract is rescinded, superseded, or abandoned, so as not to be in force in the plaintiff's favor, then the new contract is independent, and is not within the statute. Sinclair v. Richardson, 12 Vt. 33.

5. The plaintiff, being under a contract with a third person to build a house on land of the defendant and having partly completed it, said to the defendant, "I want you to agree to pay me for the building of the house, or I can do no more to it." The defendant replied, "Do you go on and finish the house, and I will pay you for it, or see you paid," and thereupon the plaintiff went on and completed the house. In an action therefor the court directed a verdict for the defendant. Held erroneous;—that if it was then understood that the plaintiff wholly abandoned the first contract and was to proceed entirely on the employment of the defendant, then the new agreement was not collateral, and need not be in writing;—and that this was a question of fact for the jury to find. Id.

6. Release of original debtor. Where, by the promise to answer for the debt of another, the primary debtor is released and the secondary liability becomes the sole debt, the case does not come within the statute of frauds. Watson v. Jacobs, 29 Vt. 169. Anderson v. Davis, 9 Vt. 186. Williams v. Little, 35 Vt. 328.

7. The defendant owed B, and B owed the plaintiff a less sum. It was verbally agreed between the three parties, that the defendant would pay B's debt in discharge of B. Held, that the defendant was liable upon such agreement. Williams v. Little.

8. The promises to answer for the debt, default, &c., of another, named in the statute of frauds, are those of suretyship, or guaranty for the debt of another which subsists against him; for, if the effect of the new promise or contract be to discharge the original debt, the promisor becomes the sole debtor, and there is no debt of another to which his promise is collateral; therefore such promise is not within the purpose and spirit of the statute, and need not be in writing. Poland, C. J., in Fullam v. Adams, 37 Vt. 394.

9. But where the promise is a mere contract of guaranty, leaving the original debt subsisting, it comes within the statute, though a distinct consideration therefor be paid directly to the party making the promise. Id., 399.

10. Where auditors reported that the defendant promised to see the plaintiff paid if A hired him, and A did hire him;—Held, that this was a collateral agreement, and by the statute of frauds must be in writing. Skinner v. Conant, 2 Vt. 458.

11. An undertaking by the defendant, that if the plaintiff would work for B the defendant would pay him if B did not, was held to be collateral and within the statute. Aldrich v. Jewell, 12 Vt. 125.

12. A, owing B, gave him a verbal order on C for the amount. C refused to pay upon such order, requiring a written order, or else B's accountable receipt for the money to be paid. B received the money and gave his receipt to account to C for it on demand. Afterwards C called on B for payment and threatened suit, of which B gave A notice, relying upon him to settle C's demand. A claimed that he had already paid C in discharge of B, and thereupon A and D requested B to suffer a suit by C, and thus afford A an opportunity to prove his alleged payment and, in consideration thereof, orally promised to indemnify B. Held, that such promise of indemnity was not affected by the statute of frauds, and that it bound A and D. Peck v. Thompson, 15 Vt. 637.

13. If a promise of indemnity is not collateral to the liability of some other person to the same party, it is not within the statute of frauds. In the absence of all evidence that there was a liability of any other person to the party to whom the promise of indemnity was given, to which such promise could have been collateral, it was held to be an original promise, and not within the statute. Beaman v. Russell, 20 Vt. 205.

14. The undertaking of a factor, authorized to sell goods on credit, is not a collateral engagement, but a direct and absolute one, that the debts for which the goods are sold shall be paid at the time they are due, or, in other words, that they shall be cash in the principal's account at the time they are due—and so, is not within the statute of frauds. Bradley v. Richardson (U. S. C. C.), 23 Vt. 720.

15. The defendant, at the request of S, carried certain papers for him to the plaintiff, that the plaintiff might commence certain suits for S. The plaintiff refused to do so, unless the defendant would become responsible for the advances in the suits. The defendant assured the plaintiff that S was good for that, and, if not, he (defendant) was; and thereupon the plaintiff commenced the suits, and made advances therein. Held, that the defendant's undertaking was collateral, and within the statute; and that the defendant was not liable for such advances, he having acted in good faith, although S was not responsible. Steele v. Towne, 28 Vt. 771.

16. A subsequent oral promise to pay, in such case, was held to be without consideration and not enforceable. Ib.

17. Where a partnership was formed, and property previously purchased by one of the partners and not paid for, went into the partnership and for its use;—Held, that the other partners were not liable therefor to the original vendor, and that their subsequent promise to pay him was within the statute. Davis v. Evans, 39 Vt. 182.

18. The defendant, a widow, promised the plaintiff that if he would not present his account against her deceased husband's estate, she would pay it. To this the plaintiff agreed and did not present his account for allowance. There was no property of the estate except such as by law passed or was assigned to the widow. Held, that the promise was within the statute and was also without consideration. Durant v. Allen, 48 Vt. 58.

19. The defendant requested the plaintiff, an attorney, to attend to certain suits in which the defendant's son was interested, saying that he (the defendant) would pay for it. The plaintiff did so, and made his charges therefor directly against the defendant. It did not appear that the son ever employed or promised to pay the plaintiff. Held, that this was an original promise, and not within the statute. Hodges v. Hall, 29 Vt. 209.

20. The preceptor of an academy requested one of his pupils to assist in getting up an exhibition of the pupils, upon the understanding between them that the preceptor would indemnify him for his services and expenses so that he should lose nothing, although subscriptions were relied upon for raising the necessary funds. Held, that the promise to pay what the subscriptions did not, was an original promise and not within the statute, there being no other person liable for the same debt. Walker v. Norton, 29 Vt. 226.

21. A promise made to one summoned as a trustee, that if he will pay the principal debtor the debt due him, the promisor will indemnify the trustee against any judgment which may be recovered against him in the trustee suit, is not within the statute. Soule v. Albee, 31 Vt. 142.

22. Independent promise for the benefit of a third person. The plaintiff and defendant were both members, and the latter steward, of a particular Methodist church and society. The defendant, in discharge of his duties as steward, applied to the plaintiff, saying: "I want you to board W (the minister); if you will do it, I will see that you shall be well paid, and have the money for it." The plaintiff boarded W, relying upon the defendant alone for payment. The defendant did not intend to become personally liable, but the plaintiff did not know that he was an officer of the society.

Held, that the contract of the defendant was direct, and not within the statute, and that he was liable for the board of W. Bushee v. Allen, 31 Vt. 631.

23. The performance of services at the defendant's request and on the faith of his promise to pay, creates a direct original indebtedness, not collateral, and is not within the statute of frauds, although the services were solely for the benefit of a third person, and that known to the plaintiff. Eddy v. Davidson, 42 Vt. 56.

24. Though the facts might also create a liability on the part of such third person, they would only show a direct joint indebtedness, not within the statute. Ib.

25. The plaintiff, a physician, was called upon by the defendant's daughter to attend upon her during her last sickness. She was of full age and married, her husband being in the army, and she stopping with an aunt. The plaintiff made his charges against the defendant. After several visits, the defendant told the plaintiff he wanted him to keep on as before and he would pay him—pay the whole bill. Relying upon this, the plaintiff continued his services. Held, that the defendant was liable for the entire bill. Bagley v. Moulton, 42 Vt. 184; and see Roberts v. Griswold, 35 Vt. 496.

26. Release of debtor. Where the defendant, upon a consideration moving from a debtor, agreed to pay his debt to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff consented to charge the debt to the defendant on his request;—Held, that this was an original undertaking, by which the original debtor was released, and was not within the statute of frauds. Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135.

27. The plaintiff made a coat for B, and, in consideration that the plaintiff would deliver it to B, the defendant verbally promised to pay the price. The plaintiff thereupon delivered the coat to B, and B "was discharged from the debt." Held, that the promise was not within the statute, and that the defendant was liable as sole debtor in the action of book account. Watson v. Jacobs, 29 Vt. 169.

28. The plaintiff, administrator of an estate, delivered all the assets to the defendant, in consideration whereof the defendant promised, by parol, to pay all claims that might thereafter come up against the plaintiff as such administrator. Held, that the defendant's promise was an original undertaking of indemnity, and not within the statute. Randall v. Kelsey, 46 Vt. 158.

29. The defendant retained the plaintiff as his attorney in any litigation which might grow out of a conveyance made to him by his brother John, who had failed, and in consideration of such retainer promised the plaintiff, verbally, to pay him one-half of a debt of John due to the plaintiff, and to pay the plaintiff reasonable fees and charges for his services. Held, that the promise to pay the debt of John was within the statute, and could not be enforced by an action. Fullam v. Adams, 37 Vt. 391.

30. Promissor receiving funds. We know of no case in this State, where the parol promise of one to pay the debt of another—the original debtor's liability continuing—has been upheld upon any other consideration than the receipt of some fund or other security, either from the debtor or creditor, charged with the payment of the debt, so that a trust or duty was thereby created to pay the debt; and so that in making payment of the debt he would be really fulfilling an obligation of his own. When carried further than this, the statute of frauds is really repealed. Poland, C. J. Ib., 405.

31. Thus, where the plaintiff, as a guardian, held securities and property of his ward and a sum was due him as guardian, and the defendant promised, that if the plaintiff would deliver to him such securities and property of the ward, he would pay the plaintiff the sum so due him as guardian;—Held, that such promise was not within the statute. French v. Thompson, 6 Vt. 54.

32. Where the original debtor places property of any kind in the hands of a third person, and that person, in consideration thereof, promises the creditor to pay the debt, the promise is binding, although not in writing, and although the original debtor may still remain liable. Wait v. Wait, 28 Vt. 350. Merrill v. Englesby, 28 Vt. 150. Smith v. Rogers, 35 Vt. 140.

33. The plaintiff and defendant were creditors of the same debtor, and the plaintiff was about to attach certain property of the debtor which the plaintiff knew of and which he could attach in preference to any other person, when the defendant promised, that if the plaintiff would forbear to attach and allow the defendant to attach, he would pay the plaintiff's debt. The plaintiff did so forbear and allowed the defendant to attach and secure his own debt. Held, that this promise was not within the statute of frauds. Lampson v. Hobart, 28 Vt. 697. (The court treated this as a case where the plaintiff had obtained a security for his debt, and the promise made in consideration of its surrender. Fullam v. Adams, 37 Vt. 404.) Smith v. Rogers, 35 Vt. 140.

34. The plaintiff had an attachment on certain logs of his debtor, Brown, and had trusted certain debtors of Brown. In consideration that the plaintiff would release his attachment on the logs and release the trustees [so that the defendant could bid off the logs at a sheriff's sale and have them sawed by the trustees, Fullam v. Adams, 37 Vt. 404] the defendant promised the plaintiff to pay him $100 of Brown's debt. Held, that such promise was not within the statute. Cross v. Richardson, 30 Vt. 641.

35. The plaintiff had a debt against the defendant's father, who had died, leaving an ample estate. The defendant, being sole heir, promised the plaintiff to pay the debt, if he would not present his claim for allowance against the father's estate. The plaintiff forbore to so present his claim, whereby it became discharged, and his claim against the funds in the hands of the defendant released. Held, that the promise was not within the statute, and was binding. Templeton v. Bascom, 33 Vt. 132.

III. CONTRACTS FOR THE SALE OF LANDS, &C.

36. A contract for labor in cutting down trees and clearing land is not within the statute of frauds. Forbes v. Hamilton, 2 Tyl. 356.

37. Standing trees. In trespass for cutting and removing trees, where the plaintiff's title to the trees was derived from a parol contract of purchase of the land owner, made 21 or 22 years before, of all the timber on certain land to be taken off at any time the vendee should like, though it was expected by the vendor that it would be taken in ten years;—Held, that the purchase was of an interest in land, and within the statute of frauds. Buck v. Pickwell, 27 Vt. 157. (Approved, "to the extent of the matter decided," Fitch v. Burk, 38 Vt. 687. "The opinion" in this case has not "the force of authority beyond the very point of judgment." Sterling v. Baldwin, 42 Vt. 309.)

38. In a case where it was held that the sale of standing timber was a sale of an interest in land, and so the contract was required to be in writing, it was further held,—that where the contract was by parol, and the purchaser had paid the consideration and had entered upon the land from time to time and cut part of the timber, it became his as fast as cut, although he could maintain no action for a trespass to the standing timber. Buck v. Pickwell. Yale v. Seeley, 15 Vt. 221.

39. The statute of frauds, touching the sale of lands, applies to actions brought to enforce rights dependent upon and resulting from the contract; and is not limited to those cases where the contract must necessarily be set out in the declaration. Buck v. Pickwell.

40. Lease. A contract for a lease of land to commence in futuro is within the statute, and must be in writing. Hawley v. Moody, 24 Vt. 603.

41. Exchange. The parties contracted by parol to exchange lands. The plaintiff conveyed according to the contract. The defendant conveyed but a portion of the land agreed to be conveyed by him, and refused to convey the residue. Held, that the contract was within the statute as "for the sale of lands," and that no action at law lay upon it. Hibbard v. Whitney, 18 Vt. 21. 32 Vt. 359. 26 Vt. 597.

42. Agreement to reconvey. The plaintiff conveyed land to the defendant, for an agreed price paid, under a parol agreement that the defendant would convey to any purchaser at a higher price whom the plaintiff should find within one year, and the plaintiff should have one-half the gain. Held, that the contract was within the statute as "for the sale of lands," that the plaintiff could not recover thereon, nor for his expenses in looking up such purchaser. Ballard v. Bond, 32 Vt. 355.

43. Question of price. Land was sold at an agreed price per acre, and was measured and computed by the parties, and conveyed and paid for according to such computation. There was an error in the computation, by mutual mistake, by which more was paid for the land than the grantor was entitled to by the contract. Held, that the grantee could recover back the excess paid, although the contract was not in writing, and this without an offer to rescind. White v. Miller, 22 Vt. 380.

44. The plaintiff purchased of defendant a lot of land for $50, and paid him, and received from the defendant a quit-claim deed thereof; and the defendant promised the plaintiff to refund the money if he did not acquire a good title by the deed. No title was conveyed by the deed. Held, that the plaintiff could recover back the money; the court treating it as a question of price only, resting in parol—that is, $50 for the whole lot, if the defendant had title to it, and in the same proportion for all he had title to. Thayer v. Viles, 23 Vt. 494. 41 Vt. 545.

45. Where the defendant sold to the plaintiff his share in an estate, for a certain price, and conveyed all his interest in the premises by quit-claim deed reciting the consideration as paid, but agreed by parol that if another heir, supposed to be dead, should turn out to be alive, whereby the share so sold would be reduced, he would refund a certain part of the price paid, and such heir was in fact living;—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon such parol agreement. Holbrook v. Holbrook, 30 Vt. 483.

46. Guaranty of quantity. In a bargain, not in writing, for the sale of several parcels of land for one gross price, the defendant represented and guarantied that one of the parcels contained a certain number of acres. After the conveyance and payment of the price, the purchaser brought an action of assumpsit, counting upon such guaranty and adding the common money counts, to recover back the excess paid for an ascertained deficiency in the quantity. Held, that the guaranty was part of the contract of sale, and the consideration of the whole contract was entire and indivisible, and, being "a contract for the sale of lands," was within the statute of frauds; and, not being in writing, no action lay upon it. Dyer v. Graves, 37 Vt. 369.

47. Oral agreement conveys no interest. An oral agreement for the purchase and conveyance of real estate, though followed by part payment and security given for the balance of the price according to the agreement, is but a promise, and conveys no interest, legal or equitable, in the estate, nor amounts in law to a permission or license to enter upon and enjoy it; and the agreement, standing alone, is not even evidence of a license to enter before the conveyance has been made and its terms approved and accepted; and, until the conveyance has been made, the purchaser, without license in fact given, is a trespasser by his entry upon the estate. Whitcher v. Morey, 39 Vt. 459.

48. The sale of an interest in land, without writing, is not a sufficient consideration for an agreement to pay the purchase price. Davis v. Farr, 26 Vt. 592.

49. Under a verbal contract for the sale of real estate, the tender of a deed, not accepted, does not entitle the vendor to maintain an action for the price. King v. Smith, 33 Vt. 22.

50. When fully executed, an action lies for the price. Where land has been conveyed, and the contract of sale, though not in writing, has been fully executed on the part of the grantor, and nothing remains to be done but the payment of the stipulated price, an action at law can be sustained to recover such price. Such case is not within the statute of frauds. Bank v. Ormsby, 28 Vt. 721. Hibbard v. Whitney, 18 Vt. 23. Thayer v. Viles, 23 Vt. 494. Davis v. Farr, 26 Vt. 596. Hodges v. Green, 28 Vt. 358. Ballard v. Bond, 32 Vt. 358. Dyer v. Graves, 37 Vt. 376.

51. So, in case of a parol sale of a pew in a meeting house, where the purchaser took possession and destroyed the pew and its identity, in repairing and remodelling the meeting house, so that he received all the benefit and advantage he could possibly have had by the purchase, if a deed had been executed;—Held, that the vendor could recover the price agreed to be paid, although the contract was not in writing, and no deed had been delivered. Hodges v. Green, as explained and limited in Ballard v. Bond, 32 Vt. 359.

52. Action to recover back price. The plaintiff had made a parol agreement for the purchase of land and paid part of the price and brought suit to recover it back, but, it appearing that the defendant had been ready to convey, there was judgment for the defendant. (29 Vt. 510.) The plaintiff brought a second action for the money paid, and upon proof that the parties, after the first judgment, treated the contract as still subsisting and open, and the money paid as paid towards the price of the land, and that the plaintiff had offered to pay the balance of the price and the defendant had refused to convey, the plaintiff was allowed to recover. Cobb v. Hall, 33 Vt. 288.

IV. AGREEMENT NOT TO BE PERFORMED WITHIN ONE YEAR.

53. It is only where it appears by the agreement that it is not to be performed within one year, that the statute of frauds requires it to be in writing. If the thing rests on contingency, and clearly may be performed within a year, the statute does not apply. Blanchard v. Weeks, 34 Vt. 589. Redfield, J., in Hinckley v. Southgate, 11 Vt. 480. Sherman v. Champlain Tr. Co., 31 Vt. 162, 182.

54. The defendant by parol agreed with the plaintiff to refrain from the practice of medicine at A, while the plaintiff should reside and practice medicine at A, and forever. Held, that the engagement of the defendant was personal, terminating at his death, and, as full performance might be complete within one year, the agreement was not within the statute. Blanchard v. Weeks.

55. An agreement, not in writing, must be capable of being completely performed within one year—that is, on the side of the party sought to be charged with its breach—in order to be exempt from the operation of the 5th clause of the statute of frauds. If to be performed, part in one year and part thereafter, the whole is within the statute. Squire v. Whipple, 1 Vt. 69. Foot v. Emerson, 10 Vt. 888. Hinckley v. Southgate, 11 Vt. 428. Sheehy v. Adarene, 41 Vt. 541.

56. Whether or not the statute applies to the case of a verbal contract, which, by its terms, is to be performed within one year by one party but not to be performed within one year by the other party, depends upon which party is sued. In an action against the party who is to perform his part within the year, the statute does not apply; but in an action against the other party, it does apply. Sheehy v. Adarene. Pierce v. Paine, 28 Vt. 34.

V. CONTRACT FOR THE SALE OF GOODS.

57. Executory contracts. The statute of frauds (Sec. 2) applies as well to executory contracts for the sale and delivery of goods, as to contracts for immediate sale and delivery. Ide v. Stanton, 15 Vt. 685.

58. Contract to manufacture. Held, (1), Executory contracts are within the statute of frauds; (3), Contracts for the manufacture and future delivery of goods, wares and merchandise are not within the statute; but, (3), to come within this second class, the contract must require the performance of such work and labor upon the property which may be the subject matter of the contract, as shall materially and essentially change the character of the property itself, so that the property, as it is to be when delivered, shall be substantially different from what it is at the time the contract is entered into. Ellison v. Brigham, 38 Vt. 64.

59. The defendant agreed, by parol, to cut down all the trees on his land fit for logs, to cut the same into logs and draw and deliver the same to the plaintiff, at a place named, within the existing period of sledding,—to be paid for at a specified price per cord when delivered and measured. In an action for refusal to cut and deliver the logs;—Held, that the contract was not one for manufacture and delivery, but was a contract for the sale of all the logs that the specified trees would make, and was within the statute. Ib.

60. Stock. The plaintiff, without writing, purchased of the defendant certain shares of stock in a company at a given price then paid, and took delivery of the stock upon the defendant's orally agreeing to take it back and repay the plaintiff therefor, on request. The plaintiff afterwards tendered back the stock, and demanded repayment. Held, that the agreement for repayment was part of the original contract of purchase, qualifying it, and that the statute, as to a memorandum in writing, did not apply to it. Fay v. Wheeler, 44 Vt. 292.

61. Earnest—Part payment. Where a contract, not in writing, is taken out of the statute of frauds by the payment of earnest money, its terms may be afterwards varied by parol in respect to the time of performance, without any new consideration;—"the consideration for the old agreement being imported into the new agreement, which is substituted for it." Paoker v. Steward, 34 Vt. 127.

62. Where parties in making a contract omit to do what the statute requires to be done to make a valid contract,—as part payment, &c.,—it requires the consent of both parties to supply, subsequently, the thing omitted. Wilson, J., in Edgerton v. Hodge, 41 Vt. 676; and held, in such case, that a subsequent demand by the seller of part payment, or earnest, though in writing, does not bind him to accept it when offered. Ib.

63. Accepting and receiving. A contract for the sale of goods, under the second section of the statute of frauds, may be proved by parol, and an action lies thereon, provided the purchaser accepts and receives a part of the goods, &c. (Distinction taken between 1st and 2nd sections.) Strong v. Dodds, 47 Vt. 348.

64. In order to perfect a sale of goods, under the statute, something more is necessary than a mere delivery; the purchaser must "accept and receive part of the goods." Spencer v. Hale, 30 Vt. 314. Gibbs v. Benjamin, 45 Vt. 124.

65. Delivery to carrier. The delivery of goods purchased to a common carrier selected by the purchaser, if accepted by the carrier and forwarded, is a sufficient acceptance and receipt by the purchaser to satisfy the statute. Spencer v. Hale.

66. The plaintiff, pursuant to the defendant's order, packed the goods ordered on purchase, marked them addressed to the defendant, and delivered them to a railroad company, as ordered, for transportation to the defendant, charges following, and duly advised the defendant. The goods were lost on the way and never came to the defendant. Held, that the railroad company was the servant and agent of the defendant, so that the receipt of the goods by it was such a receipt and acceptance by the defendant as answered the statute. Strong v. Dodds, 47 348.

67. Other instances. The plaintiff sold to the defendant, at auction, 16 sheep, then in the plaintiff's yard, for $80.00. Upon the defendant's suggestion, the parties put the sheep into another yard of the plaintiff, when the defendant told the plaintiff that if he would keep the sheep until the next Saturday, he (defendant) would then come and get them, and pay all bills. To this the plaintiff assented and so kept the sheep, and on the next Saturday the defendant declined to take the sheep. In an action for the price;—Held, that the defendant did so "accept and receive" the sheep, as to satisfy the statute. Green v. Merriam, 28 Vt. 801.

68. Where a purchaser of goods has an election to repudiate a delivery, as, under the statute of frauds, he must do it immediately or he is bound by the acquiescence as an acceptance. Spencer v. Hale, 30 Vt. 314.

69. The plaintiff sold to the defendants, by parol, a quantity of logs at a saw mill for a certain price per M feet, board measure, neither party counting or knowing the number of logs, the plaintiff to procure the logs to be sawed into boards at his own expense, but as the defendants should direct. They did direct the miller how the logs should be sawed, and they were sawed accordingly, they informing him that they had bought the logs. Before the logs were sawed, they offered to sell the lumber and engaged a man to draw away the boards from the board-way for them, but he neglected to do so, and the plaintiff, on the call of the miller to clear the board-way, drew away the boards as sawed, and piled them up, and notified the defendants of the measurement and demanded payment, but the defendants refused either to pay or to take the boards. Held, that this was a contract for the sale of the logs as boards, and that there was no acceptance of the boards sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Gorham v. Fisher, 80 Vt. 428.

70. Under a parol contract, within the statute of frauds, to furnish and deliver a certain quantity of lumber of different specified kinds, at one fixed price per thousand feet for all kinds, the boards and plank to be "square-edged," the plaintiff drew a part of the several kinds, and deposited it on a common near the defendant's house, the defendant helping to unload it. After a time, the defendant observed that some of the boards and plank were "wary-edged," and sent word to the plaintiff that he should not accept the "wary-edged" boards and plank. The plaintiff then gave the defendant notice in writing, that he rescinded the contract and notified the defendant not to meddle with nor use the lumber. The lumber had not then been measured, nor any part been used or paid for by the defendant. The defendant afterwards appropriated the lumber. Held, that he was liable in trover therefor. Montgomery v. Ricker, 43 Vt. 165.

71. Part payment. The plaintiff contracted by parol with the defendant for 31 sheep, at a stated price, to be delivered as he should want them for butchering. The defendant delivered 20 upon the contract, which the plaintiff received and paid for at the contract price, as delivered. The defendant refused to deliver the remaining 11 sheep, and this action was brought to recover damages for such refusal. Held, that there was an acceptance upon the contract of part of the property purchased, and a payment of part of the purchase money, either of which was sufficient to take the contract out of the statute of frauds, and make it binding as an executory contract. Richardson v. Squires, 37 Vt. 640.

72. The plaintiff, by verbal contract, sold the defendant a specified number of bushels of potatoes, at a specified price per bushel, amounting to more than $40. The price falling in market, the defendant wrote the plaintiff to buy no more potatoes until the plaintiff heard from him, and, after this, received one car load upon the contract, and subsequently paid for such car load. Held, that this was such part acceptance and payment as took the contract out of statute. Danforth v. Walker, 40 Vt. 257.

73. H agreed to take of D a quantity of apples, and D sent several barrels more than H agreed to take, with word that what H could not sell he (D) would take back. D afterwards agreed to purchase of H a lot of poultry amounting to more than $40, and it was then agreed that H should keep all the apples at a price then agreed upon, and this should apply as part payment for the poultry. Held, that this was a then present part payment, sufficient under the statute of frauds. Dow v. Worthen, 37 Vt. 108.

74. An antecedent debt, agreed to be paid and extinguished at the time and so actually paid, may be part payment on a contract for the sale of goods, &c., to satisfy the statute, though not shown by writing, indorsement, credit or receipt; but it must be more than an agreement that it shall be so applied. It must be pay down, and so understood. Ib.

VI. THE MEMORANDUM.

75. Completeness. The written note or memorandum, to satisfy the statute of frauds, must, either by its own language or by reference to something else, contain such a description of the contract actually made, as shall obviate the necessity of resorting to parol evidence in order to supply any term of the contract, essential to its validity. Ide v. Stanton, 15 Vt. 685.

76. A stipulated price enters into the legal contemplation of a bargain, or contract of sale; and, therefore, a note or memorandum which does not furnish evidence of the price, is insufficient under the statute. Ib.

77. A written admission of a previous oral contract, signed by the party to be charged, satisfies the statute; nor need this be comprised in a single paper, or document, but distinct writings, and of different dates, properly conducing to prove the contract, are competent evidence. Ib.

78. The memorandum of a contract, such as to satisfy the statute, must contain the substantial terms of the contract, expressed with such certainty that they may be understood from the contract itself, or from some other writing to which it refers, without resorting to parol evidence. Bennett, J., in Buck v. Pickwell, 27 Vt. 167.

79. Statement of consideration. The statute does not require that the consideration should appear in writing, but only the promise of the party to be charged. Smith v. Ide, 3 Vt. 290;—the word agreement being “held susceptible of a meaning somewhat short of its strict legal import, and to be synonymous with special promise or undertaking.” Royce, J., in Ide v. Stanton, 15 Vt. 691.

80. It is not necessary that the consideration of a written contract should appear in the writing, whether or not the agreement is required by the statute to be in writing, but the consideration may be proved by parol. Smith v. Ide, 3 Vt. 290. Patchin v. Swift, 21 Vt. 292. Troy Academy v. Nelson, 24 Vt. 189. Gregory v. Glead, 33 Vt. 405; and see Phelps v. Stewart, 12 Vt. 256.

81. Kind of writing. An exception, in a deed of lands, of the timber on the lands which the grantor “had sold to A B” was held not to be a memorandum of the contract between the grantor and A B, such as to satisfy the statute of frauds. Buck v. Pickwell, 27 Vt. 157.

82. June 30, 1864, Adams conveyed by warranty deed to Sterling certain lands, with this reservation in the deed: “Reserving to myself all the hemlock timber standing [thereon] with the right to cut and remove at any time within two years.” August 24, 1864, Adams sold this timber to Quimby and gave this writing signed by Adams: “Sold to Wm. Quimby all the hemlock timber standing and down,” &c., (describing the same timber). “Quimby is to have one year from next June to get the lumber off the land. Received $100 in full for the timber.” Nov. 22, 1864, Adams executed a quit-claim deed to Sterling, conveying “All the right of timber I reserved in my deed to Sterling on the 30th day of June, 1864, and meaning to include in this deed all the timber that is cut and standing on said lot.” Held, that said writing gave Quimby the right to enter upon the land and to cut and take away the timber, within the time named in the writing, notwithstanding the deeds to Sterling. Sterling v. Baldwin, 42 Vt. 306.

83. Semble, that, as this contract gave a right to the soil for a time, it created an interest in land; but, being in writing, it answered the requirement of the statute of frauds; and need not be by deed as between the parties, nor as to Sterling, under the circumstances. (See observations of Barrett, J., on the Vermont statute of conveyances.) Ib.

84. Alteration by parol. If any of the terms of a written contract, required by the statute to be in writing, are altered by contract not in writing, the entire contract is thereby reduced to the grade of a mere unwritten contract, and no action will lie upon it. Dana v. Hancock, 30 Vt. 616.

85. In a written contract for the sale and conveyance of land upon a survey, it was provided that A should make the survey. The survey was not made by A, but by B. In an action on the contract for refusal to convey, the plaintiff offered to prove that A could not be procured to make the survey and that thereupon the parties, orally, mutually agreed upon B, and that he made the survey in their presence. Held inadmissible. Ib.

86. By whom to be signed. An entry of the names of the seller and buyer of goods sold at auction, of the article sold, and the price at which sold, made by a clerk of the auctioneer, under his direction, in his auction sale book, is a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the statute of frauds. The auctioneer is the agent of both parties. Harvey v. Stevens, 48 Vt. 658.

87. The plaintiff's traveling agent took an order for goods from the defendant's clerk, agreeing on the kips, quantities, qualities and prices.

The agent wrote out the order and transmitted it by letter to the plaintiff to be filled. Held, that this was not a sufficient note or memorandum of the bargain to answer the statute,—for that such agent was not the agent of the defendant for that purpose, but only the agent of the plaintiff. Strong v. Dodds, 47 Vt. 348.

VII. FORCE OF CONTRACT WITHOUT MEMORANDUM.

88. The statute of frauds, which prohibits a suit upon certain contracts not in writing, does not make the contract void, but, so far as the same may have been performed, the party, as to what has been done, may defend under it. Philbrook v. Belknap, 6 Vt. 383. Shaw v. Shaw, Id., 69. Smith v. Smith, 14 Vt. 440. Hawley v. Moody, 24 Vt. 603. Cobb v. Hall, 29 Vt. 510. Mack v. Bragg, 30 Vt. 571. Packer v. Button, 35 Vt. 188.

89. Such parol agreements are, to all intents, contracts, and perfectly valid for all purposes except actions, so long as they are acted under. Redfield, J., in Hawley v. Moody, 24 Vt. 606.

90. Abandonment. That a parol contract for services is within the statute of frauds, where it is an entire contract, as for three years, &c., does not entitle the party rendering services under it to recover for part performance, when he has, without cause, abandoned the contract. Philbrook v. Belknap, 6 Vt. 383. Mack v. Bragg, 30 Vt. 571.

91. Refusal to perform. Where one has received advances or payments upon a parol contract not enforceable by reason of the statute of frauds, and afterwards repudiates it, the other party may sustain an action against him, as for goods sold, or money had and received, to recover for such advances or payments. Hawley v. Moody, 24 Vt. 603.

92. Part performance. At law, part performance of a verbal contract, required to be in writing, will not exempt it from the operation of the statute. Hibbard v. Whitney, 13 Vt. 21. 26 Vt. 597. 27 Vt. 167. 32 Vt. 359.

93. Part performance of a parol contract, required by law to be in writing, is no ground for relief at law; and part payment merely does not amount to such part performance as to entitle the party to enforce the contract in equity. Hawley v. Moody, 24 Vt. 603.

VIII. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

94. A declaration upon a contract required by the statute of frauds to be in writing, need not aver it to have been in writing. Hotchkins v. Ladd, 36 Vt. 593.

95. The defense of the statute may be shown under the general issue, or be pleaded specially, at the option of the defendant, Id.

96. A contract required by the first section of the statute of frauds to be in writing, is not illegal though not in writing, but only not capable of being enforced;—an immunity which the defendant may waive if he sees fit. Thus, where the objection to the proof of such contract by parol evidence was first raised by the defendant after the argument to the jury had commenced;—Held, that he had waived his right to object thereto. Montgomery v. Edwards, 46 Vt. 151. 47 Vt. 354.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

I. WHAT IS, AND WHAT IS NOT; EFFECT; EVIDENCE.

II. AVOIDANCE BY ADMINISTRATOR.

III. THE PENALTY.

1. When it is incurred, and when not.
2. Action to recover penalty.

I. WHAT IS, AND WHAT IS NOT; EFFECT; EVIDENCE.

1. To secure future support—Voluntary.

The conveyance by a debtor of all his property to secure his future support, or that of himself and family, or others, without making a provision for his debts, is, as to creditors not provided for, fraudulent and void. Jones v. Spear, 21 Vt. 426. Crane v. Stickles, 15 Vt. 252. 23 Vt. 549.

2. A party cannot, either by gift or in consideration of an agreement for support for life, convey his property so that it shall be valid against his creditors, without reserving what is amply sufficient for the payment of his then existing debts; this sufficiency depending upon the amount and nature, in connection with the situation, of the property reserved, in reference to the facilities it affords the creditors for collecting their debts. Cash on hand, and debts not attachable by trustee process, would not be a sufficient reservation. Church v. Chapin, 35 Vt. 223.

3. A voluntary conveyance in consideration of love and affection, or an absolute conveyance for an inadequate consideration, where the grantor at the time has sufficient other property to pay all his debts, and no fraud is intended, will not be defeated, as to existing creditors, by subsequent events rendering the grantor insolvent,—as, a flood; and is valid as against subsequent creditors of the grantor. Brackett v. Waite, 4 Vt. 389. S. C., 6 Vt. 411. Dewey v. Long, 25 Vt. 564.

4. The intestate conveyed land to his sons, in consideration of their agreement to support himself and wife for their lives, and to pay certain sums as gifts to charities and to the other children, such agreement being secured on the land. Two years afterwards the intestate contracted a debt, which, after his death, was allowed against his estate, which proved insufficient to pay the debt. Held, that the conveyance was not fraudulent; that neither the conveyance nor the gifts were revocable; and that the grantees, who were administrators, were not bound to account for the land in the settlement of the estate. Rut. & Bur. R. Co. v. Powers, 25 Vt. 15.

5. Deed absolute—Unexpressed condition. A conveyance absolute in form, though intended in trust, is not per se fraudulent, although taking a conveyance in that form, not expressing the trust in the deed, may afford strong evidence of a fraudulent intent. Brooks v. Clayes, 10 Vt. 87. Spaulding v. Austin, 2 Vt. 555. Gibson v. Seymour, 3 Vt. 565.

6. An absolute conveyance of property with a secret agreement of defeasance, written or verbal, is not regarded in this State as a conclusive badge of fraud, but is open to suspicion. Smith v. Onion, 19 Vt. 427.

7. One may take security for a debt by a deed absolute, or by a bill of sale, when intended as a security; but if claimed as an absolute purchase, and he seeks by it to protect from creditors the property of the vendor, this is evidence of fraud. Barker v. French, 18 Vt. 460. If represented by the parties and justified as being an actual absolute conveyance of the property, it is, for that reason alone, void. Redfield, C. J., in Webster v. Denison, 25 Vt. 496.

8. A conveyed to B all his real estate, upon consideration that B should pay all A's debts. The plaintiff having such a debt called on B for payment, who claimed offsets, and they compromised the matter by B's paying one-half, and by a surrender of the claims on both sides. Before this, A had told the plaintiff to get what he could of B, and that he (A) would pay the balance. After the compromise, the plaintiff sued A and took judgment for one-half the original claim, and levied his execution upon the lands conveyed to B. B had no knowledge of A's promise, nor of the suit, until after the judgment. In an action of ejectment against B, to recover the lands levied upon;—Held, that there was no evidence that the deed to B was made with intent to defraud or delay the plaintiff as a creditor; that so far as B was concerned, the claim was extinguished by the compromise and payment; and that the judgment should be regarded either as a debt against A accruing subsequent to the deed, for the payment of which neither B nor the land was holden, or else as an attempted fraud upon the compromise and settlement, by attempting to give it the appearance of a prior claim. Ingals v. Brooks, 29 Vt. 398.

9. Consideration inadequate. A conveyance may be void as to creditors of the grantor, for mere inadequacy of the consideration paid—as, where the price paid for a farm was less than half the value. Church v. Chapin, 35 Vt. 228.

10. In the case of a sale claimed to be fraudulent as to creditors, the court charged the jury generally, that the sale was valid if made bona fide, and for a valuable consideration, and the buyer took possession before the attachment. Held defective and erroneous, in that it omitted the element of the adequacy of the consideration, as also possession at the time of the attachment; that it was the duty of the judge not only to instruct the jury in the law and the facts necessary to be found, but particularly to point out what testimony would constitute the proper evidence of such facts. Durkee v. Mahoney, 1 Aik. 116.

11. Full consideration. A sale may be void as to creditors for fraud, although the purchaser may pay a full consideration and take possession—as, where it is done to enable the seller to abscond and cheat his creditors. Fuller v. Sears, 5 Vt. 527.

12. Intent must be fraudulent in both parties. To render a sale void as to creditors on the ground of fraud, both the vendor and vendee must participate in the intent to delay the creditors of the vendor, at least to the extent of the vendee's having knowledge of such intent on the part of the vendor. Leach v. Francis, 41 Vt. 670. 43 Vt. 48.

13. The plaintiff was owner of a foundry, and tenant in common with E in another foundry. E was insolvent, and for the purpose of withdrawing his property from the reach of his creditors, sold his interest to the plaintiff. The plaintiff knew of E's purpose and his insolvency, but purchased the property, paying a full consideration therefor, not with the intent of aiding E in his purpose, but for his own individual use, and only because he thought it necessary for the preservation and promotion of his own business interests, by preventing a ruinous competition. Held, that he could hold such property against the creditors of E. Root v. Reynolds, 32 Vt. 139.

14. But if, in such case, the purchaser is a simple volunteer, without any adequate motive or purpose except to buy the property cheap, this would be a lending of himself to the fraud of the seller, although he might not be actuated by a wish to defraud the seller's creditors. Edgell v. Lowell, 4 Vt. 405, as explained by Root v. Reynolds.

15. Preference. A creditor has the same right to secure his debt by purchase, or other contract, that he would have by attachment; and though not a creditor to the full amount of the purchase, if the purchase is made upon adequate consideration and without any intent to defeat or delay any of the creditors of the vendor, it cannot be impeached by such creditors, even if the vendor was, at the time, threatened with attachments, and this was known to the purchaser. Lyon v. Rood, 12 Vt. 238. 32 Vt. 145.

16. There is nothing fraudulent as to creditors, nor objectionable, in giving a note to a surety to indemnify him against his suretyship, and it is no objection to his suing and recovering upon the note, that he has not paid the debt for which he is surety. Fletcher v. Edson, 8 Vt. 294.

17. So, one in failing circumstances may give a note payable before the maturity of his debt, for the purpose of having it immediately sued and secured by attachment, and it will be good as against other existing creditors. Shedd v. Bank of Brattleboro, 32 Vt. 709.

18. Subsequent creditors. A conveyance void as to existing creditors, by reason of a fraudulent intent, is void also as to subsequent creditors. McLane v. Johnson, 48 Vt. 48.

19. Good between the parties. As a general rule, actions will not be entertained which are predicated upon a prohibited transaction; but the statute prohibiting conveyances, contracts, &c., in fraud of creditors (G. S. c. 118, s. 32), limits the effect of the prohibition, by enacting that such conveyances, contracts, &c., "shall as against the party or parties only whose right, debt or duty is attempted to be avoided, &c., be null and void." In an action by the payee of a promissory note against the maker, which was founded upon consideration;—Held to be no defense, that the note was covinous and designed by both parties to defraud creditors; and semble, that the decision would be the same at common law. Carpenter v. McClure, 39 Vt. 9. See Peaslee v. Burney, 1 D. Chip. 331. Martin v. Martin, 1 Vt. 91. Gifford v. Ford, 5 Vt. 532. Conner v. Carpenter, 28 Vt. 237. Boutwell v. McClure, 30 Vt. 674. Seaver v. Pierce, 42 Vt. 325.

20. Where a husband, to avoid being compelled by the town to contribute to the support of his mother, conveyed land to his wife without consideration;—Held, that such conveyance was good as between the parties, and he could not allege his own fraud to avoid it. Roberts v. Lund, 45 Vt. 82.

21. Evidence of fraud. To prove the fraud of the grantor in a conveyance claimed to be fraudulent as to creditors, his acts and declarations before the conveyance are evidence against the grantee. McLane v. Johnson, 48 Vt. 48. Edgell v. Lovell, 4 Vt. 405.

22. But such acts and declarations are evidence only of his own fraudulent purpose. The participation of the grantee must be shown by separate and independent evidence. Eaton v. Cooper, 29 Vt. 444.

23. On the question whether a particular sale was fictitious and colorable;—Held, that evidence of other like fraudulent dealings between the parties at about the time in question, was admissible as evidence of the intent. Pierce v. Hoffman, 24 Vt. 525.

24. Fraud in law. The doctrine of fraud in law—constructive fraud—as applicable to a change of title in personal property without change of possession, has been adopted in this State on the ground of policy. It propounds a kind of rule of evidence, prescribing what facts proved shall be held to show the existence of such fraud, and employs the want of change of possession as a kind of conclusive estoppel in pais. Barrett, J., in Daniels v. Nelson, 41 Vt. 161.

II. AVOIDANCE BY ADMINISTRATOR.

25. An administrator cannot avoid the deed of his intestate, though made to defraud creditors, and although there be no other fund, except the lands conveyed, for the payment of debts. Peaslee v. Burney, 1 D. Chip. 331. Martin v. Martin, 1 Vt. 91. (Changed by stat. 1831. G. S. c. 52, s. 48, and seq.)

26. The statute authorizing an administrator, where there is a deficiency of assets, to sue for any property of the intestate by him conveyed with intent to defraud his creditors, does not extend to a case where a full consideration was paid to the intestate, and so the assets of the estate were not prejudiced thereby; for, otherwise, this would be making the defendant pay a second time. Allen v. Mower, 17 Vt. 61. Allen v. White, 17 Vt. 69.

27. On a bill in equity by an administrator to set aside his intestate's conveyance as fraudulent as to creditors, and to appropriate the estate to the payment of debts;—Held, that this is not properly the case of a trust, and the question as to proof of a trust by parol is not applicable; but the question is one of fraudulent intent, to be proved as such intent may be proved in any other case. McLane v. Johnson, 48 Vt. 48.

III. THE PENALTY.

1. When it is incurred, and when not.

28. In general. A conveyance may be fraudulent so as to be void against the grantor's creditors, and yet the statute penalty not be incurred. Brooks v. Clayer, 10 Vt. 87. See 26 Vt. 734.

29. The word right, as used in the statute against fraudulent conveyances (G. S. c. 118, s. 32), is synonymous with debt, or duty, or is confined to a right of the nature of a debt, and does not mean a mere right to attach the grantor's property. Ib.

30. Where a conveyance is made with intent to have the property disposed of and appropriated to the payment of the debts of the grantor, the parties thereto are not subject to the penalty for a fraudulent conveyance, although they may have intended to prevent the attachment of the property, and a consequent sacrifice thereof;—and yet the conveyance may be inoperative. Ib.

31. It seems, that if the intent of one of the parties to a conveyance or judgment is only to delay creditors temporarily by preventing an attachment, the penalty under G. S. c. 113, s. 33, is not incurred by either party, although the conveyance or judgment may be void. Barnum v. Hackett, 35 Vt. 77.

32. A fraud may be committed in the conveyance of one's individual property to avoid his partnership debts, as much as to avoid any other debt he owes, and equally subject him to the statute penalty. Forbes v. Davison, 11 Vt. 660.

33. A conveyance made to defraud all creditors is made to defraud each creditor, and entitles either one to sue for the penalty. Ib.

34. Intent of both parties. In order to subject one to the penalty for being a party to a fraudulent conveyance, or judgment, the intent to defraud must exist in the minds of both parties, at the time of the conveyance or judgment. Brooks v. Clages, 10 Vt. 87. Smith v. Kinne, 19 Vt. 564. Barnum v. Hackett, 35 Vt. 77.

35. But where the party on one side consists of two or more persons, it is not necessary that such corrupt intent exist in all such persons, but such as participate in the combination or common criminal intent, and those only, are liable. Barnum v. Hackett.

36. In a qui tam action to recover the penalty for receiving a fraudulent conveyance;—Held, that although the intent of the grantor was fraudulent, if the defendant received the conveyance in good faith, he was not liable; and that although he was aware of the fraudulent intent of the grantor, the burden of proof was not changed so as to make it incumbent on him to prove that in conveying the land to a third person, at the request of the grantor, he acted in good faith. His intent, in this respect, was not within the issue. Smith v. Kinne, 19 Vt. 564.

37. Justifying. A party to a judgment, or conveyance, who assents to it and sets it up as bona fide, knowing it to be fraudulent, is subject to the statute penalty although not a party to the original fraud, and even though the judgment was rendered or the conveyance made without his knowledge. Wright v. Eldred, 2 Aik. 401.

38. The acceptance of a fraudulent conveyance with knowledge of its object, is of itself a justification of the same. Forbes v. Davison, 11 Vt. 660.

39. As to consideration. One may become party to a fraudulent conveyance as a purchaser, so as to be subject to the statute penalty therefor, although he may pay a full consideration on his purchase, if he participates in the fraudulent intent of the grantor. Colgate v. Hill, 20 Vt. 56. Lowell v. Edgell, 4 Vt. 405. 32 Vt. 144. 48 Vt. 55.

40. Conveyance made in another State. A conveyance of property, however fraudulently intended or conceived, made in another State, cannot be a breach of our penal laws, or subject the party to a penalty therefor. Slack v. Gibbs, 14 Vt. 357.

2. Action to recover penalty.

41. Parties. A surety is so far a creditor of his principal, from the date of his suretyship, that he is treated as a "party aggrieved" by a subsequent fraudulent conveyance of his principal; and his right to sue and recover the penalty given by the statute is perfected by his subsequent payment of the debt. Beach v. Boynton, 26 Vt. 725. 28 Vt. 393.

42. Before the statute of 1844, No. 21 (G. S. c. 113, s. 34), the grantor and grantee in a fraudulent conveyance could not be joined, as defendants, in a qui tam action for the penalty. Slack v. Gibbs, 14 Vt. 357.

43. Several creditors, having distinct debts due them severally, cannot join in such action, to recover the penalty. Carroll v. Aldrich, 17 Vt. 569.

44. Declaration. Held, that it was not necessary that the declaration should conclude contra formam statuti, inasmuch as such conveyance was an offense at common law. Fuller v. Fuller, 4 Vt. 123.

45. Evidence. In an action to recover the penalty for a fraudulent conveyance, full proof must be made, as in criminal cases. Brooks v. Clages, 10 Vt. 87. 13 Vt. 548.

46. In a qui tam action by a creditor against a party to a fraudulent conveyance of his debtor;—Held, that the admissions of the debtor, not a party, acknowledging his indebtedness to the plaintiff, which were made before the alleged fraudulent conveyance, were admissible to establish such indebtedness; but that those made afterwards were not. Aiken v. Peck, 22 Vt. 255.

47. The subsequent admission of the party confessing the judgment, but not a party to this suit, that the judgment was fraudulent, was held not admissible. Barnum v. Hackett, 35 Vt. 77.

48. Recovery. If a conveyance is made to defraud a creditor, the right to an action for the statute penalty immediately accrues. The recovery of the penalty does not pay the debt, nor does the collection, or payment, or assignment of the debt cancel the penalty, or affect the action. Forbes v. Davison, 11 Vt. 660.

49. The penalty for being party to a fraudulent note, judgment, &c., is the whole sum mentioned in such note, judgment, &c., although but part of the consideration was fraudulent. Webb v. Long, 17 Vt. 587. Wright v. Eldred, 2 Aik. 401.

FUGITIVE.

1. The governor of this State was held not authorized to surrender to the governor of Canada, on his application, one who had committed a felony in Canada, and had escaped into this State. Such fugitive, having been arrested by the warrant of the governor of the State for the purpose of such surrender, was released on habeas corpus. Ex parte Holmes, 12 Vt. 681.

2. Article 4, s. 2, of the U. S. constitution and the U. S. statute of 1793, relative to the surrender of fugitives from justice, apply to a fugitive who has been indicted for obtaining money or property by false pretences in a State which has, by statute, made that a crime. In re Greenough, 31 Vt. 279.

G.

GAMING.

Where two or more game with another, under a secret agreement to divide between them what either may win from him;—Held, that they are liable jointly and severally, as tort feorsors, for whatever may have been won by, or paid to, either of them; and that a judgment recovered against one of the confederates, unsatisfied, is no bar to a recovery against the others, although the action is assumpsit, as prescribed by the statute (G. S. c. 119, s. 18)—it being for a tort in fact. Preston v. Hutchinson, 29 Vt. 144.

GIFT.

1. Necessity of delivery. A mere agreement to give cannot be enforced; and a gift without delivery, whether inter vivos or causa mortis, is ineffectual, both at law and in chancery. Carpenter v. Dodge, 20 Vt. 595.

2. A promise to give, to take effect only after the death of the promissor, without delivery of the promised gift, is void. Frost v. Frost, 33 Vt. 639.

3. The intestate promised the plaintiff to pay her after his death a certain sum per year while she should live with him and keep his house. Held, that if the consideration of this promise was understood by the parties to be partly for such services, and partly for the purposes of a mortuary gift, the plaintiff could recover only for such part as was intended as compensation for the services. Id.

4. A gift by deed of personal property, for valuable consideration expressed, transfers the property without delivery of it. Redfield, C. J., in Sherman v. Dodge, 28 Vt. 31.

5. A deposited in the defendant savings bank, Jan. 5, 1864, $220 of her own money in the name of B, her niece, and took a deposit book in which, by her direction, was entered by the treasurer: "1864, No. 530. B deposited $220," and a like entry was made on the treasurer's books. B died in May, 1865, and A in August, 1865. A retained the book in her own possession during her life, and it was found among her papers after her decease. Held, that the transaction constituted an agreement, a legal privity between the bank and B, by force of which the bank became accountable to her and to no other person; and A never having asserted any right to the money, nor made any effort to recall it, it was to be treated as a perfected gift to B. Howard v. Savings Bank, 40 Vt. 597.

6. Where the consideration for the enlistment of a soldier to the credit of a town was its agreement to pay a bounty of $1,000, to be paid to the soldier's minor son with interest when he should arrive at the age of 21 years, or, in case of the decease of the son before that time, then to the soldier's wife, and this was consummated by the giving of a town order expressed in like terms;—Held, that on the death of such soldier, said order and claim was not a part of his estate to be inventoried, but was from its origin vested in the son. Mason v. Hyde, 41 Vt. 232.

7. The testatrix had $300 which she intended to give to her nephew, Daniel Blanchard, if she should not live to want it; and, on expressing this intention to one Sheldon, and her wish to so invest the money that, if she should need any part of it in her life time, she could collect it, but, if she died without collecting it, the money and interest should go to said D B, Sheldon proposed to take the money and furnish security that her desire should be carried out. The testatrix thereupon delivered Sheldon the money and took his note, with surety, promising to pay her "$300 with annual interest on demand, if she called for it before she deceased, if not, to be paid to Daniel Blanchard by her order." She never called for the money, but retained the note, and it was found with her other papers after her decease. Held, that the delivery of the $300 to Sheldon was for D B and vested the property in him, subject to be defeated only by the testatrix calling for it, and that Sheldon continued to hold the money for D B so long as the testatrix refrained from calling for it, and that this was good as a gift inter vivos; and in an action of trover by D B for the note, —held, that he was entitled to it as against the executor. Blanchard v. Sheldon, 48 Vt. 512.

8. Causa mortis. A donatio causa mortis is properly a gift of personal property by a party who is in peril of death, upon condition that it shall presently belong to the donee in case the donor dies, but not otherwise. There can be no such valid donation—1st, unless the gift be with a view to the donor's death; 2d, unless it be conditioned to take effect only on the donor's death by his existing disorder, or in his existing illness; and 3d, unless there be an actual delivery of the subject of the donation. Smith v. Kittridge, 21 Vt. 288. French v. Raymond, 39 Vt. 623. Blanchard v. Sheldon. Holley v. Adams, 16 Vt. 206.

9. The donor's own promissory note is rather a promise to give than a gift, and is not the subject of a gift causa mortis. Smith v. Kittridge.

10. But a note against a third person may be. Id. Caldwell v. Renfrew, 33 Vt. 213. McConnell v. McConnell, 11 Vt. 290.

11. A gift made by a person in ordinary health cannot be sustained as a donatio causa mortis. Smith v. Kittridge, 21 Vt. 288. Blanchard v. Sheldon, 43 Vt. 512.

12. S had sent money at different times, to the amount of $100, to her uncle to be put into the savings bank for her, which he had done, himself taking and always keeping the bank book. In her last sickness at his house, she said she gave her money to him—that it was all his. Nothing was delivered, and it did not appear that she knew there was any bank book. Held, that for want of a delivery, the gift could not take effect causa mortis. French v. Raymond, 39 Vt. 623.

13. The delivery in a gift causa mortis, as in gifts inter vivos, may be to a third person in trust to hold for the donee, and the husband of the donor may be such trustee. Caldwell v. Renfrew. Blanchard v. Sheldon.

14. And semble, he might be a donee causa mortis. Caldwell v. Renfrew.

15. A gift of real estate cannot be sustained as a donatio causa mortis, for that extends only to personalty. Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591.

16. M being desperately sick, in prospect of certain and speedy death, executed to his wife a deed in common form of all his real estate, valued at $10,000, and at the same time executed to her a deed of all his personal estate, consisting of stock on his farm and choses in action, and all of which he should be possessed at his decease. Both deeds were duly recorded. M continued hopelessly sick for nearly a month, when he died. Upon a bill by the widow against the administrator;—Held, (1), That the deed of the real estate could not be upheld as a post-nuptial settlement; nor as a donatio causa mortis; nor as a testamentary disposition of the estate; (2), That the deed of the personal property was valid as a donatio causa mortis. Id.

GOVERNOR—See FUGITIVE.

GOVERNOR AND COUNCIL—See STATUTE, I.

GOVERNOR'S RIGHT.

1. The Governor's right in the New Hampshire charters is located in severalty by the charters. Wentworth v. Strong, 1 Tyl. 191.

2. The "Governor's Right," as commonly indicated in the town charters, is a grant in severalty. If title to it fail in part, as by reason of a previous grant, there is no right to compensation to be taken out of the other lands granted. Strong v. Paine, 1 D. Chip. 201.

3. A township was granted in sixty-nine equal shares to persons named, among whom was named "His Excellency Benning Wentworth, Esq., a tract as marked in the plan B W, to contain 500 acres, which is to be accounted two of the within shares." These shares were not designated on the plan by the letters B W. Held, that although these shares could not vest in severalty, yet the grant was not void, but conveyed two shares undivided in the whole town, and not a located tract of 500 acres. Sumner v. Conant, 10 Vt. 9.

GRANTS.

1. New Hampshire grants. The Governor of New Hampshire, while this territory was under that jurisdiction, and after the transfer to New York, the Governor of that province, had a power to grant such lands as were then in the right of the King. These grants were not made in the personal or even jurisdictional right of the Governors, but by royal authority given for that purpose, and they are to be considered as royal grants. The King was, in view of the law, the ultimate owner of all the lands within his dominion, and had the reversion in himself. An estate in fee was said to be derived out of the King's right, and to be subordinate to that right. Agreeably to this doctrine, a surrender to the King might be made of a former grant. On a surrender, the King was in of his former right and might grant again, as he pleased. Paine v. Smead, N. Chip. 99. S. C., D. Chip. 56. 3 Vt. 560.

2. The surrender of a New Hampshire charter to the Royal Governor of the Province of New York, after this territory was transferred to New York, enabled him to re-grant the same lands, and his grant in confirmation of the rights under the New Hampshire charter was valid. Id.

3. Grants by legislature. A grant by the legislature, either to individuals or to a foreign corporation, gives them a capacity to take the thing granted. Lord v. Bigelow, 8 Vt. 445.

4. A legislative grant to a corporation aggregate vests an absolute title without words of perpetuity. Such grant cannot be afterwards controlled by the legislature, any more than an absolute grant to individuals. Caledonia Co. Grammar School v. Burt, 11 Vt. 632.

5. The legislature are perpetually bound by the conditions of all grants made by them, the same as individuals; but, after a grant is once made, no legislature can annex new terms or conditions to the tenure or title of the thing granted, even of exemption or privilege to the grantee, which a subsequent legislature may not repeal. Herriok v. Randolph, 13 Vt. 525. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, I.

6. Public rights in general. The legal title to the rights of land in a township, which, by the charter, are reserved for public uses, and are placed "under the charge, direction and disposal of the inhabitants of such township forever," vests in the municipal corporation, but as a trustee in the strictest sense, for the uses named. Montpelier v. East Montpelier, 27 Vt. 704. S. C., 29 Vt. 12. White v. Fuller, 38 Vt. 193. (Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cranch, 292.)

7. The legislature has no power to change the grant of the public rights as made in the town charter, or the appropriation of the proceeds thereof, without consent of the town interested; but may, with such consent, as in this case. Poultney v. Wells, 1 Aik. 180.

8. A conveyance in fee by selectmen of the public lands, where they are empowered by the statute only to lease them reserving an annual rent, is void. Bush v. Whitney, 1 D. Chip. 869. Lampoon v. New Haven, 2 Vt. 14. Williams v. Goddard, 8 Vt. 500. White v. Fuller, 38 Vt. 205.

9. Before division of a town by draft, the proprietors may, by the statute, vote to a public right the lot on which a settler is placed under that right. Everts v. Dunton, Brayt. 70.

10. The same rule of acquiescence applies to the location of the public lands, as to the lands of individuals. Boothe v. Coventry, 4 Vt. 295.

11. Grammar school lands. Where the charter of a town was granted by the State to 64 proprietors, each to take one-seventieth part, and six-seventieths were reserved for the use of county grammar schools, &c.;—Held, that such six-seventieths never vested in the proprietors, to hold in trust or otherwise, but remained in the State, and were at its entire disposal for the uses named. Grammar School v. Burt, 11 Vt. 632.

12. The legislature has absolute and entire control and disposal over the grammar school lands reserved in the town charters, for the uses and purposes for which they were reserved. Orange Co. Grammar School v. Dodge, Brayt. 223. Caledonia Co. Grammar School v. Burt. Orleans Co. Grammar School v. Parker, 25 Vt. 696. White v. Fuller, 38 Vt. 198.

13. Propagation society. The statute granting to towns the "society lots," only vests the uses in the towns, and does not affect the legal estate. Rood v. Willard, Brayt. 66.

14. The selectmen of a town cannot maintain ejectment to recover lands granted to the "Propagation Society." Colchester v. Hill, Brayt. 65.

15. First settled minister. The right granted or reserved in a town charter to the first settled minister, does not vest until a minister is settled, but remains under the temporary control of the legislature, who may, until such settlement, appropriate the use and avails, —as for the benefit of the town. Poultney v. Wells, 1 Aik. 180.

16. The right of land, variously expressed in the several town charters as reserved for the first settled minister of the gospel, becomes vested in the first minister duly settled, and when once vested his title does not become divested by any after separation or the dissolving of his connection with the inhabitants, as minister. Dow v. Hinesburgh, 2 Aik. 18. Williams v. North Hero, 46 Vt. 301.

17. A town charter reserved "lands to the amount of one right to be and remain for the purpose of settlement of a minister and ministers of the gospel in said town forever,"—and declared that this right, as likewise the right for common schools, and for the social worship of God, "together with their improvements, rights, rents, profits, dues and interests, shall remain unalienably appropriated to the uses and purposes for which they are respectively assigned, and be under the charge, direction and disposal of the inhabitants of said town ship forever." Held, that the reservation intended a succession of settled ministers, and that the right did not vest absolutely in the minister first settled, and that he could not convey a fee therein. Williams v. Goddard, 8 Vt. 492. 39 Vt. 495. 46 Vt. 318.

18. To constitute a first settled minister, so as to entitle a person to the right by that name usually reserved by the Vermont and New Hampshire charters, there must be a permanent settlement and engagement of him as minister, according to then existing laws, to continue, as for life. Sheldon v. Goodsell, 1 Aik. 225. Dow v. Hinesburgh, 2 Aik. 18. Charleston v. Allen, 6 Vt. 633. 46 Vt. 320.

19. The charter of the town of "Two Heros," embracing South Island and North Island, reserved to public uses six rights or shares, among which was "one right for the first settled minister of the gospel," * * "to be under the charge, direction and disposal of the inhabitants of said island forever." Held, (1), that the participation of the inhabitants in such disposal was to be such as should be provided by the laws in existence at the time when such settlement of a minister should at any time be made; (2), that in order to the valid settlement of a minister, so as to vest in him the title to such right, it was not necessary that the inhabitants should participate in their corporate or municipal capacity, but only in their individual or social capacity; and that such settlement might be made by a few of them, acting according to the recognized forms and modes adopted in such cases. Williams v. North Hero, 46 Vt. 301.

20. Case illustrating the valid settlement of a minister of the gospel, with reference to the title to the right reserved in the town charter for the first settled minister;—also, one attempted by fraud,—the claimant having before surrendered his credentials as a minister, and ceased to be a member of any church. Ib.

21. Grants by private persons. Lands conveyed to Middlebury College for the use of the college, although not by charter, were held "sequestered to public use." Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336.

22. Where an acre of land was conveyed to a town for the purpose of building a school house thereon and maintaining a school;—Held, that the town, having built the school house and a school being maintained therein, did not forfeit the land, or any part of it, by other uses of the land not inconsistent with the object of the conveyance. Castleton v. Langdon, 19 Vt. 210.

23. A grant of land, although carrying everything belonging to the land as an incident or appurtenant to it, passes only such appurtenances as existed at the time of the grant; it does not create a new one. Swasey v. Brooks, 30 Vt. 691.

24. Reservation. A reservation is something taken from the whole thing covered by the general terms of the grant, and cuts down and lessens the grant from what it would be except for the reservation. Miller v. Lapham, 44 Vt. 416.

GUARANTY.

- I. CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT.
- II. CONDITIONS OF GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY.
- III. SATISFACTION AND RELEASE.
- IV. ACTION.

I. CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT.

1. Rule of construction. In the construction of a guaranty, technical rules are not to be resorted to where the meaning of the parties is plain and obvious. Noyes v. Nichols, 28 Vt. 159.

2. Absolute undertaking. One who stipulates for a thing to be done by himself or another, is bound to see it done. Where the terms of a guaranty are that the principal shall pay, or that payment shall be made, this is an absolute undertaking, and no demand of payment of the principal, or notice of his default, is necessary to charge the guarantor. Smith v. Ide, 8 Vt. 290. Knapp v. Parker, 6 Vt. 642. Train v. Jones, 11 Vt. 444. Peck v. Barney, 18 Vt. 93. 18 Vt. 35. Noyes v. Nichols, 28 Vt. 159. Mitchell v. Clark, 35 Vt. 104.

3. The debtor and another agreed to execute their note to the creditor for the amount of his debt, at the expiration of a certain time, in consideration that the creditor would forbear to sue the debtor for that period. Held, that this was not a guaranty requiring any proceedings to collect of the debtor, but a direct undertaking to satisfy the debt by the new note; and, for a breach, the creditor was entitled to recover the value of the note promised to be given, which, prima facie, was the amount of the debt and interest. Ferris v. Barlow, 2 Aik. 106.

4. A and B gave the plaintiff a writing, in which they jointly and severally promised to pay him any sum of money that A should be owing him up to a specified future day, not to exceed $500 at any one time, and interest. The plaintiff advanced property to A upon the strength of this writing to the amount named. In an action thereon against A and B, B made defense that he was only a surety and guarantor, and that he had received no notice of the acceptance of the guaranty and that the plaintiff had acted upon it. Held, that this was a joint undertaking for the same thing upon the same consideration, and that B was equally liable with A, without other notice of acceptance than A received by passing off the paper for the property advanced. Maynard v. Morse, 36 Vt. 617.

5. Whether indorser, or guarantor—distinction. A verbal agreement between the indorser and indorsee of a promissory note, made at the time of the indorsement, that the maker should not be called upon for payment until a certain time, was held to take the case out of the law merchant as to demand and notice; and, upon the understanding of the parties that, unless paid by the time named, the indorsee should sue the maker, the indorser was held liable as guarantor, where such suit proved fruitless. Marsh v. Babcock, 2 D. Chip. 124.

6. The general rules of law governing notes and bills, as applicable to charging an indorser, do not apply to a note assigned with a warranty that it is "due and collectable"; but the assignor is liable only according to the terms of the warranty;—that is, that the note is due, and that it can be collected by suit. Foster v. Barney, 3 Vt. 60.

7. A guaranty of a note in the following form: "I guarantee the said note is good and payment of the same"—is an absolute undertaking of payment, and, in order to hold the guarantor, it is not necessary to present the note for payment, give notice of non-payment, or bring suit against the maker. Woodstock Bank v. Downer, 27 Vt. 539.

8. May be both. The defendant, the payee of a negotiable promissory note, indorsed and signed the following words upon it: "I guarantee the payment of the within note"—and put in circulation. Held, that to a remote holder he was liable upon it, as indorser, upon proof of demand and notice. Held, also, that he was liable as an absolute guarantor, without proof of demand and notice—and (by Davis, J.) such guaranty is negotiable. Partridge v. Davis, 20 Vt. 499. 31 Vt. 428. But on this last point, contra. Redfield, J., in Sandford v. Norton, 14 Vt. 283, and Sylvester v. Downer, 20 Vt. 361.

9. If one indorse a note and at the same time guaranty that it is good and collectible, the holder may elect to treat him as either indorser, or guarantor; and to an action on the guaranty it is no defense, that the holder failed to charge him as indorser. Dana v. Conant, 30 Vt. 246.

10. Conditional undertaking—Particular terms. One of the indorsers of a promissory note gave to the holder a writing, as follows: "I hereby guaranty to said R the collection and payment of the said note, and agree to pay the same on condition that said R does not call on me for payment till the 1st of May, 1831." Held, not an absolute promise to pay, but only a promise to pay in case the note could not be collected of the maker. Russell v. Buick, 11 Vt. 166. Bennett, J., dissenting.

11. The guaranty of a promissory note as "good until January 1, 1850," or "good and collectible for two years from date," is a contract that the parties to it, for the time limited, shall be and remain in such a condition that payment can be enforced by the due use of legal process. Hammond v. Chamberlin, 26 Vt. 406. Bull v. Bliss, 30 Vt. 127, limiting Wheeler v. Lewis, 11 Vt. 265.

12. The guaranty of a promissory note was in this form: "I hereby guarantee this note good until January 1, 1850." Held, that a recovery could not be had therefor under a declaration counting against the defendant as indorser, nor under a count upon it as a guaranty "that the note should be paid by January 1, 1850"; and that the guaranty was satisfied by the fact, that the note could have been secured and collected of the maker by legal process, at all times during the continuance of the guaranty. Hammond v. Chamberlin.

13. The guaranty of a note as "collectible" is not satisfied by the fact that the maker had real estate which might have been attached, or taken in execution. Foster v. Barney, 3 Vt. 60.

14. "Credit." A sale of goods upon time of payment given, the title of the goods to remain in the vendor until payment of the price;—Held to be a conditional sale on credit, and to be within the terms of a guaranty of payment for goods sold "upon a credit." Noyes v. Nichols, 28 Vt. 159.

15. "All drafts, &c." Where a letter of credit was drawn at Burlington, Vt., by the defendant resident there, and directed to a bank in Michigan, agreeing to accept and pay all drafts drawn on him by A B;—Held, that this did not bind him to accept and pay drafts drawn upon him by A B made payable in New York. Michigan State Bank v. Leavenworth, 28 Vt. 209. See Same v. Pecks, 28 Vt. 200.

16. "Claim and demand." Where one transferred certain notes, railroad bonds, mortgages, stocks and other securities specified in a schedule, and gave a guaranty that "each claim and demand is absolutely good and collectible and bind myself to make up any loss in the collection," &c.;—Held, that the guaranty did not embrace the railroad preferred stock named in the schedule, and the payment of the dividends thereon. Dana v. Conant, 30 Vt. 246.

17. Circulating guaranty. D, a country merchant, who was about going to New York to purchase his usual fall supply of goods for the business of a country store, where goods of every variety and description are usually kept for sale, received from the defendant, his former partner in the same business, a written guaranty, agreeing to be responsible for what goods D might purchase in New York more than he paid for himself. The guaranty was directed to no person in particular. With it, D purchased his supplies of different parties, on the customary credit, and of the plaintiff after he had made purchases of other parties. In an action upon the guaranty;—Held, that the intent of the guaranty was to give D the credit necessary to enable him to purchase of as many different dealers as might be necessary to make up his country store assortment; and that its purpose was not complete and executed by a sale by one person on the faith of it, but was the same in legal effect and extent as if it had been a separate letter to each dealer. Lowry v. Adams, 22 Vt. 160.

18. Continuing. A requests B to indorse a note for him to the bank of T, for $2000, and, in order to secure B, procures C to sign a note with him for the same sum payable to B, and delivers it to B, who indorses the note to the bank. Afterwards, at A's request, B indorses for him a like note to the bank, and with it the first is taken up, and A pledges the same note as security for such second indorsement. On C's being inquired of by B, whether A had a right to pledge the note for the second accommodation, he replied that he was liable on the note to B, and that A might thus pledge it. Afterwards, A procured B to indorse for him a blank note which A filled up to F bank for $2000, and got it discounted at the bank of T, and so took up the second note,—the note signed by A and C still remaining in B's hands. The last note payable to F bank B was compelled to pay. Held, that the note signed by A and C was a continued guaranty to that amount and remained as security to B generally for any sums A might procure of B, or by means of B's name as surety, to the amount of the note, unless C had expressed his dissent thereto. Adams v. Clark, Brayt. 196.

19. The defendants and C signed the following writing: "C. C. Trowbridge, Esq., President, Detroit, Michigan;—R H & Co. are authorized to value upon us, or either of us, to the amount of $25,000 in such amounts and on such times as they may require, which will be duly honored, and we hereby jointly and severally hold ourselves accountable for the acceptance and payment of such drafts," and delivered it to R H & Co., who passed it to the bank of which Trowbridge was president, and on credit of it got bills discounted. Held, as interpreted by the course of dealing of the parties, (1), that the writing bound all the signers to the payment of such drafts as might be accepted by either of them; (2), that this was not a single guaranty for $25,000 and then to end, but was a continuing or standing guaranty to that amount; (3), that they were, under the circumstances, bound by the acceptance by C of bills drawn payable elsewhere than where the drawees resided. Michigan State Bank v. Pecks, 28 Vt. 200.

20. The defendants gave the plaintiffs a guaranty, as follows: "Mr. Lyman Wilson wishes to buy stock for his shop and pay in six months or before. We will be surety for him for a sum not to exceed one hundred dollars." Held, that the guaranty was not exhausted by the first delivery of stock amounting to $50.08, but covered the whole amount of $100, delivered from time to time within a reasonable time, and all within two months from the date of the guaranty, as called for by Wilson. Keith v. Dwinnell, 38 Vt. 286.

21. Other instances. Where one guaranteed the performance of the contract of another;—Held, that he was not bound to make indemnity for acts of voluntary grace extended to the primary party, and where the other party had gone beyond his legal duty under the contract. Corlies v. Estes, 31 Vt. 653.

22. Where a guaranty was given to the plaintiff, a lawyer, to pay him for services for a third person in a pending lawsuit;—Held, in an action upon the guaranty, that it was no objection to a recovery for the whole services, that the plaintiff had afterwards formed a law co-partnership, by the terms of which his partner was entitled to share in the pay for the services thereafter rendered, and that the charges therefor were made against the defendant upon the partnership books,—the entire services having been performed personally by the plaintiff. Roberts v. Grinwood, 35 Vt. 496.

23. The plaintiff had been retained by D, as his counsel in a lawsuit, and had rendered services which he had charged to D. In reply to letters from the plaintiff claiming that the defendant ought to pay him, the defendant wrote; "I can assure you that he (D) is perfectly good, and will hold myself accountable that he shall pay you for all the services you have or may render him in the suit." The plaintiff relied upon this engagement and continued to render services in the suit to its close, in faith of the engagement, and according to the expectation and understanding of the defendant. In an action upon the guaranty;—Held, that there was a sufficient and apparent consideration for the guaranty; that notice of its acceptance appeared; and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for both the past and future services, and for disbursements for court and clerk's fees. Id. See Bagley v. Moulton, 42 Vt. 184.

24. A guaranty of payment for all clotheswringers to be from time to time sold to B, was held not to extend to such as were, without orders, forwarded to B before, but not accepted by him until after, the guarantor had given notice to the seller that he should not be responsible for any more clothes-wringers ordered by B. Machine Co. v. Morris, 89 Vt. 398.

25. The plaintiff leased a farm and stock to the defendant, Ballard, by writing not sealed, which purported to be a contract between them only,—the defendants, Blake and Baker, not being mentioned in the body of the writing. The writing was signed by the plaintiff, and immediately after his signature was the following: "For the payment of said contract being fulfilled on the part of the said Ballard, we the undersigned will become responsible"—which was signed by the three defendants. Ballard went into possession under the contract; but neither of the other defendants ever received any benefit from the contract, or from Ballard's occupancy. In a joint action against the three for failure of Ballard to perform certain stipulations recited as on his part to be performed;—Held, that he was liable by reason of his having entered into possession, and so accepted the contract; but that the obligation of the other defendants was an independent guaranty, collateral to the principal contract, and that they were not liable as joint contractors with Ballard. Cross v. Ballard, 46 Vt. 415.

II. CONDITIONS OF GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY.

26. Acceptance and notice thereof. A guarantor is entitled to notice of the acceptance of his guaranty; but his acknowledgement of liability and his promise to pay are evidence that he had received seasonable notice, and supersede the necessity of proving it. Peck v. Barney, 13 Vt. 98.

27. To prove notice of the acceptance of a guaranty, a letter announcing it, properly directed to the guarantor and put into the post office is sufficient. The presumption is that such letters are received in due course of mail. Oaks v. Weller, 16 Vt. 68.

28. Notice of the acceptance of a guaranty must be given to the guarantor, in reasonable time, in order to bind him, whether the guaranty be general, or special. Oaks v. Weller, 13 Vt. 106. Lowry v. Adams, 22 Vt. 160. Woodstock Bank v. Downer, 27 Vt. 539.

29. Express notice is not necessary in such case. It is sufficient, if the acceptance be seasonably made known to the guarantor in any other way; and the jury may find the fact from such facts and circumstances as fairly tend to prove it,—as, the relation of the parties, the guarantor's opportunity to know, &c. Train v. Jones, 11 Vt. 444. Oaks v. Weller, 16 Vt. 68. Lowry v. Adams. Woodstock Bank v.

Downer. Noyes v. Nichols, 28 Vt. 159.

30. Where a guarantor had knowledge that the plaintiffs were furnishing goods to the principal from time to time upon the guaranty, and had a general knowledge of about the amount furnished, this was held sufficient notice to charge him, although this did not come from the plaintiffs. Noyes v. Nichols.

31. Default of principal and notice thereof. The contract of guaranty is not, as between the parties, negotiable. A collateral guarantor is entitled to reasonable notice of the default of the principal debtor, and if he sustain loss, or prejudice, in consequence of not receiving such notice, he will be exonerated to the extent of the loss so suffered. In the case of an absolute guaranty, no demand and notice are necessary in order to charge the guarantor. Redfield, J., in Sandford v. Norton, 14 Vt. 228. 20 Vt. 361.

32. The mere guarantor of a bill or note is not discharged by the neglect of the holder to give notice of non-payment, unless he has been actually prejudiced by such neglect—as, when there are previous indorsers, &c. Bull v. Bliss, 30 Vt. 127.

33. The sufficiency of notice to a guarantor of non-payment must depend upon the circumstances of the case, and may be proved by circumstances—as was done in this case. Keith v. Duinnell, 88 Vt. 286.

34. Duty to pursue principal. Where one guaranties that a promissory note shall be good and collectible for a time named, he in effect insures the solvency of the parties thereto for the time named; and if such parties be or become, during the time named, or when the note falls due, utterly insolvent, this is prima facie a sufficient excuse for an omission to attempt to collect the note, or to make demand of payment. Bull v. Bliss, 30 Vt. 127. Dana v. Conant, 80 Vt. 246.

35. Where one takes a note with a guaranty that it shall be collectible when due, he must, in order to a recovery upon the guaranty, first have pursued with reasonable diligence all legal means of collecting the note from all the prior parties to it, whether makers or indorsers, unless they are wholly insolvent. Benton v. Fletcher, 31 Vt. 418. Foster v. Barney, 3 Vt. 60. Russell v. Buok, 11 Vt. 166. Wheeler v. Lewis, 11 Vt. 265. Sylvester v. Downer, 18 Vt. 32.

36. — and exhaust his remedies. Where a party receives paper, duly indorsed, upon a guaranty that it is good and collectible, such guaranty has reference as much to the responsibility of the indorsers as of the principal, and the holder must take the necessary steps to charge the indorsers, and to collect the pay of them, unless insolvent, or the guarantor will be discharged. Dana v. Conant, 80 Vt. 246.

37. In an action upon the guaranty of a note that it is collectible, where a prior indorser of the note had died before its maturity, but his estate was solvent;—Held, that in order to recover, the plaintiff must have exhausted all legal means of collection from the estate afforded by the probate court, and the county court on appeal. Benton v. Fletcher, 31 Vt. 418.

38. The defendant transferred to the plaintiff two promissory notes with a lien upon a canal boat originally given to secure the same, and gave a guaranty conditioned that before pursuing the defendants, the plaintiff should "use all reasonable endeavors and means to collect the sums of the said notes, &c." Held, that the plaintiff was first bound to resort to the security upon the boat, if by reasonable diligence it could be done, and could be made available for the purpose of obtaining payment. Brainard v. Reynolds, 36 Vt. 614.

III. SATISFACTION AND RELEASE.

39. A guaranty that a note is collectible, is satisfied by proof that the maker had sufficient personal attachable property when the note became due to satisfy it, which the guarantor offered to turn out on the attachment. Meeker v. Denison, Brayt. 237.

40. Where a note payable on demand was assigned 23 days after its date, with a warranty that it was due and collectible;—Held, that a delay of five or six days in bringing suit upon it was not such an unreasonable delay as to discharge the assignor. Foster v. Barney, 3 Vt. 60.

41. Where the guaranty of a promissory note was, that it should be good and collectible until a day named, and the holder brought suit against the maker before the expiration of the time limited, but failed of collecting the debt through his negligence in prosecuting the suit;—Held, that having made his election to sue when he did, and having failed through negligence, the guarantor was discharged. Wheeler v. Lewis, 11 Vt. 265. 30 Vt. 131.

42. In an action upon the guaranty of a note assigned and warranted to be "due and collectible," where it appears that the plaintiff's suit upon the note failed, or proved ineffectual, through his fault, he cannot recover of the guarantor;—as, where such suit failed through defective service of the writ by a deputized person. Beach v. Bates, 12 Vt. 68.

43. Where the defendant agreed to indemnify the plaintiff against loss from having indorsed the note of a third person, and, when the note fell due, the plaintiff took it up, and took for it another like note payable in future, which he indorsed and was obliged to pay;—Held, that this substitution of another security was prima facie a release of the guaranty, and threw upon the plaintiff the burden of showing, beyond all peradventure, that the debt would not have been paid, if he had not furnished the money to take up the first note. Hurlburt v. Hendy, 27 Vt. 245.

44. A guarantor is not discharged by an attachment and sale by the guarantee of the goods sold to the principal, after default of payment; nor by the guarantee taking a note of the principal payable on demand, with a mortgage as collateral; nor by his purchase in of a prior mortgage and causing it to be foreclosed, the time given for redemption not having expired; or other act working no damage to the guarantor. Noyes v. Nichols, 28 Vt. 159.

45. Where a party had a running account with the plaintiffs, and the defendant gave them a guaranty for further purchases to a specified amount, and the party made further purchases, charged in account, exceeding the amount of the guaranty, and made general payments from time to time, without application, to an amount exceeding the guaranty and the previous account;—Held, that the guaranty was cancelled, and that such payments could not be applied by the plaintiffs to the after accrued account, leaving the guaranty unsatisfied. Pierce v. Knight, 31 Vt. 701.

46. W had obtained goods of the plaintiff upon the defendant's guaranty, and to the amount of the sum guaranteed. W desiring further supplies, the plaintiff agreed to take of him bark and other property as he should deliver from time to time, and pay him therefor in goods. Under this arrangement a further account accrued, and W delivered such property from time to time, and died insolvent. In an action upon the guaranty, it not appearing that such new agreement was made in bad faith, nor operated to the injury of the defendant;—Held, that the defendant could not claim that the property so delivered by W should be first applied upon the guaranty, but only that the balance above paying the new account should so apply, for that the application must be controlled by the special agreement. Keith v. Dwinnell, 38 Vt. 286.

IV. ACTION.

47. Declaration. Where notice of the acceptance of a proffered guaranty is necessary in order to charge the guarantor, but such notice is not a substantive part of the contract, it may be stated in the declaration in general terms, and need not be set up as one of the provisions of the contract itself. Oaks v. Weller, 16 Vt. 63.

48. In an action upon the guaranty of a note that it is or shall be "good and collectible," the declaration must aver notice to the defendant, before suit brought, of the measures taken to collect the note and of their failure.

For want of such averment, judgment was arrested. Sylvester v. Downer, 18 Vt. 33.

49. Consideration. A guaranty to B, in writing, the payment of a note, payable on demand, which B held against C. The guaranty expressed no consideration, and was given more than a year after the date of the note. This guaranty was afterwards allowed against A's estate, and was paid by his administrator. In an action by the administrator against C to recover the money paid, it not appearing that the guaranty was given, or the money paid, at the request of C, or that he in any way sanctioned the proceedings, except, as it was stated in the case, that the guaranty was given "for the benefit of C;"—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover. White v. White, 30 Vt. 338.

50. Effect of judgment against principal. It is a general rule, that, in a collateral undertaking by way of guaranty, where a suit is necessary to fix the liability of the guarantor, the first judgment is prima facie evidence of the default. But where the guarantor is liable without suit against the principal, the judgment against him is regarded as strictly matter inter alios. Redfield, J. Fletcher v. Jackson, 23 Vt. 581, citing Bramble v. Poultney, 11 Vt. 208.

51. The costs of suit against the maker of a note cannot be recovered of a person who absolutely guarantied its payment;—such suit not being necessary to charge the guarantor. Woodstock Bank v. Downer, 27 Vt. 539.

52. A guarantor against a charge or incumbrance upon a chattel was held bound by the result of a suit establishing such incumbrance, and to pay the expenses of defending against it, where he had had notice of the suit, and assisted in the defense. Brown v. Haven, 37 Vt. 439.

See JUDGMENT, 57, et seq.

GUARDIAN.

1. Appointment. Under Slade's Stat. c. 47, s. 14, authorizing the appointment of a guardian for a spendthrift on the complaint of the selectmen, &c., of the town to which he "belongs;"—Held, that where the spendthrift was confined in jail, though in a town other than the town of his usual residence, but where he had no legal settlement in the State, the complaint was properly made by the selectmen, &c., of the town in which the jail was situated. Crushing v. Hale, 8 Vt. 88. (In G. S. c. 72, ss. 12, 13, the word is "reside.")

2. Where one, upon his own application, was appointed guardian of an insane person, not being a relative nor describing himself in his application as a "friend," but was certified as a

"friend" by the probate court in the order of inquest, and where the appointment was made without any notice to the insane person, for which cause the guardianship was afterwards discharged by the court;—Held, nevertheless, that such appointment was not void, and that the guardian was entitled to have his accounts, as such, allowed in the probate court. Cleveland v. Hopkins, 2 Aik. 394, Royce, J., dissenting.

3. Under the probate act of 1821 (Slade's Stat. 356, s. 102), the appointment by the probate court of a guardian to a non compos, without notice to him, was held null and void on appeal. Shumway v. Shumway, 2 Vt. 339.

4. Where the right and authority of a mother as guardian of her minor child is extinguished by her marriage, the probate court may appoint a new guardian without notice to her. Farrar v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 123.

5. A decree of the probate court, unappealed from or unreversed, appointing a guardian of a minor, is conclusive and cannot be attacked collaterally. Id.

6. A conveyance by the guardians of a lunatic, by license of the probate court, was held good to protect the purchaser against the heirs of the lunatic, although it did not appear that the lunatic had notice of the inquisition and the appointment of the guardians, and although it did not appear by the record by whom the debts were contracted for which the sale was licensed. Smith v. Burnham, 1 Aik. 84.

7. Where a complaint for the appointment of a guardian of a spendthrift recited that it was made by a majority of the selectmen and civil authority, and the magistrates acted thereon and made the appointment;—Held, that this was sufficient prima facie evidence that the complaint was made by such majority. Crushing v. Hale, 8 Vt. 88.

8. Removal. Where a guardian is removed by the probate court and another is appointed guardian in his place, and an appeal is taken by the former, such appeal does not vacate the decree so as to leave him in possession of his rights as guardian, but rather suspends them during the pendency of the appeal; and the custody and control of the ward and estate belong to the new guardian, until restored to the former by a decision of the appeal in his favor. State v. McKown, 31 Vt. 503. 26 Vt. 218.

9. Extinguishment. The marriage of a feme sole, guardian by appointment, extinguishes the guardianship. Field v. Torrey, 7 Vt. 372. So, also, the right of the mother, being a widow, as guardian of her minor children, is extinguished by her marriage. Farrar v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 123. (G. S. c. 72, ss. 2, 54.)

10. Powers. The guardian of a spendthrift, under the statute, has not merely a naked power, but a power coupled with an interest in the ward's estate. Thus, he may sell standing trees upon his ward's lands, and take payment therefor, or notes to himself; and may retain such notes against any claim or release of his ward after the discharge of the guardianship, and sue and recover thereon to the extent of any balance due him for advances to his ward. Thompson v. Boardman, 1 Vt. 367.

11. Liabilities. A guardian who contracted with the plaintiff to support his ward, without undertaking to limit the right of the plaintiff to the estate of the ward for indemnity, was held to have bound himself personally. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 19 Vt. 437.

12. Attachment. The property of an insane person in the hands of his appointed guardian, and of which he has returned an inventory, is not subject to attachment in suit against the ward. Hale v. Duncan, Brayt. 132.

13. Accounting. After the termination of a guardianship, an action of account lies in the county court in behalf of the ward against the guardian to compel an accounting, not only for the time the defendant held the property as bailiff, but also while he held it as guardian. Harris v. Harris, 44 Vt. 320. Field v. Torrey, 7 Vt. 372.

14. The settlement of a deceased guardian's account, or a claim upon his bond for not accounting, should not be presented to the commissioners, but proceedings for the settlement of the account should be in the probate court, upon citing in the administrator. Waterman v. Wright, 36 Vt. 164.

15. Creditors of an insane person, under guardianship, have no such interest as entitles them to institute proceedings in their behalf upon the guardian's bond. Aldrich v. Williams, 13 Vt. 373.

16. The guardian of a person adjudged by the probate court to be insane, does not lose his right to recover for his services and disbursements as guardian, by a verdict rendered on appeal that the ward was not insane at the time of such adjudication and appointment of a guardian—the guardian having acted in good faith, and not being party or privy to the proceedings instituted for his appointment. Harwood v. Boardman, 38 Vt. 554.

17. A guardian presented to the probate court, for allowance, his account as guardian, 32 years after his appointment, 23 years after his ward became of age, and 8 years after her death, but in due time after the appointment of an administrator of her estate. Held, (1), that the statute of limitations did not apply to bar the account; (2), that the lapse of time was explained by the facts and circumstances of the case, so that no presumption of payment or settlement of the account arose—as, that the ward was always non compos, and resided in the family of the guardian, who always had possession of the estate, and married her mother; and that no measures were ever taken to settle her estate, until after the death of her mother and the appointment of an administrator, &c. Kimball v. Ives, 17 Vt. 430.

18. A father, who had been appointed guardian of his minor son, agreed with the son to sell him his time until of age, for a price agreed. The father resigned his trust and the plaintiff was appointed guardian, and afterwards, by request of the ward and believing that this would be beneficial to the ward, carried out the arrangement with the father and paid him from the ward's estate the sum agreed. Held, that the plaintiff should not be allowed this sum in settlement off his account as guardian, unless he showed affirmatively that his ward was at least no worse off than if he had had his money, with interest, on arriving at his majority. Bannister v. Bannister, 44 Vt. 624.

19. A guardian should not be allowed compensation for taking care of the trust fund, while he himself is the borrower of it. Farwell v. Steen, 46 Vt. 678.

20. A guardian received some securities of his ward bearing annual interest, and afterwards converted part of the estate into securities bearing simple interest, and afterwards collected them all and mingled the money with his own, rendering no account of the interest received, and with such funds, and his own commixed, made investments which yielded more than six per cent interest; but the ward's funds could not be directly and wholly traced into any of these investments. Held, that the guardian should be charged with annual interest on the whole trust fund. Ib.; and see Hapgood v. Jennison, 2 Vt. 294.

21. Guardian ad litem. The court never appoints a guardian to prosecute for, but only to defend, an infant party. Priest v. Hamilton, 2 Tyl. 49.

22. A guardian ad litem, like an attorney or other agent for conducting a suit, has no authority to execute a release discharging the interest of a witness. Walker v. Ferrin, 4 Vt. 523.

See INSANE PERSON, 9-17.

H.

HABEAS CORPUS.

1. In what cases. A party improperly imprisoned on execution may be relieved by habeas corpus, when all depends upon certain papers and documents prescribed by statute; and is not put to his audita querela, unless his claim to be discharged rests on matter in pais upon which an issue suitable for a jury trial might be expected to arise. Davis, ex parte, 18 Vt. 401. Kellogg, ex parte, 6 Vt. 509.

2. A defendant in a capias, issued in an action on contract upon affidavit under G. S. c. 88, s. 78, will not be released on habeas corpus, because the authority signing the writ refused to examine him for a discharge. In re Hosley, 22 Vt. 363. 81 Vt. 507; nor, because the creditor had previously commenced another suit for the same cause of action, and had attached property to twice the amount due. That is matter of abatement merely. Id.

3. To justify a discharge on habeas corpus for any irregularity occurring before judgment, it should ordinarily, perhaps, be of a character to render the judgment void. Redfield, C. J., in Tracy, ex parte, 25 Vt. 98.

4. Mere matter of error in a conviction, or what would be ground of new trial, does not render the conviction void, so as to authorize a discharge on habeas corpus; as, where a wife was convicted and imprisoned for the sale of intoxicating liquor, upon a complaint and warrant against her husband and her, but there was a non est return as to the husband. In re Dougherty, 27 Vt. 325.

5. A habeas corpus will not lie, where the imprisonment is under merely voidable process. In re Greenough, 81 Vt. 285. Kellogg, ex parte, 6 Vt. 509; but only where the judgment or process is void, Id.,—as, an execution returnable in 120 days, which by law should be 60 days, and the arrest is made after the 60 days. Hatch, ex parte, 2 Aik. 28.

6. A misapprehension as to the power of a justice to punish for contempt, is not such a "misapprehension, &c." under G. S. c. 30, s. 13, as authorizes the supreme court to relieve on habeas corpus. In re Cooper, 32 Vt. 258.

7. Where a party was adjudged guilty of contempt and imprisoned for disobedience to an order of a chancellor, where no notice had been given him to show cause;—Held, that the proceedings were irregular, and he was discharged on habeas corpus. Langdon, ex parte, 25 Vt. 680.

8. Procedure. A jailer made return to a writ of habeas corpus directing him to bring a prisoner into court for trial, that the prisoner was sick and languishing so that he could not be removed without endangering his life. Held sufficient in this instance, but in future such returns must be accompanied with affidavits of physicians. Bryant, ex parte, 2 Tyl. 269.

9. Where the imprisonment is upon an execution between party and party, it is proper that notice of the application be given to the creditor. Hatch, ex parte, 2 Aik. 28.

10. A writ of habeas corpus issued in vacation must be signed by a judge, and not by the clerk, and must be made returnable forthwith in all cases. In re Cooper, 32 Vt. 258.

11. Issues and questions of law arising upon the trial of a habeas corpus in the county court, may pass to the supreme court upon exceptions. Id.

12. On habeas corpus, the relator may controvert the return of the cause of his detention and prove any other facts material to the determination of the case; but the court will not re-examine, de novo, the proceedings of the magistrate who issued the warrant, and undertake to regulate his discretion. In re Powers, 25 Vt. 261. In re Hosley, 22 Vt. 363. In re Tracy, 25 Vt. 98.

13. Effect of discharge. The discharge upon habeas corpus, of a prisoner in execution, by a judge having jurisdiction to issue the writ and decide the question of the lawfulness of the imprisonment, is a protection to the sheriff in an action for an escape, whether the proceeding was in all respects regular, or the judge erred in the exercise of his judgment, or not. Hathaway v. Holmes, 1 Vt. 405.

14. A discharge on habeas corpus from imprisonment on execution, on the ground of privilege from arrest while in attendance at court, is no bar to a subsequent arrest upon an alias execution on the same judgment. In re Eldred, 2 Vt. 462.

HARRIS' GORE.

Harris' Gore. The charter of Harris' Gore, dated Oct. 30, 1801, recited that the same was granted by Act of the Legislature passed Feby. 25, 1782, to G and others. June 1, 1789, G by deed of warranty conveyed "one whole right and share in Harris' Gore drawn in my name to me." The lands in said Gore were not in fact divided or allotted till the year 1802, when certain lots were set to that right. Held, (1), that the recital in the charter of the time of the grant by the Legislature was at least prima facie evidence of the fact; (2), that such grant in 1783 vested the land at once in the grantees as effectually as when engrossed and recorded. Cross v. Martin, 46 Vt. 14.

HIGHWAYS AND BRIDGES.

I. ESTABLISHMENT.

1. By dedication and adoption, and by adverse use.

2. By statutory proceedings.

II. PENT ROADS.

III. DISCONTINUANCE.

IV. REPAIRS; HIGHWAY SURVEYOR.

V. INDICTMENT FOR NOT BUILDING, OR REPAIRING, OR FOR OBSTRUCTING.

VI. CIVIL LIABILITY OF TOWNS FOR INSUFFICIENCY.

VII. RIGHTS OF LAND OWNER, AND OF THE PUBLIC.

I. ESTABLISHMENT.

1. By dedication and adoption, and by adverse use.

1. Official act. Official acts of the officers of a town, recognizing a road as a public highway, are sufficient to prove it such, so as to make the town chargeable for an injury occasioned by its insufficiency, although there is no record of any survey, or laying out. Emery v. Washington, Brayt. 129.

2. The consent merely of the selectmen that any person should travel on any path, whether a public or a private road, is no act recognizing such road as a highway for which the town is responsible; neither is their knowledge that a traveler on such road supposes it to be a public highway of any importance, unless by some act of theirs it can be inferred that they have opened the road, or adopted it as a highway to be repaired by the town. Williams, C. J., Blodgett v. Royallton, 14 Vt. 288. 27 Vt. 456.

3. Where a new road was laid out as an improvement of an old road, and worked, and the selectmen afterwards, on petition, decided to discontinue the old road, and it was fenced up with their consent, and public travel was compelled to go upon the new road which was left open;—Held, that these were such unequivocal acts as indicated an intention to make the new road the thoroughfare for public travel, and, not being repudiated by the town, but acquiesced in, constituted such an adoption of the new road as made the town liable to a traveler for its insufficiency, although the selectmen had caused no record to be made of the discontinuance of the old road, nor had filed for record their certificate of the opening of the new road. Blodgett v. Royallton, 17 Vt. 40. S. C., 14 Vt. 288. 34 Vt. 427.

4. Where the selectmen, by consent of the land owner, straightened a highway running through his farm, and the straightened road was built and opened in fact for travel and the former track was fenced up;—Held, that the former track became discontinued by substituting the new one for it as the highway, without any record either of the alteration or of the opening for public travel, and that the landowner could thereafter maintain trespass against a person unnecessarily traveling upon the old track. Closson v. Hamblet, 27 Vt. 728; distinguished from Young v. Wheelock, 18 Vt. 498.

5. A town having assumed and adopted a turnpike as a town highway, in the mode prescribed by a statute, and having afterwards treated it like its other highways by including it in the tax bills and repairing it, &c., and the turnpike company having removed their gates and ceased all care and control of the road, and permitted the whole franchise and stock to be sold on execution;—Held, that a dedication should be presumed, and that the town was liable for the insufficiency of the road. Barton v. Montpelier, 30 Vt. 650.

6. Neither the mere fact of a dedication of land to the public as a highway, nor the use of the land by the public as a road for public travel, will impose upon a town the duty to keep the road in repair as a highway. To this end, there must be an acceptance of the dedication by the town, acting through its proper officers;—by acts of such officers and not mere declarations. Kellogg, J., in Folsom v. Underhill, 36 Vt. 587. Bennett, J., in Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 454. Bailey v. Fairfield, Brayt. 128; and see Paige v. Weathersfield, 13 Vt. 424. Young v. Wheelock, 18 Vt. 496.

7. Where a road has been opened by private persons and has been used by the public for travel, the including of it in the rate bills of the highway surveyors as a public road on which the highway taxes are to be expended, the expenditure of money and labor upon it, and the leaving of it open for public travel and use as a common highway, are evidence of its adoption by the town as a highway; and if so done with the intention to regard and treat the road as an existing highway, the road thereby becomes a highway adopted by the town, which it is liable to keep in repair. Folsom v. Underhill, 36 Vt. 580.

8. Where a road and bridge had been built by private persons for their own benefit, but had been used for travel by the public, and the road on each side of the bridge had been, by repairs, &c., adopted by the town as a highway, and there was no other way to cross the stream except by this bridge, an instruction to the jury, that they should treat the bridge as in like manner adopted in the absence of evidence to the contrary, was held correct—although the surveyed line of the highway, as made by the selectmen in their recorded survey of it, diverged from the traveled line six or eight rods west of the bridge and came into it again eight or ten rods east of the bridge, and crossed the stream two or three rods above the bridge, and so as to throw the bridge outside the highway as surveyed. Ib.

9. M applied to the selectmen to vary the location of a highway across his farm, and, as an inducement, offered to give the land for the new location in exchange for the other. The town accepted this offer, built a bridge across a creek on the new route, allowed the former road to be closed up, and public travel was thus diverted over the new road. No record was made of these proceedings. M and his grantees occupied the road for six years, when, upon petition, the selectmen laid out a pent road along the line of such substituted highway, for which M's grantee claimed damages. Held, that he was not entitled to damages; for that the facts stated constituted a dedication of the land by M, and an acceptance by the town. Fairfield v. Morey, 44 Vt. 239.

10. Travel having diverged from a pent road as surveyed, the owner of the land over which the road was laid ploughed and fenced in the unused portion, and worked the course of divergence as a highway. Held, that this amounted to a dedication to the public of the substituted track; and that a subsequent owner of the land could not, without revocation, maintain trespass for the use of such substituted track as a highway, although such use had not continued for fifteen years; and quære, whether the dedication and license could be revoked. Prouty v. Bell, 44 Vt. 72.

11. The town and public having, for more than forty years, treated as a highway a space adjoining but without the limits of the original survey and location, the town is liable for any insufficiency thereof, the same as if within such survey. Bagley v. Ludlow, 41 Vt. 425.

12. Leaving land open. Where the owner of land threw it open to the public who might have to pass over it in doing business at his carriage shop;—Held, that the mere use of the land by an adjoining proprietor for a way to his own premises, in the absence of any decisive act indicating a separate and exclusive use under a claim of right, would be presumed to have been with the permission of the owner, and not adverse to his right, even though that use had been open, notorious and uninterrupted. Plimpton v. Converse, 44 Vt. 158.

13. Since 1889, the owner has not been required to fence his lands along a highway. An omission so to do is no evidence of an intent to dedicate them to the public; nor is the act of throwing or leaving open to the highway land in front of his house, or place of business, so that his customers may have more convenient access thereto, any evidence of such intent. Morse v. Ranno, 32 Vt. 600.

14. Adverse use. Where the right of the public to the use of one's land as a highway stands upon the basis of mere enjoyment, fifteen years' adverse and continuous use is necessary to perfect the right; and the extent of the acquiescence—as, the width of the highway—must be determined by the extent of the actual occupation and use. Ib.

2. By statutory proceedings.

15. Laying out by selectmen. The usual and legitimate evidence that a highway has been laid out, established and opened for travel, is the town records showing the survey and the certificate that the road is open for travel. Young v. Wheelock, 18 Vt. 493. Blodgett v. Royakton, 14 Vt. 288. 3 Vt. 457. Ib., 590. 11 Vt. 600.

16. Where a petition to the selectmen of a town was for the laying of a highway in that town to the town line, there to connect with a proposed highway, to be laid out by another town, which was to connect with a highway to be laid out by a third town, in another county;—Held, that this was well enough, and was within the jurisdiction of the selectmen. Moore v. Chester, 45 Vt. 503.

17. Where the record of the laying out or discontinuance of a highway is collaterally attacked, the regularity of the preliminary proceedings will be presumed—as, the existence and regularity of the petition; or notice to landholders of the proceedings to discontinue. Kidder v. Jennison, 21 Vt. 108. Haynes v. Lassell, 29 Vt. 157.

18. The laying of a highway by selectmen is not void, so as to render their successors in office trespassers for the building of it, because there was an omission to specify a time for the land-owner to lay the land open to be wrought; nor because of an omission to return the petition to the town clerk's office; nor because no notice was given to the land-owner of the doings of the selectmen laying the road, so that he might appear and claim his damages. Kidder v. Jennison.

19. It is not an objection to the legal establishment of a highway, that the selectmen required a bond from the petitioners to save the town from the expense of building it, as a condition of laying it out. Patchin v. Doolittle, 3 Vt. 457.

20. The power given to selectmen to widen and to re-survey highways, by G. S. c. 24, ss. 16, 17, implies the right to straighten the road. Closson v. Hamblet, 27 Vt. 728.

21. Building. A petition for the discontinuance of a highway, laid by the selectmen, but not yet built, does not suspend or prevent their proceeding to build the road. Taft v. Pittsford, 28 Vt. 286.

22. An appeal by a land owner from the laying of a highway vacates the former proceedings in laying the road, and suspends all proceedings towards building or opening the road, and the powers of the selectmen to charge the town with any further expense. Ib.

23. A person who has contracted to build a road laid by the selectmen, cannot proceed under his contract, after an appeal from the laying of the highway and notice thereof to him, and recover of the town therefor, although the selectmen give him a town order for such subsequent work. Ib.

24. The fact that a town had availed itself of the plaintiff's labor in constructing a highway, by subsequently repairing it and suffering the public to use it, was held not to bind the town to pay for constructing it. Pratt v. Swanton, 15 Vt. 147.

25. Village trustees. The act incorporating the village of Bennington (Acts of 1849, p. 119), giving the trustees power to lay out, &c., highways in said village, does not deprive the selectmen of a like power previously given by the general law. Bennington v. Smith, 29 Vt. 254.

26. Under the act incorporating the village of Rutland (Acts of 1865 p. 212), giving the trustees power to lay out, &c., highways in said village, an appeal lies to the county court on their refusal. In such case, the town should be made defendant,—not the village. Landon v. Village of Rutland, 41 Vt. 681.

27. Opening. The certificate of selectmen that a road is opened, is to be made after it is worked and ready for travel, and not properly before. Patchin v. Doolittle, 3 Vt. 457.

28. The lodging in the town clerk's office of the proper certificate of the opening of a new highway, is an act essential to consummate the opening of the road. Until this is done, the land owner is not under obligation to remove his fences; nor is he entitled to damages; nor can individuals use the land as a highway. Patchin v. Morrison, 3 Vt. 590. Warren v. Bunnell, 11 Vt. 600. 14 Vt. 282;—nor can the land owner commence proceedings before a justice for the appraisal of his damages. Emerson v. Reading, 14 Vt. 279. 19 Vt. 456; and see Blodgett v. Royalton, 14 Vt. 288. Battles v. Braintree, 14 Vt. 348.

29. In June, 1841, the selectmen of a town altered an old highway by laying out, as an "open road," 122 rods of new road having its termini in the old road, and set over the old road between such termini to the land owner in part compensation for his land damages, and recorded the survey bill the same day. The next autumn the inhabitants of that highway district cut out the new road and made it passable for teams, and the land owner fenced up the old road, and public travel thereafter went principally upon the new road. The next spring, the selectmen made and delivered to the highway surveyor of the district a tax bill, describing the highways in such way as to include both parcels, and the surveyor caused most of the taxes to be worked out on the new road. In July, 1842, the plaintiff sustained damage while traveling upon the new road by reason of its insufficiency. No certificate of the opening of the road had been made by the selectmen, and recorded in the town clerk's office. (G. S. c. 24, s. 30.) In an action against the town for the injury;—Held, that the road was not legally established and opened, so as to make the town liable. Young v. Wheelock, 18 Vt. 498. 27 Vt. 454. Ib. 731.

30. Where the charge left to the jury to determine what would constitute an opening of a road and a public highway, without in any way stating to them what the law required, it was held erroneous. Blodgett v. Royalton, 14 Vt. 288.

31. Where a highway had been laid out and made and repaired by the town, and had been traveled by the public for some twelve or thirteen years, and the land owner had accepted his land damages and built his fences along the sides of it;—Held, that this was such an acquiescence on his part, that he could not now object that no certificate of the opening of the road had ever been filed with the town clerk, and could not maintain trespass for work done on the road in repairing it. Felch v. Gilman, 22 Vt. 38.

32. Re-assessment of damages. The owner of the land at the time a highway is laid over it, is the person to bring a petition for re-assessment of damages under G. S. c. 24, s. 32,—not the owner at the time it is laid open for work. Rand v. Townshend, 26 Vt. 670.

33. Any number of land owners, who are dissatisfied, may join in the same petition, although holding by independent titles. Ib.

34. Where a land owner commenced proceedings before a justice for the appraisal of his damages for the laying of a highway, before the proper certificate had been lodged in the town clerk's office that the road was opened;—Held, that the order of the justice made therein was void. Emerson v. Reading, 14 Vt. 279; and see Tunbridge v. Tarbell, 19 Vt. 453.

35. A petition for re-assessment of damages, under G. S. c. 24, s. 71, is in season, if brought before the expiration of sixty days after the road is in fact "laid open to be worked,"—that is, after the work of opening has commenced. Myers v. Pownal, 16 Vt. 415.

36. Reference and award. The selectmen and the person through whose land they have laid a highway, may, at any time after the survey of the road, although not recorded, settle the question of damages by a reference under the statute; and the award made will be binding. Tunbridge v. Tarbell, 19 Vt. 453.

37. An award of damages for the laying out of a highway, made on arbitration, is not avoided by the landowner's keeping the road fenced up, but the town must resort to its remedy for opening it, under the general laws. Schoff v. Bloomfield, 8 Vt. 472.

38. Action for damages. If the survey of a highway is effectually abandoned before the road is opened or made, there can be no consideration for the landholder's retaining the damages paid. In such case, they may undoubtedly be recovered back. Royce, J., in Stiles v. Middlesex, 8 Vt. 436. But see Stacey v. Vt. Central R. Co., 27 Vt. 89.

39. Damages were awarded and paid to a landowner for the laying of a highway, but while the opening of it was delayed by his request, it was, on his application, resurveyed and altered in two-fifths of its course, but still all upon his land, and the final report was silent on the subject of damages. Held, that the town could not recover back the damages paid. Stiles v. Middlesex.

40. Report of commissioners. It is not a sufficient reason for rejecting the report of commissioners for assessing damages on the laying out of a highway, that they refused to hear the testimony of witnesses in relation to the damages. Lyman v. Burlington, 22 Vt. 131.

41. Commissioners appointed by a justice to assess damages on laying out a highway made report to the county court, as prescribed by statute, which report the court set aside for irregularity. At a subsequent term, the same commissioners, having re-examined the premises and made a new appraisal, made a second report, which, being regular, the court accepted. Held authorized and correct. Id.

42. County court—Proceedings. An application to the county court for the laying out of a highway, under G. S. c. 24, s. 44, must be brought within a reasonable time after the refusal of the selectmen to lay out such highway, but is not required to be brought at the next succeeding term after such refusal, although more than twelve days have intervened between such refusal and the then next term. Moore v. Chester, 45 Vt. 503.

43. The citation attached to a petition to the county, or supreme court, for the laying of a highway, under G. S. c. 24, ss. 44, 64, must be to the defendant towns. Where the citation was to the selectmen, naming them, although served on them as the statute requires, the petition was dismissed. Drown v. Barton, 45 Vt. 38.

44. On a petition to lay out a highway, the court will only examine the petition itself to determine its jurisdiction; and the court refused to hear read an affidavit that the road had already been laid out by the selectmen before the date of the petition. Burgess v. Georgia, 11 Vt. 134.

45. G. S. c. 24, s. 41, requiring that commissioners for laying a highway be "disinterested freeholders," means only that their pecuniary interest shall not be directly affected by the establishment of the highway. It was held no disqualification, that one of the commissioners was related to one of the petitioners within the fourth degree of affinity. Chase v. Rutland, 47 Vt. 398.

46. Jurisdiction. The county court has no jurisdiction, in the establishment of a bridge, to make an order as to the plan, materials or workmanship, or that it be built in any particular manner. Such order is void. State v. Williston, 31 Vt. 153.

47. Nor, to order hills graded upon an existing completed highway, where no new survey is made, and no new highway, or alteration of an old one, is laid and established. Hutchinson v. Chester, 33 Vt. 410. (Altered by stat. 1869, No. 19.)

48. An order for establishing a highway, described as a line from point to point simply, without prescribing the width of the highway, imposes no obligation on the town in respect to it. State v. Leicester, 33 Vt. 653.

49. It is no objection to the validity of proceedings of the county court in laying out a cross road, or lane, that it is laid only to land not occupied as a dwelling place. Paine v. Leicester, 22 Vt. 44.

50. Ornament. Ornament and the improvement of grounds about a public building—as a court house—may be taken into consideration and regarded in connection with the convenience and necessity of a proposed highway; but these alone are an insufficient basis upon which to lay a highway. Woodstock v. Gallup, 28 Vt. 587.

51. Two or more towns. A highway may be laid out and established in a town upon the petition only of freeholders of such town, although "the only land or premises interested in the construction thereof" are situate in another town,—in this case, an adjoining town. Gilman v. Westfield, 47 Vt. 20.

52. The statute which prescribes that "where a river runs between two towns they shall jointly erect, &c., all necessary bridges," applies not only to cases where the river may be in neither town, or is partly in each, but to where the whole bed of the stream may be in one of the towns. Brookline v. Westminster, 4 Vt. 224.

53. Where the county court had on application appointed commissioners to lay out a highway on the line between two towns, after the refusal of the selectmen of such towns so to do;—Held, that the commissioners had no authority to lay out, nor the county court to establish, a highway reported lying along such town line, but wholly within one of the towns, where it was not affirmatively found that such deviation was required on account of the position of the land or nature of the soil, and that both towns were benefited in a similar manner as though such highway were on such line. In re Bridport, 24 Vt. 176. (G. S. c. 24, s. 37, and seq.)

54. If a petition for a highway within the original jurisdiction of the county court to lay out and establish, be, in good faith, brought to such court, but the commissioners lay only a portion of the road prayed for, and such portion as would have first to be petitioned for to the selectmen, if it alone were asked for, the jurisdiction of the county court, which appears on the face of the petition, is not thereby defeated, but the court may establish the portion so laid. Kelley v. Danby, 46 Vt. 504. Kent v. Wallingford, 42 Vt. 651.

55. The petition prayed for a highway to be laid out through and into five towns in the same county. The commissioners laid a portion only of such highway, extending into and through three of said towns. The portion so laid was partly laid upon old established town highways, and partly over new routes. It crossed the line between two of said towns on one of said old highways, making one of the new portions of road laid wholly within one town, and another portion wholly within another town, but the whole road as laid formed a continuous line of highway from terminus to terminus. Held, that the highway, as so laid, was one which was within the original jurisdiction of the county court to establish, and it was so established. (G. S. c. 24, s. 52.) Kelley v. Danby.

56. So, where the petition was for a road extending into two towns of the same county, and it was laid in but one. Kent v. Wallingford, 42 Vt. 651.

57. Practice—Petition. No hearing will be had upon the merits of an application to lay a highway, until the coming in of the report of the commissioners. Heves v. Andover, 16 Vt. 510.

58. Report. Where the report of road commissioners is filed at least 15 days before the session of the court, the filing of exceptions thereto on the second day of the term is in season under Rule 15 (1 Aik. 400), as modified by

G. S. c. 24, s. 47. In re Buckmaster, 16 Vt. 326.

59. Testimony to be used on the hearing of the report of a road committee should be in the form of depositions taken with notice, and not in the handwriting of the adverse party, his agent or attorney. Burgess v. Grafton, 10 Vt. 321.

60. A road committee should report to the court their opinion of the utility and necessity of the road asked to be laid, whether they return a survey of it, or not. Marsh v. Chester, 2 Aik. 239.

61. Where commissioners for the laying of a highway report against its necessity, semble it is not competent for the county court to receive evidence and establish the highway. Woodstock v. Gallup, 28 Vt. 590.

62. Where the commission issued from the supreme court, and the report was not to lay the road, on the ground that the public good did not require it;—Held that unless there was some improper practice upon or by the committee, amounting to fraud or gross partiality, the report should be regarded as final. Shattuck v. Waterville, 27 Vt. 600.

63. The provision of G. S. c. 24, s. 49, that the court may reject or accept, in whole or in part, the report of commissioners for the laying, &c., of a highway, applies exclusively to cases where the report is in favor of the petition, either laying or discontinuing the highway. Id.

64. The acceptance of the report of the committee laying a road is ipso facto an establishment of the road, and all which the law requires. State v. Newfane, 12 Vt. 423.

65. The question as to the propriety and necessity of establishing a highway in a particular place is one of fact, the decision of which, in the last resort, is placed exclusively in the judgment of the county court. Gallup v. Woodstock, 29 Vt. 247.

66. Adjudication conclusive. Under an indictment against a town for not making and opening a highway established by the county court;—Held, that it was no defense that the highway, as laid and established, extended upon the land and track of a railroad, it not appearing that the railroad company objected. The adjudication of the county court binds the town until set aside, and cannot be set aside in this collateral manner. State v. Vernon, 25 Vt. 244.

67. Contribution between towns. The right of one town to claim, and of the county court to order, contributions from other towns "in the vicinity" towards the expense of making a highway, is not limited to towns in the same county. (G. S. c. 24, s. 67.) State v. Woodbury, 27 Vt. 731.

68. In apportioning between several towns the expenses of a bridge built by one, the commissioners cannot fix the specific sums to be paid by the contributing towns, but should only settle and define the proportions. But where the commissioners fixed upon the whole cost at a certain sum (\$1,890), and awarded that the other towns should severally contribute certain specific sums, (\$600 and \$150), and the county court determined the proportions as $\frac{1}{3}$, $\frac{2}{3}$ and $\frac{1}{3}$;—Held, that this was not an error of which the contributing towns could complain. Rockingham v. Westminster, 24 Vt. 288. (G. S. c. 24, s. 65.)

69. Where the plaintiff town erected a bridge, under an order of court by which the defendant town was assessed a certain proportionate part of the expense;—Held, that after notice to the selectmen and demand of payment, assumpsit lay against the defendant town for its part of the expense,—the amount determinable on trial. Brookline v. Westminster, 4 Vt. 224. 19 Vt. 629. 24 Vt. 292. 45 Vt. 429.

70. After a highway has been built, so that the amount of that part of the expense of building which was apportioned to a particular town can be ascertained, the county court may order such town to pay a specific sum, representing such part apportioned, by a day fixed, and, on default, may issue an execution therefor. Londonderry v. Peru, 45 Vt. 424.

71. Under G. S. c. 24, s. 65, past expenses in the erection of a bridge cannot be awarded against a town in which such bridge is not located, but only future expenditures. Pomfret v. Hartford, 42 Vt. 134.

72. Under this statute, the county court has jurisdiction to appoint commissioners and compel towns benefitted by a road already laid out and built, and lying in another town, to contribute to the expense of maintaining and keeping such road in repair. Jamaica v. Wardsboro, 45 Vt. 416.

73. The court of chancery will not interfere to enjoin a proceeding in the county court discontinuing and relaying a highway, upon the ground that it was procured by one town to enable that town to maintain a petition, under the statute, against the other towns for aid in maintaining a bridge on such highway, although that was the prevailing motive for the proceeding; and although such other towns had no notice of such proceedings until after their completion, and until service of the petition upon them for assessments towards building the bridge. Wardsboro v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 470.

74. The statute having made no provision for the appointment of a commissioner to expend an assessment under G. S. c. 24, s. 65;—Held, not to be error to refuse it. Jamaica v. Wardsboro, 47 Vt. 451.

75. The supreme court established a highway extending from town C through the plaintiff town into town G, and apportioned one-fifteenth of the expense of making the road through the plaintiff town to be paid by F, the defendant town, when completed and opened for travel. The plaintiff had made a portion of the road through its territory, which did not benefit the defendant, when the court, on petition, discontinued the unconstructed part, without any modification of the former judgment. Held, that the defendant was not liable for any part of the expense. Fairfax v. Fletcher, 47 Vt. 326.

76. In supreme court. A petition to the supreme court for the laying of a highway was allowed to be amended after the coming in of the report of the commissioners, by inserting in the petition an averment that the petitioners were "freeholders of the towns and vicinity," although regarded as an indispensable averment. This was done by consent of the petitioners, and there was no appearance by the petitioners. Howe v. Jamaica, 19 Vt. 607.

77. Proceedings in the county court, in relation to laying out highways and appraising the damages thereby occasioned, cannot be revised in the supreme court on exceptions, but only by certiorari. Adams v. Newfane, 8 Vt. 271. Lyman v. Burlington, 22 Vt. 131. (Changed by stat. 1872, No. 38.)

78. The questions how far the public good or the necessity of individuals may require a road, and how many or how few persons may live upon the road, or whether the road is laid to accommodate the land of one person only, are all questions of fact upon which the discretion of the county court is to be exercised, and cannot be revised by the supreme court, unless the facts stated upon the record show that the county court could not, in point of law, render the judgment they did. Paine v. Leicester, 22 Vt. 44.

79. If the facts reported by the commissioners were of the kind which warranted the order of contribution, the decision of the court will not be reversed, there being no error in law. Jamaica v. Wardsboro, 47 Vt. 451.

80. Damages to land owner. The Constitution, Part I, art. 2, provides that "when private property is taken for public use, the owner ought to receive an equivalent in money." By G. S. c. 24, s. 78, it is enacted that, "In estimating the damages which may be sustained by any person owning or interested in lands, by reason of laying out or altering any highway, the benefits which such person may receive thereby shall be taken into consideration." Held, that the act was not repugnant to the constitution; that, to bring a case within this provision of the constitution, it should be such a taking as divests the owner of all title to or control over the property taken, and be an unqualified appropriation of it to the public; that it does not embrace the case of taking land for a highway, which does not divest the owner of his title in fee, and in which the public acquires only an easement. Thus, where the county court accepted the report of road commissioners that they had disallowed the claim of a land owner for damages occasioned by the laying of the highway, for the reason that the benefits resulting therefrom equalled any damages to the land and the expense of fencing the same;—Held, on certiorari, that there was no error in the proceedings. Livermore v. Jamaica, 23 Vt. 361. See Hatch v. Vt. Central R. Co., 25 Vt. 65-6.

81. In assessing damages, the value of the land taken, the expense of fencing against the road, and the damage done to the land remaining, are the only matters proper to be taken into consideration. An award including damages for the discontinuance of a highway, and the expense of building a cross road on the party's own land from his dwelling, in order to reach the highway laid out, was held, in these respects, invalid. Dalrymple v. Whittingham, 26 Vt. 345.

82. It is error for road commissioners to award land damages against a town, on the laying out of a highway, without giving notice thereof to the town, so that it may appear and be heard on that subject. Thetford v. Kilburn, 36 Vt. 179.

83. Where the proceedings are erroneous only in respect to the awarding of land damages, the practice is not to quash the whole proceedings upon certiorari, but only to remand the case to the county court, to be sent out to the commissioners to appraise the damages anew. Id.

84. In the laying out of a highway through lands of which the record title was in the estate of an intestate, where there had been no decree of distribution to the heirs, nor division in severalty between them by deeds or occupation, but only a written agreement for such division;—Held, that the payment of the land damages was properly made to the administrator, and that notice to him, as the representative of the estate, of the hearings before the commissioners was sufficient, and the heirs were bound by the proceedings. St. Albans v. Seymour, 41 Vt. 579.

85. On the establishment of a highway, the order of the court for payment of land damages becomes a perfected judgment on the expiration of the time fixed for payment, on which the land owner is entitled to an execution immediately (G. S. c. 24, s. 70); and, before the enactment of G. S. c. 24, ss. 82, 83, the discontinuance of the highway, before being built, did not affect the judgment; nor did the loss of the right to build the highway by lapse of time; nor a change in the location of the highway with the assent of the land owner, unless he intended thereby to waive his claim for damages; nor a new appraisal of damages by the selectmen. Kent v. Wallingford, 42 Vt. 651. Townshend v. Taft, Id. 656.

86. —to turnpike company. In taking the franchise of a turnpike corporation for the purposes of a highway, under G. S. c. 24, s. 79, where the turnpike lies in several towns, the value of the whole franchise should be apportioned among and against the several towns, according to the value of the portions lying in the respective towns. Taylor v. Rutland, 26 Vt. 313.

87. Setting over old road. Under the statute authorizing turnpike commissioners to set over the old road, if, in the opinion of the selectmen, it may be discontinued;—Held, that such opinion could not be shown by parol, but the expression of such opinion must appear in the record, or in writing. Fisher v. Beeker, Brayt. 75. 2 Aik. 897.

88. A highway established before the act of Nov. 7, 1800, cannot, when subsequently discontinued, be legally set over, under sec. 2 of that act, to any other person than the owner of the soil. Pettibone v. Purdy, 7 Vt. 514.

89. Costs and execution. Under the statute of 1833, an execution was allowed to be issued by the county clerk against a town, upon a petition signed by part of the petitioners for laying out a highway, for the amount assessed to the town by the road commissioners, and costs,—such execution requiring the money to be paid to the clerk. Hill v. Sunderland, 7 Vt. 215.

90. The award and taxation of costs by a road committee, under the act of 1828, created a debt on which an action of debt lay, as upon a judgment. Shelburn v. Eldridge, 10 Vt. 123.

91. Under a road petition, the increased expense of a second examination occasioned by the death of one of the committee and the appointment of another in his place, was held to be taxable in the costs against the towns where the road was laid. Howard v. Colchester, 24 Vt. 644.

II. PENT ROADS.

92. All pent roads are public highways, though called in the early statutes "private roads"; that is to say, they may be used by all, but they are not open highways. Wolcott v. Whitcomb, 40 Vt. 40.

93. From the laying of a road as a pent road, without any prescribed regulations as to gates and bars, it is implied that the owner of the land may and he has the right to protect his field and crops by suitable and proper gates and bars, not interfering with the reasonable use of the road as a pent road. Id.

94. Pent roads, like other highways, are required to be "opened" by the recording of the proper certificate; and the land owner is entitled to his damages, as in case of other highways. Warren v. Bunnell, 11 Vt. 600.

95. Upon a petition for the laying of a highway, a pent road may be laid. Whittingham v. Bowen, 22 Vt. 317.

96. A pent road is open to all who wish to travel it, and the town is bound to keep it in reasonable repair, taking into consideration the character and importance of the road; and is liable for injuries caused by its insufficiency. Loveland v. Berlin, 27 Vt. 713.

III. DISCONTINUANCE.

97. In petitions to discontinue roads laid out by committees of the supreme court, the practice is to appoint the same committee that laid out the road. Livingston v. Jericho, 11 Vt. 96. (Changed by G. S. c. 24, s. 73.)

98. Selectmen cannot discontinue a road laid by the road commissioners, or by a committee appointed by the Legislature, or by the supreme or county court. State v. Shrewsbury, 8 Vt. 223. (1836.)

99. A highway may be discontinued without notice to the land-owners. Haynes v. Lassell, 29 Vt. 157; and see Bostwick, ex parte, 1 Aik. 216.

100. The plaintiff promised to pay the defendant town $100, if the selectmen would lay and construct a certain road and discontinue the old road passing through his land. The selectmen laid the road and hired K to build it, promising him, as part payment, the $100 subscribed by the plaintiff. After the new road was built and accepted, the selectmen directed the plaintiff to pay K the $100, they promising to discontinue the old road. The plaintiff gave K his note therefor. The town afterwards neglecting and refusing to discontinue the old road running through the plaintiff's land;—Held, that he could recover of the town the $100, as for money paid to its use; and this, although there was an understanding between K and the plaintiff that K should not call on the plaintiff to pay the note, unless he should recover of the town. Morrill v. Derby, 34 Vt. 440.

IV. REPAIRS; HIGHWAY SURVEYOR.

101. General duty to repair. In replevin, the defendant avowed the taking, as surveyor, under a vote of the town to raise money to be expended upon "the Lake road." Replication, that there was no such "legally laid out Lake road." The replication was held insufficient; for the town may be bound to keep the road in repair, though not legally laid out. Stoddard v. Gilman, 22 Vt. 568.

102. Case of sudden damage. Under G. S. c. 25, s. 18, providing that when on any extraordinary occasion any bridge or highway shall be suddenly destroyed or impaired, &c., it shall be the duty of the surveyor forthwith to cause such highway to be repaired, &c., it is implied that the surveyor first have knowledge or notice that the road has been so injured as to require repairs, or that he be in fault for not having such knowledge or notice. Clark v. Corinth, 41 Vt. 449.

103. A charge in such case, that it was the duty of the surveyor, after such notice, to go immediately, as soon as practicable, about repairing the road, with such force as he could raise under the power given by the statute, with the force and means at his command and within his control; and if, by so doing, he could have put the road in a reasonably safe condition for travel before the plaintiff passed over it and was injured, and he failed to do so, this was the fault of the town, and the town was liable—other necessary facts being proved—was held correct. Ib.

104. The town must proceed with as much dispatch as the magnitude of the work under the existing circumstances,—as, the difficulty of procuring material, &c.,—will reasonably permit; but not utterly regardless of economy and of the town's interests, nor yet consulting its own convenience merely. Briggs v. Guilford, 8 Vt. 264.

105. This statute must receive a reasonable construction, and where it is evident that an immediate attempt to repair the road would be fruitless, it would be unreasonable to require it. As bearing upon the question of the duty of the surveyor;—Held, that it was competent to show the condition of the highway and the nature and extent of the work required; as also the number of miles of road which the town was required to maintain, their condition, and the population of the town. Spear v. Lowell, 47 Vt. 692.

106. Duty towards adjoining land-owner in making repairs, &c. In repairing a highway, the town is bound to use reasonable care and prudence to guard against endangering or injuring the lands or fences of the land-owner upon the margin, but is not absolutely responsible for the results. For a failure in this respect, a special action on the case will lie, but not trespass. Baxter v. Winooski T. Co., 22 Vt. 114. Felch v. Gilman, 22 Vt. 38.

107. The defendant, for the purpose of widening a highway running along a side-hill through the plaintiff's farm, and which was unsafe by reason of its narrowness, drew and dumped stone on the lower side of the road, some of which rolled down against and through the plaintiff's side fence and into his field. The widening of the road was necessary, and was done in a proper and reasonable manner, and was approved by the highway surveyor. Held, that the defendant was not liable therefor in trespass, nor (by Redfield, C. J.) in any action. Morse v. Weymouth, 28 Vt. 824.

108. As to water course. The corporate duty imposed by statute upon towns to build and keep in repair their highways, requires of them, upon principles applicable to the owners of adjoining lands, that in building a highway across a natural stream of water, they provide some suitable and sufficient means for the passage of the water, and maintain the same in such condition that the stream shall not be obstructed thereby, to the injury of persons owning lands adjoining; and for a failure in either of these respects the town is liable to the party injured. Huynes v. Burlington, 38 Vt. 350.

109. Where the embankment of a highway crossing a natural stream of water washed and slid down by the action of the elements, so as to choke the culvert and prevent the passage of the water, to the injury of the adjoining landowner;—Held, that for neglect to remove the obstruction, after reasonable notice, the town was liable in an action for damages. Ib.

110. A natural stream of water passed under a highway by a culvert built by the town. A railroad company, upon their own land below, built an embankment of earth, with an extension of such culvert through it which fell to decay, and the embankment thereby stopped the flow of the water and set it back upon the plaintiff's land on the other side of the highway. In an action against the town for neglect to remove such obstruction after notice and request;—Held, that the town was not liable. Ib.

111. Surveyor. After a demand and notice by a highway surveyor for payment of a tax in labor, and neglect for three days, he may distrain. Andrews v. Chase, 5 Vt. 409.

112. The selectmen of a town already divided into highway districts, for which surveyors of highways have been chosen by the town, have no authority thereafter, and during the year, to alter such districts so as to create a new one, and appoint therefor an additional surveyor. Lamphire v. Windsor, 27 Vt. 544; nor to combine districts, and enlarge the jurisdiction of one of the surveyors. Scott v. Mount Tabor, 48 Vt. 391.

113. A highway surveyor is not an agent of the town to bind it by his declaration that a highway in his district is safe; but such declaration to a traveler bears upon the question of due care on his part in attempting to travel upon the highway. Clark v. Corinth, 41 Vt. 449.

114. A highway surveyor is bound by statute "to keep in repair at all times the highways in his district." This duty is not limited by the amount of the tax-bill put in his hands, nor is its performance dependent on the will of the selectmen; and for all necessary expenditures made by him for this purpose, beyond the means furnished him by the town, the town is liable to him. Stockwell v. Dummerston, 45 Vt. 448.

115. Where a highway surveyor, having expended all the taxes in his rate bill upon certain roads of his district, was directed by the selectmen to repair another road, and the inhabitants of the district upon his call refused to assist, whereupon he made the repairs at his own expense;—Held, that he could recover the amount of the town in an action of book account. Gassett v. Andover, 21 Vt. 342.

116. So, where a bridge and highway were impaired by a freshet so as to require immediate repairs, and the highway surveyor, who had already expended all the taxes in his rate bill, called upon the inhabitants of his district to assist in the reparation, and they refused;—Held, that he might make such repairs at his own expense, and recover the amount of the town in an action of book account. (G. S. c. 25, s. 18.) Ib.

117. Where the plaintiff, as highway surveyor under a void appointment, performed services and made expenditures in needed repairs of the highways in his supposed district;—Held, that in the absence of any contract aside from his relation of highway surveyor, and without a subsequent express ratification of his acts, he could not recover of the town, although he acted in good faith, and with the knowledge of the selectmen who appointed him. Lamphire v. Windsor, 27 Vt. 544.

118. The selectmen, in a tax bill and warrant issued to a highway surveyor, described the road upon which the tax bill was to be worked, but the same, though opened and used for public travel, had not been legally established. The surveyor in good faith worked the road, but was sued in trespass therefor by the owner of the land and a recovery was had against him. In an action by him against the town for indemnity;—Held, that under G. S. c. 84, s. 63, he was entitled to recover. Ladd v. Waterbury, 34 Vt. 426.

119. In order to make a highway surveyor liable as for neglect of duty, the limits and description of his district should be established, and indicated in the rate bill and warrant. Newbury v. Tenney, 2 Aik. 295. 27 Vt. 546.

V. INDICTMENT FOR NOT BUILDING, OR REPAIRING, OR FOR OBSTRUCTING.

120. Where a court of sessions, or any other tribunal, is empowered to impose a duty on any corporation or individual which affects or interests the public, a neglect to perform that duty subjects those neglecting to an indictment at common law;—as, where a town neglects to build a bridge ordered by road commissioners. State v. Whitingham, 7 Vt. 390.

121. In an indictment against a town for not making and opening a highway laid out and established, it is not necessary, in describing the highway, that the courses and distances of the survey should be stated; but it is sufficient if the termini are given with reasonable certainty, and the intermediate points or direction are so stated as to enable the court, from the indictment itself, to issue a commission to the agent to be appointed by the court to expend the fine which shall specify so particularly the location of the road, as that he may know where to work it. State v. Newfane, 12 Vt. 422. State v. Brookfield, 2 Vt. 548. (See State v. Jericho, 40 Vt. 121, and G. S. c. 24, s. 18.)

122. On trial of an indictment against a town for neglect to make and open a road laid by a committee of the court;—Held, that evidence offered that it was absolutely and physically impossible to make the road where laid, was properly rejected. State v. Brookfield.

123. After an indictment found against a town for not keeping in repair a highway, the discontinuance of such highway and the opening of a new one, cannot defeat the prosecution. State v. Fletcher, 13 Vt. 124.

124. In 1831, a highway was laid out and worked on the line between Alburgh and Canada, that being the center line of the highway, and was traveled by the public until 1844, when the selectmen made a new survey, locating the entire highway, three rods in width, in Alburgh, making the State line the north line of the highway. This road was afterwards used for public travel and highway taxes were expended on it, although no certificate had been deposited in the town clerk's office that the highway, as newly located, was opened for travel. Held, that this was not the laying of a new road, but the widening of an existing one, and that an indictment lay for neglect to repair the road. State v. Alburgh, 23 Vt. 262.

125. The statute which imposes a fine, recoverable by complaint before a justice, for placing any obstruction in a highway, is merely cumulative, and does not take away the remedy by indictment at common law. State v. Wilkin-son, 2 Vt. 480.

VI. CIVIL LIABILITY OF TOWNS FOR INSUFFICIENCY.

126. Highway—Bridge. A bridge near the corner of four towns, and a highway leading across the same, but in the town of H, were duly established and laid by a committee of the legislature, who apportioned the expense of the bridge between the four towns, and directed the manner of building the bridge, requiring wing walls to be extended from the abutments of the bridge to and along the banks of the river, and that the space between should be filled by the four towns as part of the expense of building the bridge. This was done, and the wing walls and railings upon them had ever been kept in repair by the four towns, but the road, including the space between the wing walls, had been kept in repair by the town of H, and the town of W, to which it was afterwards annexed. Held, that such space between the wing walls was not bridge, but highway, and that the town of W was answerable for its insufficiency. Powers v. Woodstock, 88 Vt. 44.

127. Private way. A town is not liable for an injury received upon a road, or way, opened by individuals upon their own land for their own benefit, unless recognized by the town as a public highway,—as, by doing labor upon it, or authorizing the highway tax to be expended upon it. There is no way in which an individual can, for his own benefit, lay out a highway and compel the town to adopt it as such. Page v. Weatherfield, 18 Vt. 424. 27 Vt. 454.

128. Extra viam. A traveler upon the highway turned out under an open tavern shed, and left his horse hitched there while he was attending to some business in the village. In getting his team to resume his journey, the horse was backed out of the shed over the bank of a gulf, extending from the shed to the traveled track of the highway, there being no sufficient muniments along the bank, or the margin of the highway. The shed and the place of the accident were without the limits of the highway. Held, that he could not recover against the town for the injury. Sykes v. Pavolet, 43 Vt. 446.

129. Place without the State. A town is not liable for damages occasioned by the insufficiency of a bridge, where the place of injury is beyond the territorial limits of the State, although the town has been accustomed to share in the expense of maintaining the bridge, and it lies partly in this State. Brown v. Fairhaven, 47 Vt. 386.

130. Margins. The plaintiff, in a dark night, was traveling upon a highway in the village of Montpelier with a horse and sleigh. The ordinary traveled path was of sufficient width, but was destitute of snow, and sleighs had been driven in the ditch and had made a path there in the snow. In this ditch there was a hole dug, three feet from the outer edge of the ordinary traveled path, of which the highway surveyor had been notified. The amount of travel upon this road was large. The plaintiff in traveling ran into this hole, whereby his horse and sleigh were damaged. In an action against the town therefor;—Held, that the jury should have been instructed, that if the plaintiff diverged from the traveled road without necessity, but merely for the purpose of having the benefit of snow [or, if the horse took the same direction from a natural instinct, or from inability to see the road on account of the darkness] the town was not responsible for the injury. Rice v. Montpelier, 19 Vt. 470. See 21 Vt. 397. 41 Vt. 439.

131. Towns are bound to keep their roads, including the margin, in such condition as to be reasonably safe against those accidents which may fairly be expected to occur; and although the town will not be liable for an injury occasioned by the traveler voluntarily and without necessity diverging from the traveled path,—as in Rice v. Montpelier; yet if this be by ordinary accident—as, in this case, by being forced upon a log in the ditch, two feet out of the traveled track—the town may be liable. Cassidy v. Stockbridge, 21 Vt. 391.

132. Where a traveler receives an injury outside the traveled part of a highway, it is not an essential condition of his right of recovery against the town, that he should have been forced out of the traveled path by unavoidable accident, or circumstances beyond his control. He may leave it voluntarily, and yet from necessity; as where he leaves the road voluntarily from a reasonable fear of injury if he remains in it,—this is a necessity in the eye of the law. Glidden v. Reading, 38 Vt. 52.

133. Thus, where the plaintiff was properly in the highway, but was blind, and ignorant of the character of the road, and it was so dark, being in the night, that nobody could see him, and, hearing a team approaching him, he left the traveled part of the road in order to avoid the team, and in so doing stepped or fell over the bank wall, which was unprotected by any railing, and so received an injury;—Held, that he was justified by necessity in getting out of the traveled path; and if in so doing he acted with reasonable care and prudence, he could not be said to have contributed to his own injury. Id.

134. Towns owe a statutory duty to travelers, for the breach of which the party suffering special damage may maintain an action, to remove from the margins of their highways objects unlawfully deposited there, which, by their frightful appearance, make it unsafe to travel the road with ordinary horses. Morse v. Richmond, 41 Vt. 435. Barrett, J., dissenting.

135. While traveling upon a highway, the plaintiff's horse was frightened by some bales of burning hay, which had been wrongfully thrown off a railroad train upon the margin of the highway, and had not been removed by the town authorities after due notice, by which fright the horse ran and the plaintiff was injured. In an action against the town to recover for the injury, the court charged the jury, that although the surface and width of the traveled track were faultless, and the bales of hay were outside that track upon the highway margin, still, the town would be liable, if the bales of hay presented such an appearance that they might reasonably be expected to, and naturally would, frighten ordinary horses, and the injury happened by reason of the plaintiff's horse taking fright at them. Held, correct. Id.

136. A second path. A town had worked and kept in repair on the whole length of its road a traveled track "sufficiently wide and suitable for the passage of all travel, both vehicles and on foot." There was a narrow foot-path 15 or 20 feet south of said track, and near the fences on the south side, which public foot travel had for 30 years or more passed over. This foot-path passed over ground in its ungraded and natural condition; had never been worked by the town, nor ever been obstructed. On the south edge of the road, and on a level with it, there was also a feasible foot-path somewhat traveled. In an action against the town to recover for an injury to a foot traveler, traveling by choice upon the first named foot-path, the court charged that such continuous use by the public of said foot-path, the town knowing of such use and doing nothing to prevent it, rendered the town liable for the injury occasioned by the foot-path being out of repair. Held erroneous, and that, upon the facts stated, the town was not, as matter of law, bound to provide more than the traveled track. Whitney v. Essex, 38 Vt. 270.

137. In an action against a town for an injury received upon a highway, the plaintiff's evidence tended to prove that a road leading through a village had, for thirty years or more, been kept in repair by the town, but there was no evidence of a survey, or of work done upon the road except at points some distance east and west of the place near which the accident occurred; that there was a foot-path running along the south side of the main track in the village, and about four feet south of it, which was the natural place for persons on foot to go, and was generally traveled by such in going to and from and between the postoffice and stores, and was better for walking than the main track; that this footpath ran over some hay-scales, owned by private parties, which had been there for more than 30 years, but had never been controlled by the town, nor had any work been done by the town upon the foot-path; that in going from the postoffice along this foot path across the floor of the hay scales, the plaintiff fell through the floor by reason of its insufficiency, and was injured. The court charged that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Held erroneous (Barrett, J. dissenting), and that the decision in this case reported, 38 Vt. 270, being upon different evidence, does not conflict with the present decision. Whitney v. Essex, 42 Vt. 520.

138. Where a land owner has given up his land to the public use for a highway, and the town has voluntarily taken upon itself the burden of keeping it in repair, the same end is attained that would have been, if it had been laid out with all the statutory formalities. Ib.

139. The assumption of the burden is the act of the town, and proof of this is not necessarily confined to proof of the acts of the selectmen. Ib.

140. Any evidence that a town has kept a road in repair, within its limits, tends to show that the burden of keeping it in repair has either been cast upon it by necessary proceedings, or that the town has voluntarily assumed the burden without any proceedings; and evidence that work had been done on this road, in both directions from the place of the accident, tended to show that the road, at this place, had been adopted. Ib.

141. According to the evidence in this case, the highway had, at this place, one path for foot travel, and another for carriage travel, and one path was adopted as much as the other. Ib.

142. The fact that the owners of the hay scales had permitted the public to use the floor of the hay scales for so long a time, was sufficient evidence to be submitted to the jury, upon the question whether the owners had in fact given up the floor to the use of the public for that purpose. Ib.

143. The injury sought to be recovered for was received while the plaintiff was traveling upon a side track, west of the track which the town had worked for the purposes of travel. The defendant requested the court to charge: "If the jury find that the east road, at the time of the accident, was in good and sufficient repair, and was of sufficient width, and in proper condition to accommodate all the travel which then had occasion to use it, and that from its position, form and construction it was apparently the place designed by the town as its highway, and that the plaintiff voluntarily, or by mere choice of his horse, left the wrought way and went upon the west track—it being conceded that that track was never worked by the town—the defendant is entitled to a verdict, no matter what the motive for the diversion, or the condition of the margin." Held, that the defendant was entitled to have this request answered affirmatively; but quære whether it was not adequately answered. Ozier v. Hinesburgh, 44 Vt. 220.

144. In Goodrich v. Colchester (Chittenden Co. Dec. T., 1855), on the report of referees, the town was held liable for an injury to the plaintiff upon a side track outside the limits of the surveyed highway, although the town had neither made nor repaired it, and the surveyed track had been worked and was in good condition, but the side track had long been used by the plaintiff and the public as a route of travel, and there was nothing to indicate to the public that it was not a recognized highway, and the plaintiff turned into it, in the night time, with his horse and wagon.

145. By-way. A railroad company, having occupied a highway in constructing their railroad, built a by-way around the obstruction, through the insufficiency of which a traveler upon it was injured. Held, that the town was liable therefor, although it had resisted the obstruction by the railroad, and had not adopted the by-path. Batty v. Duxbury, 24 Vt. 155. Ib. 484.

146. Towns having reasonable notice of obstructions in their highways are bound to remove them, or make safe by-ways to pass around them, or see to it that they are made by others, in order to exonerate themselves from liability to travelers, and in such case the town is liable for the insufficiency of such by-way. Ib.; and see Willard v. Newbury, 22 Vt. 458. 27 Vt. 461. Barber v. Essex, 27 Vt. 62. 41 Vt. 439. Dickinson v. Rockingham, 45 Vt. 99. Bates v. Sharon, 45 Vt. 474.

147. The location of a railroad across a highway, under the charter of the railroad company, does not, while the railroad is building, operate a discontinuance of the highway, but only a temporary suspension of its use; and during such temporary obstruction rendering the highway unsafe, the town is bound to provide a suitable by-way, and take all proper and reasonable precautions to prevent travelers from passing upon the highway while it remains unsafe—as, by maintaining barriers or obstructions. If the town omit its duty in this respect, it is liable for injuries to travelers occasioned thereby. Willard v. Newbury. Barber v. Essex.

148. A town is responsible for the insufficiency of a highway occasioned by the acts or neglect of a railroad company in the construction of their railroad across a highway under their charter. Ib.

149. The town is primarily responsible for such neglect of the servants of the railroad company, and is entitled to indemnity against the company. Batty v. Duxbury, 24 Vt. 155. Newbury v. R. R. Co. Ib. 162.

150. Where a by-way is built for passage around a highway bridge while being repaired, its sufficiency, as to a traveler injured thereon, is to be determined with reference to the purpose and occasion of it; if as sufficient and in as good repair as was reasonably demanded for such purpose and occasion, the town is not liable for an injury upon it Briggs v. Guilford, 8 Vt. 264.

151. A highway having become impassable by a freshet, one of the selectmen of the town placed a barrier across it near the foundrous place, intending thereby to divert travel around such place and over a certain private way, not before adopted by the town, until the highway should be repaired. The plaintiff, traveling upon the highway, and having occasion to go to and return from a dwelling house situate on said private way, was injured while passing over it on his return, by reason of its insufficiency. He had no occasion to use the obstructed portion of the highway in going to or returning from said house, and would not have used it, though it had not been washed out, but had been in perfect condition. Held, nevertheless (Wheeler and Royce, J. J., dissenting), that such private way had thus become, temporarily, a substitute for a portion of the main road, and was an open public highway for all travelers who had occasion to use it, whether to go to and from said house, or to pass around the wash-out, and that the town was liable to the plaintiff for its insufficiency. Dickinson v. Rockingham, 45 Vt. 99.

152. Statute exemptions. Under G. S. c. 25, s. 41, exempting towns from liability for damage upon highways, "sustained in consequence of the passing on such highway, &c., of any carriage bearing a load exceeding 10,000 pounds in weight;"—Held, (1), that no action could be sustained, in any case, for such damage where the load exceeded that weight; (2), that the word "load" meant the material placed upon the carriage for the purpose of removal, and did not include the carriage itself, nor anything—as a rack—employed simply for the purpose of transportation of that material; nor did it include the driver. Howe v. Castleton, 25 Vt. 162.

